No one would ever say that victory in such a war will ever come easy, but I can say that the victory will never be won until the church awakes from her slumber and becomes the visible expression of Jesus Christ, raised from the dead in the power of the Holy Spirit, in this fallen world. The homosexual agenda will never be defeated by mere laws. Such people are lawless. Furthermore, the plan to indoctrinate and violate America's children will never be stopped by adopting the "live and let live" strategy of the spiritually deceived pacifists in our midst. This war will only be won by taking the battle to the enemy and taking back the territory we've lost. How do I know this? Let me give you one good example.

Delegate Don Dwyer is a legislator in the state of Maryland who became acquainted with my work and the mission of the Traditional Values Coalition through our video Gay Rights, Special Rights. He told me when we met in Washington for the first time that homosexuality was not an issue he wanted to engage. It wasn't a comfortable issue for him, and it was so highly charged politically that he would rather let someone else fight the battle. But having seen the film and understanding what it meant, his conscience wouldn't allow him to turn away.

Because of the importance of this issue, and because of what Delegate Dwyer discovered and then went on to accomplish, I would like to relate in some length his words from a recent interview. I can think of no better example of what I would like to say to you in this chapter to illustrate the importance of waking the church to its mission of renewal.

I asked him how he became interested in this work, and he told me: "A pastor handed me a copy of the film Gay Rights, Special Rights and asked if I'd seen it, and I said I hadn't. I knew of the Traditional Values Coalition, and I knew that you were one of the strong leaders in the battle to stop the homosexual movement. But I didn't know much more than that. So I watched the film, and I had the reaction that I think a lot of people must have. I realized I didn't understand the agenda. I never understood until that moment what was going on. But that tape, in just thirty-eight minutes, showed me how severe the problem really is, and for the first time I understood that the homosexual agenda is directed at our children.

"That was a wake-up call for me," he told me. "But then I realized I had to do something about what I had learned, and I realized I had to take that film and show it to pastors, church leaders, and men and women with influence all over my state as quickly as I could in order to wake the sleeping giant in this country. To wake up the church is to wake a sleeping giant, and that was my goal.

"Because of my position as a legislator in the state of Maryland," he said, "I felt I could probably get people to listen. And over the last several months I've seen that happen. I would say, conservatively, that from five hundred to seven hundred pastors have now seen the film and have heard me speak about the issue of homosexuality in our state. My view is that the issue of same-sex marriage is antithetical to our American view of law and government. I believe as our Founding Fathers did, first of all, that there is a Creator God. Our rights come from Him, and the purpose of government is to protect and defend those God-given rights.

"I have been all around the state talking about these things," the delegate said. "The format is that I show the film and then, immediately afterward, I address church leaders, pastors, deacons, and others and express my deep sorrow that for the last forty years the church has remained silent on issues that we've been led to believe are political in nature, but which we know are really the essence of what the church is required by God to confront.

"In my talks," he said, "I hit hard on what has happened to this country since prayer and Bible reading were removed from the schools. That was a national tragedy, and for the most part the church was silent. Many people wrung their hands and prayed. They wondered how it could have happened in America, but it was too late. The Court had already ruled, and by the time the church decided to say something, it was all over. Then, ten years later, Christians sat home when the Supreme Court, mere men, declared that murder was no longer murder. We now have the innocent blood of millions upon millions of innocent unborn children on our hands."

WHO'S TO BLAME?

Because of the urgency of the issue, Delegate Dwyer told me, he has had to be very direct and sometimes confrontational in his approach. "I have been condemning the church and its leaders, expressing my outrage that they have been deceived into silence on these moral issues, believing the lie that these are political issues and therefore the church has no right to engage in them. In essence, the church has been deceived into silence. But today-now that we can all see how far the agenda has gone-things are beginning to change.

"I believe I've been witnessing a modern-day miracle;" he told me, "as I've been bringing together pastors from all denominations, all ethnic and racial backgrounds, and from all parts of the state. Protestant, Catholic, black, white, Hispanic, Korean, Chinese, all of us coming together under the same roof because of our concern for our children and grandchildren. We know now what's at stake if same-sex marriage ever becomes the law of the land"

I asked him if he's had criticism from those on the other side of the issue, and he paused for several seconds. "Yes;" he said, "I've been accused of wanting to Christianize the state. In fact, the Speaker of the House in the Maryland legislature wrote a newspaper column in which he accused me of wanting to Christianize the state. That was a great honor, but it wasn't really my goal. It's not my job to Christianize the state: that God's job. But it is my job to speak the truth on moral issues, which happen also to be Christian issues. And it's my job to speak about the Christian heritage and founding of our great state"

The delegate related a bit of his state's history, going back to Lord Baltimore's charter from the king, and he told me, "This state has a rich Christian history, founded by Catholics. It was called the 'Free State,' established to provide a haven for those who had experienced religious persecution because of their doctrinal differences. You can read about it in the recorded history of the state of Maryland, all the way back to the Charter of 1632 where it's clearly stated that Maryland was established as a Christian colony. The territory was granted by the king on the grounds that the first governor, Lord Baltimore, was 'animated with a laudable and pious Zeal for extending the Christian Religion.'

"As I've gone to church meetings in various parts of the state;" he said, "I've witnessed repentance by pastors after they've heard this message. I've been encouraged by that, and humbled by it as well. I've been humbled because it has nothing to do with me personally but with what God is saying to us about these issues. I'm not a pastor; I'm a common man whose heart has been convicted by God to talk about things we know to be true-things that we know are founded in the Christian understanding of salvation and eternal judgment. It's not that I want to do this: it's that I can't not do it. I have to speak the truth regardless of what the political or other consequence might be. Anyone who lives a Christian life knows that when God calls you, you can't tell Him 'No,' because He's just going to keep turning you around until you do what's He's called you and prepared you to do"

EXPANDING THE MESSAGE

"I started out giving this message to pastors and church leaders, but one day a pastor called and asked if I would speak to his congregation. He wanted to bring the entire adult membership together for it. I said I would come, but I was concerned. I didn't know what the reaction was going to be or how we would deal with it. So he said, 'I think the members of my church need to see this,' so I agreed and we did it. We had about 120 people in the sanctuary that day, all members of the church, and they were all ages, elderly, middle-aged, and young adults, but no children were present.

"When we finished showing the film," he said, "and when I finished reproving the church for its complacency, there was a surreal silence in the room. Finally the pastor said to me, 'I think we need to cancel the rest of today's program.' He had planned another program, but he said, 'I think we just need to pray.' And as he began to pray, men wept openly because of the sorrow they felt in their hearts for what they had just seen. The vile sin of homosexuality had been revealed to Christ's church, and their hearts were broken.

"This has been such an emotional experience," Delegate Dwyer told me, "seeing the tears of sorrow, the prayers of repentance, and hearing those fervent prayers. We prayed that God's people would wake up and stand up boldly on the front lines for this issue. It was encouraging to me. Experiences like that give me the strength to continue when the pressures mount against me and what I'm doing. As you can image," he said, "the argument on the street is that I'm filled with hate and that I'm spreading hate and fear among the churches. OK, I'm guilty as charged. I'm spreading hatred of the homosexual activists and I'm spreading my own fear of what's going to happen to this nation if God's people don't stand up now. I'm guilty of spreading hate and fear, but it's their hate and my fear.

"Before I was elected to public office, " he said, "one of the things I realized was that there is a lot of temptation in this place. I also knew, however, that I have a Christian heart and I will do everything I can to stay on God's path. But the first thing I did was to set up an accountability group of six godly men who have promised to beat me within an inch of my life if I ever come off of God's path. And one of those men is my own brother. Every time I meet with pastors, I ask them to hold me accountable. I know Satan will try to trip me up, and I'm made of human flesh. These battles are the ones that make Satan the angriest, so I don't ask for that accountability out of vanity. I mean it sincerely."

As we neared the end of our conversation, we stood together and prayed, and I thanked this brave man for his courage and conviction. He smiled and said, "I appreciate your encouragement, Rev. Lou, because it's not enough just to be a Christian when you serve in public office as I do. You have to be committed, and you have to be protected. I have people all over the country who pray for me, and it's rewarding to get notes as we sometimes do from people in Oregon or California or other parts of the country saying, 'Delegate Dwyer, we're praying for you, we love you, and we want to encourage you to just keep doing the work of the Lord' That's such an encouragement, especially for my wife. It's so helpful for her, when we get those hateful calls, e-mails, and letters, as we often do, to know that there are godly people out there standing with us" I assured Delegate Dwyer that he would be continuously in our prayers as well, and that we were grateful for his example of not merely talking the talk but also walking the walk.¹¹

A CALLING TO RIGHTEOUSNESS

Not everyone can do what Don Dwyer is doing; not many have his gifts or passion for sharing this important message. But the fact is, we can all do something, and many of us simply aren't doing enough. What I have tried to say in this chapter is not that the church is useless or that she has failed to serve in many important ways. Most of our churches, even those where the flame of righteousness is flickering or has already gone out, can serve in useful ways, if nothing else by providing a sense of community for God's hungry and weary children. But I am saying that the sinfulness and brokenness of the world at this hour could never have happened if the church had been fully alert, awake, and standing at her post.

When I look around this country (and I travel constantly), I see many vibrant, exciting, and transforming churches where miracles are happening and lives are being changed. There are thousands of churches in the Traditional Values Coalition family who understand their calling to be salt and light in the world, and many of these are fully engaged on this issue. But, I'm sorry to say, I see other churches as well that are fat and lazy and self-satisfied, and many of these are so full of the world's values they're no threat to the forces of darkness that surround us.

For those churches, I have a word of warning. If your church doesn't get over its addiction to the easy life, accumulating wealth in the material world and ignoring the signs of crippling decay all around us, your children may not have a future worth defending. For the last fifty years too many church leaders have run from their responsibility of preparing Christian soldiers for spiritual combat, and the result has been the ruin of this once Christian nation. Our homes and schools and workplaces are in disarray. Homosexuals are corrupting our youth. We wonder who has done this to us. The answer is abundantly clear: we have done it to ourselves. When the church fails to be the church, they fail to keep Christ's own commission to seek and save those who are lost, including many who sit in their pews every Sunday.

This is my message, but I'm happy to say that I'm not the only one who is saying these things. The gifted priest and renowned Bible expositor Father John Corapi has called the apathy of the church a moral disgrace, and he agrees that it is high time to wake up this sleeping giant. Father Corapi has said:

Morality is not a subjective construct. Rather, it is inscribed in the heart and mind of every person. It is our business to accept our noble and holy lot as persons, and to act in accord with nature, not rebel against it. We run the risk today in our once largely Christian country of falling into that class of idolaters which St. Paul bitterly denounced because of their refusal to worship God and accept his teaching, despite their knowledge of him (See Romans 1:20-27).¹²

It's important for believers to understand what this theologian is saying. We are all called to act in accordance with our nature and the sensibility that Christ has implanted in our hearts. When we rebel against our calling by trying to ignore the sin and evil around us, or simply by tolerating the corruptions of the world, we make ourselves enemies of God.

Many of us will recall that dramatic passage where the apostle Paul lays out the charges against those who tolerate evil in this way. He writes:

But know this, that in the last days perilous times will come: For men will be lovers of themselves, lovers of money, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, unloving, unforgiving, slanderers, without self-control, brutal, despisers of good, traitors, headstrong, haughty, lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God, having a form of godliness but denying its power.

-2 TIMOTHY 3:1-5, NKJV

The apostle tells us, "From such people turn away!" He writes elsewhere, "For what fellowship has righteousness with lawlessness? And what communion has light with darkness?" (2 Cor. 6:14, NKJv). What a tragic irony for believers who have the word of truth to be sidelined by the deceptions of this world. As John Corapi adds:

We are not to be confused by empty rhetoric and the fallacy of what is "politically correct," especially when that is largely determined by the mind of a culture which will go down in history as grandly technological, yet singularly irrational; able to travel far into outer space, yet amazingly crippled in its ability to travel inwardly in order to be in touch with the high and lofty demands of its own moral nature. We should be mightily wary of a culture, rightly described as a "culture of death," that seeks to tell us how to live, imposing laws that are illicit and mores that are immoral.¹³

It is my hope and fervent prayer that, before it's too late and the agenda of death and destruction has overcome us utterly, God's people will rise. This work cannot be merely a hobby. My dear friend and a great defender of the unborn, Father Frank Pavone, understands the urgency of the hour, and his words, which I've quoted in the epigraph to this chapter, are powerful and true. "Sleeping is easy; vigilance has a price" Our task at this late hour is to stand against the hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places, to wage war on the evil that would gladly corrupt and destroy all that is holy and good.

We cannot act as if this were just a hobby. It will demand every ounce of moral fiber and resolve we can muster. Are we up to it? Very much in accord with Father Pavone's words above, Thomas Jefferson said, "The price of freedom is eternal vigilance" You can be sure that those who will not defend their freedom are destined to lose it. But will the church awaken from her slumber and rise to this challenge? I pray to God that she will.

RESTORING TRADITIONAL VALUES

There are risks in standing your ground, and there are also great opportunities if we're willing to accept the challenges before us. But this means that every believer must make a commitment to fight the good fight. We need to call America back to the values enshrined in our great U.S. Constitution, and we need to pray that millions will rise up for such a time as this.

-REVEREND Louis P. SHELDON

THE NOTION OF a "separation of church and state" got its start, as most people now know, in a letter from then President Thomas Jefferson to a group of Baptists in Danbury, Connecticut, assuring them that the government would never infringe on their freedom of worship. Those of us who have been fighting to restore moral balance in this country are well aware of that document written in 1802. But there's a lesser known aspect of the story, which is that it was a virulent strain of anti-Catholicism in this country in the 1930s and '40s that actually led to the Supreme Court's Everson v. Board of Education ruling of 1947, and that really pushed us over the edge.

The first large waves of immigrants from Italy, Ireland, and other Catholic countries began to arrive on our shores in the 1830s, when Andrew Jackson was president. Freedom of religion was already an established principle of law, guaranteed by the First Amendment, but there were groups such as the so-called "Know Nothings," who saw this invasion of European Catholics as a threat. They said, "We can't have those Catholics coming in here and changing things. Why, they're committed to the pope!" And that created a wave of bad feelings that would continue for decades.

Over the next forty years, this uncharitable attitude led to the passage of bad laws such as the Blaine Amendments, which limited government support for parochial schools in several states, and accelerated the idea of a "separation of church and state" But it showed up most perniciously in 1947, in Justice Hugo Black's outrageous dicta in the Everson case, saying that the Founding Fathers had erected an imaginary "wall of separation" that must be kept "high and impregnable," and this prevented people of faith from having influence in the affairs of government. At the very least, this was an incredibly bad misreading of the Constitution, which probably involved great mischief by individuals who had undue influence on the Court at that time. But as Professor Daniel Dreisbach points out in his important book on this subject, justice Black's own anti-Catholicism was also a major factor in that bad decision.¹

The bad news is that the separation of morality from public life has devastated this nation ever since. The Court's action in tossing Bible reading and prayer out of the schools in the 1960s was merely the beginning, and over the last fifty years corruption has eaten away the moral fabric of the schools. Today we're seeing a breakdown of law and order in all aspects of public life, an escalation of violence and indecency, and a level of hatred for Christians and others who believe in traditional values that would have utterly shocked our Founding Fathers.

The good news, however, is that because things have gone so far in the wrong direction, we are also seeing the beginnings of a counterrevolution, along with reconciliation between people of many faiths and backgrounds such as we have never seen before. It's a new day in America. There's a new level of understanding and cooperation between Protestants, Catholics, and Orthodox Jews, due in large part to the intensity of the attacks from the antireligious Left, and this new unity is changing the cultural landscape in the most astonishing ways.

Alexis de Tocqueville wrote in his book Democracy in America, "I do not know if all Americans have faith in their religion-for who can read the secrets of the heart?-but I am sure that they think it necessary to the maintenance of republican institutions. That is not the view of one class or party among the citizens, but of the whole nation; it is found in all ranks."² When he was asked what made American society work, the French statesman didn't hesitate to say that it was the evangelical juggernaut, and what we're seeing emerging today is every bit as powerful as what he saw then. Even though we have endured hard times in this country, and even though people of faith are still being attacked on many fronts, the juggernaut lives. Our task now is to rekindle the flame of traditional moral values and to awaken the sleeping giant.

REKINDLING THE FLAME

I think it's important to be very clear about the importance of moral leadership in government. As my friend Rev. William J. Murray has pointed out, "Government is not God," and government can never be all things to all people, as many on the Left would prefer. Furthermore, if we strip all references to God and godly morality from our nation's laws, then, by definition, government will be godless, and the laws enacted by the men and women in Congress and the fifty state legislatures will be ungodly and self-destructive.

Our Founding Fathers understood this, and they said so. William Penn said, "Those people who will not be governed by God will be ruled by tyrants." Noah Webster, the great author and educator who gave us the first American dictionary, said, "The moral principles and precepts contained in the Scripture ought to form the basis of all our civil constitutions and laws. All the miseries and evil men suffer from vice, crime, ambition, injustice, oppression, slavery, and war, proceed from their despising or neglecting the precepts contained in the Bible" And John Jay, the first chief justice of the Supreme Court said, "Providence has given to our people the choice of their rulers, and it is the duty as well as the privilege and interest of our Christian nation to select and prefer Christians for their rulers"

What clearer warnings could we have? Yet, under the delusion that church and state cannot coexist and cooperate in the task of restraining evil and building a civil society, we have witnessed the rise of the most unimaginable evil in our time. Nothing else explains so well the rise of homosexuality as a protected civil right, or the legalization of abortion that has led to a culture of death, or the assault on moral judgment in the nation's schools and colleges. Young people in America today know all about sex, drugs, and rock 'n' roll, but they know next to nothing about the true history of this nation or the great moral and religious precepts that were prescribed by our Founding Fathers.

With the help of groups such as the ACLU, People for the American Way, and others of their ilk, the Left has waged a relentless assault on moral judgment for the last hundred years, but we in the church are not entirely free of blame. From the standpoint of politics, too many Christians have been holding their finger up to the wind waiting for "the right time" to speak up. Well, first of all, let me say that it's never too early to stand on moral principle, but there's never been a better time for people of faith to rise up and speak up for what we believe.

I received a memo not long ago from Richard Viguerie, who is the godfather of the direct-mail business and a long-time friend, saying that in the wake of the 2004 general election, those on the left of the political spectrum have suddenly found themselves in a catch-22 situation. If they don't move to the right and embrace moral values, they will be forced into minority status for a generation. If they do move to the right, however, they will disenfranchise their radical-left base and, once again, be forced into minority status for a generation. I think that's a very perceptive analysis.

The caveat, however, is that Republicans and other conservative voters must make it clear that they are committed to defending traditional Judeo-Christian values. "From the White House to the Courts;" continued Richard Viguerie in the memo, "there is no benefit to be gained from going soft on moral values" I agree, but that view is no longer merely the opinion of those of us on the Religious Right. In an op-ed piece for the San Diego Union, published just five days after the Republican victory of November 2004, former Speaker of the House Newt Gingrich wrote that a majority of American voters have realized that they are "deeply estranged from the establishment left, which is the national mainstream media, the liberal elite, the trial lawyers, Hollywood, the unions, and left-wing ethnic politicians, who collectively make the most noise."³

The reason for this separation of sensibilities, he said, is because the Left has lost touch with what Americans really believe. The sudden emergence of the "values voters" is evidence of "an America that is trying to instill in their children the moral values that the establishment left has rejected" And until the Left changes its tune, there can be no compromise. Symbolic of this change of attitude was the defeat of Senate Minority Leader Senator Tom Daschle in his race against my good friend and former Congressman John Thune of South Dakota. Quite simply, Gingrich said, Daschle was defeated because the voters of his state realized "that he had more in common with Michael Moore, who came to personify the worst of the Hollywood left, than he did with rural farmers"

RESTORING THE COVENANT SOCIETY

These are powerful ideas, and they're really catching on. In January 2005, Mr. Gingrich was interviewed on The 700 Club about his new book Winning the Future, and Pat Robertson asked the former Speaker if he thought, in light of the Republican victory in November, that conservatives would be willing to step up and fight for what we believe in. Gingrich said he did, and that incidents such as Michael Newdow's attack on the Pledge of Allegiance might be enough to rouse even the most comfortable and complacent Americans out of their armchairs. Gingrich went on to say:

I am hoping that will arouse people of belief, people who understand that there is a Creator, to decide to reenter this fight, and say, "Look, our Declaration of Independence is very straightforward. We are endowed by our Creator with certain inalienable rights. Now either that is a fact that is the basis of America, or we are just randomly-gathered protoplasm having a contract relationship" I think we are a covenant society, and I think part of the message has to be to our elected officials that we expect Congress and the President to stand up to judges who don't understand America.⁴

When asked to elaborate on what he meant in saying that the president ought to stand up to judges, Mr. Gingrich reminded the audience that Presidents Thomas Jefferson and James Madison at one point, using their constitutional authority, simply eliminated the judgeships of a group of magistrates who were waging war on the White House from the bench. Those judges tried to appeal their dismissal, but no judge would take the case for fear of losing their jobs, too. After explaining that point, Gingrich said:

And in the case of the two appeals court judges of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals who said they were going to outlaw saying "one nation under God" in the Pledge, my position would be Thomas Jefferson's, which would be to abolish their two jobs. Let them go back into the private sector, because clearly those two judges do not understand America and should not be sitting on the federal bench.⁵

Those were strong words and very good advice. But even if it's unlikely that the president or Congress would be willing to take such drastic measures, it is nevertheless important to be reminded that all judges, from the Supreme Court to the local justice of the peace, serve at the pleasure of the people and their elected representatives. Article III of the U.S. Constitution says, "The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one supreme court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish" What Congress makes, Congress can unmake, and that ought to be fair warning to judges who think they are empowered to override the will of the people and legislate bad laws from the bench.

I was also encouraged by the Speaker's comment that we are a "covenant society" As a former history professor, Mr. Gingrich understands what the Pilgrims who landed at Plymouth in 1620 were really saying when they penned the Mayflower Compact as a covenant of good faith between the colonists and as a covenant of profound religious faith in a benevolent Creator God. The reason the Left fights so intensely, and the reason that a post-Christian Europe has turned against America in recent years, is precisely because we are a covenant people. That covenant means we care about one another, and we are determined to resist policies and practices that put Americans at risk. It means also that we want to honor God in all we do, so that His hand of blessing will remain upon this nation forever.

FUNDAMENTAL TRUTHS

Those who want to abolish moral standards, however, are outraged by these ideas. Homosexuals in particular see such language as a threat to their lifestyle, and that's another reason why they fight any expression of moral judgment in the public arena. The covenant idea, as it says in the Declaration of Independence, expresses the understanding of the Founding Fathers that government is given to us by God so that we can govern ourselves. And self-government is the key to good government. If we learn nothing else from the 2004 election, let us learn this: values voters are people who believe that ordered liberty demands a moral standard, and they will no longer put their trust in candidates who refuse to honor our fundamental values and beliefs.

Homosexuality grows out of social disorder in the family, along with various other factors. Psychologists who specialize in treating men and women with same-sex attractions tell us that homosexuality is rarely a factor in families where there are fathers who are training their sons and daughters in a morally responsible manner and mothers who uphold standards of respect and decency in the home. These are values that are fundamental to society, and furthermore, they are values that help to bring people together from all the various racial and ethnic groups in this country.

Black, white, brown, and every variation of race and national origin: we are all united in our desire to see our children grow up strong and healthy, with good social skills. And I believe this is the real hope of reconciliation for this country. But it is also important to say that the causes of homosexuality are complex and variable, and can't be diagnosed by simple formulas. This is why groups such as NARTH and Exodus International provide such a valuable service.⁶

In a column for the Boston Globe published in March 2004, Jeff Jacoby pointed out that African Americans have really stepped up to the plate in the defense of biblical morality. Homosexuals have tried to co-opt the language of civil rights to convince Americans that they are an oppressed minority. As I have indicated already, this is a false and dangerously misleading analogy, but Christian leaders in the black community aren't letting that fraud go unchallenged.

As Jacoby points out in his column, when Ezell Blair, David Richmond, Joseph McNeil, and Franklin McCain took their seat at the Greensboro Lunch Counter in 1960, they weren't trying to force some sort of revolutionary change on the nation. They weren't trying to make behaviors legal that had been judged illegal and immoral throughout human history. They were simply asking for the same respect and the same rights that whites already enjoyed: the right to be served a decent lunch and to pay for it with their own money, just like everyone else.

Homosexuals, as Jacoby says so well, "cloak their demands in the language of civil rights because it sounds so much better than the truth. They don't want to accept or reject marriage on the same terms that it is available to everyone else. They want it on entirely new terms. They want it to be given a meaning it has never before had, and they prefer that it be done undemocratically-by judicial fiat, for example, or by mayors flouting the law. Whatever else that may be;" he writes, "it isn't civil rights."⁷

When a group of distinguished black clergy spoke up and challenged lawmakers in Massachusetts to reject the false claims of the homosexual lobby and to support the historic definition of marriage as the union of "one man and one woman," the homosexual lobby hit the roof. One left-wing assemblyman jumped to his feet to exclaim, "Martin Luther King is rolling over in his grave at a statement like this!" Of course, nothing could be further from the truth. As Jeff Jacoby went on to say:

But if anything has King spinning in his grave, it is the indecency of exploiting his name for a cause he never supported. The civil rights movement for which he lived and died was grounded in a fundamental truth: All of us are created equal. The same-sex marriage movement, by contrast, is grounded in the denial of a fundamental truth: The Creator who made us equal made us male and female.⁸

A SUMMIT OF BLACK PASTORS

In the fall of 2004, as it appeared that the courts and several state legislatures were prepared to force same-sex marriage on the nation against our will, the Traditional Values Coalition called together a group of one hundred sixty African American bishops, pastors, ministers, evangelists, and religious leaders to come to Washington to call on Congress to take a strong stand in support of traditional marriage and to demonstrate their support for the black family (and all others) by passing a constitutional amendment that would settle the matter for all time. They want an amendment that will insure liberal federal judges and local officials will not be able to force their values on the rest of us.

At the end of the summit, the pastors invited the Congressional Black Caucus (CBC) members to meet with them so the pastors could share their views on marriage. When they addressed the Congressional Black Caucus, a group that ought to be their natural allies in this cause, the ministers pointed out that further assaults on the black family should be the last thing they wanted, particularly since fully 74 percent of the African American community have said they want to protect the concept of traditional marriage as the union of one man and one woman.

In a document submitted to the CBC, the church leaders said, "It's no secret that black families have been under assault in recent years. Divorce, teenage pregnancy, fatherless homes, and a disproportionate number of HIV-AIDS cases are all unattractive aspects of the black family landscape. In addition, new research shows that there are already clear signs of long-term marital breakdown of the black family... two out of every three newborn blacks enter the world with an unwed mother and no consistent father figure." And the obvious implication, they said, is that, "Further destabilization of traditional marriage must be prevented at all costs"⁹

Sadly, the pleas of these ardent leaders fell on deaf ears, and the members of Congress who ought to have been most sympathetic to their concerns rebuffed them and sent them away empty-handed. Representative John Lewis, a Georgia Democrat and a member of the CBC, stood and said, "I just want to set the record straight here. Some of these so-called black ministers and so-called civil rights leaders never supported civil rights. They never marched one day. They never put their bodies on the line for the cause of civil rights" And he added imperiously that, "Coretta Scott King, the widow of Martin Luther King Jr., is opposed to this amendment."¹⁰

In the end, six members of the CBC did vote to protect marriage as a result of our direct lobbying efforts in their districts. It was also the result of the Ministers and Pastors Summit hosted by the Traditional Values Coalition to reach out to leaders in the African American church. Representative Harold Ford of Memphis, Tennessee, received over four thousand phone calls; Representative William Jefferson of New Orleans received close to forty-five hundred phone calls. That made the difference.

For the party of the Left, politics supersedes morality, and the power of the homosexual lobby for many in that room apparently meant more than the power of their own constituents-black, white, and brown. But the outcry from the Christian community was not lost. Three major denominations of Greater Boston's black clergy met and announced their opposition to the homosexual constitutional amendment that overturned the state constitution of Massachusetts. All over the country, the black church community has been outspoken on this issue. They are tired of seeing homosexuals using the language of their hard-won "civil rights" for immoral purposes.

On May 17, 2004, the day that the state of Massachusetts began issuing marriage licenses to homosexuals, the Traditional Values Coalition brought a group of eighty black pastors here to Washington. The coalition sponsored another event in Memphis shortly thereafter for three hundred pastors. We had another three hundred black pastors at an event in Atlanta, and then we hosted a twenty-four-hour round-the-clock summit in Washington on September 8 and 9, with some two hundred African American pastors meeting in prayer and fellowship, and then speaking up for traditional marriage on Capitol Hill.

Together, we lobbied the Congressional Black Caucus and picked up those six votes. Later, on September 20, we met with five hundred mostly Hispanic pastors in East Los Angeles County. In February 2005, Rev. Frederick K. C. Price, pastor of the Crenshaw Christian Center, a large dynamic church in Los Angeles, sponsored a conference at his facility to rally the African American community behind this important issue.

This is just a sign of the momentum that is building around this issue. Black pastors are very important to the cause, but it's not just one group, one denomination, or one tradition that's involved. What we are seeing is a tremendous regrouping of evangelical Christians, conservative Roman Catholics, and orthodox Jews, all of whom share a common concern for the deplorable state of contemporary culture and all of whom, for the first time in living memory, are united in their efforts to stop the advance of immorality and return this nation to its roots. What could be more exciting than that?

There's a reformation taking place, and the old lines don't hold anymore. There is a new and exciting realignment within Christianity, and the crisis that mainline churches, including the Episcopal Church, the Methodist Church, and the Presbyterian Church (USA), are going through today is just the birth pangs of an explosive awakening that's just about to happen. What we're going through now, since the fall of 2004, is the birth pangs of a tremendous new movement of faith and moral judgment that will most certainly include (as Alexis de Tocqueville would surely applaud) a reawakening of the evangelical juggernaut.

LEARNING THE ROPES

I can't begin to tell you how happy it makes me to see these signs of renewal coming forth from all parts of the country. I remember vividly the day in 1972 when my friend and colleague Dr. Walter Martin walked into my office and said, "Lou, the homosexuals are on the march!" To be honest, I couldn't imagine what Walter was talking about at that time. There was no gay rights movement of any notable size in 1972. I hadn't been paying attention to the issue, and I worried frankly that Walter had been watching too many late-night movies on TV.

But when I looked up, Walter said, "They're getting ready to repeal the sodomy laws" And I thought, What does that mean? So I asked him, "Sodomy law? What's a sodomy law, Walter?" That's how naive I was in those days. But over the next hour or so, he told me all about it, and then Walter said to me prophetically: "If they remove the sodomy laws, then they'll make it legal for the homosexual lifestyle to be taught and presented as a viable lifestyle alternative. At that point, there will be nothing stopping them."

That conversation took place over thirty-three years ago, and that's when I became involved in the effort to stop the homosexual agenda. Pat Boone, the great entertainer who now heads a number of important foundations and Christian service organizations, was also interested in this issue, and we became good friends at that time. We met to compare notes on the things that Walter Martin had learned, and we decided to begin contacting people in the California legislature to encourage them to stand against the homosexual lobby.

The problem was that everywhere we went there was almost total ignorance on this issue. The homosexual community was well armed and already very active. But the church was disengaged, and there were no strong defenders of traditional values in this battle. Still worse, however, the church wasn't just ignorant about political engagement, but many church leaders were dead set against any sort of discourse on these important social and political issues. On many occasions wellmeaning Christian leaders would warn us about getting involved in political action, saying that it was unbiblical and dangerous.

At one point, after it became clear to me that political action was going to be a bigger part of my ministry, my own pastor came to me and said, "Lou, if you get involved in politics, you'll lose your anointing" I listened, of course, and I thought deeply about that challenge, but I knew it couldn't be true. That was 1972. The separation of church and state was a relatively new fact of life, but that insidious doctrine had already left its mark. The level of ignorance among many evangelicals at the time was as thick as a London fog. So I prayed very seriously, and I soon realized that if I didn't get involved politically I would lose my anointing.

So that's when I really got started. We went to Sacramento to talk to the legislature. We tried to stop a measure being pushed by the Hollywood crowd and the liberal media granting special rights to homosexuals. We tried to stop it, but it passed both houses. We tried to repeal it, and we couldn't do that either. Then, in 1977, while I was working with Pat Robertson on some of these things, actress and singer Anita Bryant, who was an outspoken opponent of the gay agenda, called state senator John Briggs and encouraged him to bring me up to Sacramento to help with a new ballot initiative for the upcoming elections. The goal this time was to keep homosexuality from being taught in the public schools.

Senator Briggs called me, and I went to see him at his office. He said, "Lou, we only have one shot at stopping this thing. We have to get six hundred thousand signatures on a petition to put the measure on the ballot, and we have one year to do it." Well, that was my challenge, and I began going around to churches all over the state, talking to people on the street or wherever I could, trying to get some momentum behind the effort. Over the next year we probably spent as much as $300,000 doing it, but we got the signatures, and we got the initiative on the ballot. It was a great team effort, and that became our model for getting Christians active in the political process. As it turned out, we were ahead of our time.

We had done everything we could, and we came so close to stopping that bad bill. But Ronald Reagan, a former Hollywood actor who still had friends in the homosexual community, was governor of California at the time, and he wasn't ready to fight that battle. In the end he came down on the other side of the issue. He said, "Live and let live;" and Republicans in the state legislature weren't prepared to fight both the homosexual lobby and the governor. The deciding vote was cast by Merv Dymally, a member of the California legislature, and Governor Reagan did not veto it. So it ended there, and the children of California are still paying the price.

HARSH REALITIES

California, where I live and spend my time when I'm not working on Capitol

Hill, is an interesting place, primarily because it's often a frontrunner in national trends. There's a strong conservative base in the state that's often overpowered, unfortunately, by the enormous and persuasive media culture that's there as well. What we tend to see, rather than the values of all the hard-working mothers and fathers who are trying to raise decent families, are the trendy values of Hollywood and the lifestyles of the rich and scandalous in places like San Francisco and Los Angeles. And in that environment, even our political victories are often cast as defeats.

For example, in December 2004, Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger, who was elected to replace the very liberal Governor Gray Davis, who was recalled and turned out of office by popular referendum, made a trip to Germany. On that trip, the governor told a German newspaper that the Republican Party that elected him needs to "cross the center line" and slide more to the left politically. That remark, as I said in an editorial for the Los Angeles Times at the time, made it clear that Schwarzenegger somehow didn't get the message of the November election, in which Republicans held the White House and gained seats in both the House and the Senate.¹¹

Schwarzenegger, who is a fiscal conservative and a social liberal, clearly wasn't watching when fourteen states passed initiatives banning gay marriage. Instead, he may have been listening to his wife, Maria Shriver, and her uncle, Democrat Senator Ted Kennedy of Massachusetts, who were no doubt wringing their hands because of the sudden appearance of "values voters" at the polls and what they perceived as the extremism of the "Religious Right" These are the same people, after all, who had predicted a Kerry landslide and civil war in the Republican Party.

But Schwarzenegger told the German reporter, "I'd like the Republican Party to cross that center line;" meaning that he advocates taking more liberal positions on social issues. He predicted that Republicans could pick up at least 5 percent more votes if they were more like the Democrats. Well, to put it charitably, that wasn't the message most of us got in November, and it's not the message the vast majority of values voters got either.

If the election had turned out to be a rejection of traditional values, Schwarzenegger's argument might have made more sense. But the fact is, traditional values won, and the governor got it exactly backward. Smart Democrats are doing all they can to look more like Republicans in order to attract more voters and campaign contributions. In the end, the leopard cannot change his spots, and while many on the Left may embrace the subterfuge of liberals pretending to support moral values-as, for example, Howard Dean and Hillary Clinton are trying to do-the record is there for everyone to see, and it's perfectly clear what those people are up to.

If you want to see what support for the homosexual agenda and other left-wing policies can do when it invades an organization, take a look at what has happened to the liberal mainline denominations. The Episcopal Church USA has been drifting leftward for decades and condoned the ordination of Rev. V. Eugene Robinson, an outspoken homosexual, as bishop of New Hampshire in August 2003. Since 1965, the number of Episcopalians has fallen from 3.6 million to fewer than 2.3 million in 2002. Of those, only about 850,000 actually attend services most Sundays. Recently 18 Anglican archbishops from third world nations called on the Episcopal Church USA to repent of their pro-homosexual policies and pleaded with them to revoke Gene Robinson's ordination. But the ECUSA clergy were unwilling to do that, and as a result the denomination continues to bleed members at an astonishing pace.

The United Methodist Church, which has been the most homosexual friendly of all the mainline denominations, has lost more than half its membership since the late-1950s. The Presbyterian Church (USA) has lost a comparable percentage, including some 41,812 members in 2002 alone.

I completed my master of divinity degree at Princeton Theological Seminary in 1960 and was ordained in the United Presbyterian Church. Over the next twenty-five years that denomination went through some very troubling changes, and I decided I needed to make some changes as well. I was ordained as a minister in the conservative Presbyterian Church in America (PCA) in 1989, where I've been ever since. Since the downward spiral began in the Presbyterian Church (USA) in the mid-1960s, membership has fallen from 4.2 million to just 2.4 million today. But here's the good news: other evangelical, charismatic, Pentecostal, and independent Bible-believing churches have been growing at a record pace since the mid-1970s, largely at the expense of the mainline denominations that have turned away from biblical inerrancy and moved toward the acceptance and affirmation of homosexuality-even among the clergy.

Four of the top twenty-five denominations today, according to the annual yearbook of the National Council of Churches, are Pentecostal, and seven of the largest twenty-five denominations in the country are predominantly African American, where biblical doctrine and conservative teaching are still emphasized. Two of those denominations, the National Baptist Convention of America and the National Baptist Convention, USA, have a combined 8.5 million members. So it's not that nobody's going to church anymore; it's that they're not wasting their time in churches that no longer heed the Word of God.

THE ATTACK ON RELIGION

There's no way to mistake what the Bible has to say about the sin of homosexuality without wildly misreading and misinterpreting what's written there in black and white. But, of course, this is precisely what homosexuals and their enablers have been trying to do for years. Metropolitan Community churches, which cater primarily to homosexuals and lesbians, and the so-called "affirming churches" in various denominations have had to "re-imagine" in the most outrageous ways what God has said, and what the prophets and apostles revealed in both the Old and New Testaments, in order to convince their followers that homosexuality is not, as the Bible says, an abomination (Lev. 18:22).

But homosexuals are determined not only to force their lifestyle on us, but also they plan on doing it by using government and the courts to silence the opposition. This is why "antidiscrimination" laws and "hate speech" legislation is such a recurrent theme. Senator Kennedy and homosexual activist Representative Barney Frank have been pushing laws for years that would define religious objections to homosexuality as hate speech. The tragedy is that being told that homosexuality is a sin and that it is dangerous and potentially fatal can save lives. That's the message I've been trying to give for thirty-three years now, but if these powerful men have their way, warning people about these risks will one day be against the law.

As we have already seen in Canada and certain parts of Europe, simply preaching the gospel and citing biblical passages that warn of the sin of homosexuality may one day be hate crimes in this country. Laws like that could then be used to silence other kinds of religious speech-not just about homosexuality but about many others things. In March 2004, when actor Mel Gibson's powerful film The Passion of the Christ was released in theaters in this country, anti-Christian groups called on Attorney General John Ashcroft and the Justice Department to censor the film because it would incite violence against Jews or other non-Christians.

But the activists don't stop there. Since the early 1970s they have been very successful at pushing their agenda into the schools and colleges with programs such as the "safe schools" projects, which claim to make schools more accepting of homosexuals and transgender students. This includes creating "safe places" where sexually confused or "questioning" kids can gather to network and, naturally, get even more involved in the homosexual lifestyle. If these things continue, and if an entire generation of young Americans is persuaded that homosexuality is good and natural and normal, then Bible-believing Christians will soon find they have lost their children to an oppressive, sexualized culture that can't help but degenerate into anarchy and totalitarianism.

Free speech will be a thing of the past; freedom of religion will be restricted or banished. Children will be subjected to homosexual indoctrination, and parental rights will be subverted. And it will get even worse. Today the homosexual lobby is working with the United Nations to make "sexual orientation" a "universal human right" that must be protected by the UN and the World Court, with draconian punishment and enforcement measures for those who resist. In March 2004, a proposal to do just that was withdrawn by a group of Brazilian homosexuals, because of bad timing problems, I imagine, but rest assured that the measure will show up again, with Canada and the European Union leading the way. Today the Traditional Values Coalition is monitoring these trends, but the situation is grave and our work is cut out for us.

WHAT YOU CAN DO

Obviously, I cannot fight this battle by myself, and that's why I'm so grateful that God has blessed this ministry and put us in a position to speak with and for committed believers all over America. It is an honor for us to have the opportunity to lobby for Christian values in the nation's capital. I hear from Christians who are deeply concerned about these issues every day of the year. Our office in Washington receives hundreds of calls, letters, faxes, and e-mails with words of encouragement and with various kinds of spiritual and financial support. This is what keeps us going.

When people support the work of the Traditional Values Coalition in fighting against the totalitarian agenda of the homosexual lobby, they are taking a stand for moral values and helping to preserve the kind of America the Founding Fathers meant for us to have. In addition to our Web site-www.traditionalvalues.org-we produce a hard-hitting newsletter and a weekly e-mail bulletin that goes out to hundreds of thousands of homes and offices with news about what's happening on the national scene. These are available to all our supporters and friends.

In addition, we are honored to know that there's a growing network of men and women who are willing to write letters, send e-mails, and call their federal and state legislators and local public officials to encourage them to stand up for traditional values and to defend our First Amendment guarantees of free speech and the freedom of religion. I can assure you that a personal, handwritten letter to a congressman or senator carries a lot of weight. And even for those lawmakers who may not agree with us on these issues, taking the time to express your feelings about the dangers of the homosexual agenda can be a powerful weapon for good.

I also ask our supporters and friends to be willing to write letters to the editor of the local newspaper, to respond to articles that promote the homosexual lifestyle, and also to make sure that their friends, family, and fellow church members know how they feel about the threats to religious freedom coming from the homosexual agenda. If we don't speak up, nobody will do it for us. So we need to educate our local school officials on the efforts of homosexuals to recruit children and to undermine the moral framework of American society.

I'm sorry to say that sometimes the most difficult task is to get pastors and church leaders to speak out on these issues. The secular culture has convinced a lot of them that it's not loving or tolerant to speak boldly about homosexual sin. This is a lie of Satan, and it disturbs me that so many men and women who ought to know better have allowed themselves to be compromised by it. But it's always a good idea to speak from the heart with these people and to maintain a strong witness for the truth.

Encourage your pastor to establish a public affairs representative in your church who will monitor how the homosexual agenda is impacting your schools and community. Encourage him also to preach about the dangers of homosexual activism to our way of life. We have produced a comprehensive thirty-eight-minute film, called Gay Rights, Special Rights, that makes a powerful statement on this issue. This film can be a great way to get adult classes and Bible study groups to focus more seriously on the risks of the homosexual lifestyle.

We live in a new age of interactive media, with so many more tools to influence the culture than we have ever had before. Consequently, I also encourage our supporters to call in to conservative and Christian talk shows when the subject of homosexuality is being discussed. This may not be the time to start quoting Scripture, but it's certainly a good time to talk about the tragic consequences of homosexuality, the shortened life expectancy, statistics on disease and death, and other factors that are there by God's design to keep people away from these destructive behaviors. And of course the Internet is a great place to get these ideas out to people who need to know more about what's going on.

STEPPING OUT IN FAITH

For some folks who read this book, running for elected office may be a very real and logical option. Test the waters in your community. Are there openings in city government that may be in line with your knowledge and skills? Are there school-board elections or other places where your insights could make a difference? Some people may be qualified as judges, mayors, state legislators, or perhaps members of Congress or the United States Senate. None of these will be a shoo-in, and in some of them special talents and skills may be required. But unless men and women with strong moral values and a willingness to serve step up to the plate, other people with very different values will be more than happy to do it. So be bold and find a place to serve.

Not least in this list of things you can do, I would encourage you to stay informed about what's happening in this arena, to watch for breaking news that will affect you and your family, and to communicate with your representatives in Congress and the United States Senate and your state legislators when those in the homosexual lobby attempt to undermine your values and beliefs. I hope you will become familiar as well with the Traditional Values Coalition Web site (www.traditionalvalues.org), which we keep up-to-date with important news in this and many related areas.

Our staff in Washington and other parts of the country are on guard around the clock, but we can't do it all by ourselves. We depend on your input, not only in taking the message to your community and friends, but also in being our eyes and ears on the frontlines. The letters I receive from friends and supporters are a tremendous encouragement to me, assuring me that, with God's help, we're in this battle together.

While you're at it, please encourage your friends, neighbors, and business associates to take action as well. You can keep them informed by e-mailing them news items from our Web site or forwarding our e-mail news briefs dealing with the homosexual agenda and other cultural issues. Those on the other side of this issue aren't wasting any time. Groups like the Human Rights Campaign and the Gay & Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation have large staffs and huge budgets, and they are working around the clock to force their values down our throats. There's no time to waste, and the work is demanding.

When it comes right down to it, you and I are the ones who will decide if the homosexual agenda succeeds in America. We can either fight for moral judgment and biblical truth, or we can back away and hope that somebody else will take care of it. But unless we take a firm stand, the other side will be more than happy to claim the prize they're really after—introducing another generation of America's children to a way of life that will destroy them. There's no middle ground in this struggle, so now's the time to fight.

One reason we find ourselves in such dire straits at this hour is because too many Americans have been paralyzed by this subject. They are afraid to speak out about this politically charged issue, and that has to change. That's why I have made a commitment to devote my time and every ounce of energy to this work, calling God's people back into action. If we leave these issues to those who have no problem with the moral collapse of this nation, then nothing will change. America will slide further and further down that slippery slope. Homosexuals will invade our workplaces, our schools, our churches, and even our homes, and before long there will be no place left to stand.

There are risks in standing your ground, and there are also great opportunities if we're willing to accept the challenges before us. But this means that every believer must make a commitment to fight the good fight. We need to call America back to the values enshrined in our great U. S. Constitution, and we need to pray that millions will rise up for such a time as this.

As I've said throughout these pages, nations wither and die when they turn their back on God's moral law. But if we can work together to restore traditional values in this nation, and if we will renew our commitment to serve the God who gave us liberty and life, then there's no force on earth that can stop us. So what are we waiting for?

10

WHAT'S TO BE DONE?

As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten. Therefore be zealous and repent. Behold, I stand at the door and knock. If anyone hears My voice and opens the door, I will come in to him and dine with him, and he with Me. To him who overcomes I will grant to sit with Me on My throne, as I also overcame and sat down with My Father on His throne. He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches.

-REVELATION 3:19-22, NKJV

IN THIS BOOK I have spoken strongly against the homosexual agenda, and I've been especially pointed in my comments about homosexual activists, organizers, and their supporters who have adopted the terminology and tactics of war to silence and intimidate their adversaries. I have no sympathy for those who, knowing full well that the homosexual lifestyle is destroying lives every hour of the day and condemning millions not only to a living hell but also to eternal damnation, continue to rage against moral judgment and Christian virtues. Their tactics are wicked and their practices are vile. Somehow, in God's name, they must be stopped.

But let me be quick to say that I do not hate homosexuals, and I know that there are many caring and well-meaning men and women trapped in the homosexual lifestyle who would give anything to be free of it. I know there are sons and daughters who pray daily for deliverance and forgiveness but cannot break their habits and addictions. I also know there are some who actually do break with the lifestyle for a time only to slip back; for them homosexuality is not gay but has become a nightmare with no end. All these men and women have my deepest compassion and prayers, and I hope that my words in these pages, while unapologetic in portraying the sin of the homosexual agenda, will not weaken the spirits of those on the verge of transformation but will help spark a renewed commitment and even greater resolve to seek a way of escape.

THE SHEPARD CASE

To help put this in context, let me tell you about an incident that happened a few years ago in the midst of all the furor surrounding the Matthew Shepard murder case. Shepard, as you may recall, was a homosexual college student who approached two men in a bar, apparently to solicit sex. Subsequently, depending on which version of the story you believe, the men went with him to a desolate stretch of highway where they murdered the young man in cold blood and left him strung up on a barbed wire fence. That was a hideous and brutal act, for which the law justifiably makes no excuse. But, of course, the homosexual community leapt on the case as an example of the kinds of "gay bashing" homosexuals endure. The fact is, such cases are very rare, but it was just the sort of thing the activists were looking for to help them win the media battle.

Within days the police apprehended the killers, and in due course the case came to trial at the state courthouse in Laramie, Wyoming. And even though it was an exceptional situation, I knew I had to go witness the proceedings. So in November 1998, I flew to Laramie as an observer, accompanied by my colleague James Lafferty, who is also my son-in-law and communications consultant. The fact that Shepard was a homosexual made the case a national media event, and the activists were out in force. Thanks to their grandstanding, along with the frenzy of the reporters, photographers, and network crews that showed up for the trial, the event turned out to be a huge media circus.

When we arrived at the courthouse in Laramie, Jim and I saw what looked like two rival gangs lined up like armies on the field of battle. On one side were the homosexual activists who ringed the entire courthouse lawn, wearing angel costumes complete with large wings. Facing them and yelling insults in their faces were the forces of Rev. Fred Phelps and his supporters from the Westboro Baptist Church in Topeka, Kansas. Phelps has become notorious in recent years for attending homosexual rallies of all kinds and displaying provocative signs saying things like, "God Hates Fags" For this case, Phelps and friends had gone to even greater lengths to provoke the homosexuals by setting up a Web site on the Internet with a graphic of Matthew Shepard standing in the flames of hell.

So all this was happening when we arrived. The homosexuals were yelling and making an incredible scene, while Phelps and his people were matching them decibel for decibel, and both camps were in good voice that day. As I walked up to the courthouse with Jim, we saw a crowd of at least fifty news people with all their equipment—notebooks, microphones, and cameras—recording that outrageous scene. But as soon as they spotted me, virtually the entire contingent came racing over, and they wanted to know what the Bible has to say about people like Rev. Phelps and the charges he was making.

I told them that I was very concerned about the bad impression that Phelps was making with his vicious attacks saying that homosexuals cannot be saved. "Like any other person who sins," I told the reporters, "homosexuals can be saved by repenting and accepting Jesus Christ as their Savior" I explained that Jesus Christ died on the cross for all of us and that no sin, including homosexuality, is so great that Jesus will not forgive the sinner if he or she sincerely repents of their sin.

As serious as the case was, and as concerned as we all were about how the news coverage would be received that day, it was really comical to watch those reporters from CNN, CBS, the New York Times, and many other major media outlets racing back and forth between where Jim and I were standing and where Rev. Phelps was camped out. Jim said it looked like a tennis match at Wimbledon! On several occasions, Rev. Phelps would misquote Scripture to make his case, or perhaps he would use a quote out of context, and then I would have to explain the passage to the reporters, telling them what it actually said and meant.

Later, when I was asked to appear on Court TV, I was able to give a summary of the debate that had been going on that day between Phelps and me. At one point Jim asked me, "Did you ever think when you decided to come up here that you would be talking about the Scriptures to all these reporters and they would be writing it down?"

I just smiled at Jim and said, "There was a reason for coming here today." I knew that God had given us a chance to show that Christians are not instruments of hate. Yes, we need to be honest about the sin of homosexuality, but we must not forget that Christ came to save the lost—even these wicked men in angels' wings. And on that day, we were able to give that message loud and clear.

There is hope, and over the years I have met many ex-gays who have bravely come forward to testify to the miracle of God's love that allowed them to overcome their bondage to sin. But what we also need to understand is that the promoters of the homosexual agenda don't want to let any of those captives escape. Their strength, they believe, is in numbers, and that's why they resist so fiercely and why they recruit our children in the schools, on the playgrounds, and in the shopping malls. This is why they have such contempt for groups like the Boy Scouts who deny them access to young men pledged to honor God and country and to remain morally straight.

Furthermore, this is why they've built a massive empire with expansive multistory office complexes in major urban centers, like the national headquarters of the Human Rights Campaign in Washington DC, where they meet to orchestrate their well-financed assaults on morality, decency, and the law. I will never lose hope that God may save some of them and call them out of the lifestyle. But, on the other hand, so long as these large and well-funded activist groups continue to prosper, they remain a threat to our way of life. So long as they continue to recruit our children, they must be counted as enemies in the land. That is the sad reality.

EXPOSING THE LIE

For decades, these activists have claimed that same-sex attraction is inborn, hard-wired, and can't be changed. More recently, however, some activists in the transgender community-meaning cross-dressers and those who take on the characteristics of the opposite sex-have been saying that sexual orientation is fluid, and that it can change back and forth. In other words, someone can be a male homosexual one day and a female transvestite the next. I could say more about this, but let's just say the mixed messages say a lot about the hypocrisy of the movement.

At one time homosexuals referred to their lifestyle as a "sexual preference" Before long, however, they changed the terminology because they recognized that most people would perceive that a "preference" is actually a "choice" So the new term became "sexual orientation," which was morally neutral and suggested that there was an innate predisposition involved.

In two exhaustive and eye-opening studies of the homosexual network and the public health disasters it has spawned, Enrique T. Rueda exposes the posturing and pretense behind the homosexual claims. He shows how the disinformation campaign implemented by the homosexual lobby has succeeded in changing our laws and corrupting the entire social fabric of American culture. These books are not light reading, by any stretch, but they are among the most powerful and authoritative works I have ever seen on this subject.¹

The "born gay" argument is perhaps the most pernicious deception being put forth today. A homosexual lobbying group at the University of Washington, called the Gay, Bisexual, Lesbian, Transgender Commission, has made the claim that, "Homosexuality is not a choice any more than being left-handed or having blue eyes or being heterosexual is a choice. It's an orientation, part of who you are. The choice is in deciding how to live your life."² As we've seen repeatedly, there's absolutely no credible scientific evidence to support that assertion. But, of course, those who are predisposed to receive the message are quick to take what sounds like science from a major university and use it to silence reasonable dissent.

The National Education Association and the American Psychological Association, for example, were quick to grab onto the "born gay" myth, which they trumpeted in a pamphlet called, "Just the Facts" That booklet was sent to every school superintendent in every public school district in America. In it they cited research that supposedly showed, "Sexual orientation is one component of a person's identity, which is made up of many other components, such as culture, ethnicity, gender, and personality traits"³ This falsehood was subsequently spread far and wide as proof of the biological connection to homosexual behavior.

The purpose of such statements is not merely to defend behavior but to prevent groups such as the National Association for Research and Therapy of Homosexuality (NARTH), headed by my good friend Dr. Joseph Nicolosi, from countering their message with solid evidence that the homosexual addiction can be overcome. Homosexual activists and their allies at the NEA and APA claimed that "sexual orientation" is built-in. Pro-homosexual politicians and lobbyists here in Washington keep saying that we have no right to discriminate against homosexuals and that Congress must legislate "special rights" to protect these innocent people from attack.

But the research is unequivocal: there is no such thing as a "gay gene." There is no innate biological condition that makes some men engage in sodomy and that makes some women become lesbians. Groups like NARTH and Exodus International have published dozens of first-person accounts from ex-gays whose lives have been transformed and renewed and who have come out of the lifestyle.⁴ Confronted by such evidence, and faced with the fact that his research had been discredited by scientists at a half dozen major research centers, even homosexual researcher Dean Hamer had to admit that, "There is not a single master gene that makes people gay.... I don't think we will ever be able to predict who will be gay."

Simultaneously, Dr. Simon LeVay, the homosexual researcher who had studied the differences in the hypothalamus glands of homosexual and heterosexual men, had to admit that, "It's important to stress what I didn't find. I did not prove that homosexuality is genetic, or find a genetic cause for being gay. I didn't show that gay men are born that way, the most common mistake people make in interpreting my work. I have debated Dr. LeVay on radio and television, and I've spoken with him on many occasions. While he continues to defend the homosexual agenda, he can no longer do so on the basis of science."

Even lesbian author and activist Dr. Camille Paglia dared to say that, "Homosexuality is not 'normal'. On the contrary it is a challenge to the norm.... Nature exists whether academics like it or not. And in nature, procreation is the single relentless rule. That is the norm. Our sexual bodies were designed for reproduction.... No one is born gay. The idea is ridiculous ... homosexuality is an adaptation, not an inborn trait."

WHERE DEVIANCY LEADS

One of the main reasons these confessions are important is that they help to shed light on the nature of deviant behavior and to make it clear that such practices are not built-in, and they're not innocent. Rather, they are associated with some sort of emotional disturbance in childhood, such as sexual or emotional abuse, and with premature sexual experimentation that imprints inappropriate erotic images and emotions on the minds of some young men and women.

To understand where these emotions can lead if they're not dealt with promptly and appropriately, we only need to consider briefly some of the ways that sexuality has been exploited by those with unnatural desires. There are dozens of emotional, psychological, and sociological conditions that result in bizarre sexual behaviors, and there are even groups and associations formed to promote their particular perversion.

Perhaps the best known of these is NAMBLA, the North American Man/Boy Love Association, that advocates legalized pedophilia. In addition to magazines, Web sites, chat rooms, club meetings, and other expressions of this vile perversion, NAMBLA organizes "sex tours" for its members, often to exotic third world countries or tropical islands where they can engage in unrestricted sexual intercourse with children as young as five and six years of age.

Civilized people are revolted by such things, and that's why our laws routinely condemn them and why the government actively pursues and prosecutes those who are caught participating in them. One such arrest happened recently when a well-known family dentist, Phillip Todd Calvin, age forty-three, and his two companions, David Cory Mayer, age forty-nine, and Paul Ernest Zipszer, age thirty-nine, were arrested by the FBI on San Diego's Harbor Island. The men, who were waiting for a boat to take them to Mexico, were charged with conspiracy to travel in interstate and foreign commerce for the purpose of engaging in illegal sexual conduct.

As it turns out, the whole thing was a sting operation involving the FBI, the San Diego Police Department, and other agencies involved in a nationwide crackdown on sex tourism. Informants had provided enough detailed information on the trio to make their capture possible. Fortunately, each man will face up to thirty years in prison upon conviction, but that's not the end of the problem.

When news of the operation went public, FBI spokesmen advised parents to talk frankly with their children about the possibility of being targeted by people like these three who may try to lure them into situations where they can be taken advantage of. Children who use Internet chat rooms are especially vulnerable, they said.⁸ When combined with the natural curiosity of children who have been aroused for years by sexual images in rock music, television, and the movies, the risks involved are very real. And it's not always clear whom kids can trust. In one very disturbing recent case, a minister in the city of Brea, California, was discovered to be a long-term pedophile and sexual predator.

And even if some of their members are caught in the act, NAMBLA isn't going away. The battle for gay rights has emboldened their leaders to fight the system. If same-sex marriage is ever legalized, as justice Antonin Scalia has warned, there will be nothing stopping sexual deviants from bringing every imaginable behavior out into the open, daring the law to step in. Polygamy will be the first, I suspect, since hundreds of fundamentalist Mormons in Utah and parts of Arizona are already practicing what they call "multiple marriages;" and law enforcement is turning a blind eye. Next will come three- and four-person marriages, and groupings that would boggle the mind.

As terrible as most of us find such things as pedophilia, incest, polygamy, and bestiality to be, these are only the better known perversions that the homosexual agenda has unleashed. There are dozens of mental conditions known as paraphilias (or fetishes) that have ensnared countless victims. Among them are pederasty (male homosexuals who enjoy having sex with male children), sadomasochism (individuals who derive sexual pleasure from receiving or inflicting pain on others), and necrophilia (individuals who are sexually aroused by viewing or having sex with corpses). I hate even to name them, but unless I'm explicit about these things, some people will accuse me of exaggeration; I only wish that were the case.

BEYOND ALL MORAL LIMITS

Other perversions include such things as coprophagia (individuals who get sexual satisfaction from eating feces), klismaphilia (individuals who are sexually aroused by enemas), and even diaper fetishes (where adults get sexual pleasure from wearing diapers and wetting themselves). If the homosexual lobby's terminology is to be accepted, any one of these behaviors could be labeled as a legitimate "sexual orientation" In fact, many of the individuals who engage in these practices want their sexual behaviors to be declared normal by the counseling community.

At an American Psychiatric Association symposium in San Francisco in 2003, two psychiatrists presented a paper arguing for the legitimization of pedophilia, sadomasochism, and other similar disorders. According to an editorial in the Washington Times, psychiatrist Charles Moses and Peggy Kleinplatz, PhD, presented a paper at an APA conference titled, "DSM-IV-TR and the Paraphilias: An Argument for Removal," which argued that people with deviant sexual behaviors should not be labeled mentally ill, and that cultural and religion values are not good parameters for defining healthy sexual behavior. They said that psychiatry does not have a model that "constitutes normal and healthy sexuality to which it could compare people whose sexual interests draw them to children or sadomasochism" In other words, they said, "Any sexual interest can be healthy and life-enhancing" Fortunately, the members of the APA voted against the proposal, but the issue isn't going away.⁹

Sociologists refer to groups who engage in bizarre sexual practices as "deviant subcultures." The success of homosexuals and transgen- ders in organizing pressure groups to normalize their behaviors has emboldened these other groups to do the same. Pedophiles, as one example, have found allies in academia who support adult/child sex. In 1999, the University of Minnesota press published Judith Levine's book Harmful to Minors, which argues that adult/child sex is not necessarily a bad thing. The foreword to her book, by former Surgeon General Joycelyn Elders, called on Americans to be more open-minded about sex between adults and children. Again, if homosexuals have their way, in time it will be virtually impossible to defend society from such people.

Even current Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg once argued that the age of consent for sex with or between minors should be lowered to age twelve. She has been an adamant defender of abortion, as well, and very pro-homosexual in her actions on the bench. Such thinking can only come from someone who has an affinity for the views of the homosexual lobby and, particularly in Ginsburg's case, from her former role as general counsel of the ACLU.

In an article assessing the new trend called "Pedophilia Chic;" Dr. Mary Eberstadt described for readers of the Weekly Standard the close relationships between the homosexual community and the growing pedophile movement. Eberstadt says the reason why sex with boys is being so openly debated in this country today is because it's being pushed by "certain parts of the gay rights movement. The more that movement has entered the mainstream, the more this 'question' has bubbled forth from that previously distant realm into the public square."¹⁰ All these evils spring from the same root.

According to one homosexual writer, the term "domestic partnerships" was first used in California in 1989. The idea was slow in catching on and resulted in few tangible benefits. Same-sex partners wanted hospital visitation rights, which they got, then certain businesses and public organizations began offering domestic-partner benefits to their employees. Eventually, however, homosexuals in the state legislature began talking about marriage benefits, civil unions, and same-sex marriage. By the time Mayor Gavin Newsom handed three thousand marriage licenses to homosexuals in San Francisco, the way had been paved. The debates over same-sex marriage taking place today are part of the same strategy that began there, then migrated to Hawaii in 1993, Vermont in 1999, Massachusetts in 2003, and Connecticut in 2005.

And it's not over yet.

What's happening is a process the homosexual community calls "incrementalism" It's a process of gradual desensitization and familiarization, breaking down the natural resistance of the public to what's actually involved in homosexual relationships. And it's also a way of blackmailing legislators and other public officials into making largescale concessions to the gay rights movement, which has managed to persuade many people that homosexuality is a "civil right"

The position of the Traditional Values Coalition is that same-sex marriage, domestic partnerships, civil unions, and every other synonym used to describe the union of two individuals of the same sex in some sort of counterfeit marriage must remain illegal and unacceptable in this country. I am fighting now in the halls of Congress for a constitutional amendment, as I've described earlier, to insure that marriage is defined as the legal union of one man and one woman. But we will only support a constitutional amendment that fully protects marriage with no civil unions or any other arrangement that allows homosexuals to marry. Marriage is a God-ordained institution that preexisted the founding of this nation, and the sanctity of marriage and the family must be protected and preserved by law.

A WAY OF ESCAPE

Dr. Warren Throckmorton is an expert in the study and treatment of homosexuality. He is someone who believes that there are ways to escape from these debilitating social and emotional illnesses. In the film he produced, called I Do Exist, Dr. Throckmorton gives us a glimpse into the lives of five former homosexuals who have found their way back to emotional and sexual health. In the film he also answers many questions about the prospects for change.

Designed as a documentary, the film describes how people come to identify themselves as gay in the first place, and then how they are able to transition to a new life as heterosexuals. This is just one of the resources I recommend to people who want a clearer picture of what happens to people in this lifestyle and how some brave individuals manage to break away. The men and women who tell their stories in this film describe the process of reorienting their sexual desires and behaviors by developing a sense of self-awareness and finding a renewed sense of satisfaction in their lives.

The most compelling component of this film is the story of Noe Gutierrez, who had been interviewed in the pro-homosexual film It's Elementary years earlier when he was in middle school. Today he is heterosexual, and looking back on that experience now with a new frame of reference, Gutierrez regrets having contributed to a documentary that aggressively pointed kids toward homosexual experimentation, telling them that if they feel different in some way, they may be gay. Along with personal and professional commentary from a group of distinguished scientists and researchers, I Do Exist makes it clear that change is possible, and that homosexuals who are determined to find a better way can actually escape the lifestyle and the death sentence it brings.¹¹

This is also a message that people like Diane Mattingly and Michael Lumberger are now sharing with audiences around the country. Diane is a former lesbian who grew up in a home where all the love and attention of both parents were directed at her older brother. The brother was handsome, a popular athlete, and a good student. "It is said that children are the best recorders, but the worst interpreters, of information;" Diane says. "I interpreted this favoritism to mean that my brother-and not me-was the one who was supposed to succeed. As I watched my parents pour their hopes and dreams into him, I felt like I was on the sidelines"¹²

There are many twists and turns in Diane's story, and many times when she felt cut off and unloved. Psychologist Mary Beth Patton, who works with the Portland affiliate of Exodus International, writes that, "Women who deal with same-sex attraction often possess a history of dis-identification with their mothers, and therefore their femininity. This leads to a longing for connection with the feminine that becomes sexualized in adolescence" Reading those words today, Diane recognizes that this is what happened to her. Without the love or respect of either parent, she began looking for love in all the wrong places, and she found it.

Between her long- and short-term relationships with other women, Diane dated men and even became pregnant by one of them. She imagined momentarily that this might be the answer to her hunger, but the father of her child wanted none of it, left her alone, and she took the easy way out by aborting her baby. After many dark nights of soul searching and bouts of bitter agony and self-hatred, Diane finally called out to God for help, and she found her way to two organizations in her home state of Virginia that had the answers she needed.

"The most I could ever hope to do in my own strength," Diane says today, "was to keep myself walled off from further hurt. Left to my own efforts, I would have had to settle for existing instead of living. And I wanted to live." Diane had no choice but to trust God for healing. He had begun a process in her that made sense, at last, and she made the difficult choice of walking away from her old life of sorrow in order to find a better life in Christ. "I've had to choose to keep myself present to the larger body of Christ;" she says, "and be willing to enter into transparent relationships with people. Healing comes in community and by being in fellowship with other believers. Isolation is one of the greatest enemies of the soul."

When Diane entered a program of counseling and participation called Living Waters, run by Regeneration of Northern Virginia, which is part of Exodus International, a ministry to ex-gays, her restoration began. "I have put off the labels of victim and lesbian and betrayed;" she says. "I have had to be willing to let God define me as a woman and to show me how to be comfortable with my true femininity."¹³

A TRIAL BY FIRE

For Michael Lumberger, the road to homosexuality was initiated by sexual abuse by an older sibling when he was just four years of age. Because of threats of violence, the boy kept quiet, and the abuse continued. By the time he reached junior high school and the onset of puberty, Michael felt "different" His parents were cold and unexpressive. There was no hugging or touching in the home, so his natural desire for affection drew him to other boys since this was the only closeness he had ever known.

When Michael moved away to go to college, he shared a room with two other young men, one of whom was homosexual. During the first two years there, he says, he had sex with men and women. He was a young African American male, well liked, and he knew the ropes. It was only when a classmate discovered that Michael had been having sex with his male roommate that his lifestyle suddenly took on a much more dramatic dimension. "Of course, I denied everything," he said, "but inside I was already running. Within a week I had packed my bags and left college. I was terrified that people would find out what I had been doing in secret. I went back home and worked with my family for a few months. Then I decided, if I'm gay, I'm going to be gay all the way." And that's where his slide into the homosexual lifestyle began.

"When I ran out of money for food and drugs," he said, "I even learned to sell my body on the streets. But after a few months, I grew sick of homosexuality." Eventually Michael went home and got a real job. In time he met a woman he cared for, and they got married and had three children. But his head and his heart were still confused, and before long he'd lost all those signs of a normal life. When he fell back into his old habits, his wife left him and took the children. In the depths of despair, he said, God must have heard his silent cry for help. He found his way to one church that provided some of the answers for his questions, but, because of secret sin in the lives of certain members of the church, he almost fell back into his old lifestyle.

Wisely, Michael moved to a new church that taught the true Word of God. Again, God heard his prayers and spoke to his heart, saying, "This is the church where I will deliver you from homosexuality" As that process began, he once again heard the silent prompting in his spirit, and, once again, he was attracted to a woman who appealed to him, but he was uncertain until one day he felt the Lord say to him, "That woman is going to be your wife" He trusted that voice, introduced himself to the woman he had admired from afar, and nine months later they were married.

Michael's healing from a life of homosexuality and identity confusion wasn't immediate. He struggled with sin and at one point was diagnosed with full-blown AIDS. That news changed everything. He spent a lonely vigil one night with a former homosexual partner who died in his arms, and in his tears and confusion, Michael begged God to cleanse him and put him on the road to freedom. Once again, the voice of reassurance told him that all would be well.

"Several weeks later;" Michael says, "my pastor asked me to begin leading the support group when the previous leader resigned. When I prayed about the decision, God said to me, 'This is the thing that I have been preparing you for.' In the years since then," he adds, "about five hundred to six hundred men and women have gone through the group. Some of them have gone back into gay life, but a great majority of them are church leaders today. Some are married with families. And it has all happened because I said yes to what God called me to do." And most surprising of all, Michael said, today he is "totally free from the AIDS virus."¹⁴

CONSCIENTIOUS INTERVENTION NEEDED

The homosexual lifestyle, as these stories reveal, is a sad and torturous affair. At best, homosexuals are coping with deep pain, anxiety, and insecurity. Their attempts at finding love and acceptance are almost always futile, and the horrors of disease and disability they endure as a direct result of their unnatural habits are sad and terrible. There is nothing attractive about a lesbian who has eradicated her femininity in order to become a pseudo-male. There's nothing winsome about a twenty-three-year-old homosexual with a colostomy bag at his side.

The lifestyle is murderous, and the condemnation of Scripture is clear. But it's also important to point out, as I want to do now, that we must not react so quickly or so self-righteously to the homosexual agenda that we end up hating not just the sin but the sinner as well. Jesus taught that we are to rebuke the sinner, but we are also to forgive him if he earnestly repents and turns from his sin. Jesus said, "Take heed to yourselves. If your brother sins against you, rebuke him; and if he repents, forgive him" (Luke 17:3, NKJv). Yes, he maybe weak; he may even fall back and repeat his sin, as Peter discovered; but if he genuinely repents, we are told, we are to forgive the sin. And that's a part of our mission of recovery and restoration, too.

In my ministry with the Traditional Values Coalition in Washington DC, dealing with Congress and many government and nongovernmental organizations on important issues of ethics and morality, I have often had a close working relationship with people on the other side of these issues. In one case, it was a former Republican congressman who came out of the closet. In other cases I've worked with members of Congress who saw these problems much differently but who were nevertheless willing to discuss and debate them with me.

It's important to know that we don't need to hate our opponents, and you can even have a friendship with some of them, as I have done. The point is to try to find common ground so that constructive change can be made. Furthermore, we need to share the gospel even as we stand against the forces of darkness, for Christ is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance (2 Pet. 3:9). We need to make sure that we give all who will listen to this admonition the opportunity to experience the life-changing redemption of Christ's love.

The best way to head off the homosexual agenda before it gets any worse is to make sure we have an ounce of prevention in the public arena—especially in the public schools. That is, to make sure that children have mothers and fathers who are good role models. We must uphold the standards of stable, two-parent families, and not lower them. Education in the public schools is, as we know, a very dangerous area, as the NEA and others try to implement a value-neutral moral climate. Parents, churches, and community leaders need to be sensitive to every child and the attitudes and values they are exposed to.

We need to show particular concern for those who do not have a father in the home or who do not have suitable role models. That should be a ministry for the churches: to create an atmosphere where every child can feel the security of an adult male who is not sexually motivated but who cares about the emotional health of the child. And we need to be involved in places where dramatic changes are taking place. Certainly the homosexual debate is an area where responsible, well-informed, and conscientious intervention is needed. And there's so much to be done.

CONQUERING OUR FEARS

I'm convinced that our biggest problem today is that a spirit of timidity has silenced the prophetic voice of the church. Paul assures us that, "God has not given us a spirit of fear, but of power and of love and of a sound mind" And he adds, "Therefore do not be ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me His prisoner, but share with me in the sufferings for the gospel according to the power of God" (2 Tim. 1:7-8, NKJV).

Just as a physician cannot look away from the sick and injured patient, we cannot look away from the man or woman who is trapped in homosexual sin. To be faithful to our challenge, we need to help our Christian men to get past the point where homosexuality is repulsive to them. What the gay movement calls homophobia is, in reality, the natural response of the male ego to behaviors that are inherently repulsive to us. But when we understand the social disorder of the homosexual and the circumstances that may have led to that lifestyle, then our compassion has to be directed at helping them find their way out of darkness.

We have to be able to talk about homosexuality in a very clinical manner. We have to be able to describe what and why it is, and to be very clear and direct in saying that these practices are, by God's design, harmful and potentially fatal activities. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention calls them "high-risk behaviors;" and that's exactly what they are. Many young boys who run away from home for no other reason than rebellion end up finding a man who will father them with a certain amount of freedom where they can do what they want, and they end up in a homosexual relationship. It's not that they wanted to be homosexual, but that's where their rebellion led them. And many girls get into prostitution in much the same way.

It's tragic to see them lined up on the streets of Los Angeles, Greenwich Village, or Las Vegas-male and female prostitutes sometimes no more than fourteen or fifteen years of age. The only reason they're prostitutes in many cases is because they couldn't make enough money any other way. But it's equally true that many of them will be dead before they ever reach adulthood, either from disease, from accidents, or from violent crime.

Unfortunately, many men are verbally paralyzed for fear of speaking about these problems. Women don't have quite the same reaction to homosexuals that most men have, for a very simple reason. Pregnancy and childbirth are natural experiences in the context of marriage and family, and for most women this is neither strange nor troublesome. Men, however, often find themselves in the role of mystified observers who can only look on with awe and admiration. By the same token, when a woman encounters a homosexual in the workplace, she feels secure in her own sexuality, while most men are very uncomfortable in this situation. Men have to learn how to recognize what they feel and to express verbally why homosexuality is wrong.

We need to speak, early and often, of the high price to our society if we remain blind and mute about what's happening to this nation. If we are silent, and if we decide not to learn and to speak out with righteous indignation, then it will be our children, their friends, and the entire next generation of American society that will be destroyed by it. This is what J. D. Unwin says in his book. If a single generation refuses to enforce and hold up in a high and honorable way the principles of monogamy in marriage, and no extramarital sex, then the next generation will be submerged in promiscuity and sexual license, and that's when society loses its cultural energy.

A TIME FOR ACTION

Some sociologists have suggested that if anything is deeply morally and culturally wrong in society, it will eventually become clear to everyone and changes will be made. We will say that slavery was a profound cultural wrong, which, thanks to men like William Wilberforce in England and the abolitionists in America, was eventually reversed. Our policies and laws were changed, and our attitudes about the evil practice of slavery were radically altered, but not before thousands of lives were lost and not until we had endured a tragic civil war in this country that spilled precious blood on both sides of the Mason-Dixon line.

Sometimes societies do make changes of this magnitude, but it may take generations for that to happen. If government passes a bad law and no one reacts to stop it, it may eventually destroy itself and destroy the people it was meant to help. The public may eventually come to their senses and repeal a bad law, but when a basic moral law is transgressed, there may be thousands or even millions of lives lost before the citizens wake up and turn back to a higher moral standard. I'm convinced that our society will one day be forced to recognize and admit that homosexuality was a terrible and tragic wrong, but are we willing to wait until another generation is lost? Can we go any further in the wrong direction before we take action to stop it?

We can't wait, and I for one am not prepared to watch the slow devastation of this great nation in such a manner. The Book of Genesis tells us that God's creative order was perfect in the beginning. In Genesis 1:26 we read that God made man in His own image. In Genesis 2:18 we see that God saw that it was not good for man to be alone without a female. So He says, "I will make a helper comparable to him" Then you have the Creation story repeated in more detail.

If you read on to chapter 11 and God's calling of Abraham, you will see that Abraham is brought by God out of Ur of the Chaldees, which is modern Iraq. And that ancient society was absolutely saturated, not with the nuclear family, but with promiscuity and every kind of sexual vice. Homosexuality was rampant, and infant sacrifices were common. So God called Abraham out of that setting and told him, "You will be the father of many nations"

That was God's plan. It was His creative order. But, of course, Abraham messed up before he became fully obedient. He conceived a child with Hagar, the maidservant of his wife Sarah, and he created a generation of people who today are very much at odds with everything that has to do with Jesus Christ and the Christian gospel. But when Abraham got things back on track, God forgave him, and the rest is history. But here's the point. God did not want to bring forth a nation in a setting that was saturated with sexual perversion and homosexuality. So there was this little monogamous, heterosexual tribe, moving around Mesopotamia, in an area that was submersed in pedophilia, bisexuality, and every sort of immorality. And God brought them out.

WE SHALL PREVAIL!

As I've said in many places in this book, the Founding Fathers believed that America was a special nation, a chosen people, a shining city on a hill. Some called it the New Jerusalem, and they believed America was to be a civilization built on that epic model of Israel, as Abraham saw it. It doesn't matter whether you're a Jew, a Muslim, or a Christian today: This is the premise upon which our republic was founded. This was the model on which our culture has been built. It is a covenant with God, and that's why it's so clear that fornication and adultery and homosexuality and all the ills that have been cited in these pages are so absolutely contrary to God's plan of order and happiness for mankind.

We need to remember Benjamin Franklin's words to that woman in the crowd when he was leaving the Constitutional Convention in Philadelphia in 1789. She asked, "Doctor, what have you given us?" To which the old gentleman replied, "A republic, if you can keep it"¹⁵ That challenge still stands. But with these images in view, I would ask you to consider the contrasting portrait of where we actually stand today, threatened not only by extremists on the outside but by radical activists in our midst.

Make no mistake; the homosexual agenda is a strategic plan for war. It is not a public policy briefing or a marketing plan: the agenda that has been disseminated by the homosexual lobby is a military strategy, a campaign map for a war to the death, waged by cunning men upon a supine and self-indulgent nation. The media and the cultural elites have already given up. The children in our schools and colleges are being turned against us even now. To overcome this fearsome campaign, we will need sovereign guidance and nerves of steel. The stakes could not be higher, but we have a benevolent Defender and Friend on our side.

I do not exaggerate when I say that this trial by fire will determine the very survival of our culture and the fate of civilization as we know it. This is not a battle against foreign enemies or third world extremists, but against an even greater foe: the forces of darkness and legions of angry homosexuals and lesbians determined to abolish Christian virtue and moral judgment in any form. We must proceed with caution, and we must come forth with open hands.

We must hear this message in our churches. The battle can be won, but only if we work together to push back the darkness of ignorance, apathy, and compromise. Now that we have a better understanding of what the agenda is all about, we must continue sounding the alarm until the entire Christian community is awake and fully engaged. We cannot rest until this battle is won, but with God's help, we shall prevail!

NOTES

[Due to the age of web links, you can try searching for archived snapshots of pages & docs no longer available at <https://archive.org/web/>]

INTRODUCTION - WANTED: A FAITHFUL WITNESS

1. Matthew D. Stayer, Same-Sex Marriage: Putting Every Household at Risk (Nashville, TN: Broadman & Holman, 2004), 102.
2. J. W. Curran, et al., "Epidemiology of HIV Infection and AIDS in the United States;" Science 239 (February 5, 1988): 610-616.
3. W. Odets, in a report to the American Association of Physicians for Human Rights, cited in E. L. Goldman, "Psychological Factors Generate HIV Resurgence in Young Gay Men," Clinical Psychiatry News (October 1994): 5.
4. B. A. Koblin, et al., "Increased Incidence of Cancer Among Homosexual Men, New York City and San Francisco 1978-1990;" American Journal of Epidemiology (November 1996): 916-923.
5. J. M. Palefsky, et al., "Anal Squamous Intraepithelial Lesions in HIV-Positive and HIV-Negative Homosexual and Bisexual Men: Prevalence and Risk Factors," Journal of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndromes (April 1998): 320-326.
6. Goldman, "Psychological Factors Generate HIV Resurgence in Young Gay Men."
7. Paul Cameron, PhD, William L. Playfair, MD, and Stephen Wellum, "The Longevity of Homosexuals: Before and After the AIDS Epidemic," Omega: The Journal of Death and Dying 29 (1994): 3, quoted in Dr. D. James Kennedy, "Homosexuality," Today's Conflict, Tomorrow's Crisis, copyright 2001, <http://www.eaglescout rally.org/conflict-crisis.htm> (accessed April 14, 2005).
8. David Island and Patrick Letellier, Men Who Beat the Men Who Love Them (New York: Haworth Press, 1991), 14.
9. Alan P. Bell and Martin S. Weinberg, Homosexualities: A Study of Diversity Among Men and Women (New York: Simon and Schuster, 1979). See also: A. Bell, M. Weinberg, and S. Hammersmith, Sexual Preference: Its Development in Men and Women (Bloomington, IL: Indiana University Press, 1981).

10. Paul Cameron and Kirk Cameron, "What Is 'A Homosexual,'" Journal of the Family Research Institute 15 (June/July 2000), http://www.familyresearchinstitute.org/RR_00_07.html (accessed April 14, 2005).
11. "NEA Pres Bob Chase's Historic Speech From 2000 GLSEN Conference," October 7, 2000, <http://www.glsen.org/cgi-bin/iowa/all/news/record/143.html> (accessed April 12, 2005).
12. Frank York, "Brave New Schools: Public Employees Teach Kids 'Gay' Sex," WorldNetDaily, May 9, 2000, http://www.worldnetdaily.com/news/article.asp?ARTICLE_ID=17490 (accessed April 12, 2005).
13. Douglas Montero, "Secret Shame of Our Schools: Sexual Abuse of Students Runs Rampant," New York Post, July 30, 2001.
14. "Prepared Statement of Daniel E. Troy, Esquire, Associate Scholar, American Enterprise Institute, and Partner, Wiley, Rein and Fielding," Hate Crimes Violence, hearing before the Committee on the Judiciary, House of Representatives, 106th Congress, August 4, 1999, 70-88, http://commdocs.house.gov/committees/judiciary/hju62909.000/hju62909_0f.htm (accessed April 12, 2005).
15. CNN.com Election 2004, Ballot Measures, <http://www.cnn.com/ELECTION/2004/pages/results/ballot.measures/> (accessed April 12, 2005).

CHAPTER 1 - DESTRUCTIVE FORCES

1. Connie Marshner, "We Told You So: The Homosexual Network, 20 Years Later," Free Congress Foundation, February 8, 2002.
2. James Davison Hunter, Culture Wars: The Struggle to Define America (New York: Basic Books, 1991).
3. Jon Ward, "Atheist Sues to Ban Hand on Bible," Washington Times, January 8, 2005, <http://www.washtimes.com/metro/20050108-120519-9586r.htm> (accessed April 12, 2005).
4. See especially: Robert A. J. Gagnon, The Bible and Homosexual Practice: Texts and Hermeneutics (Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 2001).
5. Joanne Laucus, "Bible: Decision Raises Questions About Freedom of Speech," Ottawa Citizen, June 29, 2001, article accessed at Secular News Headlines, <http://www.eunacom.net/SecularNews.htm> (accessed April 12, 2005). See also, "A Canadian Civil Rights Ruling Dealing With Anti-Gay Verses in the Bible," http://www.religioustolerance.org/bibl_hate3.htm (accessed March 28, 2005).
6. "Teacher to Be Suspended One Month Without Pay for Writing Against Homosexual Agenda in Schools," Vancouver, April 16, 2003, <http://www.lifesitenews.com>, <http://www.lifesite.net/ldn/2003/apr/03041603.html> (accessed March 28, 2005).

7. David Ottewell, "Gay-row Bishop Not to Face 'Hate' Charge," Manchester News, Manchester Online, November 11, 2003, http://www.manchesteronline.co.uk/news/s/72/72632_gayrow_bishop_not_to_face_hate_charge.html (accessed April 13, 2005).
8. R. Albert Mohler Jr., "Criminalizing Christianity: Sweden's Hate Speech Law," Alex Jones' <http://www.prisonplanet.com>, August 6, 2004, <http://www.prisonplanet.com/articles/august2004/060804criminalizingchristianity.htm> (accessed April 13, 2005).
9. "Belgian Cardinal to Be Sued for Remarks on Homosexuality," January 26, 2004, <http://www.cwnews.com/news/viewstory.cfm?recnum=27229> (accessed April 13, 2005).
10. "Gay Marriages Issue Sparks Row in Spain," GMax News, January 6, 2004, <http://www.gmax.co.za/look04/01/06-spainmarry.html> (accessed April 13, 2005).
11. The goal of the "gay agenda" is spelled out in lurid detail in Marshall Kirk and Hunter Madsen, After the Ball: How America Will Conquer Its Fear and Hatred of Gays in the 90s (New York: Plume, 1990), 146-147. This is also discussed further in this chapter.
12. Jimmy Breslin, "This Holy Week's a Big, Unholy Mess," Newsday, April 7, 2004, <http://pqasb.pqarchiver.com/newsday/doc/279782534.html?FMT=FT&FMTS=ABS:FT&type=current&date=&author=&pub=&desc=This+Holy+Week%27s+a+big%2C+unholy+mess> (accessed April 13, 2005).
13. Associated Press, "Newsday Prints Editor's Note on Breslin," Editor & Publisher, April 15, 2004, http://www.mediainfo.com/eandp/news/article_display.jsp?vnu_content_id=1000489327 (accessed April 13, 2005).
14. Ibid.
15. Lionel Wright, "The Stonewall Riots-1969," Socialism Today 40 (July 1999).
16. Norman Markowitz, "Harry Hay: The Great Forerunner," PoliticalAffairs.net, Archives-Dates and Topics / 2004 / April, <http://www.politicalaffairs.net/article/view/119/1/29> (accessed April 13, 2005).
17. At one point Frank Kameny also tried to take the name Traditional Values Coalition away from our organization, which prompted us to register the name as a trademark with the United States Patent Office to make certain that neither Kameny nor any other group could misuse our name or mislead the public about their agenda.

18. Daniel C. Palm and Tom Krannawitter, "L.A. County's Seal and the Real Agenda of the ACLU," Claremont Institute, June 9, 2004, http://www.claremont.org/writings/040609palm_kran.html (accessed April 13, 2005).
19. Charles Socarides, MD, "The Sexual Deviations and the Diagnostic Manual," American Journal of Psychotherapy (July 1978).
20. Ronald Bayer, Homosexuality and American Psychiatry: The Politics of Diagnosis (New York: Basic Books, 1981), 101-154; William Dannemeyer, Shadow in the Land (San Francisco: Ignatius Press, 1989), 24-39.
21. Brian Clowes and Steve Frezza, "Homosexuality and the 'Ten Percent' Myth," The Pro-Life Activist's Encyclopedia (Stafford, VA: American Life League, 1998), chapter 116, <http://prolife.ath.cx:8000/plae116.htm> (accessed April 13, 2005).
22. Ibid.
23. Charles W. Socarides, MD, "How America Went Gay," America (November 18, 1995), quoted on <http://www.leaderu.com/jhs/socarides.html> (accessed March 31, 2005).
24. Kirk and Madsen, After the Ball, quoted in Socarides, "How America Went Gay."
25. Ibid.
26. According to federal regulations, as applied by the federal courts and agencies such as the Equal Opportunity Employment Commission (EEOC), legal minority status is determined upon evidence of being uniquely deprived of cultural advantages by virtue of race, religion, physical disability, or other unique criteria. To meet the legal definition of a "discreet and insular minority" under U.S. law, individuals and groups of individuals must be socially, vocationally, economically and educationally disadvantaged, and must be clearly identified as individuals who have been faced with restrictions and limitations, subjected to a history of purposeful unequal treatment, and relegated to a position of political powerlessness in our society. By none of these criteria do homosexuals qualify for minority status. Economically, educationally, socially, and culturally, homosexuals are above the national average and come from all segments of society. Clearly, their push for "minority" status is a political ploy with no basis in fact. For example, see Regents of the University of California v. Bakke, 438 U.S. 265 (1978).
27. A fuller discussion of these issues follows in chapter ten.
28. General Colin Powell, Chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff, letter to Congresswoman Pat Schroeder as quoted in the Salem Statesman Journal, June 6, 1992.

29. J. D. Unwin, Sex and Culture (London: Oxford University Press, H. Milford), 1934.
30. William J. Bennett, The Broken Hearth: Reversing the Moral Collapse of the American Family (New York: Doubleday, 2001).
31. For a devastating analysis of the sexual confusion rampant among adolescents today, see a report of the pro-homosexual Sexuality Information and Education Council of the United States (SIECUS): April/May 2001, vol. 29, no. 4 [http://www.thebody.com/siecus/report/youth_issues.html]. This statistical review indicates just how effective, and how tragic, two decades of pro-homosexual indoctrination in the nation's classrooms has been in eroding sexual morality among children. This report draws on statistics from the Minnesota study by E. M. Saewyc, L. H. Bearinger, R. W. Blum, and M. D. Resnick, "Sexual Intercourse, Abuse and Pregnancy Among Adolescent Women: Does Sexual Orientation Make a Difference?," Family Planning Perspectives 31 (May/June 1999): 127-131.

CHAPTER 2 - A CAMPAIGN OF DECEPTION

1. Marshall Kirk and Erastes Pill, "The Overhauling of Straight America," Guide Magazine, November 1987. Note also that Erastes Pill is a pseudonym of Harvard sociologist Hunter Madsen, who coauthored the book After the Ball, cited earlier.
2. Gagnon, The Bible and Homosexual Practice: Texts and Hermeneutics, 37.
3. Ibid.
4. In a volume on female sexuality Kinsey makes the statement, "It is difficult to understand why a child, except for its cultural conditioning, should be disturbed at having its genitalia touched" Furthermore, Dr. Judith Reisman, who has conducted the most exhaustive analysis of Kinsey and his fraudulent claims, writes that during a conference hosted by the British Psychological Association, "an old colleague of Dr. Alfred Kinsey... whispered confidentially to me that Kinsey was a pedophile" Although Dr. Reisman was surprised by this admission, she was able to corroborate the man's assertion as well as Kinsey's link to the group Academic Pedophile Advocates. See Judith Reisman, "The APAs: Academic Pedophile Advocates;" WorldNetDaily, March 26, 1999, http://www.worldnetdaily.com/news/article.asp?ARTICLE_ID=16094 (accessed April 15, 2005).
5. E. Michael Jones, "The Case Against Kinsey," Fidelity Magazine, April 1989, 22-35, cited in the Pro-Life Activist's Encyclopedia.
6. As I reported in our "Talking Points" memo (Vol. 1, No. 2a), the liberal Alan Guttmacher Institute reported in Family Planning Perspectives (March/April 1993) that less than 2 percent of males had experienced a homosexual relationship in the past ten years, and only 1 percent had exclusively homosexual relationships. Similarly, the Nation Research Corporation (NORC) Survey at the University of Chicago reported a mere 0.7 percent as having exclusively homosexual relationships and 2.2 percent having had a homosexual relationship in the previous 10 years. Adding to the weight of evidence is a United States Census Bureau report showing that less than 2 percent of men reported even incidental homosexual behavior. And the Morton-Hunt Study (commissioned for Playboy magazine) found that about 1 percent of males and one-half of 1 percent of females are homosexual.

7. Gershon Legman, The Horn Book: Studies in Erotic Folklore and Bibliography (New Hyde Park, New York: University Books, 1964).
8. Jones, "The Case Against Kinsey"
9. Judith A. Reisman, et al., Kinsey, Sex, and Fraud: The Indoctrination of a People-An Investigation Into the Human Sexuality Research of Alfred C. Kinsey, Wardell B. Pomeroy, Clyde E. Martin, and Paul H. Gebhard (Lafayette, LA: Huntington House Publishers, 1990).
10. In an address to members of the National Lesbian and Gay Journalism Association (NLGJA) at the National Press Club, April 12, 2000, Richard Berke, a national political correspondent for the New York Times, said, "This is at a newspaper where not so long ago-when I started there 15 years ago-they were keeping lists-the department heads were asking for lists of the gay reporters on different sections so they could be punished in different ways. So things have really changed at the newspaper. Since I've been there, there's been a dramatic shift: I remember coming and wondering if there were ... any gay reporters there or whatever. Now it's like, there are times when you look at the front-page meeting and... literally three-quarters of the people deciding what's on the front page are not-so-closeted homosexuals..."NLGJA's "View from the Top" Reception was sponsored by America Online, USA Today, Washington Post, and CBS News. Reported in "Just How 'Gay' Is the New York Times?" in the April-May 2000 issue of The Lambda Report. [Source: Washington Times, July 28, 2000, A2. See also: WorldNetDaily.com, "The New York Times' Homosexual Culture," October 1, 2004, http://www.worldnetdaily.com/news/article.asp?ARTICLE_ID=40708 (accessed April 18, 2005).]
11. J. Edward Pawlick, Libel by the New York Times (Holliston, MA: Mustard Seeds Publishing, 2003).
12. Ibid.
13. "Inside Homosexual Journalists' Conference," WorldNetDaily .com, September 13, 2000, http://www.worldnetdaily.com/news/article.asp?ARTICLE_ID=17633 (accessed April 18, 2005).

14. Joseph Farah, "Between the Lines: Activist-Journalists Out of the Closet," WorldNetDaily.com, September 13, 2000, http://www.worldnetdaily.com/news/article.asp?ARTICLE_ID=15046 (accessed April 18, 2005).
15. Ibid.
16. "Inside Homosexual Journalists' Conference"
17. Bert Dawes, compiler, "Story! Story! Story! Walt Disney Speaks," SaveDisney.com, <http://www.savedisney.com/news/essays/bd043004.1.asp> (accessed April 5, 2005).
18. William F. Jasper, "Morality Meltdown," New American 19, June 2, 2003, http://www.thenewamerican.com/tna/2003/06-02-2003/vo19no11_morality.htm (accessed April 5, 2005).
19. "Disney Comes Out of the Closet," Buzz magazine, May 1995, quoted in Disney Boycott, <http://www.geocities.com/Heartland/7547/disney.html> (accessed April 5, 2005).
20. Ed Vitagliano, "Disney Execs in Collusion With Homosexual Rights Activists," AFA Journal, August 12, 1997.
21. Sean Griffin, Tinker Belles and Evil Queens: The Walt Disney Company From the Inside Out (New York: New York University Press, 2000).
22. Marshall K. Kirk and Erastus Pill, "The Overhauling of Straight America: Waging Peace, Part II," Guide Magazine, November 1987, http://www.abiditruth.com/_docs/resources/8142838.pdf (accessed April 5, 2005).
23. Ibid.
24. Ibid.
25. Cited in Tony Marco, "'Gay Rights' Strategies Involve Conscious Deception and Wholesale Manipulation of Public Opinion," Special Class Protections for Self-Alleged Gays: A Question of "Orientation" and Consequences: A Public Policy Analysis, <http://www.leaderu.com/marco/special/spc15.html> (accessed April 19, 2005).
26. Eric M. Pollard, "Time to Give Up Fascist Tactics;" Washington Blade, January 31, 1992, 39.
27. Ibid.
28. Ibid.
29. Adolf Hitler, Mein Kampf [My Struggle], translated by the British Foreign Policy Association, 1935, cited in Marco, "'Gay Rights' Strategies Involve

30. A. P. Bell, "Homosexualities: Their Range and Character," Paper in Nebraska Symposium on Motivation, J. K. Cole and R. Dienstbier, editor (Lincoln, NE: University of Nebraska Press, 1973). Paul Cameron, "What Causes Homosexuality?" (Lincoln, NE: Institute for the Scientific Study of Sexuality (ISIS), 1984. Table from the Pro-Life Activist's Encyclopedia.

CHAPTER 3 - A PUBLIC HEALTH DISASTER

1. Timothy J. Dailey, PhD, "The Negative Health Effects of Homosexuality;" Insight 232, March 21, 2001, <http://www.frc.org/get.cfm?i=ISO1B1> (accessed April 19, 2005).
2. Paul Cameron, William J. Playfair, and Stephen Wellum, "The Homosexual Life Span," Family Research Institute, Inc. Washington DC, 1992-1993, <http://www.frc.org/insight/is93g2hs.html>.
3. Elizabeth Arias, PhD, "United States Life Tables, 2000," National Vital Statistics Reports, Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, December 19, 2002. See Abstract, page 1.
4. Robert S. Hogg, et al., "Modeling the Impact of HIV Disease on Mortality in Gay and Bisexual Men," International Journal of Epidemiology 26 (1997): 657, cited by Daily, "The Negative Health Effects of Homosexuality."
5. Ibid.
6. Cameron, Playfair, and Wellum, "The Longevity of Homosexuals: Before and After the AIDS Epidemic," 249ff.
7. Bell and Weinberg, Homosexualities: A Study of Diversity Among Men and Women.
8. Cameron, Playfair, and Wellum, "The Homosexual Life Span." See also: Paul Gebhard and Alan B. Johnson, The Kinsey Data: Marginal Tabulations of the 1938-1963 Interviews Conducted by the Institute for Sex Research (Philadelphia: Saunders, 1979).
9. The United Nations Report, UNAIDS, estimates 5.3 million new HIV infections occurred in 2000. This represents almost 16,000 new cases per day. An estimated 3.0 million adults and children died of HIV/AIDS in 2000. For more detail, see the CDC HIV/AIDS Surveillance Report and the UNAIDS AIDS Epidemic Update. For a statistical report of the global incidence of AIDS and HIV, go to Family Practice Notebook online at <http://www.fpnotebook.com/HIV11.htm>.
10. Lionel Wright, "The Stonewall Riots-1969," <http://www.socialistalternative.c> om/literature/stonewall.html (accessed April 5, 2005).

11. Simon LeVay, The Sexual Brain (Cambridge, MA: The MIT Press, 1993).
12. "Cases of HIV Infection and Aids in the United States, 2002;" HIV/AIDS Surveillance Report 14 (2002), Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, quoted in "HIV/AIDS Statistics;" Facts and Figures, National Institutes of Health, <http://www.niaid.nih.gov/factsheets/aidsstat.htm> (accessed April 19, 2005).
13. Paul Cameron, "The High Cost of Sodomy: Part I;" in Journal of the Family Research Institute 19 (March 2004): http://www.familyresearchinst.org/FR_R_04_03.html (accessed April 19, 2005).
14. "HIV and AIDS-United States, 1981-2001," Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report (MMWR) 50 (2001): 430-434, quoted in "HIV/AIDS Statistics," Facts and Figures, National Institutes of Health, <http://www.niaid.nih.gov/factsheets/aidsstat.htm> (accessed April 19, 2005).
15. Jennifer Oldham, "The Economic Cost of AIDS," Los Angeles Times, October 13, 1995, D1.
16. Bell and Weinberg, Homosexualities: A Study of Diversity Among Men and Women.
17. American Medical Association (AMA), American Adolescents: How Healthy Are They? (1990), 31.
18. Mireya Navarro, "Federal Officials See Sharp Rise of Hepatitis Among Gay Men," New York Times, March 6, 1992.
19. "Background Information," report by John Li, MD, for ThinkQuest Library, 1996, <http://library.thinkquest.org/10631/PHYSICIAN/backgrou.htm> (accessed April 20, 2005).
20. Oldham, "The Economic Cost of AIDS."
21. "AIDS-Infected Patients Cost Hospitals Up to $260,000 Per Year, Study Says," Baltimore Sun, June 1, 1995, 16A.
22. Peter V. Chin-Hong, et al., "Age-Specific Prevalence of Anal Human Papillomavirus Infection in HIV-Negative Sexually Active Men Who Have Sex With Men: The EXPLORE Study," Journal of Infectious Diseases 190 (December 15, 2004): 2070-2076, http://www.natap.org/2004/HIV/120804_OI.htm (accessed April 20, 2005). And the related earlier study: J. M. Palefsky, et al., "Prevalence and Risk Factors for Human Papillomavirus Infection of the Anal Canal in Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV) Positive and HIV Negative Homosexual Men," Journal of Infectious Diseases 177 (1998): 361-367.

23. Ibid.
24. Susan Burner Bankowski and Dr. Brandon Bankowski, "Let's Face the Silent Epidemic of STDs," The World & I, June 1999.
25. "11 Leading Causes of Death, United States, 2002," Webbased Injury Statistics Query and Reporting System (WISQARS), National Center for Injury Prevention and Control, Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, <http://webappa.cdc.gov/cgi-bin/broker.exe> (accessed April 20, 2005). "5 Leading Causes of Death, United States, 2002," Web-based Injury Statistics Query and Reporting System (WISQARS), National Center for Injury Prevention and Control, Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, <http://webappa.cdc.gov/cgi-bin/broker.exe> (accessed April 20, 2005). See also: Suicide & Life-Threatening Behavior 28(1) (1998): 1-23.
26. "Prevalence of the Human Immunodeficiency Virus Among University Students;" New England Journal of Medicine 323 (1990): 1538-1541.
27. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, "College HIV Rate Holds Steady, but Risk of Exposure Remains High," AIDS Alert 9 (November 1994): 153-156.
28. Ibid.
29. "Suicide: Fact Sheet," National Center for Injury Prevention and Control, <http://www.cdc.gov/ncipc/factsheets/suifacts.htm> (accessed April 20, 2005). See also: Karen W. Arenson, "Worried Colleges Step Up Efforts Over Suicide," New York Times, December 3, 2004, 1A.
30. "Suicide: Fact Sheet," National Center for Injury Prevention and Control, <http://www.cdc.gov/ncipc/factsheets/suifacts.htm> (accessed April 20, 2005).
31. United States Department of Health and Human Services, National Center for Health Statistics, presented in "Monthly Vital Statistics" for October 11, 1994.
32. National Youth Violence Prevention Center "Youth Suicide Fact Sheet," <http://www.safeyouth.org/scripts/facts/suicide.asp> (accessed April 20, 2005).
33. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report (December 3, 2004): 1108. Used by permission.
34. [editing-note: the officially published ebook has no reference in the text to this footnote, and whatever the print version referenced, the footnote listed "Ibid"]
35. "'New AIDS' Spreading Among Homosexual Men," WorldNetDaily.com, June 2, 2005, http://www.worldnetdaily.com/news/article.asp?ARTICLE_ID=44561 (accessed June 2, 2005).

36. J. D. Unwin, Sexual Regulations and Human Behavior (London: Williams and Norgate, 1933).

CHAPTER 4 - BEYOND LAW AND ORDER

1. "Declaration Banned From Classroom," Alliance Defense Fund Press Release, November 23, 2004, <http://www.alliancedefensefund.org/news/default.asp?mid=800&cid=3218> (April 8, 2005).
2. "U.S. History Documents Banned Because They Mention God," Christianity Examiner on the Web, http://www.christianexaminer.com/Articles/Articles%20Jan05/Art_Jan05_06.html (accessed April 8, 2005).
3. In that controversial decision, Justice Hugh Black wrote the majority opinion, which said in part: "The First Amendment has erected a wall between church and state. That wall must be kept high and impregnable. We could not approve the slightest breach:" [Everson v. Board of Education, 330 U.S. 1 (1947).]
4. "LifeSiteNews.com and Pro-family Groups Subject to Intimidation from Gay Rights Leaders," LifeSite Special Report, May 3, 2004, <http://www.lifesite.net/ldn/2004/may/040503a.html> (accessed April 20, 2005).
5. Chris Bull, "Balance of justice," The Advocate, March 4, 2003. In the same article, the reporter goes on to say: "Some have speculated that justices' private musings about Souter's sexual orientation have elevated the level of debate about gay rights and the law. `David Souter isn't gay, as far as anyone knows, but there's enough speculation about it that his fellow justices have to be a little more careful about what they say, at least in his presence,' says a veteran observer of the court who didn't want to be quoted by name. `There's enough vagueness about him as a bachelor in this regard to raise the level of debate....'"
6. Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558 (2003) (Scalia, J., dissenting), <http://caselaw.findlaw.com/us-supreme-court/539/558.html#opinion1> (accessed April 20, 2005).
7. Ibid.
8. Ibid.
9. Ibid.
10. Ibid.
11. Ibid.
12. Jake Tapper, "Court Deals Blow to U.S. Anti-Porn Campaign," January 24, 2005, http://www.fradical.com/DOJ_Appeals_Extreme_Associates.htm (accessed April 8, 2005).

13. "The Philadelphia Five," AFA Online, <http://www.afa.net/clp/Philly5.asp> (accessed April 8, 2005).
14. Ron Storm. "U.S. Attorneys Complicit in Arrest of Christians?" WorldNetDaily.com, January 5, 2005, http://www.worldnetdaily.com/news/article.asp?ARTICLE_ID=42221 (accessed April 20, 2005).
15. While the media publicized the "Philadelphia 5" during the actual proceedings, initially eleven people had been arrested and taken into custody by the police. When counter-charges were filed, all eleven individuals were included in the suit.
16. Jim Brown, "Christian School Bomb Scare: Caller Demands Public Support for Homosexual Marriage;" Agape Press, September 12, 2003.
17. The United States Senate: Republican Policy Committee, Sen. Jon Kyl, Chairman, "The Kennedy 'Hate Crimes' Bill: An Unwise Proposal," United States Government Printing Office, July 15, 2003.
18. Ibid.
19. U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Uniform Crime Reports, "Hate Crimes Statistics 2003," November 2004.
20. U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Uniform Crime Reports, "Crime in the United States 2003," October 27, 2004, <http://www.fbi.gov/ucr/03cius.htm>. See also: Curt Anderson, "FBI Says Murders Up for 4th Straight Year," Associated Press, October 26, 2004.
21. U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Uniform Crime Reports, "Hate Crimes Statistics 2000;" http://www.fbi.gov/ucr/cius_00/hate00.pdf. A catalog of hate crimes reporting since passage of the 1990 Hate Crimes Act is available at: <http://www.firstgov.gov>.
22. Island and Letellier, Men Who Beat the Men Who Love Them, 14.
23. N. E. Murphy. "Queer Justice: Equal Protection for Victims of Same Sex. Domestic Violence," Valparaiso University Law Review 30 (1995): 335.
24. P. Barnes, "It's Just a Quarrel;" ABA Journal 84 (February 1998): 25.
25. Unsigned editorial, "The Hate Politics;" Wall Street Journal, April 2, 2001.
26. Ronald Pestritto, "The Ideology of Hate Crimes;" Claremont Institute, posted October 30, 1998, <http://www.claremont.org/writings/981030pestritto.html> (accessed April 8, 2005).

27. Ibid.

28. James B. Jacobs and Kimberly Potter, Hate Crimes: Criminal Law & Identity Politics (New York: Oxford University Press, 1998).

CHAPTER 5 - CHANGES IN THE WORKPLACE

1. "ACLU Behind Illinois' Forced Hiring of `Gays;" WorldNetDaily.com, January 26, 2005, http://www.worldnetdaily.com/news/article.asp?ARTICLE_ID=42563 (accessed April 20, 2005).

2. Ibid.

3. Ibid.

4. Stuart Shepard, "ENDA Passes Senate Committee;" Family Research Council Forum, April 30, 2002, <http://www.family.org/cforum/fnif/news/a0020586.html>.

5. According to Simmons Market Research Bureau, a consumertracking firm, the average homosexual is better educated and has a higher income than the typical heterosexual. A 1990 Simmons study found that 53 percent of homosexuals hold professional or management jobs, compared with the national average of 34 percent in the general population; 61 percent have graduated from college, compared with only 24 percent nationally; and the average homosexual household income is $53,000 compared with $35,000 nationally. Homosexual households, the researchers said, are twice as likely as the typical household to have incomes over $60,000, and they're also twice as likely as the general populace to have incomes over $250,000.

See: Marcia Philbin, "Branching Out," Miami Daily Business Review, October 6, 2000, A13; and Ronald Alsop, "Are Gay People More Affluent Than Others?" Wall Street Journal, December 30, 1999.

6. Mark Tooley, "Mainstreaming Homosexuality;" Touchstone, September-October 1999, <http://www.touchstonemag.com/archives/article.php?id=12-05-058-r> (accessed April 20, 2005).

7. Ibid.

8. James W. Button, Barbara Rienzo, and Kenneth Wald, Private Lives, Public Conflicts: Battles Over Gay Rights in American Communities (Washington DC: Congressional Quarterly Books, 1997).

9. Information in the following two sections of this chapter is adapted from the following article: Bo Davis, "Business as Unusual: Firms Go Gay Friendly," World, April 26, 1997, 16-17.

10. Adapted from Bo Davis, "Business as Unusual: Firms Go Gay Friendly;" World, April 26, 1997, 16-17.
11. Ibid.
12. Peterson v. Hewlett-Packard Co., 358 F.3d 599 (9th Cir. Ct. App. 2004). See also: David Watson, "Ninth Circuit Upholds Firing for Posting Anti-Gay Messages: Court Rejects Worker's Claim of Discrimination Based on Religious Beliefs;" Metropolitan NewsEnterprise (Los Angeles), January 7, 2004, 1.
13. Ibid.
14. Lawrence Morahan, "Former Homosexual Alleges EEOC Bias in Investigation;" CNSNews.com, August 29, 2001.
15. For example: Walter Olson, "When Sensitivity Training Is the Law," Wall Street Journal, January 20, 1993. Also: Seth Lubove, "Damned If You Do, Damned If You Don't," Forbes 160, December 15, 1997, 122.
16. Susan Jones, "Don't Base Civil Rights on Behavior, Group Warns," CNSNew.com, January 12, 2005, <http://www.cnsnews.com/ViewCulture.asp?Page=%5CCulture%5Carchive%5C200501%5CCUL20050112a.html> (accessed April 8, 2005).
17. Ibid.
18. Ibid.
19. Carolyn Lochhead, "White House Affirms Gay Workers' Rights: It Says Discrimination Against Federal Employees Is Barred-but Democrats Aren't Convinced," San Francisco Chronicle, April 1, 2004.
20. Todd Henneman, "Diversity Training Addresses Sexual Orientation," Workforce Management, December 2004, <http://www.workforce.com/section/11/feature/23/90/44/239046.html> (accessed April 21, 2005).
21. Zenit.org, "Scripture and Homosexuality, Part 2: An Interview With Robert A. J. Gagnon: Modern Arguments Don't Undercut Biblical Teaching," March 28, 2002, Code ZE02032820, <http://www.zenit.org/english/> (accessed April 21, 2005).
22. Cited in James Lileks, Chris Gallagher, Tait Trussell, "Scan: Short News and Commentary," American Enterprise Online, June 2001, http://www.taemag.com/issues/articleID.15516/article_detail.asp (accessed April 21, 2005).
23. These and subsequent citations draw on comments by Paul E. Rondeau, "Selling Homosexuality to America;" Regent University Law Review 14 (Spring 2002).

24. Tori DeAngelis, "New Data on Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Mental Health," American Psychological Association Monitor on Psychology 33 (February 2002), <http://www.apa.org/monitor/Feb02/newdata.html> (accessed April 21, 2005).
25. Margaret Rosario, "Understanding the Unprotected Sexual Behaviors of Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Youths: An Empirical Test of the Cognitive-Environmental Model," Health Psychology (May 1999): 272-280.
26. Deb Price, "Supreme Court Needs to Look the Contradiction in the Eye," Windy City Times, January 8, 2003, <http://www.windycitymediagroup.com/gay/lesbian/news/ARTICLE.php?AID=1630> (accessed Feb. 12, 2005).
27. Ronald Reagan, quoted in "Remarks by President at Prayer Breakfast, New York Times, August 24, 1984, A11.

CHAPTER 6 - TAKING OVER THE SCHOOLS

1. Robert Knight. "Homosexuality in an Age of Consent," The Salt and Light Handbook (Fort Lauderdale, FL: Coral Ridge Ministries, 1999).
2. "The 1972 Gay Rights Platform;" created at the National Coalition of Gay Organizations Convention, Chicago 1972, http://www.rslevinson.com/gayleissues/features/collect/onetime/bl_platform1972.htm (accessed April 11, 2005).
3. Lesea Newman, the author of Heather Has Two Mommies, has also written My Lover Is a Woman and Gloria Goes to Gay Pride, about a little girl's day at the "Gay Pride Parade" and how this affects her understanding of life with her two mommies, one of whom works as a nurse and the other is a mechanic.
4. Liberal organizations at the forefront of the movement aggressively promoting the homosexual agenda include groups such as the National Education Association (NEA), the ACLU, People for the American Way, and the alphabet soup of lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgendered organizations, which now also includes a so-called "questioning" group that is actually a recruiting ploy used in the schools. Many public schools now have a "lesbian, gay, and straight alliance," or an LGBTQ group, organized to enlist converts.
5. "The Gay'90s: A Response to the Gay Activist Movement," Critical Issues 1, <http://www.leaderu.com/critical/gay90.html> (accessed April 11, 2005).
6. Portions of Mrs. Hill's story are related in Le Templar, "Shine Draws Attack: Janie Hill Wants Councilman Removed," Times Record News (Wichita Falls), February 13, 1999.

7. Hans Zeiger, "The NEA and GLSEN vs. America," July 2, 2004, <http://www.newamerica.us/columns/zeiger/040702> (accessed April 21, 2005).
8. Ibid.
9. The explanation given by the homosexual lobby for the high suicide rate among teens is a total fabrication. The high rate of suicides for those who experiment with homosexuality is due to the fact that they not mature enough to deal with the volatile emotions and the obvious immorality of a lifestyle they know instinctively to be wrong.
10. "Case Background: Flores v. Morgan Hill Unified School District," ACLU of Northern California, <http://www.aclunc.org/students/040106-floresbkg.html> (accessed April 11, 2005).
11. For example, see: Louis P. Sheldon, "Here It Comes: Transgender Confusion on Campus;" Traditional Values Coalition, May 2004, <http://www.traditionalvalues.org/modules.php?name=News&file=article&sid=944>.
12. I highly recommend the book by Joseph Nicolosi, Reparative Therapy of Male Homosexuality: A New Clinical Approach (Northvale, NJ: J Aronson, 1997).
13. Rex Wockner, "Taking Charge: Matt Foreman of NGLTF," Windy City Times, June 25, 2003, <http://www.windycitymediagroup.com/gay/lesbian/news/ARTICLE.php?AID=3366> (accessed April 21, 2005).
14. Julie Foster, "California Schools' New Homosexual Curriculum," WorldNetDaily.com, December 26, 2000, http://www.worldnetdaily.com/news/article.asp?ARTICLE_ID=21132 (accessed April 11, 2005).
15. James Lileks, Chris Gallagher, Tait Trussell, "Scan: Short News and Commentary," American Enterprise Online, June 2001, http://www.taemag.com/issues/articleID.15516/article_detail.asp (accessed April 21, 2005).
16. "Critics Target Discount Chain for Banning Salvation Army," CNSNews.com, <http://www.townhall.com/news/politics/200412/NAT20041217a.shtml> (accessed April 21, 2005).
17. More about this activity can be viewed at <http://www.dayofsilence.org>.
18. More about this activity can be viewed at <http://www.educationnews.org/no-name-calling-week-coalition.htm> , <http://www.nonamecallingweek.org> , and <http://www.glsen.org/cgi-bin/iowa/all/library/record/1731.html>.
19. Information about this activity may be viewed at http://www.glsenla.jeffmo.com/html/lesson_plans_48.html.
20. Karla Jay and Allen Young, ed., Lavender Culture (New York: New York University Press, 1994).

21. Judith A. Reisman, Kinsey: Crimes & Consequences: The Red Queen and the Grand Scheme (Arlington, VA: Institute for Media Education, 1998).
22. Ibid.
23. Frank York, "Brave New School: Public Employees Teach Kids 'Gay' Sex," WorldNetDaily, May 9, 2000, http://www.wnd.com/news/article.asp?ARTICLE_ID=17490 (accessed April 11, 2005).
24. "Governor's Commission for Gay Youth Retreats to 'Safety' and 'Suicide,'" Massachusetts News, December 2000, http://www.massnews.com/past_issues/2000/12-Dec/1200fist3.htm (accessed April 22, 2005).
25. Ibid.
26. Ibid.
27. Paul Gibson, "Gay Male and Lesbian Youth Suicide," (Washington DC: U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, 1989), in Report of the Secretary's Task Force on Youth Suicide, ed. Marcia R. Feinleib, January 1989.
28. Dr. Louis W. Sullivan MD, Secretary of Health and Human Services, letter to Representative William E. Dannemeyer, October 1989, quoted in Peter LaBarbera, "The Gay Youth Suicide Myth," <http://www.leaderu.com/jhs/labarbera.html> (accessed April 25, 2005).
29. LaBarbera, "The Gay Youth Suicide Myth."
30. "Homosexuality and the Schools," The Christian Activist, <http://www.thechristianactivist.com/vol3/HomosexualityAndSchools1.html> (viewed April 11, 2005).
31. George A. Clowes, "Outcome-Based Education: Remaking Society One Child at a Time," School Reform News, April 1, 1998, <http://www.heartland.org/article.cfm?artId=12713> (accessed April 11, 2005).
32. Phil Sringer, "Outcome-Based Education," Independent American Party Online, <http://www.usiap.org/Viewpoints/Society/Education/OutcomeBasedEducation.html> (accessed April 25, 2005).
33. Kirk and Madsen, After the Ball.
34. References cited here were assembled by "The Person Project" Web site, <http://www.personproject.org/Resources/Books/education-books.html> (accessed March 1, 2005).

CHAPTER 7 - SAFEGUARDING THE FAMILY

1. Cited by Stanley Kurtz in "Beyond Gay Marriage," Weekly Standard, August 4, 2003.
2. "Transgender Marriage Is Coming;" Traditional Values Coalition Special Report, <http://traditionalvalues.org/pdf files/TransgenderMarriage.pdf> (accessed April 11, 2005). Also see, Connie Parish, "Couple Tries to Move on After Arrest," Leavenworth Times, March 21, 2004, <http://www.leavenworthtimes.com/articles/2004/03/21/news/news01.txt> (accessed April 25, 2005).
3. David Poponoe and Barbara Dafoe Whitehead, "The State of Our Unions: The Social Health of Marriage in America, 2000," Rutgers University, The National Marriage Project, <http://marriage.rutgers.edu/Publications/SOOU/SOOU.htm> (accessed April 25, 2005).
4. Ibid.
5. Jan E. Stets, "Cohabiting and Marital Aggression: The Role of Social Isolation," Journal of Marriage and the Family 53 (1991): 669-680.
6. "Psychological Reasons Not to Live Together," from All About Cohabiting Before Marriage, <http://www.leaderu.com/critical/cohabitation-psycho.html> (accessed April 25, 2005).
7. Scott Stanley, A Lasting Promise: A Christian Guide to Fighting for Your Marriage (San Francisco: Josey-Bass, 1998).
8. Charles W. Socarides, Homosexuality: A Freedom Too Far (Phoenix, AZ: Adam Margrave Books, 1995). Excerpt available at <http://www.narth.com/docs/freedom.html> (accessed April 25, 2005).
9. Ibid.
10. Ibid.
11. Andrew Jacobs, "Gays Debate Radical Steps to Curb Unsafe Sex;" New York Times, February 14, 2005, AL.
12. Jeffrey Satinover, Homosexuality and the Politics of Truth (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker, 1996), 186.
13. M. F. Schwartz and W. H. Masters, "The Masters and Johnson Treatment Program for Dissatisfied Homosexual Men," American Journal of Psychiatry 141 (1984): 173-181.
14. Gagnon, The Bible and Homosexual Practice, 25-26.

15. Joseph Farah, "Right and Wrong," WorldNetDaily.com, July 6, 1999, http://worldnetdaily.com/news/article.asp?ARTICLE_ID=14773 (accessed April 25, 2005).
16. Donna Freydkin, "Getting to Know You: Sitcoms Field Gay Characters," CNN Interactive, May 17, 1999, <http://cnn.com/SHOWBIZ/TV/9905/17/comingout/> (accessed March 1, 2005). Also, Celida B. Miramontes, "GLAAD Tackles Media: The Depiction of Gays and Lesbians Has Improved, but Remains Cliche," New University Newspaper (UC Irvine), April 25, 2001, <http://www.newu.uci.edu/archive/2000-2001/spring/010430/n-010430-glaad.html> (accessed March 1, 2005).
17. Michelangelo Signorile, "Bridal Wave;" Out, December 1993-January 1994.
18. "Poll Shows Most Americans Oppose Same-Sex Marriage;" ReligionJournal.com, <http://www.religionjournal.com/showarticle.asp?id=2163> (accessed April 25, 2005).
19. Stayer, Same-Sex Marriage, 64.
20. Stanley Kurtz, "Beyond Gay Marriage," Weekly Standard, August 4-11, 2003, <http://www.weeklystandard.com/Content/Public/Articles/000/000/002/938xpsxy.asp> (accessed April 25, 2005).
21. Lisa Leff, "Mayor Calls for Gay Marriage Support," Associated Press, February 13, 2005.
22. Rona Marech, "3,000 Jam City Hall to Celebrate Anniversaries S.F.'s Mayor," San Francisco Chronicle, February 13, 2005, <http://www.sfgate.com/cgi-bin/article.cgi?f=/c/a/2005/02/13/SAMESEX.TMP> (accessed April 25, 2005).
23. Ibid.
24. Chris Crain, "It's All About Marriage;" Washington Blade, August 22, 2003.
25. Maggie Gallagher, "What Marriage Is For," Weekly Standard, August 11, 2003.
26. Clifford Krauss, "Now Free to Marry, Canada's Gays Say, 'Do I?'" New York Times, August 31, 2003.
27. Kelly Boggs, "The Homosexual Hoopla Is Backfiring," BP News, March 19, 2004.
28. Ibid.
29. Richard N. Ostling, "The 2004 Election Reinforced America's Religious and Moral Divide;" Associated Press, November 4, 2004.

CHAPTER 8 - AWAKENING THE CHURCH

1. Roper v. Simmons 112 S.W. 3d 397 (2005).
2. Van Orden v. Perry (03-1500) and McCreary County v. ACLU of KY (03-1693) (under review).
3. George Gallup Jr. and Timothy Jones, The Next American Spirituality: Finding God in the Twenty-first Century (Colorado Springs, CO: Cook Communications, 2000).
4. D. A. Carson, The Gagging of God: Christianity Confronts Pluralism (Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan, 1996).
5. Richard John Neuhaus, The Naked Public Square: Religion and Democracy in America (Grand Rapids, MI: William B. Eerdmans, 1984).
6. "The Fundamental Orders of Connecticut, January 14, 1639;" University of Oklahoma Law Center, <http://www.law.ou.edu/hist/orders.html>, emphasis added (accessed April 11, 2005).
7. "The Mayflower Compact, 1620," University of Oklahoma Law Center, <http://www.law.ou.edu/hist/mayflow.html> (accessed April 11, 2005).
8. Ibid.
9. Jack Kinsella, "America's Communist Lawyer's Union;" Omega Letter, December 2, 2004.
10. Ibid.
11. Author interview with Delegate Don Dwyer, Maryland State House, February 16, 2005.
12. Father John Corapi, "The Laity in the Church: A Sleeping Giant;" <http://dales.sio.topcities.com/corapi/jc15.html> (accessed April 25, 2005).
13. Ibid.

CHAPTER 9 - RESTORING TRADITIONAL VALUES

1. Daniel Dreisbach, Thomas Jefferson and the Wall of Separation Between Church and State (New York: NYU Press, 2002).
2. Alexis de Tocqueville, Democracy in America, trans. by George Lawrence, ed. by J. P. Mayer (N.p.: 1988), 293.
3. Newt Gingrich, "Values and Bush's Victory," San Diego Union-Tribune, November 7, 2004, http://www.signonsandiego.com/uniontrib/20041107/news_mzle7newt.html (accessed April 26, 2005).

4. Interview with Pat Robertson, "Gingrich Outlines Steps to Win the Future of America," The 700 Club, January 14, 2005, <http://www.cbn.com/cbnnews/news/050114a.asp> (accessed April 26, 2005).
5. Ibid.
6. Author Joe Dallas, who is president of Exodus International, warns that the causes of homosexuality are too complex and too variable from person to person to render a blanket analysis. However, he says, in most of the cases he has observed over many years that homosexuality develops early in life and involves (1) a child's perception of his or her relationship to parents or significant others, (2) a child's emotional response to those perceptions and responses, (3) emotional needs arising from these perceptions and responses, and (4) the sexualization of those emotional needs. For a fuller discussion of these issues, see: Joe Dallas. Desires in Conflict: Answering the Struggle for Sexual Identity (Eugene, OR: Harvest House, 1991), 91-94.
7. Jeff Jacoby, "Same-Sex Marriage vs. Civil Rights," Boston Globe, March 8, 2004.
8. Ibid.
9. "Statement and Request to the Congressional Black Caucus From the National Summit of African-American Pastors, Washington D.C.," Traditional Values Coalition, September 8, 2004, http://web.archive.org/web/*/http://traditionalvalues.org/pdf_files/SummitDocument.pdf (accessed April 11, 2005).
10. "Congressional Black Caucus Member Attacks AfricanAmerican Pastors," Traditional Values Coalition, http://web.archive.org/web/*/http://traditionalvalues.org/modules.php?sid=1949 (accessed April 11, 2005).
11. See the entire article: Louis P. Sheldon, "Hey, Governor, the GOP Won!" Los Angeles Times, December 29, 2004.

CHAPTER 10 - WHAT'S TO BE DONE?

1. Enrique T. Rueda, The Homosexual Network: Private Lives & Public Policy (Greenwich, CT: Devin Adair Co. in cooperation with the Free Congress Research and Education Foundation, 1982). See also: Enrique T. Rueda and Michael Schwartz, Gays, AIDS, and You. (Greenwich, CT: The Devin Adair Company, 1987), 70-71.
2. "Sexual Orientation: Fixed or Changeable," Traditional Values Coalition, http://web.archive.org/web/*/http://traditionalvalues.org/pdf_files/SexualOrientation.pdf (accessed April 11, 2005).

3. "Just the Facts About Sexual Orientation & Youth: A Primer for Principals, Educators and School Personnel;" APA Online, http://web.archive.org/web/*/http://www.apa.org/pi/lgbc/publications/justthefacts.html (accessed April 11, 2005).
4. "Gay-to-Straight Research Published in APA Journal," NARTH (National Association for Research & Therapy of Homosexuality, <http://narth.com/docs/throckarticle.html> (accessed April 26, 2005).
5. A. Dean Byrd, Shirley E. Cox, and Jeffrey W. Robinson, "Homosexuality: The Innate-Immutability Argument Finds No Basis in Science," Salt Lake Tribune, May 27, 2001.
6. Ibid.
7. Camille Paglia, Vamps and Tramps (New York: Vintage Books, 1994).
8. Office of the United States Attorney, Southern District of California, San Diego, California, News Release, March 1, 2005, <http://www.usdoj.gov/usao/cas/pr/cas5030l.2.pdf> (accessed April 11, 2005).
9. Linda Ames Nicolosi, "Should These Conditions Be Normalized?" NARTH, October 6, 2004, <http://www.narth.com/docs/symposium.html> (accessed April 11, 2005).
10. Mary Eberstadt, "'Pedophilia Chic' Reconsidered," The Weekly Standard, January 8, 2001.
11. I Do Exist: Is a Changed Life Possible?, <http://www.drthrockmorton.com/idoexist.asp> (accessed April 11, 2005).
12. Diane Mattingly, "My Path to Lesbianism," Christianity Today, February 2005, 62.
13. Ibid.
14. Michael Lumberger, "Walking in the Light;" Exodus International, http://www.exodus-international.org/testimonials_left_homosexuality_45.shtml (accessed April 26, 2005).
15. "Respectfully Quoted: A Dictionary of Quotations," number 1593, Benjamin Franklin, <http://www.bartleby.com/73/1593.html> (accessed April 26, 2005).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bennett, William J. The Broken Hearth: Reversing the Moral Collapse of the American Family. New York: Doubleday, 2001.
- Brinkmann, Susan. The Kinsey Corruption: An Expose on the Most Influential "Scientist" of Our Time (based on the work of Judith Reisman, et al.). West Chester, PA: Ascension Press, 2004.
- Carson, D. A. The Gagging of God: Christianity Confronts Pluralism. Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1996.
- Comiskey, Andrew. Pursuing Sexual Wholeness: How Jesus Heals the Homosexual. Lake Mary, FL: Charisma House, 1988.
- Dallas, Joe. When Homosexuality Hits Home. Eugene, OR: Harvest House, 2004.
- . Desires in Conflict. Eugene, OR: Harvest House, 2003.
- . How Should We Respond? An Exhortation to the Church on Loving the Homosexual. Colorado Springs: Focus on the Family, 1999.
- Davies, Bob and Lela Gilbert. Portraits of Freedom: 14 People Who Came Out of Homosexuality. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity, 2001.
- Davies, Bob and Lori Rentzel. Coming Out of Homosexuality: New Freedom for Men and Women. Downers Grover, IL: InterVarsity, 1993.
- Dreisbach, Daniel, Thomas Jefferson and the Wall of Separation Between Church and State. New York: NYU Press, 2002.
- Floyd, Ronnie W. The Gay Agenda: It's Dividing the Family, the Church, and a Nation. Los Angeles, CA: New Leaf Press, 2004.
- Gagnon, Robert A. J. The Bible and Homosexuality: Texts and Hermeneutics. Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 2000.
- Gallup Jr., George and Timothy Jones. The Next American Spirituality: Finding God in the Twenty-first Century. Colorado Springs: Cook Communications, 2000.
- Haley, Mike. 101 Frequently Asked Questions About Homosexuality. Colorado Springs, CO: Focus on the Family, 2004.

- Hamburger, Philip. Separation of Church and State. Cambridge, MA: Harvard Press, 2002.
- Howard, Jeanette. Out of Egypt: Leaving Lesbianism Behind. Nashville, TN: Thomas Nelson, 1994.
- Hunter, James Davison. Culture Wars: The Struggle to Define America. New York: Basic Books, 1991.
- Island, David and Patrick Letellier. Men Who Beat the Men Who Love Them. New York: Haworth Press, 1991.
- Miller, Zell. A National Party No More: The Conscience of a Conservative Democrat. Macon, GA: Stroud & Hall, 2003.
- Nicolosi, Joseph. Healing Homosexuality: Case Stories of Reparative Therapy. Northvale, NJ: J Aronson, 1993.
- . Reparative Therapy of Male Homosexuality: A New Clinical Approach. Northvale, NJ: J Aronson, 1997.
- Reisman, Judith A. Kinsey, Sex, and Fraud: The Indoctrination of a People- An Investigation Into the Human Sexuality Research of Alfred C. Kinsey, Wardell B. Pomeroy, Clyde E. Martin, and Paul H. Gebhard. Lafayette, LA: Huntington House Publishers, 1990.
- . Crimes & Consequences: The Red Queen and the Grand Scheme. Arlington, VA: Institute for Media Education, 1998.
- Rueda, Enrique T. The Homosexual Network: Private Lives & Public Policy. Greenwich, CT: Devin Adair Co. in cooperation with the Free Congress Research and Education Foundation, 1982.
- Satinover MD, Jeffrey. Homosexuality and the Politics of Truth. Grand Rapids, MI: Baker, 1996.
- Schmidt, Thomas E. Straight and Narrow? Compassion and Clarity in the Homosexuality Debate. Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity, 1995.
- Socraides, Charles. Homosexuality: A Freedom Too Far. Phoenix, AZ: Adam Margrave 1995.
- Stayer, Matthew D. Same-Sex Marriage: Putting Every Household at Risk. Nashville, TN: Broadman & Holman, 2004.
- Unwin, J. D. Sex and Culture. London: Oxford University Press, H. Milford, 1934.

INDEX

A

- Abel, Gene 145 abortion 229, 232 abstinence 31
Abzug, Rep. Bella 112
American Civil Liberties Union
 (ACLU) 21, 107, 134, 137,
 142, 144, 178, 180, 187, 188,
 202, 230
ACT UP 50, 51, 96
Adams, John 78, 79
Adorno, Theodor 20 adultery 30, 36 affirmative action 26
affirming churches 214
African Americans 4, 28, 205–209, 214
American Federation of Teachers
 (AFT) 132
After the Ball 24
age of consent 26, 229
Alliance Defense Fund 79, 108
alternative lifestyle 2, 48, 52
American Bar Association (ABA)
 93
American Family Association 86,
 114
American Psychiatric Association
 (APA) 4, 21–23, 60, 229
American Psychological Association 60, 139, 225
Amin, Idi 36
Anti-Defamation League (ADL) 43
Antichrist, agenda of 186 antidiscrimination 49, 107, 114, 120, 141, 171, 214
anti-antidiscrimination 83
Ashcroft, Attorney General John 215

Americans United for the Separation of Church and State (AUSCS) 134 authority, parental 145

B

Bailey, Michael 61
Baldwin, Roger 188
Ball, Alan 45
Bankowski, Brandon 65
Bankowski, Susan 65
Barbary Coast 17
Barna Research Group 180 Battalion, Joseph 165
“Beat” Generation 19
Bennett, William 31
Bible 8, 12, 79, 117, 118, 122, 155, 161, 163, 169, 185, 186, 190, 194, 201, 236–239
and judgment of homosexuality 35 biblical standards 125
Bicks, Jenny 44
Big Brother 130
“Big Lie” 48, 49, 51, 52, 130 bigotry 128
bigotry, anti-Christian 105, 134, 139, 159, 163, 182, 214, 215
Birch, Elizabeth 45, 46
Black, Justice Hugo L. 199, 200
Blackmun, Justice Harry 37
Blagojevich, Gov. Rod 107, 108, 119
Blaine Amendments 199
Blair, Ezell 206
Bloch, Scott 120 body politick 185
Boggs, Kelly 172, 173
Boone, Pat 210
“born gay” myth 6, 28, 52, 53,
60–62, 139, 225, 226

Boston Globe 41
Bowers v. Hardwick 81
Boy Scouts of America 26, 38, 131, 136, 142, 188, 224
brainwashing 43
Breslin, Jimmy 16, 17
Briggs, Senator John 211
Bright Line Bill 183
Brokaw, Tom 42
Bryant, Anita 75, 210
Bush, President George H. W. 72
Bush, President George W. 14, 60, 120, 173, 174

C

“camel in the tent” 149
Cameron, Paul 57
Carson, D. A. 179, 180
Carter, President Jimmy 188 Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) 6, 58, 66, 124, 237
Ceausescu, Nicolae 36
Chinese Cultural Revolution 24
Christian values 1, 3, 27, 79, 116, 118 Christianity 32, 40, 74, 81 assault on 3, 15 church and state 74, 183–186, 199, 200, 210
civil rights 1, 4, 111, 116, 172, 201, 206–208, 230
Civil Rights Act of 1964 112 civil unions 120, 167–170 civilization 32, 55, 56, 72, 122, 123, 155, 158 history of 11, 29, 30, 31
Claremont Institute 94
Clinton, President Bill 71, 165
Clinton, Senator Hillary 212
Close, Glenn 44
Cohen, Bruce 45
Cohen, Jaffe 47

Communist Party USA 19, 49, 136, 188 compassion 15
Concord Academy 136
Congressional Black Caucus
(CBC) 207, 208
Constitution 177, 198, 200, 204, 219, 240
 amending 170, 171 conversion 24, 25
Corapi, Father John 193, 194
Corso, Gregory 19
Couric, Katie 42 covenant 239 covenant society 203, 204
Crain, Chris 171, 172
Crenshaw Christian Center 208
Cruse, James 85 cultural energy 29 cultural revolution 106 culture war 13, 14, 105, 240 culture 140, 194
 American 225 dismantling of 49
 homosexual 106, 109
 homosexual-friendly 93, 121 lavender 144 of death 194 secular 73 sexualized 215
Cummins, Mary 148

D

Daddy's Roommate 131–134
Dailey, Timothy J. 54
Dannemeyer, Bill 97
Daschle, Senator Tom 203
Daughters of Bilitis 22
Davis, Gov. Gray 141, 212
Dean, Howard 212 death penalty 177 death threats 70 deception 129, 163, 181

Declaration of Independence 79, 203
 Defense of Marriage Act (DOMA)
 164
 Department of Justice (DOJ) 86, 87, 215
 depression 124
 desensitization 24, 25, 123 destructive forces 13
 Diener, Mark 85
 Diggs, John R. 4
 Diller, Barry 45
 discrimination 126
 diseases 14, 36, 53–57, 62–66, 70, 72, 124, 125, 160, 161
 disinformation 14, 27, 44, 48–53, 58, 67, 69, 124, 129, 131, 148,
 168, 225, 231
 Disney Company 45–47, 114
 Disney Studios 46 diversity 2, 71, 81, 115, 116, 119, 125, 129, 158, 179
 diversity training 114, 141
 Dixon, Mary 107
 Dobson, Dr. James 103 domestic partners 112, 117, 133, 141, 230
 domestic violence 92, 93, 157
 “Don’t ask, don’t tell” 142
 DreamWorks Studios 45
 Dreisbach, Daniel 200
 Diagnostic and Statistical Manual
 (DSM) 21–23
 Dugas, Gaetan 58
 Dwyer, Delegate Don 189–192

E

Eberstadt, Mary 230
 Echoes of Faith Church 97
 Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) 71, 72
 Eichel, Edward W. 39, 40
 Eisner, Michael 45, 46, 72
 Elders, Joycelyn 229

Ellerbee, Linda 42, 44
Employment Non-Discrimination Act (ENDA) 109–111, 116 equal rights 1, 111
Escobar, Ramon 42
Ettelbrick, Paula 154, 155, 164 evangelical juggernaut 200, 201, 209
Everson v. Board of Education 80, 199, 200
ex-gays 70, 231–233
Exodus International 205, 226,
232, 233
Extreme Associates 84

F

Fahling, Brian 86
Fairfax High School (Los Angeles)
134, 135, 136 fairness 113, 114 faith, family, and freedom 13 faith, loss of 31 family formation 157 family values 75, 174
traditional 166
Family Research Council 87, 108, 109
Farah, Joseph 162
Father Knows Best 43
feminism 14
Ferguson, Gil 97
firebombing 87
First Amendment 92, 99, 111, 199, 216
Focus on the Family 103, 107
Ford Foundation 38
Ford, Rep. Harold 208
Foreman, Matt 120, 140
Forster, Peter 15
Founding Fathers 9, 111, 165, 187, 190, 200–202, 216, 239
Fourth Amendment 92
Frank, Rep. Barney 98, 110, 214
Franklin, Benjamin 240

freedom of religion 181, 216 freedom of speech 87, 181, 182, 216
Freedom to Marry 172
French Quarter 17
Fuentes, Joe 114
“full faith and credit” 81 Fundamental Orders of Connecticut 183, 184, 187

G

Gagnon, Robert A. J. 35, 36, 122, 161
GALAXE 113
Gallup Poll of Religion 178, 179
Gallup, George 179
Gardiner, Marshall 156
Gast, Sandy 156
Gay & Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation (GLAAD) 41,
44, 81, 163, 218
Gay Activist’s Alliance 22
Gay and Lesbian Day 46
Gay and Lesbian Human Rights Commission 155
gay and lesbian studies 21
Gay Day Parade 50
gay gene 139, 226
Gay, Lesbian and Straight Educational Network
(GLSEN) 7, 44, 132, 136–
138, 142–146
Gay, Lesbian and Straight Teachers
Network (GLSTN) 138 gay rights 2, 3, 24, 26, 27, 47, 59, 60, 129, 139, 158
Gay Rights, Special Rights 189, 191, 217
Gay Straight Alliance (GSA) 136
Geffen, David 45 gender confusion 119, 157, 161 gender identity 120, 138, 143 conflict 69 disorder (GID) 156

Gibson, Mel 215
Gibson, Paul 147
Gingrich, House Speaker Newt
202, 203, 204
Ginsburg, Allen 19
Ginsburg, Justice Ruth Bader 229, 230
God's creative order 155–157, 169, 180, 238, 239
Goldman, E. L. 5
Gore, Vice President Al 60
Governor's Commission on Gay and Lesbian Youth 147
Gramsci, Antonio 20
Great Commission 193
Green, Dennis 85
Greenwich Village 17, 59, 237
Greer, Ron 93
Griffin, Sean 47
Gutierrez, Noe 231

H

Haley, J. Evetts 183
Hamer, Dean 27, 61, 62, 226
Hamilton Square Baptist Church
101–103
Hannon, Gerald 144, 145
hate crimes 7, 8, 16, 80, 87–91, 94, 95, 107, 109, 133, 141, 142,
171
hate speech 16, 48, 95, 125, 139
Hay, Harry 19, 20
Health and Human Services,
Department of 148
Heather Has Two Mommies 131– 134 hedonism 27, 35, 58, 72
Heflin, Senator Howell 71 heritage, Christian 185
Hideki, Tojo 36
Hill, Janie 133, 134
Hillsdale College 136
Hispanics 28, 208

Hitler, Adolf 36, 44, 51, 76, 84, 101,
 130, 138, 181
 HIV/AIDS 4–6, 56–58, 62–69, 123, 125, 145, 146, 159, 160, 170,
 188, 207, 234, 235
 infection rates 4
 Hollywood 40–47, 124, 160–163, 202, 203, 210–212
 homo-fascist tactics 88, 100–105
 homosexual clubs 136
 Homosexual Day of Silence 137, 142 homosexual gene 60, 61 (See also: gay gene)
 homosexual marriage 26, 41, 58,
 81, 82, 113, 120, 130, 140,
 154, 156, 163–168, 172, 173,
 206, 207, 228, 231
 homosexual movement 2, 3, 17–
 25, 56, 59, 82, 106, 109, 110,
 115, 122, 123, 128, 141, 156,
 188, 201, 209, 210, 216, 221,
 226, 230, 240
Homosexuality: A Freedom Too Far 158
 Hooker, Thomas 183
 House UnAmerican Activities
 Committee 19, 49
 Howe, James 143
 Hull, Gov. Jane 188 human papillomavirus (HPV) 64, 65 human rights 15, 107
 Human Rights Campaign (HRC)
 45, 81, 112, 114, 116, 146,
 218, 224
 Hunter, James Davison 13
 Hussein, Saddam 36
 Hyperion Press 46, 47

I

Illinois Family Institute 107, 119
 “incrementalism” 230

indoctrination 111, 130, 134, 146, 163, 215, 218
infections 5, 65
Innes, David 102, 103
Institute on Religion and Democracy 110
Internet 32, 122, 132, 162, 217, 218, 227
intervention 235
intimidation 117, 121, 129, 130, 133, 140, 144
Island, David 92
It's Elementary 131, 138, 231

J

Jackson, President Andrew 199
Jacobs, James B. 94
Jacoby, Jeff 205, 206
jamming 24, 25
Jefferson, President Thomas 195,
199, 203, 204
Jefferson, Rep. William 208
Jennings, Kevin 132, 136, 146, 147
Jennings, Peter 42
Jinks, Dan 45
Johnson, Senator Lyndon 182, 183
Jones, Timothy 179
Joos, Gustaaf 16 judgment 12, 73, 109 biblical 117
 eternal 191, 221 of homosexual sin 8, 12, 18, 35, 117, 221–223, 235, 236, 239 moral 84, 134, 201, 218, 221, 235 judicial activism 14, 26, 203–207

K

Kaiser, Charles 160
Kameny, Frank 20
Kardiner, Abraham 22
Kennedy, President John 111, 112
Kennedy, Senator Ted 89, 90, 94,
109, 212–214

Kerouac, Jack 19
Kerry, Senator John 9, 60, 173
King, Coretta Scott 208
King, Martin Luther, Jr. 206, 208
King, Rodney 94
Kinsey Institute 38, 39
Kinsey, Alfred 6, 37–40, 52, 57, 145
Kirk, Marshall 24, 27, 34, 48–50, 123, 149
Kleinplatz, Peggy 229
Knight, Robert 87, 88, 128
“Know Nothings” 199
Kofman, Jeffrey 42
Kohl, Frank 156
Kramer, Larry 160
Krupski, Jim 88
Kurtz, Stanley 166, 167
Kyl, Senator John 90

L

LaBarbera, Peter 108, 119
Lafferty, Andrea 103
Lafferty, James 222, 223
LaHaye, Beverly 71
Lancaster, Gary 84
lavender mafia 42, 44
Lawrence v. Texas 25, 81, 82, 84
Leave It to Beaver 43
Legman, Gershon 116
Letellier, Patrick 92
LeTourneau, Jeff 96
LeVay, Simon 27, 61, 62, 226
Levine, Judith 229
Lewis, Rep. John 207 life expectancy 56–58, 67
Lincoln, President Abraham 33
Lisaius, Ken 120
“live and let live” 15, 47, 189, 211
Living Waters 233
Lloyd, Lauren 46
Lopez, Ben 168
Ludlow, Roger 183
Luksik, Peg 148
Lumberger, Michael 232–234

M

Mackey, Connie 109
Madison, Paula 42
Madison, President James 203
Madsen, Hunter 24, 27, 123, 149 mainline churches, demise of 209, 213
Marcavage, Michael 85
March on Washington (of 1993) 3, 26, 71, 98
Marco, Anton V. 49, 50, 51, 132
Marcuse, Herbert 20 marriage 9, 31 civil 169 defense of 75, 166 destruction of 164 homosexual 26 (See also:
 homosexual marriage)
 sanctity of 165, 231
 traditional 29, 207
Marshner, Connie 12
Martin, Clyde 37
Martin, Walter 209, 210
Maslow, Abraham 39
Masters and Johnson 161
Mattachine Society 19–22
Mattingly, Diane 232
Mayflower Compact 184–187
McCain, Franklin 206
McCaleb, Gary 79
McCarthy, Joseph 19
McIlhenny, Charles 87, 102
McLaughlin, John 98
McNeil, Joseph 206
McWilliams, Danny 47 media complicity 3, 25–27, 34, 43–47, 63, 81, 124, 160, 211, 212, 240
Meehan, William Austin 86
Mein Kampf 51, 84
Meron, Neil 44
Miller, Senator Zell 174 molestation 135, 136, 145

Moore, Michael 203 moral authority 122
moral judgment 84, 218, 235, 240 moral values 9, 10, 14, 28, 31, 40, 73–75, 81, 84, 105, 109, 113,
116, 126, 131–134, 169, 177,
187, 193, 201, 205, 216, 229 morality biblical 205
 public 177
Moses, Charles 229 multiculturalism 14
Murray, William J. 201
Myers, Chief Bill 162 myth, 10 percent 38–40 (See also:
 10 percent myth)

N

Naked Public Square 182
North American Man/Boy Love
 Association (NAMBLA) 227,
 228
National Association for Research and Therapy of Homosexuality (NARTH)
 97, 139, 205, 225, 226
National Academy of Sciences 60, 139
National Center for Lesbian Rights
 143
National Gay and Lesbian Task
 Force 120, 123, 140, 158, 167
National Institute for Healthcare
 Research 157
National Lesbian and Gay
 Journalism Association 42
National Lesbian and Gay Task
 Force 81
Nazi tactics 51, 70, 76, 86, 88,
 96–105, 130, 138, 140
National Education Association
 (NEA) 6, 7, 131, 132, 136,
 144, 174, 180, 225, 236
Neeson, Liam 40

Neuhaus, Richard John 182
New Testament 35, 214
New York Times 41, 42
Newdow, Michael 14
Newsday 16, 17
Newsom, Mayor Gavin 167, 168,
173, 230
Nicolosi, Joseph 97, 139, 225
National Institute of Mental Health
(NIMH) 22, 124, 157
No Name-Calling Week 143
North Valley Baptist Church 96
Northwest Ordinance 187

O

Oakland Christian Center 104
Office of Special Counsel (White House) 120
Okwedy, Kristopher 93
Old Testament 35, 74, 214
One Teenager in Ten 135
Orwell, George 130
Outfest 85, 86
Ovadal, Ralph 87
*Overhauling of Straight America,
The* 27, 34, 47, 48, 149
Ozzie and Harriet 43

P

Paglia, Camille 226
Paige, Hon. Rod 136 pandemic 58, 123
parental rights 75
Parents and Friends of Lesbians and Gays 44
Parents Rights Commission 145
Passion of the Christ, The 215
Patton, Mary Beth 232
Pavone, Father Frank 176, 195
People for the American Way (PAW) 202
Pawlick, J. Edward 41
Pawlick, Sally 41

pedophilia 144, 145, 227, 228, 229, 239
 Penn, William 79
 persecution 15, 16, 48, 70, 71, 80, 85–93, 96–105, 133, 138, 139, 159, 214, 215
 perversion 227, 239
 Pestritto, Ronald J. 94
 Peterson, Richard 116, 117
 Phelps, Fred 222, 223
 Philadelphia Five 85, 86 Pill, Erastes 34, 48–50, 149 (See also: Madsen, Hunter)
 Pillar, Richard 61
 Pink Angels 85 pink proms 137
 Planned Parenthood, 37
 Pledge of Allegiance 14, 118, 188, 203, 204
 Pol Pot 36 political correctness 194
 Pollard, Eric 50
 polyamory 164, 166 polygamy 228 popular culture 3, 32, 40, 123 (See also: culture) pornography 37–39, 75, 84, 85, 132, 135, 170, 181
 Potter, Kimberly 94
 Powell, Colin 28
 Power Community Church 97
 Price, Deb 125, 126
 Price, Frederick K. C. 208
 Princeton Theological Seminary 213 procreation 155, 161, 172, 226
 Project 10 134
 promiscuity 63, 132, 169 propaganda 24, 25, 44, 48–53, 58, 69, 130–135, 145–148, 158,
 163, 225

R

rainbow curriculum 148

Rather, Dan 42
 Reagan, Gov. Ronald 211
 Reagan, President Ronald 126 rebellion 18, 20, 36, 194 reconciliation, denominational 209, 213
 recruitment of children 43, 44, 130, 138, 144–150, 158, 159,
 215, 218, 224, 227–229
 redemption 52
 Reed, Ralph 71
 Reicken, Henry 23
 Reinhardt, Stephen 118
 Reisman, Judith 39, 40, 145 relativism 31, 155, 179 religious freedom 119, 132 religious liberty 75, 92, 103, 105, 117, 126, 133, 216
 renewal, Christian 209
 reparative therapy 97
 Repent America 85 restoration 232, 233, 235, 236 revival 72–73
 Richmond, David 206
 Riefenstahl, Leni 44, 138 right to life 75 righteousness, calling to 192–194 rights
 God-given 190
 homosexual 16
 Religious Liberties Protection Act
 (RLPA) 126
 Robertson, Pat 75, 203, 210
 Robinson, Eugene V. 213
Roe v. Wade 188
 Ronen, Carol 108
Roper v. Simmons 181
 Roth, Joe 45
 Rueda, Enrique T. 225

S

safe schools 143, 144, 147, 215
 Salvation Army, The 142 same-sex marriage 1, 9 (See also:

 homosexual marriage)
sanctity of life 75
Sanger, Margaret 37
Satan 217
Satinover, Jeffrey 4, 97, 161
Scalia, Justice Antonin 82–84
Schlesinger, Arthur 8 schools 2, 9, 21, 26, 39, 82, 125, 129–134, 136, 141–144, 147,
 149, 150, 159, 162, 174, 187,
 211, 215, 236, 240
Schumacher, Tom 46
Schwarzenegger, Gov. Arnold 126,
 212 Sekulow, Jay Alan 106 self-restraint 3, 28
sensitivity training 114 sexual identity 110, 139, 140, 156, 158, 225, 233
sexual perversion 37–39, 227, 239 sexual predators 227–229 sexually transmitted diseases 5, 6, 57, 62–65, 125
Shaffer, David 148
Shays, Rep. Chris 110
Sheldon, Beverly 98, 99
Sheldon, Louis P. 198
Sheldon, Stephen 96
Shepard, Matthew 222
Shine, Dan 134
Signorile, Michelangelo 163, 164
Smith, Bob 47
Socarides, Charles 23, 24, 157, 158 social conditioning 19
Society for Human Resource Management 110, 113
sodomy 1, 81, 118
sodomy laws 25
Somers, Georgi 156
Sorokin, Pitrim 30
Souter, Justice David 82
Southern Baptist Convention 114

- Speilberg, Stephen 45
- spiritual awakening 74
- Stahl, Leslie 42
- Stalin, Josef 36
- standards
 - biblical 13, 33, 70, 73, 75, 125, 139, 140, 159, 169, 170, 185–187, 191, 205
 - ethical 28
 - moral 105, 134, 228
- Staver, Matthew 165
- Stephanopoulos, George 42
- Stern, Howard 72
- Stills, Stephen 55
- Stone v. Graham* 178
- Stonewall Riots 59
- storm troopers 97, 101
- Streisand, Barbra 44
- substance abuse 5, 50, 51, 67, 124, 125, 234
- suicide 65, 66, 124, 137, 147
- Sullivan, Hon. Louis 148
- Sulzberger, Arthur (Pinch), Jr. 40, 41
- Supreme Court 9, 37, 41, 60, 80–83, 177–181, 188, 190, 201, 204, 229
 - of British Columbia 15
 - of California 167
 - of Kansas 156
 - of Massachusetts 81, 164
- Swift, Michael 2

T

- 10 percent myth 38, 39, 40 (See also: myth, 10 percent)
- television networks 44
- Ten Commandments 178, 184
- textbooks, pro-homosexual 149, 150
- Thomas, Justice Clarence 82
- thought police 94
- thought reform 24
- Throckmorton, Warren 231

Thune, Senator John 203
Tocqueville, Alexis de 200 tolerance 2, 81, 115–119, 126, 128, 158, 172
Tolerance Pledge 43
Tooley, Mark 110, 111
Toynbee, Arnold 29 traditional values 3, 32, 37, 199, 201, 205, 212, 219
Traditional Values Coalition
(TVC) 9, 48, 60, 75, 86, 98,
121, 137, 168, 170, 183, 189,
193, 207, 215–218, 230, 235
Troupis, Chris 118
Troy, Daniel 8
Turner, Tina 55, 72

U

U.S. Census Bureau 157
Unwin, J. D. 29, 72, 238
Uribe, Virginia 135, 136

V

values
biblical 191
Christian 178–181, 184, 185, 191, 198, 216, 240
moral 182, 183, 190, 229
traditional 141, 205, 212, 219
values voters 8, 10, 74, 173, 174, 186, 202, 212
Varela, Antonio 16
Vidmar, Patricia 79 vigilance 195
Viguerie, Richard 202

W

wall of separation 200
warnings from history 28–30, 72, 111, 139, 155, 158, 159, 170,
219, 238
Washington Blade 50, 171
Washington, President George 14,
74, 79, 126

We Are Family Foundation 43
Webster, Noah 201
Westboro Baptist Church 222
White House 120, 121, 178, 202,
212
Whiteman, Scott 145
Wilberforce, William 238
Wilde, Oscar 172 will of the people 84
Williams, Stephen 79
Williamson, Kevin 44
Wilson, Carl 29, 30
Wilson, Governor Pete 97
Winfrey, Oprah 179
Wolfson, Evan 172
Wonderful World of Disney 45 workplace 106
 discrimination 113, 126, 132 religion-free 71, 72
World Court 215
WORLD magazine 112–116
World War II 18, 36
WorldNetDaily.com 86, 162 worldview 130

Z

Zadan, Craig 44
Zedong, Mao 36
Zeiger, Hans 136

R E V I S E D A N D U P D A T E D

The Homosexual Agenda

EXPOSING THE PRINCIPAL THREAT TO RELIGIOUS FREEDOM TODAY

ALAN SEARS & CRAIG OSTEN

“Love is the greatest power in the world, and Alan Sears and Craig Osten deal with a very delicate subject in The Homosexual Agenda in a spirit of tough love. The message of this book is must-reading for every concerned American.”

—Bill Bright, Founder and Chairman
Campus Crusade for Christ

“The Alliance Defense Fund is doing a wonderful work in defending religious liberty and preserving the rights of Christian people.”

—Dr. James Dobson, Author and Founder of Focus on the Family

“If any right-thinking American has found the gay and lesbian agenda difficult to understand or hard to believe, all of the answers—clear, irrefutable, convincing, and frightening—are here in this salient and timely volume from the highly respected Alliance Defense Fund. The six-point strategy of the homosexual community is completely dismantled, in terms of legality, morality, politics, psychology, and funding. This book could be the instrument that will reverse the tide of influence that this devastating vice is having on American society today.”

—D. James Kennedy, Senior Minister
Coral Ridge Presbyterian Church

“The homosexual rights movement is built on a foundation of lies, deception, and factual disinformation. In spite of the flood of data on the destructive nature of homosexual practices, homosexuality is being normalized and promoted in movies, television, music, and to children and young people in our public schools and universities. Contrary to the common wisdom, we do not exhibit true compassion when we remain silent about the true nature of homosexuality. Genuine compassion requires cold honesty and brutal frankness about the popular mythologies that surround the gay and lesbian lifestyle. It is this structure of lies, deception, and factual disinformation that Americans must understand if we are to save our civilization. I commend Alan Sears and Craig Osten for having the courage to tell the truth about this highly destructive movement.”

—Marlin Maddoux, USA Radio

“The sexual revolution of the last half-century amounts to the most sweeping and significant reordering of human relationships in all of human history. This did not come to pass by accident. Indeed, it was driven by social and sexual revolutionaries who intended to ‘liberate’ humanity for the polymorphous perversity described by Freud and celebrated by the cultural elite.

“The legitimization and celebration of homosexuality stands at the center of this sexual revolution. In The Homosexual Agenda, Alan Sears and Craig Osten reveal the strategy and the ambition that now drive the homosexual movement—a movement that will settle for nothing less than total victory for its cause. Sears and Osten prove their case and reveal the facts, and we are all in their debt. Most helpfully, they also prove the fact that the homosexual agenda cannot succeed unless religious liberty is forfeited. This may well be the most significant religious liberty issue of our times. Read this book—get angry—and get active in the cause of religious liberty.”

—R. Albert Mohler Jr., President
The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary

“This ground-breaking book destroys the myth that homosexual activists simply want equal rights. Of the book's many strengths is its reliance upon homosexual activists' own stated agenda. Sears and Osten copiously document this agenda in what can only be described as a manifesto for sexual terrorism against marriage, family, and the church. They show how this agenda has radically reshaped public opinion even to threatening our religious liberties in their desire to codify their immoral agenda in our nation's laws. I commend Sears and Osten for their love of the gospel and desire to help those in real bondage to sin. A must-read for every pastor.”

—Alfred Poirier, Senior Pastor
Rocky Mountain Community Church

“This book is courageously but compassionately written. Obviously, the subject engenders confusion, confrontation, and sometimes hostility. The facts are thoughtfully and forthrightly presented and are worthy of honest consideration no matter what persuasion one may have concerning homosexuality.”

—Adrian Rogers, Senior Pastor, Bellevue Baptist Church

“This is riveting reading. As this book shows through its review of the aggressive march of militant homosexuals through the courts, the legislatures, cultural institutions, and churches, the pretense of homosexuals' ‘tolerance’ of non-homosexuals is over.”

—The Wanderer

THE HOMOSEXUAL AGENDA

Exposing the Principal Threat to Religious Freedom Today

ALAN SEARS & CRAIG OSTEN

NASHVILLE • TENNESSEE

© 2003 by Alan E. Sears and Craig J. Osten

All rights reserved

Printed in the United States of America

ISBN: 978-0-8054-2698-4

Published by B & H Publishing Group, Nashville, Tennessee

Dewey Decimal Classification: 261.7

Subject Heading: GAY LIBERATION MOVEMENT

HOMOSEXUALITY \ FREEDOM OF RELIGION

Unless otherwise stated all Scripture citation is from the Holy Bible, New International Version, © 1973, 1978, 1984 by International Bible Society.

9 10 11 12 13 14 15

11 10 09 08 07

Contents

Acknowledgments

A Note from the Authors

Introduction

Chapters

1: How Did We Get Here?

2: That's Entertainment?

3: “Stupid” Parents, “Enlightened” Kids

4: The Lavender Tower

5: The Family under Attack

6: The Silence (and Silencing) of the Church

7: The Seduction of Corporate America

8: The End of Tolerance (for Those Who Disagree)

9: The Full Weight of the Government

10: Where Do We Go from Here?

Appendix 1: Background Brief

Appendix 2: Letter to Pastors

Notes

*This book is dedicated to the founding members of the Alliance Defense Fund including:
the late Bill Bright, the late Larry Burkett, James C. Dobson, D. James Kennedy, Marlin Maddoux, and the late William Pew.*

Each has taken a strong and uncompromising stand for the gospel and has withstood the slings and arrows of those who desire to silence its dissemination in America. It has been an honor for both of us to stand with these brave men for the sake of the gospel.

Acknowledgments

The authors wish to thank Al Janssen, Jordan Lorence, Glen Lavy, Jeff Ventrella, Marv McCarthy, Paul Weber, Ben Bull, Rich Jefferson, Elizabeth Murray, and Julie Michael for their assistance on this project. Most of all, we express appreciation to our wives and our families. Their insight and help was invaluable as we tackled this often difficult and contentious subject.

A Note from the Authors

While this book deals with a difficult and contentious issue, we want to state up front that both authors and the ministry of the Alliance Defense Fund have nothing but respect, compassion, and sensitivity toward those ensnared in homosexual behavior. Both of us have family members, respected acquaintances, and friends who have been trapped in this behavior and know something of the incredible pain and sorrow it has brought to them and their families. With God's grace we carefully balance this love and respect for these individuals with warnings about the carrying out, promotion, and demand for legal approval for homosexual behavior that will stifle religious freedom and trap millions of more people in its deadly grip.

—Alan Sears and Craig Osten

Introduction

Homosexuality is a condition; gay and lesbian is a decision.

—Father Benedict Groeschel, With Mind and Heart Renewed

John had never known a loving, stable family. When he was just five, his biological parents divorced, beginning a revolving door of different father figures, none of whom lasted. What he learned from these men was that they were something he didn't want to be.

By the time he was eighteen, John's mother and father were each on their third spouses, and he had learned that men “were unstable, they hurt you, and they put your mother down.” He spent his childhood as his mother's caretaker, and as a result, he bonded and attached himself to her.

John grew up ashamed of himself and his male identity. As a young man, dressing himself up as “Candy,” he would masquerade as a female impersonator. This disguise was a cover-up for the inner hatred he had for himself and the misery he felt as a result. He was crying out for love, the love that only Christ could completely provide, but he had never heard. He said, “When I would come home from a bar with a partner I didn't know, I would break down in tears...feel like a piece of meat....I was just a hollow shell....I was twenty-four but felt like eighty. I tried to take my life....I was tired and worn out....I didn't want to die; I wanted to escape....I wanted someone to tell me that ‘I love you. There is something of value to you’”²

This tortured young man did not know at the time that God had a different plan for his life, a plan that would slowly be revealed through the quiet, consistent witness of a Christian couple.

John thought the couple was “quaint” when they visited him at the print shop he managed. Over a period of months, the couple's Christ-like love started to break down the hardened exterior he had put up to suppress the pain he felt inside. Wherever he went, he seemed to run into this couple. He could not escape their kindness.

Through the witness of this couple, John finally came face-to-face with the unconditional love he had missed so much as a child: the love of Jesus Christ and God the Father. The young man would eventually accept Christ, but as part of the healing process and because of his fear of the organized church, the couple would provide him with a personal church service, complete with music, sermon, and morning offering. He would read the Bible and weep as the pain of twenty-four years of hurt slowly melted away and he poured himself into the words. For the first time he knew he had a Father who loved and cared for him in a way he had never experienced before.

John moved to Northern California to join a church that specifically ministered to others trying to escape the trap of homosexual behavior. It was there he met his future wife, Anne, who was seeking healing from her past of lesbian behavior. The two fell in love and in 1992 they were married. As the years went by, the Lord blessed them with three sons and a relationship that would be a witness to the world of what the love of Jesus Christ can do to heal a broken heart.

Who is this person? His name is John Paulk. We both know and love him and can attest that he is one of the warmest, gentlest, and most courageous individuals we have ever met. He has faced every sling and arrow that could be thrown at him, along with numerous temptations—and some human weakness—but has remained strong in the faith. We personally know only a few ex-homosexuals, but we know there are thousands of John and Anne Paulks throughout America who have heard and responded to the redemptive love of Jesus Christ. How many more are out there who need to learn of his saving grace?

Unfortunately, if many homosexual activists have their way, Christ's message of redemptive love will be silenced and those who share it through the preaching of the uncensored words of Scripture will be punished. Thus, those who need to respond to the gospel will never have the opportunity to hear it. The effort of homosexual activists to convince Americans to tolerate (i.e., “affirm”) homosexual behavior³ tramples religious freedom and leaves a trail of broken bodies in the dust. Broken bodies, broken souls who without the chance to hear and respond to the gospel will never know that there is a way out of a lifestyle, and its accompanying behaviors, that falls far short of the joy their Creator intended and leads to despair, disease, and early death.³† Yet despite these dangers, it is a behavior that is being promoted as nothing more than an alternative lifestyle, and any dissent is ridiculed, vilified, and censored.

* Author's note: In this book, we will only use the word gay when it is part of a direct quote from other material. It is our belief that gay is primarily a political term used by radical homosexual activists to take attention away from their sexual behavior. In a conference in the early 1970s, a decision was made by a group of activists to purposefully label homosexuals and their behaviors as gay in order to reposition them politically. One of their goals was to get the general public to use the word gay instead of homosexual since they believed gay would take the onus off homosexual behavior. That stated, homosexuality is “intrinsically disordered” and contrary to Scripture and natural law. Homosexual persons, as are all unmarried and married persons, are called to chastity and sexual fidelity. We also differentiate between the word homosexuality and homosexual behavior, as noted hereafter. On Valentine's Day 2003, a group of academics gathered to discuss the proper usage of “lavender” language. Bill Leap, coordinator of the 10th Annual American University Conference on Lavender Languages and Linguistics said that homosexuals around the world “still struggle with the complex terminology and doublemeanings of homosexual language.” Leap said that TV shows such as Will & Grace are used by homosexuals to teach them about the basics of communication in “gayspeak.” Words such as “top,” “pitcher,” and “catcher” have totally different meanings in homosexual culture. Lionel Tiger, Darwin professor of anthropology at Rutgers University added: "It's just a courting language...like any courtship language for a particular group of people interested in mating with each other." The use of the word gay instead of homosexual is just another form of so-called "lavender" language. See Michael L. Betsch, "University Conference Focuses on 'Gay Language,'" CNSNews.com, February 6, 2003.

† It was reported in late 2003 that syphilis rates are growing dramatically in America, particularly among homosexual and bisexual men, which could also lead to a large increase in future HIV/AIDS cases. The Centers for Disease Control says that 40 percent of the new cases are in homosexual/bisexual men. Source: Steve Mitchell, "Syphilis Increase Sparks AIDS Concerns," United Press International, November 20, 2003.

John Paulk was living such a life. But through Christ's redeeming love, John's life is now one of joy and fulfillment. He now knows that he is living the life that God intended for him. For every John and Anne Paulk we know who have been able to overcome homosexual behavior and come to a personal relationship with Jesus Christ, we know several other individuals who are still trapped in homosexual behavior, whether they are former classmates or family members.

What we all must remember is that Christ died for all of our sins. It is not "hate" or "hate speech" to tell someone to turn from sin and embrace Christ's love. It is an act of love, for the greatest act of love the world has ever known is what Christ did for all of us on the cross. †

† See 1 Peter 2:24.

We recently received another reminder of how the love and power of the gospel can bring healing to a broken life.

Melissa Fryrear is a former lesbian who, in Jesus Christ, found the love that she had been searching for all her life. Her testimony is touching and a reminder to all of us of God's amazing and transforming grace. Melissa has graciously agreed to allow us to share it.

I am the second and last child my parents adopted in the '60s. I grew up in a nice upper-middle class neighborhood in the east end of Louisville. Thirty-six years later, my parents continue to live in the same home.

I grew up attending church....At Trinity, I was dedicated as a baby; I went to Vacation Bible School in the summer; and I played in the children's handbell choir. Although I had grown up attending church, I had not yet made a personal decision for Jesus Christ. Attending church seemed like something we did because it was the "right thing to do." In retrospect, I remember hearing stories about Jesus and about people in the Bible, but I never recall hearing a story about salvation. I did not yet know I was a sinner in need of a Savior.

I remember one Sunday morning when I was thirteen. I was sitting in the sanctuary with my parents waiting for the 11:00 a.m. service to begin. I picked up a Bible that was resting on the back of the pew in front of me and I began to flip through the pages at random. As I was flipping through the pages, the Bible fell open to the book of Leviticus, the eighteenth chapter. My eyes fell upon the 22nd verse: "A man should not lie with another man as one lies with a woman; that is detestable." My eyes hung on that semicolon and then swung to the words that followed: "that...is...detestable." Without looking around and without saying a word to anyone, I closed that Bible, placed it back on the pew in front of me, and in my heart I said "No" to God. When I read that verse, the words that I read after the semicolon were, "Melissa is detestable."

Even at thirteen, I had already known for a couple of years that something seemed different about me. Many gays and lesbians believe they are born homosexual. This is what I believed. I had made that decision because as early as the age of seven, I could remember being drawn to girls. My assumption was, "Well, if I have always felt this way, then I must have been born this way." That was a beginning seed, I believe, that began to take root in the soul of my heart.

As my adolescent years continued to unfold, my mind was filled with a barrage of screaming questions: "What is wrong with me?!" "Why don't I seem to be attracted to the boys like the other girls?!" "Why do I seem attracted to the girls?!" "Why do I hate being a girl?!" "What is wrong with me?!" In an attempt to answer those screaming questions, I opened up a dictionary one day and read the definitions to words like homosexual and lesbian and gay. That seed sprouted.

I was sixteen when I became involved in my first lesbian relationship....Unaware, unable, and unwilling to resist the temptation and draw any longer, I embraced with outstretched and welcoming arms my lesbian identity. When I left home at eighteen to attend the University of Kentucky, I immersed myself in the gay community. Everything in my world revolved around being gay. I had three goals in life: have a good time, make a lot of money, and without overusing the cliché, find the woman of my dreams...and the seed flourished.

In the late '80s, I began working for an advertising agency in Lexington. The agency was owned by three men, one who was a Christian. Bill was the Christian. He was always kind, considerate, and respectful toward me. He was unlike the other two men....

These years of my life continued to unfold and from my perspective, I was well on my way to achieving my three goals in life. I was having some really good times; I was making a lot of money; and yet again, I was in a relationship with a woman. Yet something was stirring within me.

One Saturday night unexpectedly, I asked my partner at the time if she wanted to go to church the next morning. Because we were so emotionally enmeshed, she agreed to almost anything I ever suggested. This time was no exception. Because I had grown up in the Presbyterian church, that seemed the most familiar place to start and so we looked in the phone book. In the small community of Versailles, there was only one Presbyterian church, appropriately named Versailles Presbyterian, and as one might expect, it was located on Main Street. It was a small congregation of predominantly older couples. Needless to say, when my partner and I walked in, it was obvious. The members of that church, though, received us with warmth and without condemnation. I immediately became involved in all the activities they offered: the Wednesday night potlucks, Sunday morning Bible studies, and I even joined the adult handbell choir.

There was a couple in their seventies, L. J. and Doris Crain, who took me under their wings and into their hearts. L. J. was an intelligent and kind man. He was the clerk of session and led our adult Sunday morning Bible study....Bill from my workplace, and L. J. and Doris from my church, knew the life I was living. They were discerning people and at that time I looked like a lesbian woman...sporting a short, cropped hairstyle, very little makeup, and masculine attire. And although they knew about me and the life I was living, they never said a word about my homosexual lifestyle. Instead, they met me where I was, accepted me with grace, loved me unconditionally, and prayed for me fervently. It was through relationship with them that I was led to make the most important decision of my life. One afternoon, sitting alone on the edge of my bed in the stillness of my bedroom, I said quietly in my heart, "Jesus, Jesus please, please come and be the Savior of my life and the Lord of my life." He did; and a new seed was planted.

My partner at the time actually gave me my first Bible...It was the New International Version Study Bible in blue leather with silver edged pages and the words of Jesus in red. I began to read that Bible, and it was not long before I discovered what a concordance is. Just in case you were wondering, "homosexuality" in the NIV concordance is listed alphabetically between "hometown" and "honesty." I soon learned there were a number of Scriptures that address the issue of homosexuality. I read again the Scripture in Leviticus that I had read so many years before. I also found verses in Deuteronomy, Romans, and 1 Corinthians. And this is when the wrestling ensued.

For months I went around and around with the Lord. I did not yet understand; my faith was so new. I argued with Him; I pleaded with Him; I fled from Him; I yelled at Him; and I opposed Him. "God," I said, "I know Your Word says that it's wrong, that it's a sin, but to me it feels like I've been born this way. It's all I've ever known. To me it feels normal, but You say it's an abomination. God help me!"

The Bible says the Word of God is living and active, sharper than a double-edged sword; it penetrates even to dividing soul and spirit, joints and marrow. It judges the thoughts and attitudes of the heart. Isaiah 55:11 says that God's Word will not return empty, but it will accomplish what God desires and achieve the purposes for which He sends it. For the next four, eight, and twelve months the Holy Spirit of God continued to work those truths into my heart until I came to the point of convicting revelation where I knew what I was doing was sin. But God demonstrated in His own love for me in this, that while I was still a sinner, Christ died for me. The Bible says that repentance is a gift and that it's God's kindness that leads us to repentance. During those months, even in my confusion, even in my anger, even in my rebellion, God showered me with His love. In 1992, by His grace, I repented of my years of sexual sin and the new seed sprouted.

The separation, though, from my partner at the time was not immediate. Although at the time of repentance all sexual immorality stopped, we still shared a bed together, a home together, and a life together. That was one of the first tangible experiences I had of God's patient and tender mercy. He knew how incredibly enmeshed we were. It was as if we were two infected wounds that had been crudely bandaged together with dirty and soiled gauze. But like a sensitive and compassionate doctor, the Lord began to slowly and gently unwrap that dressing. Over the next months, He continued to move in our lives and we eventually separated completely.

Can you imagine if Melissa had never had the chance to hear and respond to the gospel? If the law had forbidden it? If it were considered hate speech to tell her? She would still be trapped in a behavior that brought her so much shame. She would have no idea that Christ loves her and can forgive her for her past. It would be an incredible tragedy but one that can and will happen if we remain silent to the threat that the homosexual agenda represents to religious freedom in America.

Melissa's story is also a reminder that Jesus himself is why we must treat individuals who practice homosexual behavior with respect, compassion, and sensitivity. To do otherwise would mean a disservice to the gospel and Christ's sacrifice.

Another example of a hurting individual who came to know the healing grace of Jesus Christ is Teresa Britton. Teresa was raised Baptist, but by her senior year, she was going to "gay" bars in search of love. She never found it, regardless of how many lesbian relationships she was involved in. One night, crying in bed, she said that she felt God touch her: "The next thing I knew I was on the floor in a fetal position. Within that instant, all the lies I believed and all the gray areas of my life became black and white. The truth had been revealed to me, and I knew the way I was living was wrong."

The lie was that she was born homosexual and couldn't change. Teresa traced her entrapment in lesbianism to her father's alcoholism and physical abuse. "I will never, ever let a man treat me like that," she would say to herself. "If that's what a man is all about, why would I want to be with one?" In September 2000, she accepted Jesus Christ as her Lord and Savior. One of the reasons? The love of Christ shown through church members. Without her church, she said, "I would probably still be bouncing from one relationship to another. I would be on the road to destruction instead of the road to life." This is the love that God calls us to, and this is the love that we must defend against those who seek to silence it.

Craig is also a good friend with another woman who had escaped from lesbian behavior. His friend had served as the press secretary to Patricia Ireland, the former president of the National Organization for Women. She knew deep down about the sinfulness of her lesbian behavior and wanted to escape, but she felt nothing but anger and condemnation from individuals who called themselves Christians. The anger she felt repelled her from Christianity for many years. Despite this, God continued to work on her heart and eventually brought her to him. She still struggles with the anger she experienced from Christians when she was a lesbian but has remained strong in the faith.

The experiences of Craig's friend remind us that, as with all sin by persons of whatever orientation, we must differentiate between condemning the sin of homosexual behavior and condemning the individual. Ultimately only God judges the heart. We vehemently disagree and disassociate ourselves with the actions of individuals, such as Fred Phelps of Topeka, Kansas, who would picket the funerals of AIDS victims, post messages that "God Hates Fags" on the World Wide Web, condemn those who have compassion for those trapped in homosexual behavior,⁵ + and state that there is no redemption for the homosexual.

* Fred Phelps and his followers have picketed Focus on the Family because the ministry employs three former homosexuals on its staff: John Paulk, Amy Tracy and Mike Haley

However, on the other hand, we cannot stand idly by while many well-meaning individuals provide spiritual cover for and enable those who are caught in and/or promote this destructive behavior. We are called by a living God to serve him, and there are crystal-clear, non-debatable issues that cannot be dismissed if we are to live in obedience to him. One of those issues is homosexual behavior. God the Creator has written the rule book (the Bible) for his creation, and despite reinterpretations and explanations by activists and some members of the clergy, his Word undeniably condemns homosexual behavior.⁶

* 1 Corinthians 6:9-10 says: "Do you not know that the wicked will not inherit the kingdom of God? Do not be deceived: Neither the sexually immoral nor idolaters nor adulterers nor male prostitutes nor homosexual offenders nor thieves nor the greedy nor drunkards nor slanderers nor swindlers will inherit the kingdom of God" (emphasis added). Romans 1:24-28 states: "Therefore God gave them over in the sinful desires of their hearts to sexual impurity for the degrading of their bodies with one another. They exchanged the truth of God for a lie, and worshiped and served created things rather than the Creator—who is forever praised. Amen. Because of this, God gave them over to shameful lusts. Even their women exchanged natural relations for unnatural ones. In the same way, the men also abandoned natural relations with women and were inflamed with lust for one another. Men committed indecent acts with other men, and received in themselves the due penalty for their perversion." Leviticus 18:22 reads: "Do not lie with a man as one lies with a woman; that is detestable."

Christ's healing power has never been more powerful than today, as proven in the cases of these former homosexuals. The hurt and shame that homosexual behavior can bring to an individual is devastating. In a USA Today article, Sharon Sherrard, a San Rafael, California, accountant, said that she found solace with regard to her lesbian behavior by drinking alcohol to excess. “No matter what I did,” she said, “I knew in my mind that I could never, quote, get to heaven as long as I was an active lesbian.”⁶ Ms. Sherrard desperately needs to know Christ's love for her and that only he can heal the wounds in her heart that have caused her to fall into lesbian behavior. However, if the gospel is silenced, she will be forced to continue to find her solace elsewhere, such as in a liquor bottle, rather than having it quenched by the living water that is Jesus Christ.

Alan has witnessed the pain of those who are trapped in homosexual behavior firsthand from the time he spent as a full-time and special prosecutor—both on the local and federal levels—and as the head of several criminal investigative task forces. In addition, he served as the executive director of the Attorney General's Commission on Pornography in 1985-86. In the various roles he served across the United States, he had in-depth and personal exposure to not only the criminal enterprise surrounding hard-core pornography's production and distribution, but to much of the related sex trade, especially to those who practiced homosexual behavior. In multiple prosecutions of people involved in every level of the pornography trafficking industry, Alan learned firsthand, many times from hours of conversations with defendants and their counsel, of these individuals' real view of the First Amendment (it was a joke and a smoke screen). He also learned what the profiteering pornographers thought of the homosexual persons who were plied with every manner of video, magazine, and appliance. To be blunt, the pornographers had nothing but disgust and ridicule for those who paid them hard cash.

In years of public speaking during and after this period of his life, Alan called pornography the “true hate literature” of our age, because of its hatred and exploitation of the human person, regardless of size, shape, color, and gender. It reduced human beings to valueless commodities to be ogled at and disposed of like used tissue. And sad to say, many of these individuals who were disposed of by the pornographers were practicing homosexuals.

One of the unique experiences Alan had was to meet many young homosexual men and women who were struggling with the issue of pornography and the various forms of sex trade outlets. These included the so-called gay bars, many of which he, and his other commission members, discovered to be often owned or controlled not by homosexuals, but by exploitive heterosexuals and criminal enterprises. These individuals and organizations just wanted to make a buck off the weakness of others. Alan talked with these men and women in depth about their pain, their heart needs, and the role that this material played in their formation and their sexual behavior. Alan has maintained some of these relationships for more than seventeen years by occasional correspondence, and some of the individuals he knew have since died of sexually transmitted diseases.

Based on these years and experiences with those trapped in homosexual behavior, we must express real outrage at the merciless exploitation of those with homosexual urges and temptations. Overt efforts are made by many to lead young men and women into homosexual behavior, many for simple, base reasons that have nothing to do with political agendas—instead, the new recruits are “fresh meat” and sources of new cash, new sex partners, and new profit.

It is for these tragically exploited people that Christ died. Those who are trapped in homosexual behavior have been deceived, just like anyone else who does not know the fullness of Christ. They are often told that their greatest enemies are the church (and in the case of Craig's friend many have sadly given credence to that thought) and the traditional family, the two entities that could bring the healing they so desperately need. The result is that the immense inner pain of many has been channeled into an incessant drive to silence, punish, and, ultimately, eliminate these two institutions. It is the church (a church that proclaims the gospel) that can guide them to the healing of their pain through faith in Jesus Christ, and it is the traditional family that can keep future generations of children from falling into homosexual behavior.

John Paulk's story is an example of what can happen when the traditional family breaks down and children are left hurt and confused. With only one parent—in most cases, the mother—to bond with and attach to, boys in particular are vulnerable to falling into homosexual behavior. John's experiences remind us that we must support and defend the traditional family, in order to prevent such pain from being spread to an entire generation of children.

* We have both, one through personal experience, and the other through an immediate family member's experience, known the pain, the shame, and the sorrow when God's plan for the traditional family has been broken by divorce. Only by God's grace, his forgiveness, restoration, and healing in our lives do our own families today experience the richness of living his model lifestyle.

The Alliance Defense Fund® was founded to defend the right to hear and speak the Truth—that truth is the Gospel of Jesus Christ.† The Alliance Defense Fund has been involved in countless cases involving the rights of people to live and express their faith, to share Christ's love with a hurting world, to protect the sanctity of human life, and to defend marriage and the family from those who seek to redefine these terms into meaninglessness. We will discuss some of the legal cases that the Alliance Defense Fund has been part of and how what we have experienced has alarmed both of us with regard to how the homosexual agenda threatens religious freedom, and in particular, evangelism.

† The Alliance Defense Fund is a one-of-a-kind legal service organization founded in 1994 by the late Dr. Bill Bright, Dr. James Dobson, Dr. D. James Kennedy, the late Larry Burkett, Marlin Maddoux, the late William Pew, and more than thirty other national ministry leaders to provide strategy and coordination, training, and funding in the legal battle for religious freedom, sanctity of human life, and the traditional family and its values. ADF has provided funding and assistance in hundreds of legal matters, including twenty-nine cases before the U.S. Supreme Court, has trained more than 715 volunteer attorneys to serve the Body of Christ across America, and partnered with more than one hundred ministries and organizations. Since its formation, ADF has been involved in nearly every legal case of national scope concerning the definition of marriage and attempts to redefine the family.

Almost daily, we hear from another parent whose children have been exposed to homosexual activism in the classroom, or from an employee forced to undergo so-called diversity training at work (training that ridicules the Christian position on homosexual behavior), or from a business person forced to violate his or her sincerely held religious beliefs about homosexual behavior. These cases are not going away. We are seeing them happen with increasing frequency as the homosexual activist movement strives to censor or marginalize all speech that is in accord with biblical teaching on homosexual behavior, and with it, the gospel of Jesus Christ.

In the pages following, we will outline how these attacks on religious freedom are being played out in all aspects of our culture. We know from personal experience that many Christians we come in contact with are uncomfortable with this whole issue of homosexuality. They hear such words as “intolerance,” and they want to be considered tolerant. They hear the term “hateful,” and they want to appear loving. They say, “All we need to do is share the gospel,” yet are unaware that their ability to do even that is quickly eroding away. Many choose to avoid the subject totally, rather than set themselves up for ridicule and vilification.

So why are we insisting that we examine this issue? Because, whether you realize it or not, this issue affects your marriage, it threatens your children, and if we don't do something soon, it will drastically limit your religious liberty.

For the sake of evangelism, for the sake of freedom and human rights, and for the sake of the very souls of those who desperately need to hear about the love of Jesus Christ, like John Paulk and the others we have mentioned who have responded to the gospel, we cannot allow this to happen.

And the church is confused on the issue. This is why we believe, with the strongest sense of urgency, that the faith community must be fully educated on the threat that is coming to the front door of their places of worship and their homes. We need to do this not only for those trapped in homosexual behavior, but also for the future of our children, our country, and the church.

Consider the following illustration. You are on vacation, visiting the Grand Canyon. As you are standing on an observation platform, you witness the typical scene of a person below the platform with his back to the edge of the canyon posing for a picture. Then something unusual and disturbing happens. The person keeps backing closer and closer to the edge. From your vantage point you can see that if the person backs up any farther, he is going to plunge thousands of feet to his death. From his vantage point, he cannot see what is about to happen.

You run toward him and shout a warning. Then something even more unusual happens. The people standing below the platform, taking the picture, yell back at you and tell you to stop your hate speech. They tell you that you need to respect diversity and the decision to stand as close to the ledge as they want. Before their last words are finished, the person near the edge continues backing up, loses his footing, and falls to a horrible death.

To your astonishment, the photographer runs over to you, shakes his fist in your face, and says that your bigotry caused the person's death.

Sound preposterous? Yes, it does.

But due to the incredible, amazing grace of God, believers have been granted the vantage point to see and warn the individuals of the dangers ahead if they continue to engage in sinful behavior. He has given us the ability to see from the observation tower the big picture that others cannot see.

Few, if any, would condemn people standing dangerously close to the edge. However, we would warn them and others of the physical dangers ahead if they keep moving in the direction they are going. Compassion does not mean that you provide the person with a pat on the back as he heads over the cliff. It means loving our neighbors as ourselves and warning them of the dangers ahead if they continue down the same path. As Christians, we cannot sit idly by as individuals engage in behavior that will result in their eternal demise. Yet, the concern we have for our brothers and sisters—for their physical, psychological, and eternal welfare—has now often been classified as hate speech, and in the near future we face the real likelihood of punishment if we issue even the slightest of warnings about what may await them. As Christians, we cannot remain silent, nor can we allow others to silence us when it comes to the eternal soul of an individual. However, if the homosexual agenda continues to go unchecked that is exactly what is going to happen.

The other question we have to ask ourselves is this: are we willing to take a stand for our children and our grandchildren? What type of world will they inherit if we do not take a stand? Will they inherit a world of broken families and broken lives, a world in which any mention of the sinfulness of homosexual behavior and the need for the redemptive love of the gospel is a criminal offense? Or will they inherit a world in which the gospel can be freely lived out and proclaimed, in which traditional families are encouraged by society, and in which the religious beliefs of parents are supported, and not undermined, by the state?

In the pages to follow, we will strive to make the point that the future of our children and grandchildren is in our hands. We will outline how the homosexual agenda touches every area of our lives, from the media to education to families to corporate America and to government. We will document how the religious freedoms of all Americans are under attack from radical homosexual activists.

Will we avert our glance while Rome burns and our children are lost because we were afraid...afraid to offend, afraid to be labeled intolerant, afraid to take action in fear of repercussions? Or will we take a stand for Christ and for our children and grandchildren?

How far down the road have homosexual activists taken us toward their goal of unbridled sexual behavior and silencing of the church? Let us look at four stages that lead to the moral demise of a culture. Prepare yourselves to be alarmed.

1. The Community Establishment Stage. In this stage, a group of like-minded individuals (homosexual activists) who practice a lifestyle or sinful behavior discover each other and start to play a larger role in society. They start to feel empowered.
2. The Organization Stage. In this stage, the group now feels empowered and starts to get organized and develop a game plan for legitimizing their behavior in society.
3. The Mobilization Stage. The group starts to pool together all of its resources. They develop a common language and strategy for presenting their case to the public. They reframe the issue, taking it out of the moral realm, and present it as a “human rights” issue. Those who oppose their argument are deemed “hateful” or “intolerant” toward those that are “different” even though the group's only identification is that of a chosen sexual behavior.
4. The Legitimization Stage. Once an issue has been redefined from a moral absolute to an individual choice, society starts to be reprogrammed that the arguments of the group are valid and therefore special privileges for previous “injustices” and for the affirmation of the behavior occur.*

* These stages were developed by S. Michael Craven.

We are at stage 4 and are at the eleventh hour with regard to homosexual activism and religious freedom. The homosexual activists have the ball on our ten-yard line, and it is first and goal. We can either put up a brave defensive stand, or we can let them cross the goal line unhindered. If believers choose to do nothing, there may be a day that people of faith will have to tell their children and grandchildren, “I’m sorry. I did nothing to protect your religious freedom and now it’s gone.” They will have to say to those caught in homosexual behavior and wish to escape, like John Paulk, “I’m sorry, I cannot help you.” Let us pray that we never have to face that scenario and that God’s eternal truth, as expressed through the death and resurrection of his Son, Jesus Christ, will continue to be proclaimed boldly and without apology in our land...that together on our knees the door will remain open for the gospel.

How Did We Get Here?

If we reflect on the dreadful consequences of sodomy to a state, and on the extent to which this abominable vice may be secretly carried on and spread; we cannot, on the principles of sound policy, consider the punishment as too severe. For if it once begins to prevail, not only will boys be easily corrupted by adults, but also by other boys; nor will it ever cease; more especially as it must thus soon lose all its shamefulness and infamy and become fashionable and the national taste; and then...national weakness, for which all remedies are ineffectual, most inevitably follow; not perhaps in the first generation, but certainly in the course of the third or fourth....To these evils may be added yet another, viz. that the constitutions of those men who submit to this degradation are, if not always, yet very often, totally destroyed, though in a different way from what is the result of the whoredom.

Whoever, therefore, wishes to ruin a nation, has only to get this vice introduced; for it is extremely difficult to extirpate it where it has once taken root because it can be propagated with much secrecy...and when we perceive that it has once got a footing in any country, however, powerful and flourishing, we may venture as politicians to predict that the foundation of its future decline is laid and that after some hundred years it will no longer be the same...powerful country it is at the present.

—Sir John David Michaelis, Commentaries on the Laws of Moses, 1814

In the June 2004 issue of the homosexual magazine The Advocate, the editors took a wishful look at their vision for America in the year 2054:

Evan Wolfson, director of Freedom to Marry, a national group that advocates for marriage rights for same-sex couples, predicts a scenario in which a student in a rural classroom announces during recess that he's going to marry the boy who sits next to him. There will be no punishment from the teacher or taunts from classmates. After all, the boy might have two moms who are frequently seen at parent-teacher conferences....After winning the Super Bowl, a gay quarterback could scream at TV crews, "I'm going to Disney World with my boyfriend!" The first lady could be the "first womyn"...Gay-themed TV shows, movies, and music now reserved for cable and other specialized outlets will likely be a staple of broadcast networks, multiplexes, and major labels, and no one will bat an eye at fictional portrayals of same-sex relationships.

The article quotes University of Southern California Anthropology and Gender Studies Professor Walter L. Williams: "I think we'll see more progress in the gay movement in the next 10 years than we saw in the past 50."¹

That is an alarming thought considering what has happened over the past twenty years. In 1983, 30 percent of Americans said that they knew someone who was homosexual. By 2000, that figure had skyrocketed to 73 percent. In 1985, only 40 percent of those polled said they were comfortable around individuals who practice homosexual behavior. By 2000, that number had risen to 60 percent. Also in 1985, 90 percent of Americans said they would be upset if their son or daughter announced they were homosexual. By 2000, that figure stood at just 37 percent.²

Those of us who have dealt with the issue of the homosexual agenda issue over the years often stop and ask ourselves in disbelief: How has 1 to 2 percent of the population³ achieved so much success in transforming American culture and restricting religious freedom?

* Homosexual activists often proclaim that 10 percent of the population is homosexual. The 10 percent figure is based on studies and publications by Dr. Alfred C. Kinsey. However, Dr. Kinsey's methodology was defective. He used data gathered from interviews with felons, including sex offenders; volunteers who were coached to give answers that skewed the results; and the sexual stimulation of boys ages two months to fifteen years old. (See Judith Reisman, Kinsey: Crimes & Consequences [Arlington, Va.: The Institute for Media Education, 1998]; Wardell Pomeroy, Dr. Kinsey and the Institute for Sex Research [New York: Harper & Row, 1972], 97-137.) In contrast, a 1993 report from the Alan Guttmacher Institute (part of Planned Parenthood and thus not a conservative organization) found that only 1.1 percent of 3,321 men surveyed considered themselves to be exclusively homosexual, and only 2.3 percent had engaged in sex with another man in the prior ten years (John O. G. Billy, et al, Family Planning Perspectives [Alan Guttmacher Institute, March/April 1993]). Sex in America: A Definitive Survey reported that of 3,432 respondents, "about 1.4 percent of women said they thought themselves as homosexual or bisexual and about 2.8 percent of men identified themselves in this way" (Robert T. Michael, et al. [New York: Warner Books, 1995], 176). An article published in Pediatrics likewise reported that of 34,706 adolescents surveyed (grades 7-12), 1.1 percent said they were bisexual or predominantly homosexual (Gary Remafedi, et. al., abstract, "Demography of Sexual Orientation in Adolescents," Pediatrics, Vol. 89, 1992, pp. 714-21). No survey using random sampling techniques has duplicated Kinsey's results.

The road leading to the grave threat that the homosexual agenda poses to evangelism, faith, and religious freedom did not happen overnight. It has been part of a long-term strategy implemented by radical homosexual activists to dramatically transform America's perception of homosexuality and of those who oppose homosexual behavior.

As Gene Edward Veith wrote about the tremendous gains made by the homosexual activist movement: "Homo-sexuality used to be considered a vice;

now even those it makes uncomfortable now must avow—as in a Seinfeld episode—‘not that there’s anything wrong with it,’ while those who think there is something wrong with it are considered to have the vice of intolerance.”³

What has caused such a radical shift in public attitudes toward homosexual behavior? And how did this shift happen in less than a generation?

That's how lasting social change happens—the barriers suddenly come down when nobody's looking.

—Walter Shapiro, USA Today columnist, on the success of the homosexual rights movement

The reason is a well-thought-out strategy that was devised in part by homosexual activists Marshall Kirk and Hunter Madsen and publicized in two publications: a 1987 article titled “The Overhauling of Straight America” and a 1989 book titled After the Ball.[†] When one reads both of these works, one sees how radical homosexual activists have implemented the strategy laid out in these publications almost to the letter.

[†] The following information is included in both places. The article “The Overhauling of Straight America” is found in chapter 3, “Strategy: Persuasion, Not Invasion.” In addition, Madsen used the pseudonym Erastes Pill in the article but used his real name in the book.

The homosexual activists laid out a six-point strategy to radically change America's perception of homosexual behavior. Their six points were:

1. Talk about gays and gayness as loudly and often as possible.
2. Portray gays as victims, not aggressive challengers.
3. Give homosexual protectors a “just” cause.
4. Make gays look good.
5. Make the victimizers look bad.
6. Solicit funds: the buck stops here (i.e., get corporate America and major foundations to financially support the homosexual cause).

We are going to examine all six of these points and show how each is being played out in present-day American culture.

“Talk about Gays and Gayness as Loudly and Often as Possible”

In “The Overhauling of Straight America,” Kirk and Madsen write, “The principle behind this advice is simple: almost all behavior begins to look normal if you are exposed to enough of it at close quarters and among your acquaintances.”

This principle has proven itself time and time again throughout history as inhumane and outrageous behavior have become commonplace and ordinary.

Every modern dictator has understood this principle as well.

In the past decade it has often seemed that every time you blink there is another newspaper article and another television show talking about otherwise “ordinary” individuals who practice homosexual behavior. The onslaught is relentless. This continual promotion of homosexual behavior eventually has one of two effects: (1) it convinces people that homosexual behavior is just another lifestyle, or (2) causes them to get so sick of the issue that they throw their hands up in disgust or become exhausted and then withdraw. Either way, the radical homosexual activists win, as they have either convinced people that they are “just like my fishing buddy” or make them so fed up with the issue that they can no longer stand it and just say to themselves, “I’m tired. I give up. Give them what they want so they will be quiet.”

Kirk and Madsen wrote, “The main thing is talk about gayness until the issue becomes thoroughly tiresome.” This ties into the concept of perseverance, the gradual wearing-down of people until they get to the point of total fatigue and give in on an issue. As we will see throughout this book, homosexual activists continue to hammer away time and time again until people just say, “Forget it” and then homosexuals get their way.

The activists were also very much aware that the unseemly sides of homosexual behavior—the types of sexual activity and its consequences—would have to be suppressed in order to gain acceptance. They wrote: “In the early stages of the campaign to reach straight America, the masses should not be shocked and repelled by premature exposure to homosexual behavior itself. Instead, the imagery of sex should be downplayed and gay rights should be reduced to an abstract social question as much as possible.”³ Therefore, the link between the practices of homosexual behavior and pedophilia, as well as the other dark sides of homosexual behavior, are intentionally suppressed or denied. Kirk and Madsen added: “First let the camel get his nose inside the tent—and only later his unsightly derriere!”⁴

An example of this was found in article that appeared in the February 8, 2004, San Francisco Chronicle. Reporting on the growing acceptance of homosexual behavior, Rona Marech wrote,

First, there was the term “homosexual,” then “gay” and “lesbian,” then the once-taboo “dyke” and “queer.” Now all bets are off. With the universe of gender and sexual identities expanding, a gay youth culture is emerging, acceptance of gays rising and label loyalty falling, the gay lexicon has exploded with scores of new words and blended phrases that delineate every conceivable stop on the identity spectrum—at least for this week....Someone who is “genderqueer,” for example, views the gender options as more than just male and female or doesn't fit into the binary male-female system. A “trannydyke” is a transgender person attracted to people with a more feminine gender, while a “pansexual” is attracted to people of multiple genders. A “boi” describes a boyish gay guy or a biological female with a male presentation; and “heteroflexible” refers to a straight person with a queer mindset....The list of terms—which have hotly contested definitions—goes on: “FTM” for female to make, “MTF” for male to female, “boy dyke,” “trannyboy” “trannyfag,” “multigendered,” “polygendered,” “queerboi,” “transboi,” “transguy,” “transman,” “half-dyke,” “bi-dyke,” “stud,” “stem,” “trisexual,” “omnisexual,” and “multisexual.”⁸

Carolyn Laub, of the Gay-Straight Alliance Network, added, “We in society and our generation are developing new understandings of sexual orientation and gender identities and what that means to us. We don't really have enough language to describe that; therefore, we have to create new words.”⁹

Sam Davis, founder of a group called “United Genders of the Universe,” continued: “If you're not a man or a woman, words like ‘gay’ or ‘lesbian’ don't fit you anymore. The words from just a few years ago aren't adequate to talk about who we are, where we're coming from and who we like.”¹⁰

Kirk and Madsen also knew full well that the media would play an important role in their crusade. They stated, “The average American watches over seven hours of TV daily. Those hours open up a gateway into the private world of straights, through which a Trojan Horse might be passed.”¹¹ Homosexual behavior has not only become commonplace on network television and in movies, but homosexual characters are often portrayed as the most compassionate, funny, “normal,” and “human” individuals in the show. Shows such as Queer Eye for the Straight Guy on the Bravo network now portray homosexual behavior as superior to heterosexual behavior.

The next target for Kirk and Madsen was organized religion. They wrote, “While public opinion is one primary source of mainstream values, religious authority is the other. When conservative churches condemn gays, there are only two things we can do to confound the homophobia of the true believers. First, we can use talk to muddy the moral waters. This means publicizing support for gays by more moderate churches, raising theological objections of our own about conservative interpretations of Biblical teachings, and exposing hatred and inconsistency.”¹⁰ The homosexual activists have found a more than willing ally in liberal churches, many which threw out the gospel years ago anyway. Many of these churches now seemingly exist for few purposes besides the promotion of homosexual behavior.

With regard to churches that hold fast to the biblical teaching on homosexual behavior, Kirk and Madsen said, “We can undermine the moral authority of homophobic churches by portraying them as antiquated backwaters, badly out of step with the times and with the latest findings of psychology. Against the mighty pull of institutional religion, one must set the mightier draw of science and public opinion....Such an unholy alliance has worked well against churches before, on such topics as divorce and abortion.”¹¹ Therefore, conservative Christians have been referred to in the media as “largely poor, uneducated, and easy to command.”¹²

In addition, even in traditional churches, dissenting advocates of homosexual politics are portrayed as enlightened, cutting-edge thinkers.

“Portray Gays as Victims, Not Aggressive Challengers”

Kirk and Madsen's next point, "Portray gays as victims, not as aggressive challengers," is a direct play to most Americans' basic sense of fairness and liberal guilt about anyone who claims to have been oppressed. Therefore, despite demographic statistics to the contrary,* homosexual activists have skillfully played the media like a drum to portray themselves as a victimized class in need of special protections.

* Later in the book we will present statistics to demonstrate that many individuals who practice homosexual behavior have higher incomes, more disposable income, and are more likely to travel overseas, among other things.

In addition, they have been extremely skillful at turning tragedies into opportunities to move the homosexual agenda forward and portray anyone who opposes them as "murderers" or at least sympathetic to murder. This was evident in the assassination of Harvey Milk (the first open homosexual on the San Francisco Board of Supervisors); the AIDS epidemic of the early 1980s, when homosexual activists turned a deadly disease spread primarily by homosexual behavior into a civil rights issue; and the Matthew Shepard murder, when two non-religious thugs shamefully and brutally killed a young homosexual man by hanging him on a fence to die. In this last instance, homosexual activists went on the Today show and immediately blamed the murder on conservative Christian organizations such as Focus on the Family.¹³ Dr. Dobson, the president of Focus on the Family, holds sincere religious objections to homosexual behavior but denounces violence of any kind. Instead, it was two thugs with no consciences at all who murdered Shepard. It is likely that if these two individuals had a strong relationship with Jesus Christ, Shepard would still be alive today.

Perhaps the most vicious diatribe came from Deborah Mathis who wrote in the Orlando Sentinel:

The opponents [of homosexual behavior] prefer not to acknowledge their own bigotry. Hence, the disguise—or self-delusion—of noble purpose. They insist that they mean no harm. 'Hate the sin, love the sinner' is their mantra. How tiresome. How empty. But a handy little motto it is, for sure. Thanks to it, homophobes the world over don't have to reconcile their hate that writhes in their hearts with the Christianity that rests on their sleeves. Chant it enough times, and you can feel almost sanctified....Did the antihomosexual crowd help kill Matthew Shepherd? Nor per se. But it poisoned the air, which poisoned the minds which connived to attract, deceive, and destroy a young man who deserved, in the least, to be left alone. They share in the complicity.¹⁴ *

* In Chicago, a homosexual teenager killed a Catholic woman who was trying to persuade him to change his sexual orientation. The woman, Mary Stachowicz, was found strangled and then was placed in a crawl space under the floor. Yet there was no "hue and cry" over this "hate crime" and it was barely reported in the national press. Peter LaBarbera said: "If a gay man had been murdered for trying to convince someone to be gay, it would be a national news story and be deemed a hate crime. But when a gay man murders a woman who tried to convince him to change, the media spike the story.” See Ellen Sorokin, “Some Say Gay Teen Should Face Hate Crime in Slaying,” Washington Times, November 26, 2002.

Mathis also adds that conservative Christians are like Adolf Hitler, who exterminated 6 million Jews. Perhaps she has forgotten the brave actions of Christians such as Dietrich Bonhoeffer, Titus Brandsma, and Corrie ten Boom, who stood up to Hitler and his tragic slaughter of millions. However, her column is a vivid example of how far the homosexual activists and their allies are willing to go to demonize people of faith.

Randy Thomas, a former homosexual, succinctly summed up what has happened: “As a former homosexual, when I was involved in the 1980s promoting the gay agenda, our only focus was to seek tolerance, whereas today's political activism has moved from true tolerance into political domination and power. It's an amazing thing to watch a group that said they were oppressed become oppressors.”¹⁵

“Give Homosexual Protectors a ‘Just’ Cause”

This strategy ties naturally into the almost natural inclination of people on the left side of the political spectrum to embrace any group that they become convinced has been “wronged” in the past. While there have been groups with legitimate grievances (e.g., African-Americans), radical homosexual activists have tried to piggyback on these legitimate efforts to right past wrongs to move the ball forward for their agenda. They have accomplished this through the manipulation of statistics on teen suicide, the creation of a Christian boogeyman in the Matthew Shepard tragedy, and so forth. The result is that individuals motivated by social justice issues, including some evangelicals, have felt that they need to protect practicing homosexuals from a so-called hostile society.

Another natural market for radical homosexual activists to tap in this area is Hollywood (see chap. 2 and the previous discussion in this chapter) with its liberal sensitivities and large homosexual community. Kirk and Madsen wrote, “A media campaign that casts gays as society's victims and encourages straights to be their protectors must make it easier for those who respond to assert and explain their new perspectives.”¹⁶

Just as Hollywood did much in the late 1930s to early 1940s (back when it was in more conservative hands) to convince Americans of the need to become involved in World War II, and then later in the 1960s to help support the civil rights and anti-war movements, it has adopted homosexual behavior as one of its latest causes. Therefore, as we will see later, homosexuals are almost always innocent—the hero who needs protection in films, television, etc.—while those who oppose them are either boorish or religious fanatics.

But homosexual activists are finding resistance from groups, such as African Americans who had legitimate civil rights grievances, to their efforts to piggyback homosexual behavior on the decades-long struggle by blacks for equal rights. Star Parker, a conservative black activist, writes,

The gay front would like to be viewed as the latest chapter of the civil rights movement. According to their reasoning, gays are America's newest oppressed minority, seeking fairness, justice, and the right to pursue happiness in the same manner as other social groups in this country. Homosexuals today feel they are fighting the same battle that blacks fought 40 years ago. But, in fact, the gay movement is the civil rights movement turned on its head....The civil rights movement of the 1960s was about living up and applying our principles, not re-writing or reinventing them. There was no tradition on which this country was founded that Dr. King challenged. It was upon those very traditions that he made his challenge and claim....In a fashion quite the opposite of Dr. King—who challenged an unjust nation to return to its principles and traditions from which it had strayed—gay political operatives work to re-write our traditions to suit their own proclivities. They say their struggle is about equality, but it's really about the exercise of political power and claims for entitlement.¹⁷

Even liberal African-American civil rights activists like Jesse Jackson refute the claim by homosexual activists that they have legitimate civil rights concerns. When asked about the “right” of homosexuals to “marry,” Jackson said that there was no comparison with the legitimate civil rights struggles of black Americans. Jackson commented: “The comparison with slavery is a stretch in that some slave masters were gay, in that gays were never called three-fifths human in the Constitution, and in that they did not require the Voting Rights Act to have the right to vote.”¹⁸

“Make Gays Look Good” and “Make the Victimizers Look Bad”

This manifests itself in many ways: from rewriting history to convince people that many famous individuals were homosexual to the sympathetic portrayal of homosexuals in the media. The other part of this strategy, according to Kirk and Madsen, is to “make the victimizers look bad.” Kirk and Madsen wrote, “We intend to make the anti-gays look so nasty that average Americans will want to disassociate themselves from such types.”¹⁹

Unfortunately, some individuals have played right into the hands of radical homosexual activists in helping them bludgeon the Christian community on the homosexual issue. In the introduction, we mentioned Fred Phelps and his followers who go around the country with signs that read “God Hates Fags,” picket funerals of AIDS victims, and host a Web site showing homosexuals being thrown into the fire of hell. Others have used less than ideal discernment in discussing the homosexual issue in the media. By not practicing Christ-like speech, sincere Christians have often been their own worst enemy in assisting radical homosexual activists move their agenda forward, especially when they are looking for the absolutely worst-case examples to prop up as representatives of orthodox and evangelical, Bible-believing Christians.

This is why the behavior of people of faith must always be above reproach. When Christians speak out against homosexual behavior with unconfessed sins in our own closets, we only validate the mindset that Christians are hypocrites who cannot remove the planks in our own eyes.* When believers use less than Christ-like speech, we give credence to arguments of homosexual activists that we are less than compassionate, to put it nicely.

* See Matthew 7:3-5.

None of this means that people of faith should avoid the truth, even unpleasant truth, but we must speak the truth in love.†

† See 1 Corinthians 6:9-10; Romans 1:24-28; Leviticus 18:22; Psalm 24:3-4.

Anyone who has followed the agenda of the radical homosexual activists for the past ten to fifteen years can see how they have been successful in virtually every area mentioned by Kirk and Madsen. In subsequent chapters in this book, we will describe how each area of this agenda has been implemented in the media, in public schools, the church, and every other aspect of contemporary American life.

In addition, despite the claims that “we are everywhere,” a survey of the 2000 census data found that more than one-quarter of same-sex households were concentrated in five urban areas (listed with the percentage of residents who state they are homosexual): New York City: 8.9%, Los Angeles: 6.6%, San Francisco: 4.9%, Washington, D.C.: 3.3%, and Chicago: 3.1%.²⁰*

* The same Census report stated the cities with the highest concentration of same-sex households in proportion to all households in a metropolitan area were as follows: San Francisco, California; Santa Fe, New Mexico; Portland, Maine; Burlington, Vermont; Seattle, Washington; Miami, Florida; and Austin, Texas.

“Solicit Funds: The Buck Stops Here”

The other method used by homosexual activists is to falsely accuse the other side of having billions of dollars in resources while they are struggling to put food on the table. Nothing could be further from the truth. Homosexual activist groups are backed by millions of dollars, including generous grants from numerous corporations.† This ties into their final strategy: “Solicit funds: the buck stops here.”

† The Ford Foundation, for example, has provided grants to the pro-homosexual Gill Foundation, the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force, International Gay and Lesbian Human Rights Commission, National Gay and Lesbian Task Force Policy Institute, and the Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund, which actively lobbies for same-sex marriage.

An example of how homosexual activists use money to advance their agenda is illustrated through the work of the Gill Foundation, which has $255 million in assets, in Colorado.²¹ Started by Quark software founder Tim Gill (an open homosexual) in response to the state’s passage of Amendment 2, which would have barred special rights and privileges for homosexual behavior, the foundation alone has poured at least $800,000 into the Colorado Springs area, home of several conservative religious organizations, including Focus on the

Family.²²

The Gill Foundation has provided an additional $3.4 million in grants to promote the homosexual agenda through its subsidiary, the Gay and Lesbian Fund for Colorado, to groups such as the Easter Seals, the American Lung Association, the Urban League, and the Girl Scouts. The money comes with strings, however. Each organization that accepts a Gill Foundation grant must agree to add homosexual behavior to its anti-discrimination policies and publicly credit the fund in its materials. More than $9 million of the foundation's money has gone directly to groups such as the Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund, which lobbies for same-sex marriage.²³ In 2001, the foundation gave $18.5 million in donations to homosexual organizations and causes.²⁴

Will Perkins, who helped spearhead Amendment 2, says, “What the Gill Foundation is attempting to do—and they’re quite successful at it—is to buy legitimacy for the homosexual lifestyle. They’ve put a lot of money in the Springs area, and part of the deal is to neutralize public opinion on homosexual behavior, and it’s been working.”²⁵

The result has been that in Colorado Springs now a majority of its city council members are sympathetic to homosexual behavior, going so far as to proclaim a gay pride week in a city that is home to headquarters or regional offices for more than seventy-two Christian ministries.²⁶ In November 2002, the Colorado Springs City Council voted to grant same-sex partners tax-funded health-care benefits. The transformation from “ground zero” of “hate” (as radical homosexual activists called it after the passage of Amendment 2) to funding the homosexual agenda was complete. And, with the exception of Focus on the Family, the response from the other 70+ Christian ministries in town was deafeningly silent.²⁷

The American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) has wholeheartedly embraced the homosexual agenda and appointed as its new executive director in 2001 Anthony Romero, who is an openly homosexual person with a record of activism.²⁸ The ACLU boasts of 400,000 members and more than 1,000 volunteer and 60 staff attorneys.²⁹ Its various components have a $45 million budget, a $50 million endowment fund,³⁰ which includes a $7 million grant from the Ford Foundation,³¹ and three hundred chapters nationwide.³² The Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund, which advocates same-sex marriage and has been the leader in the attack against the Boy Scouts (see chap. 8) for its policy regarding homosexual scoutmasters, boasts of corporate support from IBM and United Airlines.³³ The Human Rights Campaign, which actively lobbies for and provides direct financial support to political candidates sympathetic to the homosexual agenda, lists American Airlines and Subaru as corporate sponsors.³⁴

The Gill Foundation has assets of more than $165 million.³⁵ The budget of the Human Rights Campaign has more than tripled in six short years.³⁶ David Bohnott, a venture capitalist who developed the GeoCities Web site, gave about

$2 million to the Human Rights Campaign,³⁷ and Karen Levinson, founder of E-Trade, has donated $500,000 to pro-homosexual groups.³⁸

Meanwhile, many Christian organizations are finding themselves in a time of financial retrenchment, and the one organization in the state of Arizona lobbying for family values finds itself always scrambling to find the cash just to keep the doors open. While homosexual activists say they are not the aggressive challengers, the fact is that they are the aggressive, well-financed challengers.

Eric Pollard, the founder of ACT-UP (a militant homosexual group) openly admitted that lying was part of the strategy of homosexual activists. He even said that Adolf Hitler's Mein Kampf was the model used for their strategy.³⁹ It is a strategy of lies and intimidation. Consider the following excerpts from Hitler's work:

[T]he magnitude of a lie always contains a certain factor of credibility, since the great masses of the people in the very bottom of their hearts tend to be corrupted rather than consciously and purposely evil, and that, therefore, in view of the primitive simplicity of their minds, they more easily fall a victim to a big lie than to a little one, since they themselves lie in little things, but would be ashamed of lies that were too big....⁴⁰

[S]omething of even the most insolent lie will always remain and stick—a fact which all the great lie-virtuosi and lying-clubs in this world know only too well and also make the most treacherous use of....⁴¹

[B]y clever and persevering use of propaganda even heaven can be represented as hell to the people, and conversely the most wretched life as paradise.⁴²

When you read these quotations, coupled with the strategy outlined by Kirk, Madsen, and others to transform American culture to accept homosexual behavior and condemn those who hold sincere religious objections to such behavior, it might be said that activists have followed a strategy akin to what Hitler used back in the 1920s and 1930s to take over Germany. In fact, Kirk and Madsen, in the book After the Ball, which fleshed out the strategy discussed in “The Overhauling of Straight America,” said regarding advertisements that would place homosexuals in a positive light: “It makes no difference that the ads [portraying homosexuals as icons of normality] are lies, not to us...not to bigots.”⁴³

Much of the homosexual agenda has been based on deception. For example, while several studies throughout the past ten years have placed the percentage of homosexuals at no higher than 1 to 2 percent, homosexual groups and their allies continue to cite the now-discredited figure of 10 percent when it comes to estimating the percentage of homosexuals in America. Yet, despite research to the contrary, homosexual activists continue to push the 10 percent figure, or even greater numbers, and government entities and the media seldom, if ever, question the inaccuracy of the puffed-up statistic.

Kirk and Madsen also added that they knew that they would have to wage a war of propaganda, just as Hitler did so masterfully in Nazi Germany, to get the American public on their side. Here is a direct quote from After the Ball: “We have in mind a strategy as calculated and powerful as that which gays are accused of pursuing by their enemies—or, if you prefer, a plan as manipulative as that which our enemies themselves employ. It’s time to learn from Madison Avenue, to roll out the big guns. Gays must launch a large-scale campaign—we’ve called it the Waging Peace campaign—to reach straights through the mainstream media. WE’RE TALKING ABOUT PROPAGANDA”⁴⁴ [emphasis added].

Kirk and Madsen continue: “Even when it sticks to the facts, propaganda can be unabashedly subjective and one-sided. There is nothing necessarily wrong with this. Propaganda tells its own side of the story as moving (and credibly) as possible, since it can count on its enemies to tell the other side with a vengeance [another reminder to us about using Christ-like speech to help our credibility]. In its battle for hearts and minds, effective propaganda knows enough to put its best foot forward. This is what our media campaign must do.”⁴⁵

In the chapters following, we will see how the homosexual activists have successfully implemented Kirk and Madsen’s propaganda campaign in the media, the public schools, the medical profession, corporate America, the workplace, and most of all, the church. In fact, the activists have followed this plan to the letter. They have achieved the goals they set out in the late eighties through careful coordination and relentless effort. As a result, the very future of our nation is at risk if the homosexual agenda continues to advance unchecked.

That's Entertainment?

A Martian gathering evidence about American society, simply by monitoring our television, would certainly assume that there were more gay people in America than there are evangelical Christians.

—Michael Medved

Will & Grace is one of the highest rated comedies on network television. It has won a slew of Emmy awards and is part of NBC's "Must See TV" promotion on Thursday nights, following in the footsteps of such classic shows as The Cosby Show and Family Ties.

It is also the most upfront show on network television in regard to the promotion of homosexual behavior. In fact, the stars of Will & Grace even got involved politically, cutting an advertisement in 2000 urging California voters to oppose Proposition 22, which stated that California would only recognize marriages between one man and one woman. The star, Eric McCormick, who plays the openly homosexual Will, stated the intentions of the producers early on. He said, "I would love to get to the point where grandmothers in Kansas are saying, 'I just hope that Will finds a nice man.' We're not a political show, but that would be a real coup."¹

In one particularly egregious episode of the show, John and Anne Paulk are mercilessly mocked. When one of the lead characters attends a meeting of ex-homosexuals, he meets the leader of the group who talks about how they are all going to be restored to "righteousness." After incessant taunting by the homosexual character, all the ex-homosexuals in the room return to homosexual behavior, and the leader does as well, accepting a date with the homosexual.

After this show aired, Mike Haley, a former homosexual who works at Focus on the Family, sent the following letter to Jon Kinnally, the executive story editor of Will & Grace:

Dear Mr. Kinnally:

I am writing to request a meeting with you regarding a recent episode of Will & Grace. The show in question grossly misrepresented thousands of individuals struggling to come out of homosexuality. As a former gay man, and now a national spokesman and expert on homosexuality and youth issues for Focus on the Family—one of the country's largest organizations, who, among other things, assists gays and lesbians who desire to be heterosexual—I know first-hand how frustrating and painful it is to be mocked by those who haven't taken the time to find out what the process is all about. I'm specifically talking about references in the show to former homosexuals, and those wrestling with their sexual identity, as "freaks," "selfloathing closet cases," "morally wrong," and as members of "cults." Nowhere in this episode are we portrayed as honest men and women seeking help.

You may vehemently disagree with this position, but I'd at least like the opportunity to sit down and talk to you about it. Our conversation may not change your mind about the possibility of coming out of homosexuality, but at the very least it will put a real face behind the caricature you depicted on prime-time TV. And in the end, hopefully it will encourage you to think twice before ridiculing the belief systems of those who differ from you. With that in mind, please respectfully consider my request.

The last thing Mike received was respect, based on the reply on Will & Grace letterhead he received:

Dear Mr. Haley:

I received your letter dated June 9, and was very interested in your point of view. The issues you raised are the very same ones that we on the Will & Grace writing staff debate on a daily basis. Our decision to present the story on the ex-gay ministry was solely in the interest of creating the most comedic episode possible. And it was certainly not our intention to offend you in any way. But come on, Mike, even you've got to admit that fags trying to pretend they're straight is pretty funny.

In response to your request for a meeting, well, I think I can read between the lines on that one. I'm about 6'1", brown hair, green eyes, and I'm into rollerblading, baking cookies, and cleaning up afterwards. My dislikes include game-playing, negative attitudes, and condoms.

If any of this interests you, I can be found every Sunday at the Brunch and Beer Bust at the Motherlode in West Hollywood. I do hope you show, because like you, I am an expert on homosexuality, and in my expert opinion, this "hard-to-get thing" you're playing is Hot, Hot, Hot!²

Mike had written a serious and thoughtful letter and was treated with a mocking sexual proposition in reply. This response shows not only the hostility of homosexual activists in the entertainment industry to traditional values and those who have overcome homosexual behavior, but also the general tone in the entertainment media to anyone who objects to homosexual behavior. What was communicated to Mike in a letter is what is communicated on the small screen every week.

Will & Grace is an example of Kirk and Madsen's stated strategy to use the media to help desensitize Americans to homosexual behavior.* Perhaps nowhere else has the homosexual activist movement had more success than in gaining control of the entertainment media to promote its agenda.

* In 2003, shows such as Queer Eye for the Straight Guy and It's All Relative made their debuts on cable and network television. Both of these shows portrayed homosexuals in a positive light while ridiculing heterosexuals or people with religious beliefs that do not affirm homosexual behavior. An episode of ESPN's Playmakers about a homosexual football player ended with a recitation of the Twenty-third Psalm in support of his behavior.

For example, alarming statistics are coming to the forefront that document the role that the media has played in the growing acceptance of homosexual behavior and its effect on American society.

Using data from the National Opinion Research Center at the University of Chicago, the study showed that in 1988, 74.9 percent of respondents said that sex between two people of the same sex is always wrong. By 1998, that number had dropped to 54.6 percent. The number of women who said they had had a sexual encounter with another woman rose from 0.2 percent to 2.8 percent, while the percentages of men having a sexual encounter with another man rose from 1.7 percent to 4.1 percent.^{3 †}

† A "sexual encounter" does not mean the person engaging in the act was a "homosexual," nor did many of those who had an encounter repeatedly replicate the behavior.

Amy Butler, a professor at the University of Iowa, explained some of the reasons why the increase in homosexual behavior had occurred: "Declining social, legal, and economic sanctions against same-gender sexual behavior in recent years and more positive images of gay men and women in the media may have made it easier for people to recognize their same-gender sexual interest and act upon it."⁴ The Associated Press report on the study added: "Whether more positive media portrayals play a role in the increasing reports of homosexual activity is hard to determine, Butler said. For certain, the media wouldn't put shows on television or produce movies that portray gay lifestyles if the public wasn't willing to accept it, she said. Her study says the way gays and lesbians appear in the media may make some people more comfortable with their homosexual impulses."

For many young people, the open promotion of homosexual behavior in the media and the classroom, along with the breakdown of the traditional family, has led to their "coming out" at younger and younger ages.*

* A new teenage lesbian pop duo named Tatu recently reached the top of England's pop charts and have closed in on the American Top 20. They strip and kiss between songs and dress in revealing school girl outfits. Their "discoverer," a Russian psychologist named Ivan Shapovalov, says: "All our inspiration is from childhood. Why should this be hidden?...They are two teenagers singing about love." Shapovalov then accused those who have spoken out about the group and its lesbian pedophile image as "prudes." See Sabrina Tavernise, "A Bubblegum Duo Sets Off Squeals and Squirms," New York Times, March 4, 2003.

Not a New Phenomenon

We would be incorrect if we stated that homosexual behavior was a fairly recent phenomenon in Hollywood.

Hollywood has long had a large homosexual contingent, and, as a result, many there have had a natural sympathy for the homosexual cause. That is why you see old-time Hollywood stars such as Elizabeth Taylor and Debbie Reynolds support radical homosexual organizations.⁶ Taylor has said, “Without homosexuals there would be no Hollywood, no theater and no arts.”⁷ †

† At least one veteran Hollywood star has had the courage to stand up to Hollywood's liberal agenda. Actress Jane Russell said at a recent national conference that she was tired of Christian conservatives being labeled intolerant when they stand up for their beliefs. “The Lord put this country together or we wouldn't be like we are,” Russell said. See Marc Morano, “Hollywood Actress Declares Herself ‘Right-Wing Christian Bigot,’” CNSNews.com, February 3, 2003.

It is well known that some of the most famous writers, directors, and other creative talent from Hollywood's so-called golden era engaged in homosexual behavior. However, these facts were well concealed from the general public who would have heartily disapproved. Ramon Navarro, the star of the silent version of Ben Hur was a practicing homosexual.⁸ William Haines, another star of the late twenties and early thirties, publicly disclosed his homosexual behavior, and it immediately ended his career⁹ (back in the days when homosexual behavior was frowned upon by the general public). Greta Garbo was a notorious bisexual, equally promiscuous with both men and women.¹⁰ Montgomery Clift¹¹ and Rock Hudson,¹² screen icons of the 1950s, practiced homosexual behavior.

George Cukor, director of such films as A Star Is Born, The Women, and The Philadelphia Story, was one of the first publicly acknowledged homosexuals in Hollywood. He was the so-called women's director because of his gentle, feminine ways.¹³ Clark Gable asked for Cukor's removal from the set of Gone With the Wind because of his personal discomfort with Cukor's homosexuality and had him replaced with the vigorously heterosexual Victor Fleming.¹⁴ Today, Gable (the biggest star of his era) would be labeled a homophobe and blacklisted from Hollywood because of his actions. In fact, in perhaps a belated attempt to extract some revenge from the “King,” as he was called, radical homosexual activists now claim that Gable was bisexual,¹⁵ despite the numerous stories told by Joan Crawford, Loretta Young, and many other of his leading ladies about his very virile heterosexuality. The King must be rolling in his grave.

Besides Gable, other Hollywood icons, such as Cary Grant, have seen their lives rewritten by radical homosexual activists, despite long histories of heterosexual behavior.¹⁶

Despite the prevalence of homosexual behavior (as well as promiscuous heterosexual behavior) in Hollywood's history, the golden age was a different era. Homosexual behavior was not openly promoted on screen, and when it was implied, it was done so in a humorous fashion. There were stereotypical homosexual characters in movies, most notably Edward Everett Horton's fussy characters in the Fred Astaire/Ginger Rogers musicals The Gay Divorcee, Top Hat, and Shall We Dance (Horton himself was a well-known homosexual in Hollywood).¹⁷ Franklin Pangborn's cowardly actions in W. C. Fields' films and Gus Schilling's effeminate male secretary in the Astaire/Rita Hayworth film You Were Never Lovelier are more examples.

However, these characters tended to be comic relief, and their behavior was implied, not openly promoted as a viable alternative to heterosexuality or as something to be admired and followed. They were portrayed much like a dotty old aunt whose eccentric behavior is to be winked at.

While many cultural observers point to the 1990s as the time when the portrayal of active homosexuals came "out of the closet," so to speak, it was in the late 1960s that a significant shift started to happen in Hollywood's portrayal of homosexual behavior.

In 1967, the movie Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?, starring Richard Burton and Elizabeth Taylor, was released. Written by the homosexual playwright Edward Albee, it trashed traditional marriage as it portrayed a warring couple who had nothing but the most absolute contempt for each other. It went on to win Best Picture that year.

* Alan has debated Albee on a program that aired on PBS where Albee expanded his attack on traditional marriage to include support for pornography (even including taxpayer funded support for it).

In the same year, Norman Lear, who later created and produced All in the Family, released Divorce American Style, with Dick Van Dyke and Debbie Reynolds, which also openly mocked the institution of marriage. The door had been opened to the weakening of marriage in the mass media and the exaltation of alternative lifestyles. Once marriage was attacked, other sexual behaviors, such as premarital and homosexual sex, were not only seen and promoted as viable options but as more desirable than the institution that God had intended for mankind. The Pandora's box had been opened.

Homosexual Behavior on Network Television

In 1971, the CBS television network, in an attempt to appeal to young, urban viewers with disposable incomes, purged its schedule of such light-humored shows as The Beverly Hillbillies, Green Acres, Hogan's Heroes, Petticoat Junction, and The Andy Griffith Show. These fairly conservative and generally family-friendly shows were replaced by the loud, raucous, in-your-face liberalism of Norman Lear's All in the Family and Maude and the elite contempt for authority sensibilities of Larry Gelbart's *M*A*S*H*.

(The movie *M*A*S*H* was not the first but was definitely the most blatant film to that date to openly ridicule Christianity in its portrayal of Frank Burns as a Bible-reading, adulterous hypocrite. In one scene he is reading the Twenty-third Psalm, and his tentmates make demeaning and obscene comments about the Bible and his faith. The television program started down this road in the first two seasons but eventually painted religious faith in a more positive manner in the character of Father Mulcahy as long as his faith was liberal and did not suggest moral absolutes.)

† The attacks by Hollywood on Christians started in earnest in 1960 with the release of Elmer Gantry and Inherit the Wind. Christians were portrayed as either corrupt or ignorant buffoons.

Part of this new “hipness” was the sexualization of network comedy, until everything seemingly became a joke about sex. Much of this new emphasis came from an influx of homosexual writers and directors. However, it would be erroneous to say that it took until the 1990s for this new direction to be used to promote homosexual behavior on network television.

In an early episode of All in the Family, the “enlightened” liberal characters invite a seemingly stereotypical homosexual friend over to the Bunker house for dinner with the conservative and bigoted Archie. Archie immediately engages in the type of behavior that would be described today as “homophobic.” The friend is straight, of course, and Archie ends up with egg on his face. Later on, Archie retreats to his neighborhood bar to be with “real men,” one of whom is a tough-as-nails former football player and a “man’s man” Archie admires. As the episode unfolds, Archie eventually realizes that this man’s man practices homosexual behavior, and he is forced to rethink his stereotype of homosexuals.¹⁸

A 1977 episode dealt with the death of Edith’s lesbian cousin and the issues surrounding the leaving of her estate to her lover.¹⁹ Another episode featured the “hate crime” murder at Christmas time of a transvestite whom the Bunkers had come to know, shaking Edith’s faith in God.²⁰

In 1974, the TV show *M*A*S*H* aired an episode titled “George,” which served as a precursor to the attempt to allow individuals who engage in homosexual behavior to serve openly in the armed forces. George arrives at the 4077th *M*A*S*H* hospital badly bruised and cut up. Both Hawkeye and Trapper John, the two liberal doctors, suspect that they are not normal war wounds and that the guys beat him up in his platoon for being “different” (i.e., homosexual). Of course, the conservative, hypocritical Frank Burns figures out George’s secret and attempts to have him drummed out of the military. Hawkeye and Trapper John then dig up a secret on Frank (he cheated on his medical exams) and blackmail him to allow George to continue to serve, otherwise they will air Frank’s dirty laundry and get him thrown out of the military on a dishonorable discharge. George is painted in the most sympathetic of lights, while Frank is shown to be narrowminded, hypocritical, and bigoted.²¹

In the late '70s, in an attempt to catch up with the new direction launched by CBS, the ABC television network aired the then controversial program Soap, which was filled with sexual humor. It also introduced the first openly homosexual regular character on network television, Jodie Dallas, portrayed by comedian Billy Crystal, and America met his “boyfriend.”²²

While most media observers cite Ellen as the first show to feature an openly homosexual leading character, they are in error. In 1981, NBC aired Love, Sydney starring Tony Randall as an openly homosexual commercial artist. His sexuality was played down after initial public backlash and was only brought back into story lines when the program was on its last legs.²³

In 1983, in the first season of Cheers on NBC, an episode ran that featured a group of homosexuals who start frequenting the bar, much to the discomfort and alarm of the “regulars.” At first, the regulars will have nothing to do with the homosexuals and force them to sit in a secluded area of the bar. However, Diane, the enlightened barmaid, takes up the cause of the homosexual characters and eventually shows the regulars how ridiculous their behavior is. The episode ends with the homosexual and heterosexual characters embracing each other and joining together for a round of drinks.²⁴

There is a definite link here. All the shows mentioned above were comedies. Homosexual activists have noticed very astutely that the use of humor is a primary vehicle to help them reach their goal of cultural acceptance. Humor had been used by the entertainment industry in the past to stir up anti-war sentiment (the Marx Brothers' Duck Soup, *M*A*S*H*, Dr. Strangelove) and to promote feminism (Nine to Five) and cross-dressing (Some Like It Hot and Tootsie).

Homosexual producers and directors readily admit that humor is their best weapon to soften up the American public for the future promotion of their agenda. If you can get people to laugh about something, you are then on the way to convincing them to accept the behavior as normal. Thus, the portrayal of homosexual behavior gradually moved into prime-time dramas, such as ABC's thirty-something, the first show to portray two men in bed together.

For many years, the number-one prime-time comedy was Friends, a show about oversexed heterosexuals, which was produced by an open homosexual. In one episode, the ex-wife of one of the heterosexual leads marries her lesbian lover in a ceremony officiated by Newt Gingrich's lesbian sister, Candice.* A pointed political statement is made in the midst of all the laughter.

* Newt Gingrich is the former Speaker of the House of Representatives and a Republican.

When homosexual activists and their allies cannot use overt means to promote homosexual behavior, they often resort to so-called “camp humor” with the underlying homosexual themes. In the early 1980s, Alan saw firsthand homosexual “camp humor” as he prosecuted hard core obscenity cases in federal court.

For instance, in one case, one of the materials purchased from the defendants (who at the time controlled the largest distribution network for hard core pornography in the world) was a graphic series of illustrations of homosexual sexual behavior of every type imaginable (and beyond Alan's imagination). These illustrations were accompanied with violent imagery of beating, stomping, and kicking of a very young-looking man or teenager by an older, more powerful man dressed in black leather. The subsequent depictions of bruising and serious injury ended with the victim being abandoned naked and unconscious in a forest.

The professional obscenity defense lawyers, who had been assembled from across the nation to, in their words, “defend the First Amendment,” called an expert witness. This individual was a professor from Johns Hopkins University and was called to prove a claim by the defense that such violent material was not obscene, could not be interpreted as obscene, and, in fact, was high comedy.

Under oath, and with a straight face, the professor went through one graphic depiction of sex and violence after another, explaining that the depictions were nothing more than homosexual “camp humor.” He explained in detail how everyone in the enlightened homosexual community who saw this material would laugh and wink because to them it was an “inside joke” that would leave “ignorant straights” puzzled. The “straights” would then stupidly think that it was actually a dirty depiction of men fighting and engaging in sodomy.

The grinning Ph.D. went on to explain to the jury that homosexuals throughout the entertainment industry love to have fun with “straight ignorance” by inserting homosexual “inside jokes” into scripts and visual imagery (such as having a homosexual man play the lead romantic role with a female). Thus, the homosexuals in the entertainment industry and their friends would see and understand these “jokes” and laugh while foolish “straights” who oppose homosexual behavior ignorantly watch, pay for, and share with their children the inside jokes.

What the professor could not explain, of course, was the impact of viewing such violent sex material by those who weren't in on the so-called “joke,” or insiders to “campiness,” such as the young boys, who are the largest consumers of hard-core pornography.*

* The case resulted in a 11–1 hung jury. Before the retrial, the defendants pled guilty to federal felony charges, admitting that the “humorous” material was legally obscene). See the Final Report of the Attorney General's Commission on Pornography for more information.

As we stated earlier in the introduction, Alan learned later of the lack of respect and the total disgust within the pornographic production community for those who practice homosexual behavior. These peddlers of human flesh would greatly exploit their weaknesses for profit. Alan believes that those who produce and sell obscene material have their own form of “camp humor”—the taking of millions of dollars from persons caught up in homosexual behavior (who the pornographers hate) through the production of ever more effective, more arousing materials and opportunities to financially exploit homosexual sexual desires.²⁵

But let's get back to the idea that making people laugh about homosexual behavior leads to desensitization toward homosexual behavior.

Given the theory that making people laugh about homosexual behavior leads to desensitization, is it any wonder that the boldest pro-homosexual move by Hollywood happened with Ellen DeGeneres, a comedian on her program Ellen?

Ellen had floundered for several years, never really being a hit. Ellen DeGeneres's sexuality was one of the worst-kept secrets in Hollywood.²⁶ To help spike the ratings of the program, ABC ran a season-long tease through promotional announcements and trial balloons in major news publications about the character of Ellen coming out. Finally, in the May sweeps, the so-called “puppy” episode was aired, which unveiled Ellen's lesbianism, with the help of several major Hollywood stars.²⁷ The character of Ellen's coming out was coupled with Ellen DeGeneres's own public announcement on the cover of Time magazine, which read simply, “Yep, I'm Gay.”²⁸

After high ratings, especially in urban areas with large homosexual populations, for the coming-out episode, Ellen quickly sank lower in the ratings than it was before, as it became a soapbox for the promotion of lesbian behavior. In one episode, Ellen expresses her love for her “girlfriend” and gets on one knee and proposes to her.²⁹ Even in 1998, that was a little too much for America to take. Still, Hollywood refused to acknowledge that the show's demise could have been blamed on its promotion of lesbian behavior and instead insisted that it was “too preachy.”³⁰

Despite the failure of Ellen, along with other notable duds featuring other stars playing homosexual characters,³¹ network television continues to relentlessly push the homosexual agenda. In fact, only one network show, Will & Grace, that promotes homosexual behavior, has been a hit. The Gay and Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation (GLAAD) now claims that there are more than thirty prime-time television characters who are openly homosexual.³² It also claims to “control” Hollywood, having full script approval over the portrayal of homosexual behavior.³³ The result is that homosexual characters are often depicted as the most likable and emotionally healthy characters on prime-time television. This is done deliberately in order to normalize homosexual behavior to Americans. Michael Medved stated, “We're in the Sydney Poitier stage of ‘gay’ characters....[I]n the 1950s, 60s, and early 70s, every major black character was upright and honorable and likely portrayed by Poitier....[T] here's such eagerness in the gay community for a sort of compensatory treatment, that every character you meet that's gay is going to be likeable.”³⁴ He added, “A Martian gathering evidence about American society, simply by monitoring our television, would certainly assume that there were more gay people in America than there are evangelical Christians.”³⁵

Graphic Portrayal

The latest salvo in the relentless promotion of homosexual behavior on network and cable television is the introduction of “transgendered” characters. The since-canceled CBS show The Education of Max Bickford, starring Oscar winner Richard Dreyfuss, introduced a character named Steve who undergoes a sex-change operation and becomes Erica.

GLAAD, which monitors homosexual portrayals like hawks, sent a letter to the media outlining a list of do's and don'ts for writing about the character of Erica (portrayed by actress Helen Shaver). The letter suggested:

- Do use female pronouns when referring to Erica.
- Don't use quotation marks around [the words] female, woman, Erica, or female pronouns when referring to Helen Shaver's character.

Included in the packet of material the media received was a list of “problematic terminology” such as “she-male,” “he-she,” “trannie,” “tranny,” and “gender-bender.” Instead, the letter stated that “transition” should be used instead of “sex change” and “intersex person” instead of “hermaphrodite.”

GLAAD spokesman Scott Seomin proudly said that the organization had done a similar mailing to the media after Hillary Swank was nominated for an Oscar for playing a girl who makes herself into a boy in Boys Don't Cry. (Swank won the Oscar and gave an acceptance speech promoting transgender rights).³⁶

Could you imagine the uproar that might happen if the Southern Baptist Convention sent out a letter to the media stating that they should not use the words fundamentalist, bigot, Bible thumper, or intolerant to describe evangelical Christians? The howls of censorship would be heard from coast to coast, but that illustrates the control radical homosexual activists have over Hollywood.

The promotion of homosexual, bisexual, and “transgendered” characters has become so universal on network and cable television that even pro-homosexual members of the media get confused. Consider these comments from Matthew Gilbert of the Boston Globe:

Claire Fisher is straight—or is she? As season four of [HBO's] Six Feet Under unfolds, the show's caustic art student is fanning her flames for a slamming lesbian poet named Edie. Meanwhile, Claire's terminally bummed exboyfriend, Russell, is chasing after her, despite his gay tryst with their bombastic professor, Olivier....

Talk about switch-hitting. These days, it's getting harder to hang sexual orientation labels on TV characters. ...Writers on Queer as Folk, The L Word, and Nip/Tuck have been boldly creating men and women who fall somewhere between the extremes of the Kinsey scale—exclusively homosexual or exclusively heterosexual. ...The blurring of the lines of sexual orientation is a step beyond “Gay TV”. ...The sexually indefinite characters aren't closeted gays and lesbians, running from their true selves, struggling to accept the inevitable. They're more curious-seeking than that, and less tortured. They're “questioning,” as a number of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, and Transgender organizations have put it. Yep, TV is beginning to include the LGBT and Q community in its electronic embrace.³⁷

Another method used to promote homosexual behavior is to get two attractive heterosexual actresses to lock lips, especially in movies and TV shows geared to teenagers. We have been treated to Sarah Michelle Gellar (Buffy the Vampire Slayer) and an attractive female exchanging a passionate kiss in the teen sex movie Cruel Intentions,³⁸ Jennifer Aniston and Winona Ryder engaging in a prolonged kiss on Friends,³⁹ and Calista Flockhart kissing another female character on Ally McBeal.⁴⁰ If two seemingly “with-it,” glamorous, sexy women engage in lesbian behavior, it is then demystified and not seen as odd or relegated to those who would be considered less than physically attractive.

And the trend is moving into so-called “family friendly” programming. Several years ago, the WB Network launched The Gilmore Girls as a so-called “wholesome” program in response to the concern of many advertisers about the ever-rising amount of sex and violence on television. The New York Post reported in April 2004, “It’s not television’s first lesbian kiss, but it ranks with the most shocking. ...The WB cures fan’s spring fever with a Sapphic smooch between...over-achieving star Rory and her roommate Paris.” The article goes on to state that the two girls go to Florida for a spring break and a dance party, and “the butch Paris plants one on her demurring pal.”⁴¹

Once you get past network television, all boundaries quickly disappear. On the Showtime pay network, the first episode of the show Queer as Folk depicted a thirty-year-old homosexual man having sex with a seventeen-year-old boy.⁴² Showtime also added a series promoting lesbianism called The L Word. Lifetime bills itself as the “women’s network” but repeatedly airs programs that promote lesbian behavior and alternative families.⁴³

Noggin, a cable channel owned by media conglomerate Viacom (which also owns CBS, MTV, Nickelodeon, and other networks), beamed a Canadian drama, Degrassi: The Next Generation into American homes. The drama featured two male homosexual teens “falling in love” with each other. Actor John Breger, age eighteen, who plays one of the homosexual teens, said, “People grow up now with the idea of coming out and stuff like that. It’s not such a surprise when they do. Our generation is growing up seeing it happen.”⁴⁴

The March 29, 2004, edition of the Wall Street Journal announced the intention of Viacom, Inc., chairman and chief executive Summer Redstone to launch an “all-gay” cable network. The Journal reported, “Viacom’s renewed interest comes amid a surge in popularity of gay characters and gay-themed shows on television in the past few years. ...The gay audience is an increasingly attractive one for advertisers [more on this later], spending nearly $500 billion a year, according to Prime Access, Inc., a gay and lesbian advertising and marketing agency in New York. Average U.S. income is 8 percent higher in gay households than straight ones, according to Forrester Research, Inc.”

The article continues about the possible skepticism by homosexuals of a “watered down” network that would appeal to heterosexuals as well. Joe Flint, the author of the article, writes, “To show that it isn’t a gay channel trying to build crossover appeal to a straight audience, Viacom probably will need to explore controversial issues like gay marriage and adoption.”⁴⁵

“It’s about time somebody went after that audience with a network,” media analyst Tom Wolzien says. “It’s an important segment of the audience that has been traditionally underserved.”⁴⁶

Stephanie Gibbons, Showtime’s (which is owned by Viacom) senior vice president for advertising and promotion, added, “It’s just a continued evolution of something we’ve been doing for a long time.”⁴⁷

Brent Bozell, head of the Media Research Center, correctly pointed out that the last thing the entertainment industry has done is “underserve” homosexuals. He wrote, “Let’s understand something here. This is not some kind of affirmative action proposal to bring gays into Hollywood. They’re there, at every level, already. This is a move to promote the homosexual lifestyle to the public....Far from being ‘underserved,’ gays have been pampered and catered to. Seemingly everywhere you turn you find the gay character, the gay theme, the gay argument inserted, and so often for no reason other than to placate the gay community. As the pundit Camille Paglia put it a few years ago, ‘Entertainment, media, and the arts are non-stop advertisements for homosexuality these days.’”⁴⁸

Bozell then described what we are in for, citing the example of PrideVision in Canada:

So what might we expect from the proposed gay cable channels? In the online magazine Slate, Michael Joseph Gross looks at PrideVision TV, a nearly five-month-old Canadian gay cable network....“PrideVision,” relates Gross, “addresses the diversity issue with shows like ‘You Don’t Know D—k,’ a documentary about female-to-male transsexuals....As far as the sex goes, PrideVision is fairly soaked in it. ‘Hard-core erotica,’ for both gay men and lesbians is [shown] at midnight...and a men’s soft-core porn feature at 10:30 p.m., called ‘Steamy Knights’ is the channel’s top-rated show. PrideVision also offers porndressed-as-documentary; one show called ‘Urinal,’ explores the ‘policing of washroom sex in Ontario.’” Near the close of his story, Gross gets to the heart of the matter: “News programs, talk shows, and dramas (on any U.S. gay network) will have to be fearlessly candid about the centrality of sex in much of gay life for gay viewers to take them seriously”⁴⁹ [emphasis added].

Bozell then nailed the target when he concludes: “Think of all the gay men you’ve heard equate their sexual orientation with ‘who I am’ or ‘what I am.’ Then try to remember if you’ve ever heard a straight man say the same thing. Sex is important to the typical heterosexual, but the difference between ‘important’ and ‘central’ is, undeniably, vast. So, too, is the difference between the way heterosexuality has always been discussed on television and how homosexuality is portrayed on a gay channel.”⁵⁰

Viacom went ahead with their plans and announced on May 25, 2004, that their MTV Network Division would launch LOGO, a new cable network specifically targeted to homosexual audiences. The network will start on February 17, 2005. Tom Freston, chairman and CEO of MTV Networks, said, “Creating a network specifically for the LGBT community is something we’ve wanted to do for a long, long time, and it’s an idea we feel is overdue....We have big plans and hopes for LOGO, and I’m thrilled to announce its arrival.”⁵¹

Perhaps the silver lining in all of this is, as Bozell pointed out, that a gay channel will show the American public the real version of homosexual life, a life based on rampant sex and despair, rather than the whitewashed portrayals presently shown on network television.

Homosexual Portrayals on the Silver Screen

Up until this point we have focused on how the homosexual agenda has been pushed on television. We are now going to turn our focus to what has occurred on the silver screen.

While homosexual-themed movies were becoming staples in European cinemas in the late 1960s and early 1970s, the subject was still pretty much taboo in America.⁵² Only one major film, 1962's The Children's Hour with Audrey Hepburn and Shirley MacLaine, went near the subject of homosexual behavior. It was considered boxoffice and public relations poison by Hollywood to produce a movie with blatant homosexual themes.

The first toe in the water, so to speak, was in 1978 with the movie Making Love. It was the first film to show two men in bed with each other and was a film that took years to make since no up-and-coming young actor, such as Harrison Ford or Michael Douglas, would go near the movie because of the effect it would have had on his career.⁵³ (This is quite a change from 2004 when several leading men seem to be trying to “out-gay” each other.) Eventually, two unknowns at the time, Harry Hamlin and Michael Ontkean, took the parts in the movie, which dealt with a man leaving his wife for another man. It was a financial dud at the box office.⁵⁴

So Hollywood decided that America wasn't quite ready for the sight of two men in bed together and decided to push the agenda in a less direct way: cross-dressing comedies featuring heterosexual characters. Thus, we were given Tootsie with Dustin Hoffman portraying a man masquerading as a woman to get a job on a soap opera, Mrs. Doubtfire with Robin Williams disguising himself as a frumpy nanny so he can spend time with his children, and Victor/Victoria about a woman, played by Julie Andrews, who dresses up as a male impersonator.

Again, all of these films were successful comedies, designed to soften up America for the coming onslaught.

The breakthrough film for the homosexual agenda was Philadelphia (1993) starring Tom Hanks. The makers of the film deliberately went out of their way to find the most likable actor possible (Hanks—who has been compared to a modern-day Jimmy Stewart)⁵⁵ in order to push their agenda that AIDS was a civil rights rather than a public health issue and that homosexuals are victims of discrimination. Every major news magazine trumpeted the movie, and the entire Hollywood publicity machine and homosexual community got behind it to ensure that it was a success. Hanks was nominated and won Best Actor for the role.⁵⁶ In his rambling acceptance speech, Hanks gave tribute to his homosexual drama teacher.⁵⁷

Philadelphia opened the floodgates and gave us subsequent movies such as The Birdcage, which depicted Robin Williams and Nathan Lane as two homosexual partners who faced rejection from their ultraconservative families, and In and Out, inspired by Hanks's speech and which dealt with a high school teacher who is “outed” during an acceptance speech. The film featured a prolonged kiss between actors Kevin Kline and Tom Selleck. Again, both of these films were comedies and pushed the envelope a little further.

In 1999 Hollywood came “totally out.” In fact, the Academy Awards in early 2000 seemed to be like a three-and-one-half-hour infomercial for the homosexual agenda. Hillary Swank won Best Actress for Boys Don't Cry, in which she played a transgendered person, a girl who dresses up as a boy and is eventually murdered in a so-called hate crime. In her acceptance speech, she gave an impassioned plea for tolerance and for transgender rights, stating, “His legacy always lives on through our movie to remind us to always be ourselves, to follow our hearts, to not conform.”⁵⁸ On the same night, the film American Beauty, written by an open homosexual, and which denigrated marriage, promoted statutory rape, full teenage female nudity, and homosexual behavior, won Best Picture.

In 2004, actress Charlize Theron won the Best Actress Award for playing a lesbian in the movie Monster. And, at the 2004 GLAAD Movie Awards, Sharon Osbourne, the wife of rocker Ozzy Osbourne, said, “My only regret in life is that none of my children are gay.” Singer Alanis Morissette stated that she was becoming a licensed minister via an online course so she could indulge in her “fantasy” to “marry some of my gay couple friends.” At the awards ceremony, GLAAD announced its new campaign to promote same-sex “marriage.”⁵⁹

Where does this constant drumbeat promoting homosexual behavior lead? The natural conclusion is what we reported earlier in this chapter: that more and more Americans are engaging in homosexual behavior, especially young people.⁶⁰ Just as Hollywood glamorized smoking back in the 1930s and '40s, and then promoted illegal drug use in the '60s and '70s, it is now making homosexual behavior the in thing to emulate. In both of the previous cases, Hollywood eventually was repudiated for its positive depictions of these behaviors, as people died of lung cancer and kids overdosed on drugs.

Will the same thing eventually happen with the portrayals of homosexual behavior, as people die early from sexually transmitted diseases and generations of children grow up sexually confused? Based on the evidence so far, we doubt it. Hollywood has been relentless in its promotion of high-risk behavior that, in many cases, leads to early death.⁶¹

An entire book could be written on the subject of the entertainment industry's promotion of homosexual behavior, but it is our goal to give you a brief overview of each subject so that you understand the number of cultural fronts in which the homosexual agenda is being pushed. We need to go back to words of Kirk and Madsen who stated that a media campaign would be the linchpin for their efforts to desensitize Americans to homosexual behavior. As we have seen in this chapter, that campaign has been relentless, and many of the gains made by homosexual activists to promote their agenda and restrict religious freedom have been made in movies, television, and other entertainment media.

In the next chapter, we will look at what is perhaps the most alarming front in this battle: the promotion of homosexual behavior to impressionable school children.

“Stupid” Parents, “Enlightened” Kids

The fear of the religious right is that the schools of today will be the governments of tomorrow. And you know, they're right. If we do our jobs right, we're going to raise a generation of kids who don't believe the claims of the religious right.

—Speakers at the 1999 Gay, Lesbian, Straight Educational Network conference

One day, during his biology class, Kyle's teacher stated that homosexual behavior was genetic. Kyle immediately raised his hand to disagree. The teacher, a self-professed bisexual who had testified in support of civil unions in Vermont, immediately ridiculed and humiliated him in front of the entire high school class.

“What's the matter, Kyle?” she said mockingly. “Are you unsure of your sexuality? Did you know that the people who scream the loudest turn out to be gay themselves?”

The other students in the class, who had been subjected to homosexual indoctrination for years, laughed at him.

A few weeks later, in the middle of a discussion on genealogy, the teacher again digressed into the subject of homosexual behavior. Kyle asked again what homosexuality had to do with the subject.

The teacher again questioned his sexuality and implied that he might be covering up the fact that he was a homosexual. Kyle stood up and denied the accusation, stating that he had a girlfriend.

The class snickered at him. One classmate went as far to suggest that the girlfriend was a cover-up and that Kyle was a closet homosexual.

This is war, so plan accordingly.

—Homosexual activist Chuck Jones

Devastated and humiliated, Kyle's grades dropped from a 3.70 grade point average to 2.10 in the months following the incident.¹

That story is only one of numerous examples of how the homosexual agenda is being pushed in public schools and how those who don't toe the line are being humiliated and punished.

Every fall, millions of parents drop their children off at taxpayerfunded public schools, assuming that their children's education will provide what they need to be successful in life: strong academics, civility, and responsibility.

Unfortunately, many of these same parents have little or no idea of what is happening to their children once they pass through the classroom door. Instead of learning the three Rs or how to be good citizens like many of us were taught, they are learning how to reject the common values that many of their parents have tried hard to instill in them, the values that built America. Sadly, many of these parents refuse to believe that this is happening, even when you produce evidence of how the radical homosexual activists are targeting children in public schools to accept, affirm, and be recruited into homosexual behavior.

On a daily basis, all across America (but more prevalent in some areas of the country than others), children as young as kindergarten are being told that their parents are “stupid” or “bigots” or “intolerant” if they do not accept and embrace homosexual behavior as normal, or even something to be celebrated. In some classes, children are even recruited to promote gay pride marches and events.²

For young children, the open promotion of homosexual behavior in the media and the classroom has led to preteen children announcing to their parents that they are homosexual. Why? Because they are taught that if you are a girl who doesn't like boys, you are a lesbian, and if you are a boy who doesn't like girls, you are a homosexual. Yet, for most eight-year-olds, members of the opposite sex have “cooties” or similar perceived afflictions. This is the time when children bond and form their identity as members of their own sex, and it is just a natural part of childhood. To introduce homosexual behavior at this stage of development is only confusing for children.

Finally, once they reach their teenage years, sexually confused teenagers are turned over to homosexual counselors who assist them in determining how they can come out to their families and friends.³

Homosexual activists know that the best time to reach children is during the earliest, most impressionable ages. Christian researcher George Barna has documented that the chance for an individual to make a personal decision to believe in Christ greatly diminishes after the age of fourteen.⁴ Just as children are more receptive to the gospel and religious instruction at an early age, they are also more susceptible to homosexual indoctrination. Is it any wonder why homosexual activists and their allies have tried so hard to keep the gospel out of and get homosexual indoctrination into the public schools?

In their private meetings, homosexual activists boldly proclaim their goal to get children to reject their parents' beliefs. At a 1999 Gay, Lesbian, Straight, Educational Network (GLSEN) conference in Atlanta, the following comments were made: “The fear of the religious right is that the schools of today are the governments of tomorrow. And you know what, they're right”⁵ and “If we do our jobs right, we're going to raise a generation of kids who don't believe the claims of the religious right.”⁶

The Homosexual Activists’ Willing Partner

A more than willing partner with the homosexual activists has been the National Education Association (NEA). While the NEA has been promoting the homosexual agenda for years,^{*} its most blatant attempt was at its 2001 annual convention in Los Angeles. At that convention the NEA considered a resolution to implement promotion of full-scale indoctrination of children to accept and affirm homosexual behavior. The resolution read as follows:

“The NEA has passed several resolutions dealing with the promotion of the homosexual agenda. They are available for review at <http://www.nea.org/resolutions.html>. Past resolutions include funds to “alleviate sexual orientation discrimination,” support for “Gay and Lesbian History Month,” and the inclusion of sexual orientation into sex education programs.

The National Education Association recognizes the complex and diverse needs of gay, lesbian, bisexual, transgender, and questioning students; and gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender families and their children require the development of programs to promote a safe and inclusive environment:

1. Development of curriculum and instructional materials and programs designed to meet the needs of gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender students.
2. Involvement of gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender characters in developing educational material used in classroom instructions.
3. Dissemination of programs that support gay, lesbian, bisexual, transgender, and questioning students and address the high dropout rate, suicide rate, and health risk behaviors.
4. Recognition of the importance of gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender education employees as role models.
5. Accurate portrayal of the roles and contributions of gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender education employees as role models.
6. Dissemination of programs and information that include the contributions, heritage, culture, and history of gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender people.
7. Coordination with gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender organizations and concerned agencies that promote the contributions, heritage, history, health, and care of gays, lesbians, bisexuals, and transgender people.⁷

This resolution was loaded with land mines for people who oppose homosexual behavior and could have dire consequences for an entire generation of children. After pro-family groups, such as Focus on the Family, became aware of what the NEA was attempting to do, they blew the whistle, and a public backlash occurred. As a result, the NEA “tabled” the resolution and sent it to a committee for “study.” This means the organization will quietly implement it without member approval. In fact, that is exactly what the NEA is doing, and similar resolutions are showing up as official NEA policy in school districts nationwide.⁸

Former NEA president Bob Chase⁹ openly admits to this strategy, stating, “Let me make it clear...in no way is the NEA backing down from the important issues raised by this resolution. ...Some critics want the public schools to be an agent of moral doctrine, condemning children and adults when they are not in accord with Biblical precepts.”⁹ Interestingly, Chase is on the board of directors for the Gay, Lesbian, and Straight Educational Network (GLSEN).

⁹Chase went on to work for GLSEN, the leading pro-homosexual advocacy group in the public schools.

Think about that statement for a second. The NEA is condemning parents who object to homosexual behavior and believe that it should not be taught in public schools, accusing them of forcing their “moral doctrine” on children. And yet, groups such as the NEA, GLSEN, P-FLAG (Parents and Friends of Lesbians and Gays) and other pro-homosexual groups are trying to do just that. They are trying to push a doctrine of homosexual behavior on young children while condemning and ridiculing those, including parents, who hold to biblical principles and to undermine the beliefs they are trying to instill in their children.

The NEA helped to publish a booklet, along with the American Academy of Pediatrics (which subsequently endorsed homosexual adoption),¹⁰ the American Medical Association, and the American School Health Association, among others, titled Just the Facts about Sexual Orientation and Youth. This booklet, which was written to “combat the religious right,” effectively calls for the censoring of free speech rights of teachers and counselors who might be inclined to share the biblical perspective on homosexual behavior. It also calls for the wholehearted encouragement for schoolchildren to experiment with homosexual behavior. Consider this excerpt:

Sexual orientation is one component of a person's identity, which is made up of many other components, such as culture, ethnicity, gender, or personality traits....Someone does not have to be exclusively homosexual or heterosexual, but can feel varying degrees of attraction for both genders....Many deeply religious people and a number of religious organizations are supportive and accepting of gay, lesbian, bisexual people....*A guidance counselor in a public school may not attempt to persuade a gay, lesbian, or bisexual student of the religious belief that homosexuality is a sin, or otherwise seek to impose a negative religious view on being gay, lesbian, or bisexual on the student....*School officials should be deeply concerned about the validity and bias of materials or presentations that promote a change to a person's sexual orientation as a “cure” or suggest that being gay, lesbian, or bisexual is unhealthy.¹¹ [emphasis added]

Therefore, according to the NEA, GLSEN, and other organizations, Christians and other people of faith—and perhaps even experts on public health issues who may be teachers or counselors in the public schools—will not only be unable to share their religious views about homosexual behavior, they won't be able to even mention individuals, such as John Paulk, who have overcome homosexual behavior. If this doctrine is imposed, more religious freedom of those teachers, counselors, and their students will be taken away. Tragically, millions of sexually confused children will be told they have no other choice but to accept the fact that they are homosexual.

“Questioning” Youth

Anyone who has ever lived through the teenage years knows that it is a time of a great deal of sexual confusion as bodies change and hormones rage. Many early adolescents go through this state of confusion regarding gender attraction and attachment. Almost all of them emerge as healthy heterosexual adults. The phrase “questioning students” specifically targets these sexually confused early teens, who, with the assistance of public funding, will be encouraged to pursue homosexual behavior.

Sadly, this is not a relatively new phenomenon. This has been happening for years, while millions of parents, including many Christian parents, have been blissfully ignorant about how radical homosexual activists are targeting their children in the public schools.

In 1993, Newsweek magazine ran an article titled “Tune In, Come Out.” In the piece, writer David Gelman chronicled the sexual confusion of adolescents and how they were being encouraged to engage in homosexual behavior. He wrote, “At high schools around the country, multiculturalism has begun to embrace multisexualism...more students seem to be coming out, and they're coming out younger.”¹²

Gelman continued:

Some high schoolers are coming out homosexual, some bisexual. Others are admittedly confused [emphasis added]. “It's very hard to figure out what you are in the core of your belly,” says one Boston teenager who thought she was a lesbian until she found herself enjoying a relationship with a man. Teens' eagerness to experiment made bisexuality almost “cool” in some schools. “From where I sit, it's definitely more chic,” says George Hohagen, 20, a Midwestern market researcher not long out of high school himself. “It's trendy even to ask, ‘Do you think I am?’” At meetings of Boston Area Gay and Lesbian Youth, support group leader Troix Bettencourt, 19, a public health intern, has seen an increase in teenagers who identify themselves as bisexual. They don't want to be penned into one type of behavior, he says. “It [saying you're bisexual] just says that you're not yet defined and gives you some freedom.” It's also easier. “After all, you've still got the straight part,” says 18-yearold Jessica Byers...who came out as a lesbian.¹³

These quotes sadly illustrate what happens when teenagers are encouraged to question their sexuality and experiment. The teenage years are often a time of testing limits and experimenting with forbidden fruit. The lure of illegal drugs, alcohol, and pornography are extremely strong during these years.

Caitlyn Ryan, a researcher at San Francisco State University, added, “Now that community resources are in place and public acceptance [of homosexual behavior] has increased, it’s more feasible for adolescents to come out during adolescence. What you’re getting in the LGBT community is the power of youth. It’s their expression and exuberance and energy and also their contribution to the culture.”¹⁴

This phenomenon was documented by Laura Sessions Stepp in the January 4, 2004, edition of the Washington Post:

Move over Ellen DeGeneres, and make way for the younger girls. Way younger, actually, and way different from what most people think of as lesbians....You can see them in the hallways of high schools like South Lakes in Reston, Magruder in Rockville, or Coolidge in the District. In 2002 at Coolidge, a teacher got so fed up with girls nuzzling each other in class and other public places that he threatened to send any he saw to the principal’s office....A group of girls at a private school in Northwest Washington charge boys $10 to watch the girls make out in front of them.

...

So are these girls bisexual? Perhaps. But they prefer descriptions like “gayish,” questioning, even “queer”—an umbrella description so broad...that it encompasses straights as well as gays....“I like women only right now,” says Cary Trainer...a self-defined lesbian since high school, “But who knows where I’ll be in 25 years?”

[David] Shapiro is head of the Edmund Burke School...in Northwest Washington. In 2002, Burke held a “diversity day” assembly in which students and teachers stood together in a circle. An adult leader took the group through various exercises, and in one of those, participants were asked to move inside the circle if they defined themselves as gay or lesbian.

One female teacher stepped forward, but no students did.

Then the leader called for those who thought of themselves as bisexual—the broadest label offered. Out of the approximately 60 pupils in the group, 15 obliged; 11 girls and four boys. Shapiro said he was “astounded” at the number of kids who stepped into the bisexual group. As he thought about it, he concluded that “kids today know the difference between behavior and orientation. They say, ‘I may be behaving in this certain way, but I’ll make up my own mind about who I am in my own time.’”

“Most of these girls aren’t gay” [says one student]...“They’re just doing it because their friends are doing it.”¹⁵

Dr. Frances Scott, a professor of childhood development at Chicago’s Erikson Institute, stated that teens are liable to experiment because they are still trying to figure out who they are. This problem is particularly pronounced for children who come from broken homes and do not have strong relationships with both parents. She said, “Teenagers are at that point in life where so many aspects of their identity are coming together. They’re figuring out issues of sexual identity, occupational identity, and role identity. They’re really asking the question, ‘Who am I?’”¹⁶ This is one of the main reasons why homosexual activists have made a concerted effort to get into middle schools and high schools—they know that teenagers are likely to be receptive to their message as they try to figure out who they are.

Sadly, too many lives have been destroyed by bad decisions made during the teenage years that had dire consequences for an individual's future. Many adults regret decisions they made during those years. And now, homosexual behavior has been added to the mix as well.

So what is the bottom line? According to the NEA and its allies, children must be taught that sexual orientation is fluid (which is an interesting contradiction since homosexual activists are intent on proving a genetic link to their behavior), that only “intolerant religions” do not affirm homosexual behavior, and that once you are entrapped in homosexual behavior, there is no escape. No dissenting views are permitted. Thus, the gospel is silenced, parental values are undermined, and an impressionable child is doomed to engage in behavior that will often result in his or her eventual selfdestruction.

Targeting the Children

And how does this all play out in public schools? In some areas of the country where homosexual activists have had free rein for years, the indoctrination of children starts as early as kindergarten. At a Massachusetts GLSEN conference, there was a specific workshop on how to “incorporate gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender issues into the early elementary years.”¹⁷ On the GLSEN Web site, there are elementary school lesson plans featuring the themes “What Is Boy/Girl?” and “Freedom to Marry?” along with books with titles such as “Queering Elementary Education.”¹⁸

In the article “Gay-Ed for Tots,” Debra Saunders chronicled the full implementation of homosexual indoctrination in the San Francisco Unified School District:

The San Francisco Unified School District has a lesson plan for teaching kindergartners and first-graders about homosexuality. It is called “My Family,” and is disseminated through the district's Support Services for Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Youth Department....The lesson includes definitions that are politically correct—and downright confusing to adults, never mind kids. Homosexuals are “people of the same sex who have feelings for one another in a romantic way.” A family is a “unit of two or more persons, related either by birth or by choice, who may or may not live together, who try to meet each other's needs and share common goals and interests.”...The lesson includes class exercises designed to reinforce the notion that all families should be validated...presumably including families with no dads, three dads, or a 14-yearold mom....

This year, the Buena Vista School District went way beyond “My Family.” As it had in past years, the school invited gay parents into the classroom to talk to elementary students. In a first-grade class, a gay man read to the children the district-approved book, “Gloria Goes to Gay Pride.”

But this year, students also worked on a rainbow banner for the gay pride parade, and they did so during class time. As a school missive explained, kindergartners “designed” the red stripe, first-graders the “yellow,” and so on up to fifth grade. The rainbow banner, the message boasted, “reflects the creativity, love, and appreciation for diversity as expressed by the children of Buena Vista.”¹⁹

In such an emboldened climate as the San Francisco Bay Area, homosexual activists make no bones about telling Christians and others who object to homosexual behavior to “get lost.” For example, when asked about those parents who might have moral objections to the promotion of homosexual behavior in San Francisco schools, Lynn Lavin of the Gay-Lesbian Parents Group at Buena Vista school flippantly said, “If there are people who don't feel comfortable with [pro-homosexual] policies, they shouldn't be in public schools.”²⁰

In her conclusion to the article, Saunders tied the indoctrination of schoolchildren to the argument used by the secular left that religion or equal access for Bible study or prayer groups should not be allowed in public schools because children are “easily persuaded.” Saunders wrote, “Those who support pressing young children into making a gay banner have insisted that there is nothing political about it or the city's gay pride parade. Instead, they have equated the gay pride parade with Martin Luther King Day. That Buena Vista's proselytizing, forced on kids who aren't old enough to think critically, might be the equivalent of public school prayer, doesn't compute with them.”²¹

As we mentioned before in our discussion of George Barna's findings on children and faith, it is quite obvious that homosexual activists and their allies have no problem with the indoctrination of children. It is a child's exposure to traditional religious teachings on issues of sexuality and marriage that gets in the way of their objectives. It is that, according to homosexual activists and their allies, that must be eliminated during a child's formative years. Therefore, while they might make the statement that parents who believe homosexual behavior is wrong have no place in the public schools, it frustrates them to no end when parents come to that realization and either place their children in private schools or home school them. Thus, according to NEA resolutions, they want control over the curriculum parents and private schools teach.²² Their fear of not being able to get to these children is best summed up by a first-grade teacher in Madison, Wisconsin (another pro-homosexual hotbed): “If parents are allowed to have their children opt out of gay and lesbian units, what will happen when we teach about Dutch culture or African-American history? It scares me.”²³

(In fact, homosexual activists in California have begun to come up with ways to force private schools to adopt pro-homosexual curriculum. In September 2001, former Governor Gray Davis signed a bill that forces private schools that wish to compete with public schools in interscholastic sports to have an anti-discrimination policy that includes sexual orientation.)²⁴

If you're thinking of moving your family north of the border to escape all of this, don't. The situation is worse in Canada. At a recent convention, the Elementary Teachers Federation of Ontario voted 50-1 in support of introducing pro-homosexual curriculum into elementary school classrooms. The motion, according to the Canadian Press, "allows the union to 'encourage' school boards to establish funding for schools, upon request, for 'materials for student use which reflect lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender realities.'"²⁵

GLSEN: The Gay, Lesbian, and Straight Educational Network

One of the most vocal pro-homosexual groups is the Gay, Lesbian, and Straight Educational Network. Its efforts to indoctrinate children are relentless. On April 10, 2002, GLSEN staged a Day of Silence in public schools nationwide.* Students were encouraged to remain silent throughout the day and not respond to their teachers or school administrators. If asked to speak, the students were told to hand their teachers a card that read: "Please understand my reasons for not speaking today. I am participating in the Day of Silence, a national youth movement protesting the silence faced by lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender people and their allies. My deliberate silence echoes that silence, which is caused by harassment, prejudice, and discrimination. I believe that ending that silence is the first step toward fighting these injustices. Think about the voices you are not hearing today. What are you going to do to end the silence?"

GLSEN called on students nationwide to participate in "Transgender Remembrance Day" on November 20, 2002.

Organizers of the event told children that they should "brainstorm" a list of people "who are likely to stand in your way." Those people included teachers, counselors, and administrators who have "denied you their support in the past, or who've expressed bias against (lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgendered) people." It is also suggested that the list include other children, school board members, people in the community, and relatives "who have shown intolerance" of homosexuality. The organizing manual notes that "people who oppose you on your issue are known as, you guessed it, your opponents."²⁶ †

In 2003, U.S. Congressman Eliot Engel (D-NY) introduced a resolution calling on Congress to "recognize the efforts of students nationwide who will be organizing and participating in the Day of Silence." GLSEN set its 2003 "Day of Silence" for April 9, 2003. See "Day of Silence in Congressional Spotlight Thanks to Rep. Eliot Engel," GLSEN Press Release, March 11, 2003.

So, GLSEN is telling little children that their relatives are the "enemy" if they oppose homosexual behavior. Our question (and we are afraid of the answer): Does "relatives" include Mom and Dad? Indeed, we will see that this is exactly what GLSEN means. It does mean Mom and Dad.

It was not just Catholics and evangelical, conservative Christians who were outraged by GLSEN's Day of Silence. Rabbi David Eidensohn of the National Non-Sectarian Council of Pro-Family Activists said, "This is an assault on our school system by terrorists. The financial damage due to lost school time throughout the country will be enormous. We cannot, however, talk about money alone. The disruption of a school atmosphere, especially towards the end of the year, when discipline in schools is a challenge, could kill a year of learning for many students. Precisely when students should be concentrating on finals, they are told by GLSEN homosexual activists to refuse to speak in class and to disrupt school with activism. Students who should be learning to get along with others are making a 'hit list' of teachers and students who are Biblical or who refuse the homosexual agenda."²⁷

However, to radical homosexual activists, the pushing of their agenda trumps academics. Keith Jennings, the executive director of GLSEN, told a church audience in New York City on March 20, 2000, about GLSEN's plan to deal with those who have biblical objections to homosexual behavior: "Twenty percent of people are hard-core fair-minded [pro-homosexual] people. Twenty percent are hard-core [anti-homosexual] bigots. We need to ignore the hardcore bigots, get more of the hard-core fair-minded people to speak up, and we'll pull that 60 percent [of people in the middle]...over to our side. That's really what I think our strategy has to be. We have to quit being afraid of the religious right....I'm trying to find a way to say this. I'm trying not to say, '[Expletive deleted]' 'em,' which is what I want to say, because I don't care what they think! Drop dead!"²⁸

Jennings also talked about GLSEN's strategy in a speech at a 1997 conference: "I'd like five years from now for most Americans when they hear the word GLSEN to think, 'Ooh, that's good for kids.'...Sane people keep the world the same [expletive deleted] old way it is now. It's the [crazy] people who think, 'No, I can envision a day when straight people say, "So what if you're promoting homosexuality?" or [when] straight kids say, "Hey, why don't you and your boyfriend come over before you go to the prom and try your tuxes on at my house."...'...If you believe that can happen, we can make it happen. The only thing that will stop us is our lack of faith that we can make it happen. That is our mission from this day forward."²⁹

GLSEN, at its conferences like the one that Jennings spoke at above, is very overt when it comes to its goal of indoctrinating even the youngest of schoolchildren. At a 1997 GLSEN regional conference, New York teacher and GLSEN activist Jaki Williams taught a workshop entitled "Inclusive Kindergartens." Here is just a sample of what she said: "Children in the kindergarten age are 'developing their superego.'...That's when the saturation process needs to begin....Five-year-olds are very interested in the big questions. They're very interested in sex, death, and love, and they ask those questions, and they talk about them. And we want to help them find the answers...on their level."³⁰

Williams added that she read to her class books such as Heather Has Two Mommies and One Dad, Two Dads, Brown Dads, Blue Dads.

At a 1999 conference, a retired lesbian gym teacher talked about how she discussed her sexuality with her kindergarten gym class. Peter LaBarbera, then with the Family Research Council and currently with Concerned Women for America, who witnessed her talk, filed the following report:

[She] explained that at her school she was “out” as a lesbian to the principal and to most of the teaching staff, and that it was important for her to be “authentic” about her sexual identity. According to [her], one day a student in her gym class asked if she had a husband. She said no, and then another student asked if she had a boyfriend. [She] said no, “As a matter of fact...I have a girlfriend.” After some of the children said, “Ohhhh!” as if shocked, they asked if she kissed her girlfriend. [She] said she did.

[She] responded: “Some people think it's OK, and some people think it's not OK.”...

Then the gym teacher asked one of the boys in her class, “Do you ever kiss your father goodnight?” He replied, “Yes.” [She] asked one of the girls, “Do you ever kiss your sister to show her that you love her?” “Yes,” the girl responded. [She] then used the analogy between those kisses and her lesbian kisses as she told the children, “Some people will tell you that you shouldn't love some people [but]...your heart tells you who to love.”...

“This was a very teachable moment....I was not in any way going to lie to my students,” [she said of her conversation with the kindergarten gym class]. “At the elementary school level, the teachable moments are the really critical ones.”¹¹

GLSEN put out a student organizing manual titled “Make It Real,” to be used for the implementation of California's AB537, the California Student Safety and Violence Prevention Act of 2000, which does not obligate schools to inform parents about classroom instruction that conflicts with their religious or moral beliefs, nor allows parents to opt their children out of such instruction. Here are just a few excerpts from the manual:

Imagine a school where two girls or two guys can hold hands, dance together, or even make out, and nobody notices.

Ask your principal if he or she will respect students' wishes not to notify parents....Some parents force them to undergo “therapy” to “change” them....Once they are educated about the risks as well as their legal obligations, many principals will understand and respect a student's legal right to keep complaints confidential from their parents.

Here's how you can use testers in your school: train pairs of students to pretend to be couples....Half of the couples should be same-sex couples, and half of the couples should be opposite-sex couples. Create a list of public displays of affection (holding hands, hugging, walking arm-in-arm, dancing together, kissing hello, or goodbye, making out) and be very clear about the limits at each level. Try to include a variety of places, so that the widest number of people might potentially react. Make sure you definitely list a place where a school administrator is likely to view the display of affection.

Anyone with two or more parents or stepparents understands the time-honored strategy of carefully choosing which parent to ask which question.

If one parent is paranoid about your driving, ask the other if you can borrow the car. This is a basic form of ally building.³²

From this manual, it is quite clear that GLSEN believes teenagers should conceal information from their parents and undermine parental authority by playing one parent off another. Parents, to GLSEN, are just something else to be manipulated to reach their goal of recruiting impressionable youth into homosexual behavior.

Soon after the Massachusetts State Supreme Judicial Court decision finding a new “right” to same-sex “marriage,” GLSEN jumped at the opportunity to push their agenda even further in the public schools. Even before the decision was reached, GLSEN had prepared a curriculum guide that featured lesson plans that discussed the “historical parallels” to same-sex “marriage,” (equating the legitimate struggle for civil rights by black Americans to the effort for same-sex “marriage”), books about homosexual behavior, and asked students to “consider” what it would be like to be in a same-sex “wedding.”

The curriculum also states, “When discussing this issue, help students to move past preoccupations with the ‘rightness’ or ‘wrongness’ of same-sex coupling or homosexuality in general. Place the debate over marriage within the context of human rights, thereby expanding the dialogue beyond the realm of morality.”³³ As in other instances, GLSEN is undermining parental authority and coercing children to reject the beliefs of their parents.

At a GLSEN conference for educators in Massachusetts, workshops such as “Ask the Transsexuals,” “Early Childhood Educators: How to Decide Whether to Come Out at Work or Not,” “The Struggles and Triumphs of Including Homosexuality in a Middle School Curriculum,” “From Lesbos to Stonewall: Incorporating Sexuality into a World History Curriculum,” and “Creating a Safe and Inclusive Sexuality in Elementary Schools” were held. The last workshop is described as providing the “rationale of integrating GLBT [gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender] issues in the early elementary years.”³⁴

It's Elementary?

In addition to its conferences, GLSEN, working with lesbian activists and filmmakers Helen Cohen and Diana Chasnoff, has developed and promoted the video It's Elementary to train teachers and administrators on how to push the homosexual agenda in public schools.* The video openly promotes homosexual behavior and ridicules and defames anyone who would object to it. One fifthgrade boy, who has obviously had years of homosexual indoctrination already, says in the video, “Some Christians believe that if you're gay, you'll go to hell, so they want to torture them and stuff.”³⁵ There is no rebuttal. An eighth-grade girl defends the teaching of homosexual behavior, stating, “If kids are too young to be taught about homosexuality, then they are too young to be taught about heterosexuality...[If] children are reading Cinderella then they should read about a prince and a prince, or a princess and a princess.”³⁶

*The producers have now come out with a second video titled “That's a Family!” endorsed by actor Robin Williams, that is designed to teach first graders through third graders about homosexual families.

But perhaps the most alarming portion of the video involves a teacher lavishing praise on an essay written by an eight-year-old girl about her lesbian “parents.” The teacher encourages the little girl to read her essay to her entire class, and the girl states that those who believe what the Bible has to say about homosexual behavior are stupid. The teacher then announces at the end of the class that this essay has won an award!³⁷

We don't know about you, but if we had characterized someone's sincere beliefs as stupid in an essay we had written during our school days, we probably would have been disciplined or at least forced to write the essay over again. But this is the perfect example of how children are being taught disdain for biblical values in our public schools.

It May Be Happening in Your Child's School

Here are just a few more quick examples of how the homosexual agenda is being pushed to elementary school children:

- In Boulder, Colorado, a new curriculum has been proposed that would require students to “demonstrate” their acceptance of homosexual behavior. Students would have to show they can “provide peer support” for homosexual classmates and demonstrate they can “advocate for a school environment free of...homophobia.” Other standards require students to explain the health consequences of “heterosexism.”³⁸
- A southern California prep academy hosted a forum entitled “A Queer State of the Union.” The school, Crossroads School for the Arts and Sciences, is attended by numerous children of Hollywood celebrities. The school has a “sexual orientation curriculum” that instructs kindergartners through fifthgraders about how “there are different kinds of families, which include families with two mommies and two daddies. The school also staged a play, “Everything Possible: A Gay Odyssey,” that featured two teenage boys kissing. Faculty member Adam Behrman said, “One thing I'm starting to notice in the last year or two...which is really, really cool, not just at Crossroads, but other places, that it's becoming more and more OK for people who are probably largely toward the straight end of the spectrum to really think about, ‘You know, maybe I'm bisexual...maybe I don't have to limit myself, what I am shutting myself off to?’” Behrman went on to add that 13- and 14-year-olds are “exploring bisexuality.”³⁹
- In Ithaca, New York, school officials are requiring that first and second graders be graded on tolerance. The kids will receive grades based on how well “they respect others of varying cultures, genders, experiences, and abilities.” The grade will appear on their report cards under “Lifelong Learning Skills,” before social studies, science, writing, and reading.⁴⁰ Thus, how a child views homosexual behavior is more important than the fundamentals he or she will need to succeed in life.
- In Provincetown, Massachusetts, the school board voted to begin teaching pre-schoolers about homosexual behavior and backed affirmative action for “sexual minorities.” “We are on a trailblazing path,” said Susan Fleming, superintendent of Provincetown schools.⁴¹

- In St. Louis, Missouri, Debra Loveless requested her right to exempt her daughter from a GLSEN seminar at her daughter's public school. Her request was granted, but she also wanted to see what was being presented at the seminar. When she arrived, an armed security guard told her that school officials wanted her to leave the school grounds. An ADF ally has come to the defense of her right to view what is being taught at the seminar, stating that school cannot prohibit parents from viewing the content of school seminars, whether or not their child is attending.⁴²
- In Ann Arbor, Michigan, a local high school held a so-called Diversity Week that included student speeches on the topics of race, religion, and homosexuality at an all-school assembly. When one student wished to give a talk on the biblical position with regard to homosexual behavior, school officials censored her speech, claiming that her religious view toward homosexual behavior was “negative” and would “water down” the “positive” religious message they wanted to convey. That “positive” message was that homosexual behavior and religion are compatible and that homosexual behavior is not sinful. School officials also created written guidelines that prohibited “targeting” someone's “sexual orientation.”⁴³

When a religious view is to be presented in the public schools, it is a liberal version that affirms homosexual behavior⁴⁴ (however, if a conservative view were being presented, you can be assured that the squawk of “separation of church and state” would be loud and clear). One of the Alliance Defense Fund's allied attorneys testified to an example of this occurring in Los Angeles public schools: “We are arguing the case of Park v. Los Angeles Unified School District. This is a class action suit challenging the school district's policy of inviting pastors into the schools to teach from the Bible. The pastors invited for assemblies during Gay and Lesbian Pride Month every June preach from the Bible that God approves of homosexuality. [Note: Los Angeles city schools have turned an entire month over to the promotion of the homosexual agenda.] They cite various Scripture verses supporting their sermons and distribute booklets citing Bible verses with the conclusion that homosexual behavior is not a sin. Additional materials posted for display to the students (elementary through high school) include full frontal and female nudity...explicit descriptions of sexual acts between homosexuals and claims that Abraham Lincoln and King David were homosexuals.”⁴⁴

☞ We will discuss this perspective further in chapter 6.

Harking back to the NEA brochure “Just the Facts about Sexual Orientation and Youth,” it is not the promotion of a religious viewpoint on homosexual behavior that is offensive to the NEA and homosexual activists. It is the promotion of the wrong viewpoint that does not affirm homosexual behavior that is problematic for the NEA. Thus, the NEA promotes the religious freedom of those who affirm homosexual behavior, but it advocates censoring the religious freedom for those who would disagree. One viewpoint is “enlightened,” the other, in the words of the fourth-grade girl in It's Elementary, is “stupid.”

Where the Homosexual Activists Are Strongest

We could go on and on with numerous other examples of how homosexual behavior is being promoted in elementary schools, but it is time to turn our focus to middle schools and high schools, where the indoctrination by radical homosexual activists is even more intense.

While homosexual activists have made inroads in practically every state of the country, they have made the most progress in states such as Massachusetts and California, where the left-leaning political environment, coupled with large homosexual population centers and the lack of traditional religious influences, has led to public schools that seemingly do little else but teach about homosexual behavior.

Massachusetts has thrown open the school doors to sexual activists and then has locked the doors to keep parents out. They have let homosexual activists have carte blanche to advance their agenda. Teachers and counselors have received special state-funded training for dealing with gay and lesbian students, school libraries are stocked with books and films on homosexual issues, and support groups for sexually confused adolescents are conducted to convince them they are homosexual.⁴⁵

For example, in Framingham, Massachusetts, students were forced to answer a questionnaire that openly challenged the validity of their heterosexuality. Here are some of the questions they were asked:

1. What do you think caused your heterosexuality?
2. When did you first decide you were heterosexual?
3. Is it possible heterosexuality is a phase you will grow out of? [Of course, the flip side of this question is not asked: Is it possible that homosexuality is a phase you will grow out of?]
4. Is it possible you are heterosexual because you fear the same sex?
5. If you have never slept with anyone of the same sex, how do you know you wouldn't prefer it?
6. To whom have you disclosed your heterosexuality? How did they react?
7. Why are homosexuals so blatant, always making a spectacle of their heterosexuality? Why can't they just be who they are and not flaunt their sexuality by kissing in public, wearing wedding rings, etc.?⁴⁶

Notice how heterosexuality is portrayed as the abnormal behavior? If you substituted the words homosexuality and opposite sex into many of the questions, there would be a howl of protests from radical homosexual activists and their allies.

This questionnaire is just the beginning...it gets worse.

- In Newton, Massachusetts, the homosexual rainbow flag is flown proudly at many schools. Many of the same schools have chosen to ignore the Massachusetts law that the American flag be displayed on school grounds.⁴⁷

- In Silver Lake, Massachusetts, a freshman health text says: “Testing your ability to function sexually and give pleasure to another person may be less threatening in your early teens with people of your own sex....You may come to the conclusion that growing up means rejecting the values of your parents” [emphasis added].⁴⁸ This statement blatantly acknowledges the agenda of the radical homosexual activists: convince early teenagers to experiment with homosexual behavior and to reject the values of their parents. The students who received this text were told that they could not take it home.⁴⁹
- In another instance, a parent removed a child after discovering the content of a four-day “sexual harassment” program dealt with homosexual behavior (it replaced algebra). The teacher told the student to return, stating: “Your parents don’t have to know.”⁵⁰

And what happens when children start to reject their parents’ beliefs after being indoctrinated in the public schools? After a week of mandatory Homophobia Week assemblies in Beverly, Massachusetts, a fourteen-year-old girl told her father that he was a homophobe.⁵¹

In their efforts to keep parents out of the public schools, homosexual and safe-sex advocates are doing everything they can to lock kids in. In Chelmsford, Massachusetts, high schoolers attended a mandatory assembly called “Hot, Safer, and Sexy” held by AIDS “educator” Suzi Landolphi. Parents were not notified about this assembly that was filled with graphic sexual information.

Landolphi started the assembly by telling the students, “What we’re going to do is to have a group sexual experience here today. How’s that? Is that good? With audience participation!”⁵² Cheryl Wetzstein, in the Washington Times, described the rest of Landolphi’s performance:

She giggled and she strutted. They laughed and they cheered—especially when Dr. David Evans [of the American Medical Student Association] blew the condom on his head into King Kong proportions. ...

The students [who filed the lawsuit]...were offended when she “simulated masturbation,” used lewd and lascivious language for body parts and excretory functions, and closely inspected a male student’s “butt,” according to the court papers....For example, Miss Landolphi asked a student to participate in a demonstration, and, holding a condom on one hand, she handed another condom to him. She licked the condom and asked him to do the same. Then, saying, “I don’t want to waste this condom,” she invited a teen-age girl to come down. Miss Landolphi told the boy to kneel and instructed the girl to take the condom and place it over the boy’s head.⁵³

The performers continued to attack Christianity stating: “... you are gay—that is your sexual orientation, and you happen to be proud of it. My name is not God. I was never given the right to judge another human being....And I’ll be [profanity] if I’ll judge anyone by their...gender, their religion or their sexual orientation.”⁵⁴

One teenage girl, who had attended the session, stated, “This was definitely the best assembly in four years. She wasn't lecturing us like a parent. She was telling us something we need to hear....Parents don't realize that the message she was getting across is important.”⁵⁵

The Alliance Defense Fund helped two former Chelmsford High School students in an appeal of their unsuccessful challenge to the school district over the performance. Unfortunately, the U.S. Supreme Court eventually rejected an appeal from the U.S. District Court of Appeals for the First Circuit, which had ruled against the students.⁵⁶

At a special session for teenagers at a Massachusetts GLSEN conference, two officials from the state Department of Education and an AIDS educator taught a seminar titled “What They Didn't Teach You about Queer Sex and Sexuality in Health Class.” The three adults took questions from the audience. When one of the students inquired about “fisting” (a practice in which a person inserts his or her hand and forearm into the rectum of a partner), the AIDS educator demonstrated to the teens the proper hand position for the act. One of the Department of Education officials chimed in, stating that fisting was “an experience of letting somebody into your body that you want to be close and intimate with.”⁵⁷ The AIDS educator then urged the teens to consult their “really hip” Gay/Straight Alliance adviser at school for hints on how to “come on to a potential sex partner.”⁵⁸ While one of the Department of Education employees was fired for the presentation, she was quietly rehired later after a decision in her favor by an arbitrator—with back pay dating to May 2000.⁵⁹

This is just the tip of the iceberg in regards to the graphic sexual information that was shared with the teen audience. The conference was sponsored by the state of Massachusetts and was reportedly underwritten by corporate donations from American Airlines, Levi Strauss, and Eastman Kodak.

What comes through loud and clear in Massachusetts and in California is the wholesale encouragement for children to reject their parents' and America's common values. No dissent to the homosexual agenda is allowed, or if it is, it is severely limited and pushed to the fringes.

Consider this account from an attorney of what happened at Santa Rosa High School in Santa Rosa, California (where Craig graduated from high school more than two decades ago).

Santa Rosa High School is one place where this [homosexual education] agenda has been fully implemented. I was privileged to be one of a panel of experts opposed to the “gay” agenda who had been allowed to make one 50 minute presentation during the first day of Diversity Week at school.

The principal, Mr. Waxman, considers this single slot sufficient to provide “balance” in a weeklong program that included more than 20 hours of pro-homosexual indoctrination of students. The requirement of balance had been imposed on the school by the school board following a parental revolt the prior year, when a single “Day of Diversity” at another high school in the district failed to include opponents of the homosexual political agenda.

What I learned during the course of that day [the first day of Diversity Week at Santa Rosa High School] was astonishing, even to a veteran pro-family leader like myself. We [concerned parents and the attorney] discovered a comprehensive program for promoting homosexuality to the student population, complete with a taxpayer-funded staff facilitator and the approval of the administration.

The paid facilitator is a veteran “gay” activist named Jim Foster... [who] runs an off-campus community center called “Positive Images” where “gay” teens can mingle with older homosexuals....This week's schedule included at least four sessions on “homophobia,” and many additional hours devoted to gender issues, transsexualism, and other topics dear to the “gay” movement...I took the opportunity to sit in on a “Panel on Homophobia.” It was worse than I expected. Seven or eight people sat in rows or tables at the head of the room and addressed a standing-room only crowd of their peers. The young activists took turns giving personal testimonies about how joining the “gay” movement has changed their lives from misery to bliss. Each one began by reciting his or her credentials as a victim of “homophobia,” then explained how he or she had “come out” as “gay,” lesbian, bisexual, or transgendered. Each finished by reciting how much he or she now felt loved and accepted in the “gay” movement. Frankly, the only comparable experience I have ever had to this has been in the church settings where people have testified as to how Christ changed their lives. Only here, the “savior” was identified as the “gay” community....

I was confronted by a teenage girl who announced that she was head of the “Gay-Straight Alliance” club on campus. Her overt purpose in addressing me was to gloat that the new club had over 40 members and was making huge strides in converting students to the “gay” cause. She searched my eyes as she told me and was visibly pleased that I was pained by the news. As she walked away, one of her companions said aloud, “I hope he dies.” Later, as I was leaving the campus, one of the parents called to me from across the parking lot and gestured over to a car parked near the office. As I approached, I saw that its license plates read “Pos Imag.” It was Jim Foster's car. “Look at the seat,” said the parent. There, as if placed to be noticed by passersby was a black and white poster. It was a picture of young boys around the age of puberty sitting together on some front porch steps. In big block letters at the bottom of the page read the message, “INCITE QUEERNESS.”⁶⁰

Despite ever-present denials by homosexual activists, the link to child sex (adults promoting sex with young boys) and homosexual behavior is alarming. At a 2002 Columbia University conference (sponsored by the New York City Department of Health) for “Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, and Transgender Youth,” one of the workshops was titled “Adult/Teen Sex.” This seminar was described as follows: “This workshop is a discussion that will address adultteen relationships and the controversies surrounding the issue. Some questions that the workshop will attempt to answer: Why are teens attracted to older adults? Why are older adults attracted to teens? What does the law say? What are some gray areas in adult/teen relationships?”⁶¹

We will read in a subsequent chapter about pedophilia and how it is now being promoted in the academic world as just another alternative lifestyle that is in some ways “beneficial” to children. In addition, we will look at the issue of adult/teen sex in the context of the controversies surrounding the Catholic Church and the Boy Scouts of America. This is the dangerous path that many radical homosexual activists are taking us, and our children, on.

In Visalia, California, not exactly an urban center like San Francisco or Los Angeles, the school district agreed to implement anti-harassment programs conducted by GLSEN and aimed at all students and staff, after being sued by the ACLU. The settlement called for mandatory training for all school staff and high school students. The student training was described as being “peer to peer,” meaning students who do not agree with homosexual behavior will be pressured by their fellow classmates to comply. In addition, the district will name “compliance coordinators” to “help parents, students and teachers with incidents of discrimination.”⁶² Big Brother is alive and well in Visalia, California, and he is watching you and your kids.

The Influence Is Pervasive

The indoctrination that takes place in our public schools has definitely had an effect in shaping teens’ attitudes toward homosexual behavior. In 2001, Zogby International released a poll that found that 85 percent of high school seniors thought homosexual men and lesbians should be accepted by society; 68 percent said homosexual couples should be allowed to adopt children; 88 percent supported so-called hate-crimes legislation, which in many of its forms has nothing to do with “hate” at all; and two-thirds thought same-sex marriage should be allowed. Even 80 percent of evangelical Christian students supported hate-crimes legislation, which in its many proposed forms, will be used to silence religious speech about homosexual behavior.⁶³ The researchers also were surprised that some of the most liberal views on homosexual behavior came from Catholic students. For instance, 80 percent of Catholic students supported homosexual marriage,⁶⁴ despite the Roman Catholic Church’s unequivocal position in opposition.*

* We will discuss the catechism of the Catholic Church and its stance on homosexual behavior in chapter 6.

As if indoctrinating children isn’t enough, radical homosexual activists are busy re-writing history, with little or no evidence, to support the assertions that they pass along as absolute truth to impressionable schoolchildren to convince them that scores of significant people, including biblical figures such as King David and the apostle Paul were homosexual. With the NEA resolution on homosexual behavior being quietly implemented into school curricula nationwide, more and more children will be taught these distortions of biblical and world history.

For example, some activists have declared that Leonardo da Vinci was homosexual.⁶⁵ In addition, they have also added Eleanor Roosevelt,⁶⁶ Alexander Hamilton,⁶⁷ and even Abraham Lincoln to their list.⁶⁸ In Lincoln's case, they claim that he shared a room with a man for a two-year period, thus that automatically made him homosexual.⁶⁹ If that is the case, every college freshman who has shared a dorm room or an apartment with someone of the same sex is homosexual as well! Yet such nonsense goes unquestioned. In fact, as mentioned earlier, many Los Angeles city schools devote an entire month of the school year to teaching gay history, which includes items such as this.⁷⁰

While children are being told that Abraham Lincoln is homosexual, they are not learning true American history.⁷¹ A recent poll of American high school students found that 22 percent believed that we fought the Revolutionary War against France, 13 percent said that we battled England in the Civil War, 15 percent had no idea of what happened on July 4, 1776, and 10 percent did not know that George Washington was the first president under the Constitution.⁷¹ Educators are more concerned about Honest Abe's sexual orientation than they are of the significance of the Civil War.

†The National Park Service produced a video (now under review after public outcry) for the Lincoln Memorial that states that Lincoln would have supported homosexual "rights." See Marc Morano, "Park Service Seeks to 'Modify' Controversial Lincoln Video," CNSNews.com, March 4, 2003.

The Teen Suicide Myth

Why has such indoctrination and rewriting of history taken place? One reason is that homosexual activists have been enormously successful in convincing educators and the general public that homosexual teenagers are more susceptible to dropping out of school and committing suicide because they are "harassed." However, this argument turns out to be a Trojan horse to get educators to open the doors for homosexual activists.

Marilyn Elias, in USA Today, wrote:

Gay and lesbian teenagers are only slightly more likely than heterosexual kids to attempt suicide, contrary to past studies that suggest gay youths have about triple the rate of trying suicide, says a Cornell University psychologist....Studies finding that about 30% of gay adolescents have attempted suicide exaggerated the rates because they surveyed the most disturbed youngsters and didn't separate thought from action, says Ritch Savin-Williams. Nearly all research on this topic has drawn teens from support groups or shelters, where the most troubled gather, and has taken at face value the claim of a suicide attempt, he says. Savin-Williams' own two studies...focus on 349 students ages 17 to 25. When they said they had tried to kill themselves, he asked what method they used. He also separated out the small minority who attended support groups....Over half of reported suicide attempts turned out to be "thinking about it" rather than trying anything....The other study of 266 college men and women found that gay youths were not significantly more likely than straight classmates to have tried to take their own lives. Again, the homosexual students were more likely to report “attempts” that further questioning revealed as thoughts....Poorly designed studies that exaggerate the suicide risk “pathologize gay youth, and that’s not fair to them,” he says.⁷²

Please let us make it clear that any act that takes a promising young life, whether it is suicide or murder, is tragic and grieves God. However, to deliberately manipulate such a tragedy for political gain and to entrap more children in a dangerous behavior is reprehensible. Radical homosexual activists use many questionable research methods to push their agenda (like the much-disputed and widely discredited claim of Alfred Kinsey that 10 percent of the adult population is homosexual). This ties directly into Madsen’s and Kirk’s policy that it makes no difference whether such claims were truth or lies, as long as the lies work to promote their political agenda.

P-FLAG (Parents and Friends of Lesbians and Gays) received a $250,000 grant to push homosexual indoctrination in public schools, based on the unproven claim that homosexual teens are far more likely to commit suicide.⁷³ GLSEN is given full access to school facilities (which many Christian groups are still denied despite Supreme Court decisions to the contrary) to set up so-called safe zones for “questioning” youth, and to promote their agenda without question.⁷⁴

So what can a parent do? How can families protect their children when they have no other option than the public schools for their children? It is not easy, because homosexual activists have learned that intimidation and stonewalling work wonders in helping them to achieve their aims.

Mary Clossey, who had children in the Newton, Massachusetts, public schools, illustrates the problem. When her son brought home The Perks of Being a Wallflower, she was alarmed at the graphic homosexual content. She decided to complain to school officials and to the mayor of Newton. She found that the mayor’s office refused to return her call. When she called school officials, she experienced “arrogant disrespect for parents.” With the support of other furious parents, she went to the local prosecutor, who had been warned that she was coming. As a result, the receptionist would not allow her to see him, and she was continually stonewalled by other public officials when she tried to air her objections to the book.⁷⁵

Back in the late 1980s, a young woman, who was Craig’s friend, worked in the public policy division at Focus on the Family. “Linda” (a pseudonym) stood up to the homosexual activists in Los Angeles City schools as they attempted (and eventually) succeeded in implementing their agenda into the school system. Linda had to deal with her car being vandalized while she was attending school board meetings, as well as enduring death threats from radical homosexual activists.

However, we cannot allow the intimidation of homosexual activists to silence Christians in the public schools. While many Christian families have chosen to either home school or enroll their children in private schools (at great personal expense) to avoid the indoctrination of their children by radical homosexual activists, public schools remain the only option for millions of Christian families. If you have a child in public schools, it is vital that you know what is going on. It will require great diligence on your part, but your efforts are crucial if the radical homosexual activists are to be stymied. You will need to review curriculum, especially anything that falls into the categories of “family life education,” “diversity,” or “respecting differences.” This will not be easy. You may be stonewalled, you may face threats, and you may be labeled a troublemaker. But it is your right as a parent to know what is being taught to your child.

Your chances are also better if you are organized with other concerned parents, rather than fighting the school administration alone. Network with other Christian parents in your child's school. Then, when something troublesome comes up, you can go as a group to protest to the school board and administration. There is strength in numbers.

An example of this happened in Fairfax County, Virginia, where a large group of parents objected to the implementation of a new so-called anti-discrimination policy that included sexual orientation. More than two hundred parents rallied before the school board vote on the new policy, and their actions blocked the door's opening to pro-homosexual curriculum in their public school system.

And, if you still find yourself stonewalled, you can call the Alliance Defense Fund at 1-800-TELL-ADF or send an e-mail to info@telladf.org, and we will be able to provide you with information on the legal recourse you may have with your local school district to force it to show you what your child is being taught.

Finally, if your school system continues to persist in offering a pro-homosexual curriculum, you may need to pray for the Lord's direction in seeking an alternative from the public schools for your children. As difficult as this may be for some, it may be the only recourse to save your children from homosexual indoctrination.

One of parents' key religious freedoms is the ability to raise their children to accept Jesus Christ into their lives and to train them to hold biblically based beliefs. In our public schools today, this religious freedom is under daily assault. Sad to say, large numbers of children may have already been lost to the pro-homosexual efforts that have been quietly implemented in our public schools over the past decade. But harm to future generations can still be prevented. Confused children can still be redeemed. However, it is going to take an army of parents, not just one individual here and there, who will rise up in righteous anger over what is happening to our children. If concerned parents are educated and organized, rather than just being stray voices in the wilderness against the onslaught of homosexual activism, they will have a greater chance of not only stopping the advancement of the homosexual agenda in public schools, but of reversing it as well.

To talk about everything that is happening in the public schools regarding the homosexual agenda would require an entire separate book, but hopefully this chapter has given you a glimpse of how children are being taught to reject biblical values and embrace homosexual behavior. The day when we can trust our public school system to affirm America's traditional values is over. It is time to take back our schools from the radical homosexual activists for the sake of our children.

The Lavender Tower

We have had more challenges to our basic right to exist on campus settings during the past two years than in the previous fifty-five combined. It's not just us—this is hitting Catholics and Muslims and others. What we are seeing is a growing challenge to religious free speech.

—Steve Hayner, former president of InterVarsity Christian Fellowship

In the early 1980s at the University of California-Davis, Craig witnessed firsthand how radical homosexual activists used intimidation to force a college administration to bow to their demands, at the expense of other students and legitimate academic programs.

In spring 1982, the university faced the possibility of making some budget cuts. One of the first places it looked was the so-called women's studies department that consisted of a group of about thirteen lesbian students who followed a charismatic leader named Merline. As Craig walked around the campus, he would often run into this group. They would be holding hands and listening breathlessly to every word Merline had to say.

When the university announced it would be eliminating Merline's position from the budget, one would have thought that it was calling for the elimination of the college's prestigious veterinary school. The lesbians chained themselves around the area where the school administration building was located, unfurled posters, attacked the administration in the campus newspaper, and eventually staged a sit-in in the dean's office. How dare they cut Merline's position! By the time the students were finished, one would have thought that Merline was Joan of Arc. The administration caved in, restored Merline's position, and eliminated the Mass Communications department.*

* During Craig's time at the University of California-Davis, the homosexual activist groups staged a special week of “tolerance and understanding” for homosexual behavior. One of their requests was for all heterosexuals to refrain from any public expression of affection, such as holding hands, because such expression was “offensive” to those who engaged in homosexual behavior.

About six months later, Craig started graduate school at California State University-Sacramento, about twenty miles east of Davis. Who did he run into almost immediately? Merline and the same group of lesbians! She had found a way to get herself on the payroll there as well and she and her following bounced back and forth between the two campuses.

As sad as this story already is, it would take a tragic turn.

One day, a sweet girl named Laura came to Craig's InterVarsity Christian Fellowship group on campus. Laura was hurting when she came to the fellowship; but the group welcomed her with open arms, and she quickly heard about the healing power in Jesus Christ. Laura accepted Christ, and one of the more mature Christian girls in the chapter started to mentor her.

The thing about this scholarship is that it could benefit any student in any program, as long as the student identifies him or herself as gay, lesbian, bisexual, or transgendered.

—Eva Gaffney, Bridgewater State College spokeswoman

About two weeks later, Craig was walking around the campus when he ran into Merline and her group of lesbians. He was shocked to see that they had a new member: Laura. He expressed his concern to his friend who was mentoring her.

Unfortunately, neither Craig's friend nor anyone else in the chapter was aware of Merline and her Svengali type influence. The other members of his InterVarsity chapter expressed little concern over the matter. However, in a few weeks, Laura quit returning phone calls and coming to the group. Eventually, she disappeared completely.

About ten years later, a friend of Craig's from the InterVarsity group went into a small shop in downtown Sacramento, not knowing it was a lesbian bookstore. Before she left, she noticed the woman standing behind the counter. It was Laura. Her sweet face had been hardened, and her kind manner was nothing more than a memory. She was trapped in the lesbian lifestyle.[†]

† One of the phenomena on some campuses is “LUGS” (Lesbians until Graduation). These are women who choose to engage in lesbian behavior during their college years but revert back to heterosexual behavior after graduating.

We share this story because it is an example of how pervasive homosexual behavior and its promotion are on our nation's university campuses. It is also a tragic reminder of what can happen when an individual looking for love and acceptance falls into the wrong company.

Queer Studies 101

Just as happens in the public schools, millions of Americans, at great sacrifice, send their almost-grown, very vulnerable children off to college campuses in search of the education they will need to succeed in life. Their expectations are that their sons and daughters will master calculus or history or literature. Yet, here is a small sample of some of the “courses” being offered on university campuses today:

- “Black Lavender: A Study of Black Gay and Lesbian Plays, and Dramatic Constructions in American Theatre” (Brown University).¹

- “Discourses of Desire: Introduction to Gay and Lesbian Studies” (Columbia University).²
- “Science, Technology, and Queer Theory” (Yale University).³
- “Lesbian Communities and Identities” (Stanford University).⁴
- “Lesbian Novels Since World War II” (Swarthmore University).⁵
- “Queer Media” (Swarthmore University).⁶
- “Representations of Lesbians and Gay Men in Popular Culture” (Georgetown University).⁷
- “Lesbian/Bisexual Women's Theories/Lives/Activisms” (University of Arizona).⁸
- “Lesbian Lives in the U.S.” (University of Iowa).⁹
- “Feminist Perspectives on Lesbian Studies: Crossing Erotic Boundaries” (University of Michigan).¹⁰
- “Gay Men and Homophobia in American Culture” (University of Minnesota).¹¹
- “Lesbian/Queer Cultural Production” (University of Minnesota).¹²
- “Backgrounds of Homoerotic Literature” (Rutgers University).¹³
- “Issues in Lesbian and Gay Visual Representation” (University of California-Irvine).¹⁴
- “Queer Textuality” (University of California-Santa Barbara).¹⁵

While college students are being offered courses in “queer theory,” they continue their ignorance of basic information, such as elementary level U.S. history. For example, at the top fifty-five secular colleges and universities in the United States, only 23 percent of the students knew that James Madison was a primary author of the U.S. Constitution and 40 percent of the students could not identify the correct fifty-year time frame in which the Civil War was fought.¹⁶

Why does this surprise us when the University of Colorado's English Department offers more than twice the number of multiculturalism and “gender” courses it offers on American literature?¹⁷

In addition, some college campuses are now going out of their way to recruit individuals who practice homosexual behavior, just like they would a star quarterback. For example, Bridgewater State College in Massachusetts announced that it was offering a special scholarship for homosexual students who were “cut off financially” from their parents because of their sexual behavior. College spokeswoman Eva Gaffney said, “The thing about this scholarship is that it could benefit a student in any program, as long as the student identifies himself or herself as gay, lesbian, bisexual, or transgendered.”¹⁸

Judith Brown, director of the Lesbian Gay Bisexual Transgender Center at Tufts University, says, “Schools are inviting these students because they question the norms. They make people question their own assumptions, and that's a key to learning and growing as people.”¹⁹

In a Boston Globe article, Patrick Healy wrote about admissions counselors at university campuses who believe that “the ‘coming out’ experience in high school can breed self-confidence, leadership abilities, cultural awareness, and other characteristics that colleges want.”²⁰

“All Animals Are Equal, but Some Are More Equal Than Others”

In their efforts to actively recruit individuals who practice homosexual behavior, many colleges now have a check-off box on their admissions forms for “sexual orientation.”²¹ Jibil Salaam, the associate director of admissions for inclusion and diversity at the University of New Hampshire, says, “If we truly want these students, it’s vital to ask the question. ...it will help us really tailor a message of support to them.”²²

For instance, the University of California at Los Angeles (UCLA) has received an endowment from the Charles R. Williams Project on Sexual Orientation Law to develop the nation’s first “think tank” dedicated to the legal advancement of the homosexual legal agenda. The university received an initial $2.5 million gift that was described as “the largest donation ever given to an academic institution in support of a gay and lesbian academic program in any discipline.”²³

Some universities have gone as far as to throw all logic out the window by tailoring their student housing policies to support homosexual behavior and preferences. Gene Edward Veith wrote the following in World magazine: “Many universities now have co-ed dorms, with men and women living on the same floor. But some have taken the next step: co-ed dorm rooms. Not that these colleges are encouraging their students to have sex with each other. Quite the contrary. Having a man and a woman share the same sleeping quarters is just another way to make homosexuals feel more comfortable.”²⁴

Veith adds that at Swarthmore College and Haverford College, homosexual groups claimed that it was “heterosexist” to require roommates to be of the same sex. He continues, “The reasoning went like this: A girl forced to live with a man she didn’t know would feel very uncomfortable. Besides, the straight roommate might be homophobic. In order to avoid sexual issues, gay men should be allowed to room with females.”²⁵

Another student, who identified himself as “homoflexible,” said, “I live with straight guys now, and I definitely see the sexual tensions, which have made me very uncomfortable.”²⁶

Gamma Rho Lambda, the first “lesbian sorority,” was created at Arizona State University after Sigma Phi Alpha, the first male homosexual fraternity came into existence there. Sam Holdren, a member of the male homosexual fraternity, said: “I think it’s amazing. I love it; this campus is becoming so queer-friendly and supportive, it’s wonderful.”²⁷

At Wesleyan College, students no longer have to identify themselves as male or female on their health forms. Instead, they are told to describe their “gender identity history.” Wesleyan also eliminated the word women's from the female rugby team. Why? Because several of the girls have chosen to be identified as males. One of the girls said, “We don't want people yelling, ‘Go girls.’”²⁸ Concerning the college that bears his name, John Wesley must be spinning in his grave.

Smith College students (all female) voted to eliminate female pronouns from the student constitution because “she” and “her” were “insensitive” to transgendered students. Gene Edward Veith wrote in World magazine, “Since the language only has two genders, some activists are calling for new pronouns. The most politically correct are using ‘ze’ instead of ‘he’ or ‘she’ and ‘hir’ instead of ‘him’ or ‘her.’”²⁹

Then there is the bathroom problem. The United States Students Association has urged the nation's colleges and universities to provide “gender neutral” rest rooms for transgender students, in order to “protect” them from alleged harassment and physical violence. USSA spokeswoman Kristy Ringor said, “If a person is not safe [in a rest room on a college campus], that person won't necessarily be able to go to college.”³⁰

The right of the homosexual to have housing that makes him or her feel comfortable trumps the right of a heterosexual young man and young woman to have housing that does not place them in either a sexually tempting or sexually compromising environment. In addition, those individuals who have religious objections to homosexual behavior and therefore would rather not live with someone who practices homosexual behavior are labeled “homophobes” or have their requests fall upon deaf ears. We are reminded of the words of George Orwell in his classic book Animal Farm: “All animals are equal, but some are more equal than others.”³¹

For example, ADF has been involved in several cases regarding the rights of people with sincere religious beliefs to not be forced to live with someone who practiced homosexual behavior or other behaviors that violated their beliefs. In one case, Rader v. University of Nebraska, a Christian student wished to move out of the collegemandated student housing because of the anti-Christian behaviors of the other residents. In another case, two Orthodox Jewish students who objected to the immoral atmosphere in college dormitories were denied their request to live elsewhere besides student housing. Yet, while people of faith find themselves forced to put up with behavior that offends them, those who practice homosexual behavior are catered to, at the expense of everyone else. The University of Nebraska case was a victory that affirmed the right of Christian students, while the two Jewish students lost their case.

This begs the following questions: Are these universities willing to recruit students who are serious about their religious faith with the same zeal they recruit those who practice homosexual behavior? And, second, once homosexual behavior is accepted and affirmed on the university campus, what comes next? The answers are disturbing for those who cherish religious freedom and who seek to protect their children from those who would exploit them sexually.

Those who advocate the teaching of homosexual behavior on college campuses state that it is just a way of teaching students to think critically and independently. However, that is the last thing it is. Dennis Evans, the director of credential programs at the University of California-Irvine, made the following observation, “How is it, then, that the character and content of much of the work in gay and lesbian studies so often seems to originate with the author’s need to defend, to rationalize, or to attack? The works are invariably crafted as a priori polemics, and, as such, their purposes are more political than academic, more rhetorical than scholarly. They certainly neither model nor promote independent or critical thinking.”³²

The main purpose of such “studies” is seemingly twofold: to academically affirm homosexual behavior with those who are already trapped in the lifestyle and to silence and attack anyone who disagrees (i.e., those who have biblical objections to such behavior).

Jeremy Beer, a former student at Purdue University, remembers the following remarks by his philosophy teacher during the first day of class: “While you are in this class, you will be expected to be an agnostic or atheist. Anyone with sincere religious beliefs will be expected to take off his ‘religious hat’ when he enters this class and replace it with an agnostic one. That’s the only way philosophy can proceed. Does anyone have a problem with that?”³³

Edmund White, a homosexual professor at Princeton University (which was founded by devout Christians), openly wrote about his hostility to Christianity: “It seems to me that the biggest enemy to homosexuality is Christianity. ...I hate it when gays try to accommodate Christianity and create their own gay group. ...Any selfrespecting gay should be an atheist.”³⁴

At the University of Notre Dame, the school recently held its first “queer film festival.” Nicholas Sakurai of the pro-homosexual United States Student Association said, “The landscape has changed. Young people are coming out in droves in high school since the ‘90s. They’re now in college and challenging administrators who would deny them a place in campus life.”³⁵

Sadly, this same attitude is prevalent on other university campuses originally founded by Christians. Around every turn, those students who hold religious beliefs are ridiculed and vilified, and much of this can be attributed to the work of homosexual activists. While homosexual students are recruited, religious students are vilified and, in many cases, discriminated against.

At Tufts University in Massachusetts, the InterVarsity Christian Fellowship chapter faced expulsion from campus because it would not allow an avowed lesbian to hold a leadership position with the group. She appealed to the student senate, which took away the chapter’s access to campus facilities and funding because it “violated” the school’s anti-discrimination policy, even though the group made it very clear that the members believed homosexual behavior violated their organization’s core biblical beliefs.

The chapter was allowed back on campus only after a public backlash. However, InterVarsity was put on probation for “intolerance.” Eventually, it was allowed to include adherence to biblical teachings as a qualification for leadership.³⁶ Nevertheless, the chapter's leaders were subjected to campus "tolerance" education, described by Gregory Fung, the president of the chapter: "We did what they asked us to do. We went to their tolerance classes. You think the institutions that teach tolerance won't turn around and bite you. But they do. We thought the people who taught all the classes would be tolerant. No way. They were determined to cure us of our intolerance."³⁷

So-called tolerance, as Gregory Fung found out, really means intolerance for any viewpoint that does not affirm homosexual behavior. What happened at Tufts University is just the tip of the iceberg when it comes to the suppression of religious freedoms of Christians and other people of faith on college campuses.

Steve Hayner, the president of InterVarsity, put it succinctly: "We have had more challenges to our basic right to exist on campus settings during the past two years than in the previous fifty-five combined. It's not just us—this is hitting Catholics and Muslims and others. What we are seeing is a growing challenge to religious free speech."³⁸

The University of North Carolina and Rutgers University threatened to revoke university recognition of the InterVarsity chapters unless it modified its charter to allow non-Christians or those who practice behaviors contrary to Scripture to be leaders. At UNC, the administration finally agreed to not revoke the recognition of InterVarsity, but Rutgers held steadfast. Alan Kors, of the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education, said: "UNC couldn't defend in public what it wasn't willing to do in private. Everybody on campus would immediately see the absurdity ' if an evangelical Christian who believed homosexuality to be a sin tried to become president of the university's Bisexual, Gay, and Lesbian Alliance. The administration would have led candlelight vigils on behalf of diversity and free expression."³⁹

Talk show host Laura Ingraham agreed: "One can only imagine if a group of devout Christians tried to join a Rutgers lesbian student group. The Christian students would probably be brought up on disciplinary charges, accused of violating Rutgers' 'principle of community.' ...Perhaps if it changed its name to InterVarsity Students for Intramural Sex, it would not be bothered by intolerant campus bureaucrats."⁴⁰

On March 19, 2003, after an avalanche of negative publicity and the work of Alliance Defense Fund allied attorney David French, the Rutgers administration relented and allowed the InterVarsity group to set their own standards for leadership without facing expulsion from campus. The fact that a case as obvious as this took so much time to settle demonstrates the tremendous influence that those who oppose the gospel have on college campuses today.

In fact, ADF has been involved in defending free speech and freedom of association rights for Christian groups on numerous other college campuses. We have found that many of these so-called "antidiscrimination" policies evaporate once they are brought to light for examination and college administrators quickly back down.

At Harvard University, much speech that does not affirm homosexual behavior has been effectively silenced. For example, an employee at a dining hall on campus, who had come out of homosexual behavior and accepted Christ, was vehemently attacked in the Harvard Daily Crimson, which accused him of being intolerant and promoting homosexual self-hatred. When an admissions officer was asked if dissenting views were allowed on campus with regard to homosexual behavior, he said, "Well, it's not really something one can debate about."⁴¹ At Harvard Law School's Pound Hall, there is a large oil painting that hangs in a place of honor to celebrate "Deborah A. Batts 1972: U.S. District Court Judge...and the first and only openly gay, lesbian, or bisexual member of the federal judiciary."

Even the American Red Cross has faced the wrath of homosexual activists on college campuses. Two "student legislators" at Western Oregon University launched an effort to ban Red Cross blood drives from the campus because the Red Cross (out of legitimate health concerns about the transmission of the HIV/AIDS virus) asked potential donors if they have engaged in forms of homosexual sex. Student senator Shauna Bates said, "By continuing to allow the Red Cross on campus, the university is telling all the gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender students that we don't care about you."⁴²

Yeshiva University is a private Orthodox Jewish college that adheres to traditional Jewish teaching that homosexual behavior is sinful. Two lesbians who wanted to have access to married student housing for themselves and their partners sued the university after their request was denied. In what has chilling ramifications for the religious freedom for any person or organization that holds to a biblical view of homosexual behavior, the court has ruled against the university.⁴³

This case could help establish a legal precedent to force private religious colleges to not only give homosexual partners the same housing as married couples, but to force them to violate their core beliefs. This is something that the radical homosexual activists and their allies are very much aware of and will most likely exploit in the future.

ACLU attorney Matt Coles said, "It's a fabulous ruling. I think the fact that it's a private organization helps make it clear that it's unfair for anyone to use marriage as a qualification for anything as long as gay people are excluded from same-sex marriage."⁴⁴ Thus, the radical homosexual activists and their allies got a double whammy in this case: forcing religious organizations to violate their beliefs while promoting legalized same-sex marriage as the solution to the problem.

Mandatory Funding

Two hundred years ago, Thomas Jefferson said: "[To] compel a man to furnish contributions of money for the propagation of opinions which he disbelieves and abhors, is sinful and tyrannical."⁴⁵ This tyranny is occurring on almost daily basis on university campuses through mandatory student fees to fund radical homosexual and other left-leaning organizations.

Homosexual activists on university campuses not only want to silence or even banish groups that do not affirm homosexual behavior; they want people with sincere religious beliefs in opposition to such behavior to fund their agenda. An example of this is the case of Southworth v. Board of Regents University of Wisconsin System.⁴⁶

In 1996, Scott Southworth, who was then a second-year law student, was told to pay $331.50 to the University of Wisconsin for his mandatory student fee over and above his regular tuition. If he did not do so, he could not get his grades or graduate from the university. Scott paid up, but as a committed Christian, he wanted to know where his money was going.

After some investigation, he was outraged. A portion of his student fee was being used to fund groups that advocated homosexual behavior. Scott and other Christian students made repeated attempts to convince university officials to let them “opt out” of paying the mandatory fees, based on religious freedom and First Amendment grounds. The administration refused to budge.

Scott felt he was left with little choice but to take formal legal action against the university. God led Scott to ADF, which was able to connect him with Jordan Lorence, now an ADF vice president. Lorence is one of the leading constitutional lawyers in the country. At every court level, Scott won, but the university kept appealing the case.

The case finally made it all the way to the United States Supreme Court, which remanded (returned) the case 9-0 back to the U.S. District Court to decide one critical issue: Do University of Wisconsin student government leaders who allocate mandatory student fees do so on a viewpoint-neutral basis, or are some funded groups given preference over others?

The homosexual activists and their allies crowed throughout the media that they had won a decisive victory to continue the funding of their agenda by those who had sincere religious objections to homosexual behavior. But Scott Southworth and ADF were committed to keep up the fight.

On October 1, 2002, the U.S Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh District ruled that aspects of the University of Wisconsin's student fee system remained unconstitutional, and it did not vindicate the university's position on mandatory student fees that we have opposed for years.

The university had argued that it should not have to make any changes in its policy to protect the rights of students forced to pay mandatory student activity fees to fund groups opposed to their personal beliefs. In fact, because of the litigation in Southworth, the university changed many discriminatory policies. However, in this case, the university was hoping that the court would rule that it could return to its previous policy that discriminated against Christians and Christian groups. The previous policy denied funding to religious groups. On that point, the university lost.

Interestingly, the court upheld portions of the university's policy that had been changed only after the ADF-funded litigation. As a result, here's where things now stand:

- Student government members must vow not to discriminate on the basis of viewpoint in their decision-making.
- The ban on funding religious groups and political groups has been repealed.
- The university established an appeals process for groups denied funding.
- When the student government denies funding to an applicant group, the student government must record the vote and state in writing why they denied funding to a group.

The key point is that if the university does not follow these guidelines imposed by the court, students cannot be required to pay the mandatory student activity fee. At least those who oppose the use of their monies to promote homosexual behavior have some avenue of recourse.

Intellectualizing Disordered Sexual Behavior

Lately homosexual behavior on college campuses is taking a dangerous new turn—the promotion of sexual relations between adults and children, known as pedophilia.

We mention the new promotion of pedophilia in the context of talking about the influence of homosexual behavior on college campuses, because, despite all objections to the contrary, the two are often intrinsically linked.*

* The American Psychiatric Association's Diagnostic and Statistical Manual (DSM-IV-TR) defines pedophilia as “sexual activity with a prepubescent child (generally 13 years of age or younger).” We, however, use a broader definition to include postpubescent children.

Psychologist Eugene Abel found that homosexuals “sexually molest young boys with an incidence that is occurring from five times greater than the molestation of girls.”⁴⁷ A 1992 study by researchers K. Freud and R. I. Watson discovered that homosexual males are three times more likely than heterosexual males to engage in pedophilia and that the average pedophile has sex with 20 to 150 boys before he is caught.⁴⁸ A 1988 study in the Archives of Sexual Behavior found that 86 percent of pedophiles identified themselves as either homosexual or bisexual.⁴⁹

And there is a definite link as well between child molestation and later homosexual behavior. In a 2001 study, it was found that 46 percent of homosexuals and 22 percent of lesbians reported that they had been molested by a homosexual during childhood, compared to 7 percent of heterosexual men and 1 percent of heterosexual women.⁵⁰

While trying to downplay the link between pedophilia and homosexual behavior in the media, many homosexual academics proudly proclaim their support for sex with children. For example, the homosexual newspaper, the San Francisco Sentinel, wrote, “The love between man and boys is at the foundation of homosexuality.”⁵¹ An article in the Journal of Homosexuality added that parents should view pedophiles “not as a rival or competitor, not as a theft of their property, but as a partner in the boy's upbringing, someone to be welcomed into their home.”⁵²

A 1995 issue of Guide magazine (which also published the original homosexual manifesto by Kirk and Madsen) stated: “We can be proud that the gay movement has been home to a few voices who have had the courage to say out loud that children are naturally sexual [and] deserve the right to sexual expression with whoever they choose....Instead of fearing being labeled pedophiles, we must proudly proclaim that sex is good, including children's sexuality....We must do it for the children's sake.”⁵³

A shot across the bow in this area occurred back in 1998 when the American Psychological Association (APA) published a study by three academics that concluded that sex between adults and minors might be a “positive experience” for the child.⁵⁴ Ironically, the American Psychiatric Association, which provides guidelines for treatment of mental disorders, says: “These activities [pedophilia] are commonly explained with excuses and rationalizations that they have ‘educational value’ for the child, that the child derives ‘sexual pleasure’ from them, or that the child was ‘sexually provocative’ ...”⁵⁵

Congress and the mainstream media roundly denounced the APA study. The U.S. House of Representatives voted 355-0 to condemn the study.⁵⁶

The promotion of pedophilia among college professors and other academics is nothing new. Consider the following examples:

- In 1996, San Francisco State University Professor Gilbert Herdt stated in an interview with Paidika (an academic journal that promotes pedophilia) that “the category ‘child’ is a rhetorical device for inflaming what is really an irrational set of attitudes against sex with children.”⁵⁷
- John Money, professor emeritus of Pediatrics and Medical Psychology at Johns Hopkins School of Medicine, wrote in his 1987 book Boys on Their Contacts with Men: A Study of Sexually Expressed Friendships that those who oppose pedophilia do so because of “self-imposed, moralistic ignorance.”⁵⁸
- The Institute for the Advanced Study of Human Sexuality in San Francisco (whose executive officer testified on the “educational value” of pornography as an “expert witness” on behalf of hard-core pornographers nationwide) published an article, “Sexual Rights of Children,” which said that there was “considerable evidence” that there is no “inherent harm in sexual expression in childhood.”⁵⁹ *
- Penn State University hosted a conference on “Women's Health and Wellness” featuring Patrick Califia-Rice, an outspoken proponent of pedophilia and sadomasochism. Rice has stated, “Boy-lovers and the lesbians who have young lovers...are not child molesters. The child abusers are priests, teachers, therapists, cops, and parents who force their stale morality on to the young people in their custody. Instead of condemning pedophiles for their involvement with lesbian and gay youth, they should be commending them.”⁶⁰

* Alan extensively cross-examined this “expert” on his views that even the most extreme forms of hardcore pornography could never be legally “obscene.”

John Leo, columnist for U.S. News and World Report, noted that he had seen a trend toward the promotion of pedophilia among academics as early as 1981.⁶¹ Leo mentioned his earlier observation in a recent column dealing with a book published by the University of Minnesota in 2002 titled “Harmful to Minors: The Perils of Protecting Children from Sex” by Dr. Judith Levine. The book features an introduction by former U.S. Surgeon General Joycelyn Elders, who had advocated the teaching of masturbation and handing out condoms in public schools during her controversial term in the early days of the Clinton administration.⁶²

In her book, Levine says that the Dutch age of consent law is a “good model” because it allows for sex between an adult and a child between the ages of twelve and sixteen if the child consents.⁶³ In a phone interview, she added, “The research shows us that in some minority of cases, young—even quite young—people can have a positive [sexual] experience with an adult. That's what the research shows.”⁶⁴ Levine believes that the real danger to children is not pedophiles but parents who “project their fears and their own lust for young flesh onto the mythically dangerous child molester.”⁶⁵

The University of Minnesota published this book under the guise of “academic freedom,” a rationale often used by homosexual activists to introduce the promotion of homosexual behavior on university campuses. Yet, whenever Christians or other people of faith seek to express views on an issue, they are not protected under the same academic freedom argument. They are, as we have already seen, either silenced by the school's “tolerance” or “diversity” speech codes or claims of “separation of church and state,” or they are thrown off campus entirely.

Professor Harris Mirkin of the University of Missouri-Kansas City published a study (funded with taxpayer money) that compared the “moral panic” about pedophilia to previous “panics” about feminism and homosexuality.⁶⁶ His article was supported by Sheldon E. Steinbach, general counsel for the American Council on Education, who said, “The appropriate place to debate the legitimacy of a professor's thought is in the marketplace of ideas....Today's heresy often becomes tomorrow's orthodoxy” [emphasis ours].⁶⁷

That last statement is extremely chilling but also very true. Just as homosexual behavior has now become accepted orthodoxy on many university campuses and Christians and Orthodox Jews have become the heretics, we are going down the same road with pedophilia. As the homosexual agenda continues to sexualize our culture, other once-forbidden behaviors are exalted as just more alternative lifestyles. The result is that the well-being of millions of children is at risk, along with the right of parents to protect their children from sexual exploitation.

The Wall Street Journal noted this when it wrote: “It is Dr. Mirkin's view, published in the Journal of Homosexuality, that the ‘panic over pedophilia’ is much like the way people once viewed female sexuality and homosexuality.

Pedophilia, he notes, has been permissible or obligatory in some cultures in certain periods of history. We might point out that the same can be said of human sacrifice.”⁶⁸

We received a heartbreaking reminder of the dangers of the promotion of pedophilia and other deviant sexual behaviors from an e-mail we received at the Alliance Defense Fund. We must note up front that the pedophile in question here is a heterosexual (and pedophilia is not strictly limited to those who engage in homosexual behavior; however, it is prevalent). This e-mail shows how the promotion of pedophilia in academia poses a significant threat to our children, regardless of whether the abused child is a boy or a girl:

I am writing to you today because I have had enough, and I am wondering if your organization can help! It is so hard as a parent to raise our child in a secular, increasingly sexual and violent society we live in. I am very disturbed and even angry about the trend today of publishing “scholarly” books about the topics of child-adult sex, and pedophilia. These books are published under the pretense of furthering academic debate, yet the real goal is to legitimize sinful, deviant behavior.

I am particularly angry about the publication of Harmful to Minors: The Perils of Protecting Children from Sex by Judith Levine....It advocates sexual relationships between children and adults. Ms. Levine says that children can handle sexual relationships, and it is the fault of the parents and the “religious right” that these relationships are not treated as healthy and natural.

One particularly disturbing thing I read in an interview with Ms. Levine discusses Internet predators. Ms. Levine claims that stories about pedophiles and sexual predators on the Internet have been overblown by the media and by parents. She claims that children can “handle the sexual chat” they might encounter online. I beg to differ.

Here in [our] area, we have had 3 children in the past 2 months who have been sexually assaulted by pedophiles first encountered on the Internet. Last night there was a tragic story on our local news about a 13-year-old girl from Katy, Texas, just outside of Houston. She met a 34-year-old man in a chat room. After a couple of weeks of what Ms. Levine would call “harmless sexual chat,” this pedophile sent the little girl a one-way bus ticket to Seattle. He instructed the girl in how to remove her computer harddrive so no one could find them together. Unfortunately, the girl chose to make the trip to Seattle. Ms. Levine would say the girl should be allowed to make this decision for herself as a sexual being. I wonder if she condones what happened next. Tragically, this girl was brutally sexually assaulted and raped over a period of five days. When she was finally able to call for help, the police rescued her. Now, police in Seattle have learned that he assaulted at least 2 other girls, 12 and 13, and was attempting to lure an 11-year-old girl to his apartment.

This little girl got on the bus of her own free will. However, I do not believe for one second that she was able to comprehend the consequences of her decision. Sick people like Ms. Levine want to push the idea that sex between a minor and an adult can be a good thing. This poor little girl will be scarred for life because of this terrible experience ...

My greatest fear is that more pedophiles and sexual predators will use material in this book to justify their evil plans to harm children. They will say, "Look, this scholarly review says that what I am doing is OK. ..."

This tragic story is an example of what happens to the most innocent members of our society, when homosexual behavior, pedophilia, and other sexual disorders are not only seen as normal, but are given credence by those in academia. This is where the path of acceptance of homosexual behavior in our nation's universities and academia as a whole is leading. And just as college campuses have been the first wave in societal change, what is being promoted there today will become orthodoxy in our culture tomorrow.

Therefore, not only is the religious freedom to share and live the gospel, as well as freedom of conscience, either under attack or totally denied on college campuses, the freedom for parents to protect their children from sexual predators is under assault as well. What has occurred in academia is just a microcosm of the greater goal of homosexual activists: to use the power of the government to silence and punish those who do not affirm homosexual behavior. And just as the anti-war radicals of the 1960s found their ways into the corridors of power in the 1970s and beyond, the radical homosexual activists on university campuses today have and will continue to take greater and greater roles in determining American public policy for the future.

The Family under Attack

The storm that will break over America after but a single vote legalizes gay marriage will surely be a moment of decisive social reckoning. In the wake of the first legalization, the battle over gay marriage will be characterized by rapidly escalating confrontation, followed by a radical, nationwide resolution...As soon as even a single state legalizes same-sex marriage, the nation will be plunged into a furious legal, political, and cultural struggle. The bitter and ongoing polarization in even an exceedingly liberal state like Vermont is a clear foreshadowing of the conflict to come. As legal and political battles over traveling couples spread from state-to-state, the chaos will multiply and the courts, already inclined to mandate same-sex marriage, will grow increasingly receptive to arguments that the Full Faith and Credit Clause demands national gay marriage. And the even stronger arguments for nationally mandated gay marriage under the Constitution's equal-protection clause will also find favor in the courts.

—Stanley Kurtz, writing in National Review

What Stanley Kurtz warned about happened on November 18, 2003. When the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court, in a 4-3 decision, citing the Provincial Court of Ontario as a source for legal precedent, ruled that same-sex couples have a newly discovered legal right to “marry,” the court radically redefined marriage for the citizens of the Commonwealth—ignoring nearly four hundred years of state and national history and stripping marriage of its core purpose of uniting men and women as the basic unit of the family. One judge's vote has changed the course of history. America's moment of reckoning had come.*

* The same court ruled on March 21, 2004, that the state's law against incest did not apply to step-parents.

As Jeff Jacoby wrote in the Boston Globe, “This job of the judiciary is to interpret the law, but this was no mere interpretation. It was a wholesale rewriting of the law to make it say and mean things it had never said or meant before.”¹

Why is this battle so important? Because it goes to the very heart of God's plan for marriage and the family. When anyone tinkers with that plan, the emotional, physical, and spiritual well-being of future generations is put at severe risk.

For instance, in Europe a generation of children is growing up with no idea of what a traditional family is like. In countries such as Norway, Sweden, Iceland, and Denmark, it has been decades since many children have known what it is like to live in a traditional family with a mother and a father. More than half of the children in Europe are born to unwed mothers. In Sweden, 54 percent of all children are born out of wedlock. In Norway, the figure is 49 percent, in Denmark, 46 percent, and in Iceland, it is over 65 percent.² In northern Norway, the illegitimacy problem is so bad that in 2002 an astonishing 82.27 percent of children were born out of wedlock.³ And, in America, 26.7 percent of children born to white mothers and 68.8 percent of children born to black mothers are out of wedlock.⁴ Over 43 percent of all children born in America will live in a single-parent home sometime in their childhood.⁵

Why has this occurred in Europe and why is it beginning to grow in America? Much of it has to do with the years of government subsidization of single parents and now the new push for “domestic partners” for homosexual couples, which also discourages marriage for heterosexuals. According to Erik Kofod of Denmark, “Because of the social welfare systems in Scandinavia, a woman has to be stupid not to realize that she has a better situation if she is not married. It's an appalling system that motivates people to do things that are unhealthy for society and for children.”⁶

But it is not only the social welfare system that has caused this problem. Same-sex “marriage” or its equivalents have increasingly cheapened marriage. The situation in Europe is important because the homosexual agenda is seeking to send us down that same path. With the growth of domestic-partner ordinances, civil unions in Vermont, and the attempts to change laws elsewhere (such as the recommendation of the American Law Institute, which played a major role in bringing “no-fault” divorce to state law as a great “solution” to “archaic” divorce laws), marriage is being increasingly cheapened to the point that it could soon become irrelevant.

Stanley Kurtz, who holds a doctorate in social anthropology from Harvard, has commented on this frequently. He says, “Gay marriage is part and parcel of a whole new stage of marital decline—a stage still relatively unfamiliar in the United States. In this new stage of marital decline, couples don't just cohabit before they become parents. Couples cohabit after they become parents. Because gay marriage helps to break apart the ideas of marriage and parenthood, it is closely associated with this advanced stage of marital decline.”

We can win the freedom to marry. Possibly within five years.

—Evan Wolfson, Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund

Kurtz adds,

The National Swedish Social Insurance Board recently convened a panel in which two legal experts recommended changes in Swedish family law. One invoked same-sex parenting to argue for legal recognition of three-and even four-parent families. According to this scholar, the antiquated two-parent standard virtually forces lesbian couples to find anonymous sperm donors, rather than form a more complex family with, say, gay sperm donors with whom they feel close. The polyamory movement has reached Sweden, and there are now Swedes who would seize on triple or quadruple parenting to usher in legalized polyamory....With so many dissolved cohabitators and gay parents, why not do away with the two-parent standard altogether? So as Sweden combines formal gay marriage with adoption rights for same-sex couples, the dawn of quadruple parenting and polyamory looms. So much for [the] claim that formal gay marriage will reinforce the link between marriage and parenthood.⁷

Marriage and the family are under attack by homosexual activists and their allies, both in America and internationally. At a conference at the University of London called “Legal Recognition of Same-Sex Marriage: A Conference on National European and International Law,” one of the main themes of discussion was whether marriage should exist at all. The attendees laid out strategies to circumvent each nation's democratic process via the judicial system to force their governments to sanction and accept same-sex marriage. There was also discussion about ultimately abolishing marriage so adults could be free to pursue any sexual relationship they want with no legal restrictions whatsoever.⁸

Parts of Europe have already proceeded well down the road to the abolition of marriage. Same-sex marriage is already legal in the Netherlands,⁹ and many other European countries have some sort of formal recognition of same-sex couples. In January 2003, Belgium joined the Netherlands to officially recognize same-sex marriages.¹⁰ In April 2004, Spain's new socialist government announced that it also plans to legalize homosexual “marriages.”¹¹

In Norway, the nation's finance minister, Per-Kristian Foss, “married” his homosexual partner via a “partnership,” which means that they have “almost the same legal rights as married heterosexual couples” but not the title.¹²

In Germany, a similar partnership law was passed. The first lesbian couple to take advantage of the law, Angelika and Gudrun Pannier, dressed themselves in black tuxedos and white bow ties. They exchanged rings and ended their ceremony with a kiss. Angelika said, “It is a great honor to be Germany's first lesbian couple to have a legal partnership. It is very exciting. It is also very important to have my family beside us on this great step for civil and human rights....There is still a lot more to do, but it is the first step.”¹³

Finally, Europe's top court recently ruled that all laws that do not recognize transsexual marriages are in violation of European law. The court's decision applies to all members of the European Union.¹⁴

These steps are just a precursor to the wholesale destruction of marriage. Domestic-partner polices and partnerships eventually weaken the institution of marriage for heterosexuals. In 1999, David Frum wrote vividly about how “civil solidarity pacts” had under-mined marriage in France. His words have chilling repercussions for America as we start to head down the same path:

[France created] a new legal status for homosexuals, analogous to marriage, but not exactly the same, called a “civil solidarity pact.” Couples linked in civil solidarity pacts would file joint tax returns, receive all the welfare and employment benefits of spouses, and enjoy the inheritance rights of husbands and wives....To qualify for all of these advantages, a couple would need only to appear before a court clerk and sign on the dotted line. Either partner could end the pact by providing three months' notice in writing. ...

Such pacts are obviously very convenient things, and it rapidly became evident that one way to mitigate political opposition to them was to make them available to just about everybody. After two years of haggling, the benefits of the pacts have been extended to cohabitating heterosexual couples, to widowed sisters living together, even to priests and their housekeepers. The French have crafted a grand new alternative to marriage, one that offers almost all of marriage's legal benefits and imposes many fewer of its legal obligations. Given French society's already growing distaste for the institution of marriage (about a million French heterosexual couples live together unwed), there is every reason to expect the new pact gradually to crowd out and replace marriage. It's a familiar story in the history of the evolution of law. Once upon a time, a contract became a contract only if it was sealed with wax in an elaborate ceremony. Then courts began to recognize less formal written and oral contracts as nearly equally binding, and soon the old form disappeared.

In this case, however, the disappearance of the old form imposes consequences on innocent third parties: children. Already, 40 percent of France's children are born outside marriage. The cohabitating couples who have these children may imagine that they are providing their children a home just as stable as that provided by marriage, but they are deluding themselves. In France, as everywhere else, the average cohabitational relationship lasts about five years. Apologists for cohabitation praise it as a less burdensome alternative to marriage; the truth is that it is a near-certain prelude to fatherlessness.

What has all of this to do with gay marriage? Everything. The argument over gay marriage is only incidentally and secondarily an argument over gays. What it is first and fundamentally is an argument over marriage. Unless a government is sufficiently powerful and disdainful of religion to crush the objections of the local churches—and few governments are—gay marriage will turn out in practice to mean the creation of an alternative form of legal coupling that will be available to homosexuals and heterosexuals alike. Gay marriage, as the French are vividly demonstrating, does not extend marital rights; it abolishes marriage and puts a new, flimsier institution in its place.

The gay marriage argument is only the latest round in an argument over marriage and the family that began some 35 years ago. It pits defenders of marriage against those who condemn it as stultifying and oppressive. It pits the wishes of adults against the needs of children, the urgings of the self against the obligations of family. As such, the argument is a much more evenly matched battle than a gay-straight fight would ever be. The battle has been lost in France and Scandinavia. It is well on the way to being lost in Britain and Canada. And it is very much in danger of being lost in the United States.¹⁵

Radical homosexual activists recognize that domestic-partner policies, civil unions, and so forth will eventually destroy the institution of male-female marriage. Chris Crain, writing in the homosexual newspaper the New York Blade, acknowledged this: "In the English-speaking world, the faux marriages have been called 'domestic partnerships.' In France, they're called Pacte civil de solidarite, or PACS....The effect on 'traditional marriage' has been dramatic. In France, where PACS first became available in 1999, some 14,000 couples signed up the first year, and almost half of them heterosexual....Back in the States, many heterosexual couples are also choosing domestic partnership [DP] over marriage for many of the same reasons."¹⁶

For the children, it makes no difference whether their parents are married or not. Traditional family values are not important to us anymore. They are something we do research on, like a fossil.

—Ebba Witt-Brattstroem, Stockholm University professor of comparative literature

France is not the only country that has seen this trend. In 1970, less than 5 percent of live births were outside of marriage. When the first court challenge to traditional marriage occurred there, the rate was approximately 12 percent. In 1991, when same-sex couples were allowed to symbolically "register" as "married" couples, the rate was still approximately the same. Then rates started to skyrocket. In 1997, Dutch same-sex couples were allowed to officially "register" with the state. At that point, approximately 18 percent of all births were to unwed couples. Three years later, same-sex "marriage" was legalized, and the rate had risen to approximately 25 percent. In the three years after the legalization of same-sex marriage, the rate increased from approximately 25 percent to 31 percent. There is a trend happening here.¹⁷

Syndicated columnist Suzanne Fields asked the rhetorical question, "Will heterosexuals consider civil unions, too? It's difficult enough for the confirmed bachelor to commit to a woman already. Might he seek a lesser commitment as something desirable, avoiding the expensive divorce courts where half the marriages end?"¹⁸

Gene Edward Veith, who writes for World magazine, summed up the consequences for American society if marriage continues to be redefined and devalued:

Under the emerging framework, there will be no difference between a married couple, a homosexual couple, or a couple in a temporary sexual relationship. As many advocates are putting it, "What difference does it make to the government or an employer whom you are having sex with?"

This sort of reductionism—a spouse is nothing more than a sex partner, so a sex partner is the same as a spouse—misses the point of what marriage is and what its role in society amounts to....So far, governments are resisting same-sex marriages. But instead, marriage is being defined down. As marriage becomes unnecessary—not just for job benefits but for adopting children, inheriting property, and being socially acceptable—the whole nation will be “living in sin.”¹⁹

Radical homosexual activists readily acknowledge that the redefinition of marriage is just a tool in their greater agenda to reorder society. While they will not admit it, children are just pawns to be used as they strive for total acceptance of their behavior. Consider this quote from Evan Wolfson, former president of the Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund, a leading lobbying and legal action group for homosexual marriage: “We can win the freedom to marry....We can seize the terms of the debate, tell our diverse stories, engage the non-gay persuadable public, enlist allies, work the courts and the legislatures in several states, and achieve a legal breakthrough within five years. I’m talking about not just any legal breakthrough but an actual change in the law of at least one state, ending discrimination in civil marriage and permitting same-sex couples to lawfully wed. This won’t just be a change in the law either; it will be a change in society. For if we do it right, the struggle to win the freedom to marry will bring much more along the way” [emphasis added].²⁰

George W. Dent Jr., writing in The Journal of Law and Politics, writes that once same-sex marriage is affirmed, then other forms of “marriage” will quickly be affirmed as well, such as polygamy, endogamy (the marriage of blood relatives), bestiality, and child marriage.²¹ In fact, the policy guide of the American Civil Liberties Union calls for the legalization of polygamy, stating, “The ACLU believes that criminal and civil laws prohibiting or penalizing the practice of plural marriage violate constitutional protections of freedom of expression and association, freedom of religion, and privacy for personal relationships among consenting adults.”²²

Acting in lock-step with homosexual activists, the New York Times, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, and Boston Globe recently agreed to add announcements of same-sex “unions” to their wedding announcement page. According to the Gay and Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation (GLAAD), more than 135 papers now run such announcements.²³

Once marriage is redefined for same-sex partners, it opens the Pandora’s box to be redefined for any assortment of individuals. After all, if two men or two women have the right to be married, why not two men and three women, or two men, one woman, and a dog and a chimpanzee?

Redefining Monogamy

The argument to redefine monogamy is already being advanced by Marvin Ellison, a so-called “gay theologian” at the United Church of Christ’s Bangor (Maine) Seminary. Ellison, an ordained PCUSA pastor, states that threesomes and foursomes should be considered for “marriage,” as well as bisexuals. In fact, he ventures that perhaps marriage should be abolished all together (which we will see later is the ultimate goal of radical homosexual activists).

Ellison, who was married to a woman but then left her for a homosexual partner because in his words his marriage was not “user-friendly,” says, “How exactly does the number of partners affect the moral quality of a relationship? Could it be that limiting intimate partnerships to only two people at a time is no guarantee of avoiding exploitation?” He adds that it is “troubling” that ethicists would see “marriage is a necessary social control mechanism to tame men's sexuality.”²⁴

One of the first recipients of a same-sex “marriage” license in Massachusetts, Joseph Yarbrough openly proclaimed his “open marriage,” saying, “I think it's possible to love more than one person and have more than one partner, not in the polygamist sense. In our case it is, we have, an open marriage.”²⁵

University of Chicago law professor Elizabeth Emens has stated that our country should “rethink” its opposition to multiple sex partners as equal to marriage. In her book, Monogamy's Law: Compulsory Monogamy and Polyamorous Existence, she states that resistance to polyamory (loving more than one person in a multiple person group) “may merely be an artifact of historical associations with patriarchal polygyny...” She adds that we should rewrite our marriage laws dealing with adultery to permit consensual extra-marital relationships. Emens has done pro bono work for the Lesbian and Gay Immigration Rights Task Force.²⁶

The San Francisco Chronicle reported that polyamorists are already jumping on the same-sex “marriage” bandwagon to push for marital rights of their own. “Polyamory is never having to say you've broken up,” said Sally Amsbury, who shares her sex life with her husband and what she called her two “significant others.” Amsbury added she is bisexual, her husband is heterosexual, and her two “significant others” are bisexual. One of her “significant others” lives in West Hollywood with his boyfriend, and the other, named Conly, lives in Santa Rosa, California. “I wear a wedding ring for my husband and a bracelet for Conly,” she explained.

Jasmine Wallace, president of Unitarian Universalists for Polyamory Awareness, added, “Polyamory is not an alternative to monogamy. It's an alternative to cheating. For some of us, monogamy doesn't work, and cheating was just abhorrent to me.”²⁷

In Utah, a civil rights attorney has filed a lawsuit challenging the state's ban on polygamy. The ACLU's Utah executive director said that the state would “have to step up to prove that a polygamous relationship is detrimental to society...the model of the nuclear family as we know it in the immediate past is unique, and may not be necessarily the best model. Maybe it's time to have this discussion.”²⁸

The polygamists' attorney added, “It doesn't bother anyone, (and with) no compelling state interest in what you do in your own home with consenting adults, you should be allowed do so (engage in polygamy).”²⁹

These examples show one place homosexual activists and their allies want to go with the redefinition of monogamy. The concept of marriage for many homosexuals is radically different from what God designed and what many Americans have held as the commonly held view of how one is to conduct oneself in a marital relationship. Lesbian writer Camille Paglia, hardly a friend of those who hold biblical values, wrote the following about monogamy and same-sex marriage: “After a period of optimism about the long-range potential of gay men's one-on-one relationships, gay magazines are starting to acknowledge the more relaxed standards operating here, with recent articles celebrating the bigger bang of sex with strangers or proposing ‘monogamy without fidelity’—the latest Orwellian formulation to excuse having your cake and eating it too.”³⁰

Openly homosexual author Andrew Sullivan has admitted that most homosexuals’ “understanding of the sexual commitment in a marriage is considerably broader than what nearly all heterosexual couples would tolerate.”³¹ He added that homosexuals have a “need for extramarital outlets” and therefore same-sex marriage will make adultery more acceptable for all married couples.³² So every heterosexual husband who has ever been tempted to stray can argue, based on this logic, that he was just practicing “monogamy without fidelity” and meeting his “need for extramarital outlets” and therefore did not violate his marriage vows when he committed adultery.

In a study done by researchers at the University of Vermont (funded by the pro-homosexual Gill Foundation), this redefinition of marriage comes into sharper focus. In the study, conducted by UVM psychologists Dr. Esther D. Rothbaum and Dr. Sondra E. Solomon, of married heterosexual couples, homosexual couples who had entered into a “civil union,” and homosexual couples that had not entered into such a union, they found the following: While 79 percent of married heterosexual felt that non-monogamy was wrong, only 34 percent of homosexual men not in civil unions and 50 percent in civil unions thought it was wrong to engage in non-monogamous sexual behavior. More than 50 percent of civil union couples said that they entered into the union to make a political statement. One other interesting note: lesbians in the study made $15,000 more than married heterosexual women in the workforce.³³

In an ADF-funded case over child custody between a Christian heterosexual mother and her former spouse, an activist homosexual and his partner, the homosexual testified that he was “monogamous.” On cross-examination he explained this as meaning that he and his partner were committed and faithful to each other, but Thursday night was “date night” when they would go to locations such as a bar and seek out a casual sex partner for that one evening, one time.

As one observer of the homosexual movement has warned, “Gay activists are sexual Marxists. Legitimizing same-sex unions is a warm-up act. Ultimately they want to eliminate any barriers, any signposts, that limit or channel the exercise of human sexuality.”³⁴ blatantly honest they are of their goals. They do not necessarily want marriage so that they can take advantage of its benefits. They want marriage so they can take a wrecking ball to the institution itself.

It actually seems that the more radical the homosexual activist, the more

For example, homosexual activist William Eskridge says that he hopes gay marriage “will dethrone the traditional family based on blood relationships in favor of families we choose.”³⁵ Michelangelo Signorile has told activists “to fight for same-sex marriage and its benefits, and then, once granted, redefine the institution of marriage completely...to debunk a myth and radically alter an archaic institution....The most subversive action lesbians and gay men can undertake...is to transform the notion of ‘family’ entirely.”³⁶ This means marriage will be no better than anonymous sodomy in a bathhouse.

The first bond of society is marriage.

—Cicero

Lesbian activist Barbara Cox wrote, “Yes, we must be aware of the oppressive history that weddings symbolize. We must work to ensure that we do not simply accept whole cloth an institution that symbolizes the loss and harm felt by women. But I find it difficult to understand how two lesbians, standing together openly and proudly, can be seen as accepting that institution? What is more anti-patriarchal and rejecting of an institution that carries the patriarchal power imbalance into most households than clearly stating that women can commit to one another with no man in sight? With no claim of dominion or control, but instead equality and respect. I understand the fears of those who condemn us for our weddings, but I believe they fail to look beyond the symbol and cannot see the radical claim we are making.”³⁷

In his excellent article, “The End of Marriage in Scandinavia,” Stanley Kurtz talks about the observations of Danish homosexual social theorist Henning Bech and Norwegian sociologist Rune Halvorsen. According to Kurtz, “Bech, perhaps Scandinavia’s most prominent gay thinker, dismisses as an ‘implausible’ claim that gay marriage promotes monogamy. He treats the ‘conservative case’ (that same-sex ‘marriage’ will bring stability and monogamy to homosexual relationships) as something that served chiefly tactical purposes during a difficult political debate. According to Halvorsen, many of Norway’s gays imposed self-censorship during the marriage debate, so as to hide their opposition to marriage itself. The goal of the gay marriage movements in both Norway and Denmark, say Halvorsen and Bech, was not marriage but social approval for homosexuality.”³⁸

In fact, as homosexual couples staged rallies in support of samesex “marriage,” more radical homosexual activists expressed disgust at the actions of their colleagues. They would rather see marriage abolished all together. James Wagner, a longtime gay activist, said, “Marriage is a way that government exerts social control. I’m uncomfortable supporting it. I’m interested in changing society, not assimilation.”³⁹ Another homosexual activist, named

William Dobbs, added, “Our movement has become about lusting for weddings and lavender picket fences. It’s so embarrassing. I feel like turning in my gay card.”

Patrick Moore, another homosexual writer, said: “Marriage is a problematic goal in terms of gay sexuality...the monogamous ideal enshrined in marriage is a challenge regardless of one’s sexual orientation....Careful polling would help answer the question of whether marriage is even a widely shared goal within the gay community....In redefining what it means to be gay in America, the gay community itself is on the verge of marginalizing those who refuse to conform to a system of heterosexual morality.”⁴⁰

In New York State, Assemblywoman Deborah Glick (D-Manhattan) introduced legislation that would remove all references to marriage from the state Domestic Relations Law and turn all marriages into “civil unions.” Glick said that religious and civil unions could still be called “marriages” under her proposed legislation, but the word marriage would no longer have any legal standing.⁴¹

Despite these dissident voices in the homosexual activist movement, the majority of homosexual activists continue to march to the same drum of pushing for same-sex “marriage.” And once marriage and monogamy are redefined, they both become insignificant. It is the goal of radical homosexual activists to redefine both, and end up with a situation like parts of Europe where both marriage and the family have become meaningless.

Not surprisingly, one of the main benefits that homosexual activists see in getting married is the chance to get a “clean divorce.” Jo Ann Citron, a Boston lawyer, said, “The single most important thing you get with marriage is divorce, a predictable process by which property is divided, debt is apportioned, and arrangements are made for custody and visitation of children.”⁴²

Meanwhile much of the Church of Jesus Christ remains either confused or apathetic. According to an April 2004 poll by Greenberg Quinlan Rosner Research, Inc., of Washington, D.C., 52 percent of evangelicals oppose a federal marriage amendment that would define marriage to be between one man and one woman.⁴³ They said that the matter of same-sex “marriage” should be left up to the states despite the fact that the Full Faith and Credit Clause of the U.S. Constitution requires that states honor marriages performed in other states, unless the state has passed a Defense of Marriage Act (DOMA). For example, if you were married in Arizona, you are also legally married in Colorado if you move there and are entitled to the same rights married couples enjoy in Colorado. DOMAs prevent homosexuals from exporting samesex marriages (if legalized) created in one state to other states.

But homosexual activists know if a Federal Marriage Amendment is passed, the rest of their agenda is in trouble. Cheryl Jacques, the new head of the Human Rights Campaign, said, “If the Constitution is changed, then every arena where we’re making progress—from the courts to corporate America—is shut down.”⁴⁴

Legal Attacks on Marriage

ADF trained attorneys have supplied legal assistance related to several state legislatures drafting and passing DOMAs. When homosexual activists make their claim that DOMAs are unnecessary, they are preying on people's ignorance of this constitutional provision. They will say things like "No one is trying to push for same-sex marriage in Ohio." But they know that once one state recognizes same-sex marriage, a same-sex couple can get married in that state and then can return to their home state. The home state will be forced to recognize the couple's union because of the Full Faith and Credit Clause. DOMAs are designed to prevent states from being forced to recognize same-sex marriages from other states or those entered into in a foreign nation. This is important because of Holland's and Belgium's legalization of same-sex marriage.⁴⁵

Though there are many legal battles to redefine marriage, Christians have been able, by God's grace, to stymie many of the efforts. Here are just a few examples:

Alaska

When homosexual activists pushed for same-sex marriage in our forty-ninth state, ADF played a proactive role to stop their efforts. We brought together key lawyers and academics to formulate arguments to counter the demands put forth by the homosexual activist community. When the Anchorage Superior Court in Alaska handed down a decision in favor of same-sex marriage on February 28, 1998, an ADF trained and funded attorney, Kevin Clarkson, immediately filed on behalf of the Alaska Senate an appeal to the Alaska Supreme Court. Through his tireless efforts, Kevin and other family advocates were able to assist in preparing and supporting adoption of the legal language for an amendment barring same-sex marriage through the state's legislature. They then sued the lieutenant governor, who had tried to create ballot obstacles, and defeated the effort to keep the amendment off the Alaskan ballot (the ACLU and homosexual groups were unsuccessful in their lawsuits to get the amendment removed from the ballot). After a resounding 2-1 victory at the ballot box, ADF was heavily involved in post-election efforts to defeat legal challenges with which the homosexual activists and their allies attempted to thwart the will of the people.

After the Alaska vote, then ACLU executive director Ira Glasser showed his own personal contempt for the "will of the people" when it comes to objections to the homosexual agenda. He stated, "Today's results prove that certain fundamental issues should not be left up to majority vote."⁴⁶ *

* Sean Haley, executive director of the Boston chapter of GLSEN, has also added: "[Same-sex 'marriage'] is a tremendously sensitive issue. This is an area around civil rights and human rights that may not be appropriate for a majority vote." See Robert Bluey "Massachusetts Court Set to Hear Homosexual Marriage Case," CNSNews.com, February 13, 2003.

Arizona

ADF represented a state representative in Arizona courts against an attempt by two homosexual men to have the state's DOMA declared unconstitutional. After a lower court ruling affirming the DOMA law, the two men appealed to the Supreme Court, which without comment, rejected their appeal.

Hawaii

ADF funded last-minute legal work before the November 1998 election to help defend traditional marriage in the Aloha State. After the ballot result allowing legislation in favor of traditional marriage, ADF played a key role in funding the postelection litigation to ensure that a “win remained a win” for those who believe in the traditional role of marriage between one man and one woman.

Indiana

Indiana law recognizes that marriage is only to be between one man and one woman. However, three same-sex couples who had obtained Vermont “civil unions” had come back to the state and demanded a marriage license.

Judge S. K. Reid of the Marion Superior Court Civil Division ruled that same-sex couples are biologically and legally different from one man-one woman unions and, therefore, the court cannot allow them to “marry.”

The judge's decision affirmed traditional marriage by stating that:

- Traditional marriage between one man and one woman “promotes the state's interest in encouraging procreation to occur in a context where both biological parents are present to raise the child...Same-sex couples are not similarly situated with opposite-sex couples who cannot reproduce because samesex couples can never reproduce on their own as a categorical matter.”
- Maintaining marriage between one man and one woman “vindicates the related interest in promoting the traditional family as the basic living unit of a free society.”
- The court said that because of “the history of traditional marriage as a critical component of Western Civilization, it is rational for the [Indiana] General Assembly to recognize opposite-sex marriage in order to promote traditional families as the bedrock of society. Same-sex marriage has not played a similar historical role.”

ADF staff attorney Glen Lavy, working with ADF's allied attorneys, provided important assistance on this case.

Vermont

While we cannot claim total victory in Vermont, many believe ADF's support was instrumental in keeping the Vermont Supreme Court from forcing same-sex marriage on the people of that state. ADF assembled the team writing the legal briefs and helped to fund appropriate private assistance in support of the state attorney general as he prepared the state's brief. We believe that without such assistance, the Vermont Supreme Court, or later the legislature, could have mandated the legalization of full-blown same-sex marriage. While we are far from pleased with the compromise the court reached—of ordering the legislature to adopt what became civil unions—the outcome could have been much worse without ADF's intervention.

Interestingly, as our lawyers predicted, most of the Vermont civil unions have not been for Vermont residents, but for out-of-state homosexual couples, who then hope to go back to their own states and try to force them to recognize their civil unions. As of October 13, 2002, there have been 4,371 civil unions, with the majority coming from outside of Vermont. Lesbians represent 66 percent of all unions to date. Sixty-three percent of civil unions “partners” have graduated from college.⁴⁷

New Jersey

New Jersey, site of a 2003 challenge, does not have the protection of a DOMA. Homosexual activists have sued for marital rights in the state with the knowledge that the Supreme Court in that state is very sympathetic to so-called gay rights. (It is the same court that had ruled against the Boy Scouts.)

Sally Goldfarb, a professor at Rutgers University, said, “New Jersey has a long tradition of willing to be forward-looking and progressive, and looking to the state constitution to recognize new rights. The fact that New Jersey family law already recognizes same-sex relations as legitimate in several areas lends support to the position that there is no justification for denying same-sex couples complete access to marriage.”⁴⁸

Bill Duncan of the Marriage Law Project added, “There are a number of people who are very upset about what's going on [the legal push for same-sex marriage], but none of those people are on any of the courts in New Jersey.”⁴⁹

Unfortunately, the legal battle is not going well beyond America's shores. In Australia, a couple had their marriage declared valid by a family court after one of the individuals, a female-to-male transsexual, was declared a man by the court. The judge in this case said there was no pervasive reason to assume for the purposes of marriage that “if a person is male or female at birth, the person must be male or female at the date of the marriage.”⁵⁰

In October 2003, a lower court ruled in favor of traditional marriage, but the battle has just begun in New Jersey.*

* ADF was also successful in defending traditional marriage in Arizona when two homosexual men tried to use the U.S. Supreme Court's Lawrence v. Texas decision to legally impose same-sex marriage on the state. A lower court quickly ruled against them.

Massachusetts

As mentioned earlier, the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court ruled in favor of same-sex marriage in the case of Goodridge v. Massachusetts Department of Health.⁵¹ The writing on the wall is now clear: we can now expect a series of legal challenges from homosexual activists in every state to force same-sex “marriage” on the American public. And sure enough, same-sex “marriage” battles started to be waged across America after the Massachusetts decision.

One of the most outrageous aspects of this decision was the actions of Massachusetts State Supreme Court Chief Justice Margaret Mitchell. Mrs. Mitchell has been a friend of homosexual advocacy groups for quite some time. In 1999, she delivered the keynote speech (as an associate justice) to the Massachusetts Lesbian and Gay Bar Association. In her speech, she cited the “growing body of gayfriendly international jurisprudence,” and infact, international law (from the Canadian province of Ontario) was cited in the majority opinion in favor of same-sex “marriage.”⁵²

And turning marriage into a freeform institution is good for children? Calling any relationship a marriage makes marriage less attractive by making it exclusive. We want men and women to marry because—after our 30-year experiment with single parenting—we understand that children need both a mother and a father. Even Heather with her ‘two mommies’ needs to know this is not the family society sanctions. The it-hurts-the-children argument is a smoke screen. Activists want their lifestyle validated regardless of the social costs.

—Don Feder, syndicated columnist

It is interesting to note that liberal groups have demanded that U.S. Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia recuse himself from numerous High Court cases because of speaking engagements he has done for conservative groups, but they are strangely silent when liberal justices address or socialize with homosexual advocacy groups.

The Election of 2004

November 2, 2004, was a great day for traditional marriage in America. In eleven states, citizens went to the polls to vote overwhelmingly to adopt state constitutional amendments that define marriage as between one man and one woman.* In all eleven states, the amendments passed, with margins of victory ranging from 86 percent to 57 percent.⁵³ ADF provided legal support in four states (Arkansas, Georgia, Ohio, and Oklahoma) to help stop homosexual activists and their allies from keeping these amendments off the ballot. Just weeks earlier, voters in two other states, Missouri and Louisiana (after ADF helped win court battles to keep the amendments on the ballot), voted by large margins for marriage. Advocates of homo-sexual behavior didn't want Americans to vote on the issue, and once they do, the radicals want to make their votes meaningless. ADF has been called upon to defend challenges to the amendments in several states.

* The states were Arkansas, Georgia, Kentucky, Michigan, Mississippi, North Dakota, Montana, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, and Utah.

Many secular commentators said that the same-sex “marriage” issue was pivotal in providing the margin of victory for President Bush in Ohio—the state that ended up deciding the presidential election.⁵⁴ Many of these victories came despite the tremendous amount of resources spent by homosexual activists and their allies to defeat these amendments. In Kentucky, homosexual activists outspent promarriage groups by almost $300,000 and still lost by a 4-1 margin.⁵⁵ In Missouri, those who advocate homosexual behavior had outspent pro-marriage forces by a margin of nearly 40-1, and still lost 71 to 29 percent.⁵⁶

Despite these incredible results, it is critical that those who believe in marriage as between one man and one woman stay engaged in the battle. Those who seek to redefine marriage are not going to give up and go away. They are already plotting strategies to “frame their issue” so it connects with “Middle America.”⁵⁷ In addition, they will continue to file lawsuits challenging the will of the people, such as they did in Louisiana and Georgia almost immediately after the amendments were passed in those states.⁵⁸ Americans who believe in the sanctity of marriage between one man and one woman will need to remain vigilant and involved in the months and years ahead, as those who advocate same-sex “marriage” will not be deterred in their efforts to reshape the American family.

Beyond Our Shores

In England, it was reported that three members of the House of Lords had given permission to a male-to-female transsexual to appeal a court decision that had ruled that his marriage to a man twenty-one years ago was not valid. The Scotsman reported that Elizabeth Ballinger had taken his case to the House of Lords after his marriage had been ruled void by lower courts. Those courts had ruled that the terms “male” and “female,” which are assigned at birth, could not be altered. Dame Elizabeth Butler-Sloss, head of England’s Family Division, said that the case “highlighted a human problem” and the court was “very much aware of the plight of those who, like the appellant, are locked into the medical condition of transsexualism.”⁵⁹

In Ontario, Canada, the Superior Court ruled that prohibiting homosexual couples from marrying violated the province’s Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Much like what happened in Vermont, the court suspended the decision for two years for Parliament to “remedy” the situation. Ontario Premier Ernie Eves clearly sided with homosexual activists when he said, “If two people decide that they want to be in a union, why would I interfere with that?”⁶⁰ Ontario’s Commissioner of Human Rights has subsequently called for measures to force all private schools in the province to stop teaching that marriage is reserved for a man and a woman.⁶¹

In the Canadian province of Quebec, legislation was passed that created a civil union registry for same-sex and opposite-sex couples. The new law extends most marital benefits to unmarried couples and allows an easy withdrawal from the relationship, further cheapening marriage (only a notarized signature is needed).⁶²

To illustrate the instability of same-sex “marriages,” two lesbians filed for “divorce” less than a year after the Ontario court granted the “right” to same-sex “marriage.” The couple “separated” just five days after their “marriage.” Ontario Premier Dalton McGuinty said, “We certainly support same-sex marriages and logically what flows from that are divorces.”⁶³

All of this is empowering homosexual activists in the U.S. Evan Wolfson had this to say about Canada and its effect on our country: “The future is clearly the Canadian way. The United States cannot lag behind its major trading partner, the nation with the longest common border, its closest internationally. With the increasing trade and travel between the two nations, how can we avoid going the same direction?”⁶⁴

Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund has already attempted to force corporations in the United States to recognize same-sex “marriages” in Canada. When a retired Prudential Financial employee “married” her lesbian partner in Canada, Lambda challenged Prudential’s decision not to extend medical benefits it provides to other retired employees to the “spouse.” Lambda has also written a guide called “We Got Married in Canada, What’s Next?” to equip same-sex “couples” to challenge corporations and local and state governments to recognize their “unions.”⁶⁵

The Pretense of Tolerance Is Over

In the days leading up to World War II, Winston Churchill, in a speech to the Royal Academy, said, “No large organization can long continue without a strong element of authority and respect for authority.”⁶⁶

On Valentine’s Day weekend 2004, San Francisco Mayor Gavin Newsom, in open defiance of the rule of law, ordered his county clerk to issue “marriage” licenses to same-sex couples despite the state law Proposition 22, passed by the voters in 2000, that defines marriage as between one man and one woman. Eventually, nearly four thousand same-sex “couples” were issued “marriage” licenses and were “married” by government officials.⁶⁷

If taken to its logical conclusion, this open contempt for authority and the rule of law could lead to social anarchy where no laws are worth the paper they are printed on. The words of Churchill would become prophetically real for America.

ADF and its allies immediately sprung into action to stop the unlawful actions of Mayor Newsom’s county clerk. ADF attorneys were literally shuttling back and forth to San Francisco on an almost daily basis, as well as spending late night after late night as other open challenges to marriage—spurred on by Mayor Newsom’s actions—started to rear their heads in Oregon, Washington, New Mexico, and North Carolina—to name only a few of the many states where homosexual activists went on a full-court press for same-sex “marriage.” After a series of frustrating setbacks in the courtrooms of San Francisco, ADF filed a direct action in the California State Supreme Court, on behalf of California taxpayers, and the High Court eventually halted—in a 7-0 vote—the issuance of the invalid licenses. They set a two-hour oral argument to determine the legal validity of the “licenses” on May 25, 2004.

* Multnomah County, in Oregon, issued more than three thousand invalid marriage licenses until they were halted in an ADF legal action on April 20, 2004.

On that day, ADF senior counsel Jordan Lorence appeared before the California State Supreme Court to defend state law and argue that the so-called “licenses” be declared invalid. Jordan noted that if an elected official can defy or ignore one law, then all other laws are in jeopardy. Within thirty seconds of her opening statement, opposing counsel Therese Stewart (a lesbian), the deputy city attorney for the city and county of San Francisco, found herself grilled by Chief Justice Ronald George on this very point. Even a liberal court in a liberal state was not going to buy the argument that an elected official can openly defy the law.

On August 12, 2004, the California Supreme Court agreed with Jordan's arguments, and in a 7-0 decision ruled that the mayor of San Francisco had overstepped his authority when he directed the city and county clerk to issue the “marriage” licenses. In addition, the court, in a 5-2 decision, declared the licenses that had been issued to be invalid because the mayor had no authority to issue them.

According to Newsom, his “marriage” decision was made on the spur of the moment when he heard President Bush express support for the Federal Marriage Amendment during his annual State of the Union address. As events in San Francisco continued to unfold, word got out that Mayor Newsom's illegal actions were staged for political gain, well before the president's address even occurred. The San Francisco Chronicle reported, “From the minute Newsom lifted the curtain with his call for gay marriage licenses, to his cross-continental debate with President Bush, Team Newsom has done its best to manage the image coming out of City Hall....From day one, the ‘story’ was about the gay couple next door—and not the mayor as gay-rights leader....The Newsom people made sure that when the mayor came out swinging against Bush's backing for a constitutional amendment banning same-sex marriage, he was standing in front of an American flag. The overall goal was to make Newsom appear the earnest young politico who—whether you agreed with him or not—was willing to take the heat for doing something he believed in....‘What you saw this week,’ said former Newsom campaign manager Eric Jaye, ‘was the catalyst for the entire Newsom operation from day one—control.’”⁶

Writing for National Review, Stanley Kurtz added,

Defiance of the law is rapidly becoming the leitmotif of the gay marriage movement...it's foolish to put faith in laws that supposedly prevent gay marriage in Massachusetts from spilling over into other states.

When it comes to same-sex marriage, it barely matters how the law is written. Again and again, gay marriage advocates have shown themselves eager to disobey any law that would prevent the spread of gay marriage from state to state....It took only a single day of legal gay marriage to reveal the worthlessness of assurances about this experiment's confinement to Massachusetts....Even though same-sex marriage is legal in no other state, [Massachusetts Attorney General Thomas] Reilly would only definitively rule out marriage as the union of a man and a woman. Reilly was vague about whether marriages would be denied to residents of other states.

Next came the plans for civil disobedience....Town clerks in Provincetown, Worcester, and several other Massachusetts cities announced they would issue marriage licenses to out-of-state couples. Then district attorneys in several localities said they would not prosecute clerks who violated the law....The mayor of Somerville explicitly welcomed out-of-state couples. More than a third of applications in Provincetown were from out-of-state couples. Some made it clear on their applications that they had no intention of moving to Massachusetts....Events have made it clear that on the question of same-sex marriage, it's going to be all or nothing. Either we are going to have same-sex marriage everywhere, or we are going to have a Federal Marriage Amendment.”⁹

I don't think lesbian, gay, bi, or trans marriage, or whatever you want to call it, is that far off. I sure didn't think I'd see it in my lifetime...This is cutting edge stuff. If we can do this in California, it's going to sweep across this country, and that's why all the national organizations are looking to California to see how soon we can produce this [civil unions], because it's going to move like wildfire.

—Jean Harris, executive director of California Alliance for Pride and Equality

Other homosexuals were upset that their colleagues had pushed the envelope prematurely; in particular, activists and their allies started to ignore the rule of law in San Francisco, Oregon, and other places—creating a public backlash against same-sex “marriage.” Bruce Carroll, writing in the homosexual newspaper The Washington Blade, wrote, “The backlash over gay marriage...doesn't come as a surprise to me....Since two-thirds of Americans oppose gay marriage, and the same percentage support legal protections for gays in the workplace, then why, I asked, are the radical gay groups forcing marriage down the throats of America at this time?...it wasn't the ‘religious right’ or President Bush who started this round in the culture war. It was us...we get Rosie O'Donnell who says she's getting married in front of TV cameras merely because President Bush says he's opposed to it. Well, that's one sure way for opponents to question the sincerity of the true commitment to gay marriage, isn't it?”¹⁰

John Derbyshire, writing for National Review Online, added, “Opinion pollsters only get a bare majority of respondents favoring legal homosexual relationships, never mind marriages. Last July (2003), for example, in a CNN/L/SA Today/Gallup poll...the numbers broke 48-46 on the statement:

‘homosexual relations between consenting adults should or should not be legal.’”⁷¹

Still, homosexual activists push for same-sex “marriage,” despite documented public opposition to it. It is more evidence that for many homosexual activists the pretense of “tolerance” is over. Radical homosexual activists and their allies are determined to ignore the will of the people and impose same-sex “marriage” on the American public—either through the judiciary or through the open defiance of law.

These activists are banking on an eventual wearing-down (as discussed in chap. 1) of the American public. They will keep coming back and coming back until the public is worn down, and then will get what they want. Sheila Kuehl, an openly lesbian California state senator, says, “My analysis is that the closer we get to anything that looks to people like marriage, the more reluctant they are to jump on board. But that will change. And until then, we’ll just keep moving step by step on the rights we’ve already won.”⁷²

In the Best Interests of the Child?

Besides marriage, radical homosexual activists have the family, and particularly innocent, vulnerable children in their sights as well. This has been accomplished by demanding the right to adopt children. They have presented their efforts as “being [in] the best interests of children,” but it is hardly that. As Don Feder said, “the best interests of the child” is a smoke screen for another way to have homosexual behavior blessed by the state.”⁷³

And that is exactly what is happening. The Pennsylvania Supreme Court has ruled that homosexual partners have parenting rights over their partner’s children. In a 5-2 decision, the court ruled that a woman had the right to seek shared custody of and visitation rights with a child who had been born to her former lesbian lover. The ruling gave a non-parent homosexual “partner” the same right as an actual parent to have child custody and visitation after the dissolution of their relationships. Stacy Sobel, executive director of the Center for Lesbian and Gay Rights, said about the decision, “Our courts should recognize the significant role of gay and lesbian nonbiological parents raising children today....The court made the right decision to support the child’s best interests in this case by allowing the child the opportunity to continue a relationship with both parents.”⁷⁴

In Florida, lesbian comedienne and talk show host Rosie O’Donnell lobbied for the overturning of a state law banning homosexual adoption. The cover of Rosie magazine proudly proclaimed, “The anti-gay law that made Rosie speak out for children,” as though she was Saint Rosie coming to rescue innocent children from slaughter. An article in the magazine dealt with two homosexual men who wanted to adopt children in Florida.⁷⁵ O’Donnell’s real motive? She wanted to spend some time in Florida and take her three adopted children with her from New York. And she got the all-too-willing media to go along, saying: “I called [Diane] Sawyer and said if you do an investigative piece on these two men, I would talk about my life and how it pertains to me.”⁷⁶ *

* In the days following her public “coming out,” the so-called Queen of Nice went on a rampage trashing everyone in her path. The publishers of Rosie magazine saw sales of the magazine plummet after O'Donnell's announcement but were afraid to pull the plug on the magazine in fear of Rosie screaming “homophobia.” Source: Richard Johnson with Paula Froelich and Chris Wilson, “Mag Suits Fear Rosie Revenge,” New York Post, August 12, 2002.

O'Donnell's coming out and advocacy of homosexual adoption helped homosexual activists to move the ball several yards downfield in their quest not just for tolerance, but for acceptance and a total reordering of society as well. After her interview with Diane Sawyer, ABC News reported a new poll that showed that for the first time more Americans supported homosexual adoption than opposed it.⁷⁷

But is this all in the best interests of the children? Well, according to the American Academy of Pediatrics, which has endorsed homosexual adoption, it is.⁷⁸ However, many of the pro-homosexual conclusions have again been based on sloppy research and undocumented facts.

In the book No Basis: What the Studies Don't Tell You about SameSex Parenting, researchers Robert Lerner and Althea Nagai[†] have refuted many of the so-called studies used to promote same-sex parenting. After analyzing forty-nine studies, they found:

† Robert Lerner and Althea K. Nagai received their doctorate degrees from the University of Chicago in sociology and political science, respectively. They are currently partners in Lerner and Nagai Quantitative Consulting, a social-science research and consulting firm.

- A majority of the studies examined (59 percent) failed to produce a testable hypothesis, therefore being unable to produce any sort of dependable conclusions.⁷⁹
- Any form of academic research must have a “study group” and a “comparison group.” This means that one group must study children raised in homosexual homes (i.e., the study group) and children raised in heterosexual homes (i.e., the comparison group). Yet in the forty-nine studies examined, only one used a proper study/comparison group method. Lerner and Nagai wrote: “At an absolute minimum, a study of whether parent sexual identity affects child outcomes needs a study group and a comparison group. If an independent variable is the sexual orientation of the parent, there must be at least two groups of parents, homosexual and heterosexual. Otherwise it is impossible to draw any conclusions about the possible effects of parental sexual orientation...21 studies (43 percent) had no heterosexual comparison group at all. This makes them scientifically invalid from the outset.”⁸⁰ In fact, one study of thirty-seven clinical cases of children raised by transsexual and homosexual parents lacked even one heterosexual comparison group.⁸¹ Lerner and Nagai commented, “These 49 studies were conducted with control methods that are so inadequate that they cannot be relied upon for either scientific conclusions or public policy reforms.”⁸²

- The studies also had serious sample problems. According to Lerner and Nagai, “Publications and newsletters were also a major vehicle for recruiting homosexuals but not heterosexuals. Seventeen studies relied on gay-lesbian or feminist publications for the homosexual parent samples. In contrast, one heterosexual sample was obtained from an advertisement in a feminist newsletter (which would be sympathetic to the homosexual viewpoint) which is likely to minimize rather than maximize differences between homosexual and heterosexual respondents.”⁸³

Anyone who has ever taken an undergraduate class on statistics or polling of public opinion learns about the principles of proper sampling and study/comparison groups in the first two weeks. No study that does not employ these methods has any academic credibility. Despite this, these studies are dragged out time and time again to promote same-sex parenting in the legislatures and the courts.

In a column entitled “Homosexual Parenting Findings Based on Faulty Stories,” syndicated columnist Maggie Gallagher challenges the assumptions and motives of advocates of homosexual adoption. In response to the American Academy of Pediatrics decision to endorse homosexual adoption, she wrote:

Baby doctors of the world unite! The American Academy of Pediatrics has declared that same-sex parents are good for kids....Are pediatricians just doing their public health duty? Are they reporting results of careful scientific studies that compare, say, health outcomes for children in the four states that permit second-person adoptions with outcomes for children in the other 46 states? No, of course not. The real issue here is not the well-being of children, but the sexual liberties of adults.

What does this remind one of? Nothing so much as the urgent claims of divorce advocates in the '70s that “studies show” children of divorce do fine. An enormous amount of damage was done before more careful research created a new scholarly consensus that in fact, marriage matters a great deal.⁸⁴

Gallagher is right. Think back to the late 1960s and early 1970s when we were told that divorce was either beneficial for children or had little or no effect on them. Only twenty years later, in the groundbreaking studies done by Judith Wallerstein and others, did we find out the tragic results of our folly. We have now raised an entire generation of dysfunctional adults who have trouble committing to and honoring relationships because we as a nation embraced no-fault divorce.⁸⁵

Robert Lerner, one of the authors of No Basis, made this parallel between homosexual parenting and the divorce movement of the '60s and '70s:

When the divorce laws were liberalized (beginning during the late '60s, early '70s and extending through the next decade or so), it was claimed that scientific research showed that the children would not be harmed and therefore a high divorce rate would not be a problem but would free adults to self-actualize.

When the findings from technically proficient studies began to appear, however, it appeared that the earlier results, which were in fact very sketchy, were totally wrong. Divorce can and does cause a good deal of harm for children caught up in it. Although this finding is now widely accepted, the new conventional wisdom does not help the many children who suffered because their parents were told that divorce was perfectly okay. Damage occurred that was not necessary and would not have occurred except for the acceptance of wishful thinking disguised as social-science evidence. In fact, the issue had never been properly studied, especially when the earlier guesstimates and summaries are compared with today's rigorous studies. If we are not careful, the same results are likely to ensue.⁸⁶

Adults seeking to change the family and traditional sex roles to suit their own desires are using innocent children again. To intellectual elites, homosexual activists, and their allies, children are guinea pigs in a social experiment, instead of individuals that need love, care, discipline, and nurturing.

The no-fault divorce laws of the sixties and seventies left a trail of broken children. No-fault divorce did not mean “no harm.” Then there were the radical feminists who tried to convince us that girls and boys were basically the same—it was the environment that made boys aggressive and athletic and girls feminine and domestic. The result? Sexually confused children who grew up to be sexually confused adults. Now, almost thirty years later, study after study, as well as good old common sense, has confirmed what God knew right from the beginning: that there are biological differences between boys and girls.⁸⁷ Obviously, we have not learned from our past mistakes. Social engineers and homosexual activists are using children as pawns again, just as those who promoted divorce and militant feminism, to push their own self-interests and agenda.

Political leaders, prominent entertainers such as Rosie O'Donnell, and the medical establishment incessantly repeat the mantra that homosexual parenting is just another form of family and is in the best interests of the children. In April 2002, a United Nations conference attempted to recognize families “in various forms” including cohabitating and homosexual couples.⁸⁸ Maria Sophia Aguirre, population and development expert at Catholic University of America said that the change would form three different types of families: nuclear, extended, and “re-organized.” The last form would include homosexual couples.⁸⁹

Former presidential candidate Al Gore and his wife Tipper donated $50,000 to the Human Rights Campaign to help its “FamilyNet” campaign promote homosexual adoption.⁹⁰ Their book, Joined at the Heart: The Transformation of the American Family, prominently featured homosexual “families.”⁹¹

Dennis Prager probably put it best about the effect of these new families on children. He wrote:

This past year, Los Angeles Family magazine asked me to write an article making the case for the two-parent family. That a mainstream family magazine would commission such an article is quite a sign of the times. How has this happened? How has the nuclear family become controversial? It has happened because many groups and ideologies have a personal interest in denying that it is best for a child to be raised by, or even to start out life with, a father and a mother....What do all these people and groups have in common? None of them is asking what is best for children. The rhetoric of rights (applied here to gays)...and of equality (applied here to gays and men-women) combined with a culture of not judging are all preoccupied with the adults involved, not the children. Compassion for children, a child's right to a mother and a father, their equality as human beings—these all get drowned in the sea of self-centeredness, moral confusion and misdirected compassion that denies them their right to a mom and a dad.⁹²

In a later column, Prager would expand upon this argument:

Of all the arguments against same-sex marriage, the most immediately compelling is that it hurts children. If children have the right to anything, it is to begin life with a mother and father....Only same-sex marriage would legally ensure that children are deprived from birth of either a mother or a father. Why, then, doesn't a child's right to begin life with a mother and father have any impact on the millions of people who either advocate same-sex marriage or can't make up their minds on the issue? Among gay activists the reason is narcissism. Though gays already have the right to raise children without an opposite-sex parent and the right to adopt children, gay activists want society to enshrine one-sex parenting with its highest seal approval—marriage. For gay activists, the fact that a child does best with a good mother and good father is of no significance (or worse, denied). All that matters is what is good for gays.⁹³

Yet, in the name of rights, children continued to be used as pawns to push a radical social agenda. Here are a few examples (both international and national) of how children are getting trapped into various types of entanglements involving homosexual parents and alternative families:

- In New Zealand, the following was reported: “A lesbian told a court...her partner's son was better off in a two-women ‘nuclear family’ than with his homosexual sperm donor father. But the boy might be allowed to play footy [football] with his dad one day, the Family Court heard. The two-year-old boy is at the center of a court battle over his sperm donor dad's request to see him every second weekend and alternative holidays....The mother's lesbian partner said an on-going, traditional father-son relationship was not in the boy's best interests. It would be a ‘total reality change’ for him to suddenly have a deeper relationship with his father, she said....The mother said her son would be better off knowing his father as a donor rather than as a traditional dad.”⁹⁴ The case was eventually resolved with the court giving the boy three parents—the biological mother, her lesbian partner, and the homosexual sperm donor.⁹⁵

- In Great Britain, a study by a British think tank published a study titled “Broken Hearts: Family Decline and the Consequence for Society.” It found correlations between family breakups and “child homelessness, drug abuse among the young, the physical abuse and neglect of babies and children, high rates of teenage pregnancy and a continuing cycle of broken relationships.” The study was released while the House of Lords debated a bill that would have established “civil partnerships” to give homosexual and unmarried heterosexual couples the same legal rights as married couples. Report author Jill Kirby said, “We can see a sharp rise in children born out of wedlock in the U.K. The report also identifies that children born outside of marriage (including homosexual parenting situations) experience the break-up of their parents at a much faster rate than those born to married couples.”⁹⁶
- Also in England, a lesbian couple was given the same parental rights as heterosexuals after the couple's relationship had broken up. One of the women had one of the children with a man, so the child—like the young boy in New Zealand—now has three legal parents. One of the mothers stated, “To me, family is about cohesion, about bringing people up in a secure, loving, stable environment.” The couple's attorney echoed the sentiment: “Family is a broad concept that has to take into account the reality of who is caring for the child, not the biology of the parents.”⁹⁷
- A deaf suburban Washington, D.C., lesbian couple said they did “everything possible” to make sure their newborn son was deaf by seeking a sperm donor for artificial insemination from a family with a long history of deafness. They wanted their family to have all the same characteristics and tried to design a baby to meet their own desires.⁹⁸ Where can this all lead?
- In New Jersey, a Sussex County Family Court ruled that two women can be listed as parents on the birth certificate of the baby that they were to give birth to in May 2003. Homosexual activists trumpeted the decision as another victory for “the expanding definition of family.”⁹⁹
- In Canada, a lesbian couple asked a Canadian court to recognize the two of them, plus the biological father, as the legal parents of a young boy. Stanley Kurtz wrote in National Review: “The case...gives the clearest indication yet of the real impact that gay marriage will have on the American family....Once parental responsibilities are parceled out to more than two people—even to someone living outside the household—it becomes that much easier for any one parent to shirk his or her responsibilities....But the biggest danger here is that legalized triple parenthood opens the way to legalized polygamy or polyamory....And just as gay adoption has set a legal precedent for gay marriage, so will group parenthood pave the way to group marriage....Gay marriage means group marriage—which means no marriage.”¹⁰⁰
- In Sacramento, California, a lesbian couple created a child by combining one of the women's eggs with the sperm of an anonymous donor. The fertilized egg was then removed from the first lesbian and implanted in the other. The baby girl was then declared by a Superior Court Judge to have the two lesbians as her “natural parents.” Shanon Minter, legal director for the National Center for Lesbian Rights in San Francisco, said, “Two people in a committed, monogamous relationship who are raising a child together is my definition of a family, regardless of gender. This is a new frontier.”¹⁰¹

In England, homosexual and lesbian couples are teaming up to “share” babies. In one case, a lesbian named Sue decided that she wanted to have a child with her partner, Kim. Kim had had two children from a heterosexual marriage. The lesbian couple said: “We wanted the potential father to donate sperm and not have any other involvement, although we would send a photograph of the children now and then.”

Sue and Kim met John, a homosexual doctor, who donated the needed sperm. Two weeks later, Sue was pregnant with a baby boy. The boy, Jack, is now two years old, and they have had a second child, a girl named Kate.

John changed his mind about being no more than a sperm donor after Jack was born. Now, John and his partner Paul have a shared custody arrangement with Sue and Kim. The children refer to John as “Daddy,” Paul as “Daddy’s partner,” Sue as “Mummy,” and Kim as “Mummy’s partner.” Sue concluded: “I don’t think if you are brought up in a gay environment you are going to be gay. I think being gay is due to genetics. It would be interesting to see if either of the kids are gay when they grow up.”¹⁰²

Children have become pawns in a social experiment to see if they turn out deaf or if they turn out gay. The well-being of the child is denied, while the desires of the adults are exalted.

And not everything is peaches and cream in homosexual households, despite what activists would like people to think. In Akron, Ohio, two lesbian women allegedly beat their five sons, locked them in the closet, and forced them to eat animal feces. One of the boys said, “My entire life has been horrifying because of the abuse, neglect, and mistreatment that both of you have inflicted.” Pictures showed the boys with ribs and collarbones protruding through the skin—while the couples’ refrigerator and pantry were overflowing with food. While we readily acknowledge that horrible abuses such as this also regrettably happen in heterosexual homes, this is a side of homosexual “families” that rarely gets reported in the media.^{103 *}

* Posters on the Boston transit system, sponsored by the Gay Men’s Health Crisis, read: “1 in 4 gay men are victims of domestic violence in their relationships.”

The Alliance Defense Fund has already provided funding for a case involving child custody issues between a Christian heterosexual mother and a group of three men in various stages of sex transformation, who claimed to be a family. What concept of family will these children have once they are adults?

Then there are situations in which tolerant parents have deliberately tried to indoctrinate their children (and confuse them at the same time) with the homosexual agenda. Consider this alarming piece from USA Today by a tolerant parent (who writes for Parenting magazine and The Sesame Workshop) about his five-year-old daughter:

Last spring I was sitting at the dining room table with my 5-year-old as she pondered her latest homework assignment. Bridgette's kindergarten teacher had cleverly combined a writing exercise with the class study of the calendar by asking students to draw and label pictures that rhyme with the word "May."

Bridgette looked to me for help, so I began listing the possible "ay" words in the alphabet: "Ay, bay, cay, day, eay, fay, gay ..."

Bridgette brightened: "Gay!" she announced. "That's it! And I know exactly what I'll draw."

Of the many times in which my young daughters have filled me with pride, this was clearly a standout. In a world that still instinctively blanches at the utterance of the word homosexual, it was uplifting to witness Bridgette, in her blissfully unjaded way, extract only joy from hearing "gay." Indeed, all she really cared about was the picture she intended to draw. And what a picture it was: two men standing side by side, both smiling wildly, with hearts drawn above their heads. ...

I'd be falsely immodest here were I not to credit my wife and myself for trying to provide a more decent perspective for Bridgey on homosexuality. Since the beginning, Alene and I have made it a point to stress love over gender [emphasis ours] as the most important criterion in selecting a partner, neither omitting nor gratuitously focusing on same-sex relationships.¹⁰⁴

The piece goes on to discuss her relationship with her homosexual relatives and how they are so good to little Bridgey. But the bottom line is this: What kind of view will Bridgey have of traditional marriage and gender roles if she has been taught to stress love over gender in the selection of a mate? Does that mean that if she loves her dog, she should marry it? After all, if love is more important than gender, is species really important?

As George Dent wrote in his article, "The Defense of Traditional Marriage" in The Journal of Law and Politics: "Some argue that love is the only valid requisite for marriage."¹⁰⁵ ...Love takes many forms. C. S. Lewis distinguished family love, affection, erotic desire, friendship, and compassion.¹⁰⁶ All can be good, but compassion is not deemed a basis for marriage. Close relatives often love each other but cannot marry. One who is married may love a third party more than one's spouse, but one cannot marry the third party. Children can love but cannot marry. Many people love pets, but they cannot marry them. Hence, homosexual love is not the only love ineligible for marriage. Indeed, many forms of sexual love, such as pederasty, adultery, bestiality, and incest, are criminal even in states that permit homosexual acts."¹⁰⁷

And what about the two children from England? What kind of image will they have of marriage, when multiple partners are raising them? These children will become increasingly confused, and the result will be even more sexual dysfunction when they become young adults.

Unfortunately, the indoctrination of schoolchildren (as discussed in chap. 3) and the continual push to force children into alternative families does not bode well for the future of marriage if these issues are allowed to go unchecked. The UCLA Higher Education Research reported that 57.9 percent of incoming college freshmen now support full recognition of same-sex marriage.¹⁰⁸

It is not by coincidence that the very first thing that God created after the heavens and the earth was the family. It is his institution for the raising and nurturing of children. If we wreck what God has ordained, the generations that follow will reap the consequences of our actions. We have now learned, the painful way, that the divorce “reform” movement of the sixties started a cycle of dysfunctional relationships that is affecting future generations—leading to premarital sex,¹⁰⁹ out-of-wedlock births,¹¹⁰ increased likelihood of dropping out of school,¹¹¹ early marriage and divorce,¹¹² poverty for many women, and so forth. In contrast, children who grow up well grounded in two-parent, traditional families are far more likely to have higher grades¹¹³ and are less prone to substance abuse.¹¹⁴ When the institutions of marriage and family are tinkered with, children are ultimately the losers.

Stanley Kurtz puts it best:

In setting up the institution of marriage, society offers special support and encouragement to the men and women who together make children. Because marriage is deeply implicated in the interests of children, it is a matter of public concern. Children are helpless. They depend upon adults. Over and above their parents, children depend upon society to keep them from chaos. Children cannot articulate their needs. Children cannot vote. Yet children are society. They are us, and they are our future. That is why society has the right to give special support and encouragement to an institution that is necessary to the well being of children—even if it means special benefits for some, and not for others....It [same-sex “marriage”] will, however, spell the end of marriage, and of the protection marriage offers to vulnerable children who cannot vote or articulate their interests. The number of children potentially endangered by the collapse of marriage is far larger than the number of gays or “polyamorists.”

And, if the indoctrination remains unchecked, another generation of children, following in the footsteps of generations that were socially engineered by divorce and radical feminism, will be damaged with little hope of repair.

The Silence (and Silencing) of the Church

[The Religious Right] is not about to admit that they just want to bash gays if they can. ...You have to remember, Sunday after Sunday, millions of people come to church to hear their diatribes.

—Steven Green, spokesman, Americans United for the Separation of Church and State

It was a Sunday morning in early December 1989. The late Cardinal John O'Connor was just beginning his sermon in New York City's St. Patrick's Cathedral. Suddenly, shouts came from the congregation.

"You bigot, O'Connor, you're killing us," yelled one angry man. Others quickly joined him from the militant homosexual group, ACT-UP, who stretched themselves out in the aisles or chained themselves to the pews. O'Connor tried not to be flustered and went on with the service. As he continued, the police arrested forty-three protesters, carrying out on stretchers those who refused to stand. One irate individual made his way to the altar for Communion, took a wafer, and threw it on the ground.¹

Flash forward to 1993 in Colorado Springs, Colorado. In November 1992, the voters of Colorado had passed Amendment 2 that would have denied those who practice homosexual behavior special legal privileges. The man who helped get Amendment 2 on the Colorado ballot, Will Perkins, was sitting in his normal pew at Village Seven Presbyterian Church. Just before the pastor got up to read the morning Scripture, more than a dozen radical homosexual activists leaped out of their seats among the congregation and bombarded the parishioners with condoms.²

In 2004, militant homosexuals—who call themselves members of the "Rainbow Sash Alliance"—attempted to block access to the Communion rail at Chicago's Holy Name Cathedral. The priests had refused to serve them Communion because of the church's biblical stand opposing homosexual behavior.³

These examples are just a microcosm of the war that radical homosexual activists have staged against the church. It has been a war in which the church has either totally capitulated on the issue and embraced homosexual behavior while rejecting biblical teaching, or found herself under increasing attack from inside and outside the sanctuary for taking a biblical stand on the issue.

What the Bible Says about Homosexual Behavior

Why is the battle so heated? Because for those who take their faith seriously, Scripture is very clear on this issue.

1 Corinthians 6:9—10: “Do you not know that the wicked will not inherit the kingdom of God? Do not be deceived: Neither the sexually immoral nor idolaters nor adulterers nor male prostitutes nor homosexual offenders nor thieves nor the greedy nor drunkards nor slanderers nor swindlers will inherit the kingdom of God” (emphasis added).

Matthew 19:4—5: “‘Haven’t you read,’ he [Jesus] replied, ‘that at the beginning the Creator “made them male and female,” and said, “For this reason a man will leave his father and mother and be united to his wife, and the two will become one flesh.”’”

Romans 1:24—27: “Therefore God gave them over in the sinful desires of their hearts to sexual impurity for the degrading of their bodies with one another. They exchanged the truth of God for a lie, and worshiped and served created things rather than the Creator—who is forever praised. Amen. Because of this, God gave them over to shameful lusts. Even their women exchanged natural relations for unnatural ones. In the same way the men also abandoned natural relations with women and were inflamed with lust for one another. Men committed indecent acts with other men, and received in themselves the due penalty for their perversion.”

Leviticus 18:22: “Do not lie with a man as one lies with a woman; that is detestable.”

1 Timothy 1:8—11: “We know that the law is good if one uses it properly. We also know that law is made not for the righteous but for lawbreakers and rebels, the ungodly and sinful, the unholy and irreligious; for those who kill their fathers or mothers, for murderers, for adulterers and perverts, for slave traders and liars and perjurers—and for whatever else is contrary to the sound doctrine that conforms to the glorious gospel of the blessed God, which he entrusted to me.”

In addition to these verses, there is the passage in Genesis 19 about God's destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah (and it wasn't because of lack of hospitality as radical homosexual activists and theologically liberal churches argue) and how the men of the town attempted to have sexual relations with the angels the Lord had sent out to warn Lot of God's imminent judgment.

These verses are straightforward, and it is difficult to see how anyone could interpret them as anything different than condemning of homosexual behavior. However, as we will see shortly, theologically left-of-center churches are either in total denial about these passages or cook up theories such as the one cited above, to explain away their affirmation of homosexual behavior.

Before we launch into the issue of the church and homosexual behavior, we need to stop and make an important point. There is no irrelevant sin in the Bible. There is a long list of sins in the Bible, some more serious than others, but all wicked in the eyes of God who created us all to live without any sin. The Word of God is clear in its condemnation of adultery, false witness, theft, and murder, just to name a few sins. We are all sinners who deserve condemnation, and it is only because of the love and saving grace of Jesus Christ that we can be reconciled to our Father and have eternal life.*

* Romans 3:23-24 says, “For all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God, and are justified freely by his grace through the redemption that came by Christ Jesus.”

Therefore we strongly disassociate from and condemn those who spew phrases such as “God hates fags” or picket the funeral of an AIDS victim. Such behavior is beyond contempt and only escalates the anger radical homosexual activists have for the church. Christ had compassion for the sinner, and for believers to show otherwise would be spitting on the grace that he has offered to all of us, who are sinners, through his death and resurrection.

However, we also make his death and resurrection meaningless if we cannot point a hurting individual to the love, mercy, and grace of Christ. When Christ loved someone, like the woman caught in adultery, he did not condemn her but expressed compassion for her. He also gave her the loving admonition to “go now and leave your life of sin” (John 8:11). As followers of Jesus Christ, we cannot sit idly by while someone is trapped in sinful behavior that separates him or her from God (John 8:24). We must be able to show people their need for a relationship with Jesus Christ, which only comes through illuminating the sinfulness of their behavior that separates them from their loving God.

There is no activist movement that exists worldwide today (yet?) to legalize theft, adultery, or lying. But there is a mobilized movement that challenges God’s truth on a daily basis in regard to homosexual behavior.

Affirming Everything but the Scriptures

Unfortunately, just as some in the church have shown a total lack of grace, the theologically liberal church has gone the other direction and totally capitulated on the issue without ever dealing with the sin and sorrow. Rather than helping those engaging in forbidden behavior to turn from their sin by pointing them to Christ, the theologically liberal church is providing “spiritual” cover that enables their actions and the terribly destructive results.

For a vivid example of this, consider this excerpt of an article from Great Britain:

A [British] government minister has launched an outspoken attack on church leaders in a new collection of prayers written for homosexuals. Ben Bradshaw, the Foreign Office Minister, accuses Christian leaders of “hostility” to homosexuals in a forward to a controversial anthology, which includes contributions by Church of England clergy. One prayer in the book is addressed to “the wife of my lover,” another prays that the next Pope “shall be young, colored, and gay” and one contributor argues that Jesus was a homosexual. Mr. Bradshaw, who is himself gay, said that the new book would “provide strength and inspiration for those who want to celebrate their God-given sexuality in the face of continuing rejection and hostility from church leaders.” There are prayers in the book for same-sex “marriages,” sex changes, and “fantasy and fetish.”⁴

This may seem extreme, but this is what often happens when the church chooses to affirm homosexual behavior. The result is that the Bible is rewritten, as well as the liturgy, and the church itself becomes one big celebration of homosexual behavior. The liberal church in America is well down the same path as the Church of England. Here are just a few examples:

- Liberal United Methodist ministers in Northern California held a mass wedding for same-sex couples in Sacramento.⁵ Despite the fact that this is a direct violation of the church's book of discipline, Bishop Melvin Talbert (who is supportive of same-sex “marriage”) turned the other way and chose to ignore the direct disobedience by these clerics to church teaching.⁶
- Another United Methodist minister refused to conduct legal marriages in her sanctuary until the denomination's ban on same-sex “marriages” was overturned. Her church describes itself as “a community of faith of about 200 members from diverse backgrounds exploring together the many ways of understanding God...celebrating the gifts of all persons regardless of sexual orientation or gender identity....We honor a diversity of theological expression, and use both feminine and masculine images of God....[Our creed is a] diversity of theological expressions: traditional Christianity, an appreciation of other sacred texts, concern for ecological dimensions of the creation and planet, Liberation theology, Native American spirituality, and a critique of patriarchal religion and hierarchy. Diversity means reflecting both feminine and masculine images of God.”

Religion is often at the core of why people hate us....People often get their views from their religions, so we don't want the pulpit saying that being gay is wrong.

—Cathy Renna, Gay and Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation

This particular church was honored by its local government for flying the homosexual rainbow flag and providing “a venue to discuss homophobia in faith communities.” The pastor has gone as far as to endorse a “transgender antidiscrimination” bill that was passed by the New York City Council and amended the city's human rights ordinance to include “gender identity or expression” and grant civil rights protections to “transgender” or “variable gender” persons.⁷

- Drew University, the major Methodist university (located in Madison, N.J.) in the Northeast, was chosen as the “most gay friendly university” in the country.⁸
- The Rev. Howard Edington, the pastor of the successful First Presbyterian Church of Orlando (the fourth largest church in the PCUSA) was forced to retire under pressure from some members of his congregation and the Central Florida Presbytery because of his vocal opposition to the ordination of homosexual pastors, same-sex marriage, and preaching a sermon against the city's sexual orientation anti-discrimination policy. Rev. Edington was also part of the Presbyterian Coalition, a group of pastors opposed to homosexual ordination. Rev. Jim Henry of the neighboring First Baptist Church said: "We have lost a voice of conviction that spoke eloquently calling us to the high ground of morals and values. We have lost one of the best communicators of the good news of hope in all the land."⁹

- United Methodist minister Richard Zomastny went on voluntary leave in 1999 to undergo a sex-change operation and become Rebecca Steen. He/she was subsequently approved to serve in the pulpit in the Baltimore-Washington United Methodist Conference.¹⁰ In his/her defense, the Reverend Chip Aldridge of the pro-homosexual group Reconciling Ministries Network said, "When persons simply say that the Bible views homosexuality as a sin, they're dealing with a specific, narrow interpretation of the Bible. And there are many astute Bible theologians who dispute use of those limited number of Biblical references to interpret how ministry should take place with gay and lesbian people in 2002."¹¹ Mr./Ms. Steen finally surrendered his/her credentials to be a minister; however, Bishop Felton Edwin May of the Baltimore-Washington conference said that the issue of transgender clergy would be brought up at the denomination's 2004 general conference. The Reverend Gayle Annis-Forder said, "It's time [for transsexual clergy]."¹²
- When the minister of Woodland Park (Washington) United Methodist Church came out and publicly stated that he was a "practicing gay man," a denominational committee dismissed any ecclesiastical charges against him after asking him only one question, which he refused to answer.¹³ Another pastor, Karen Dammann, declared to her bishop that she was a practicing lesbian. A church trial occurred, and thirteen pastors acquitted her—despite¹⁴ the fact that the denomination's Book of Discipline forbids pastors from engaging in homosexual behavior. Her attorney said, "Karen has chosen not to live the lie. She has invited the United Methodist Church to come out of the closet with her and live a life of open honesty."¹⁵
- The United Church of Christ already ordains practicing homosexuals.¹⁶ In August 2001, the Evangelical Lutheran Church of America voted to study the blessing of same-sex unions and ordaining homosexual ministers.¹⁷ This is despite that fact that Martin Luther wrote, "The heinous conduct of the people of Sodom is extraordinary, inasmuch as they departed from the natural passion and longing of the male for the female, which was implanted by God, and desired what is altogether contrary to nature. Whence comes this perversity: Undoubtedly from Satan, who, after people have once turned away from the fear of God, so powerfully suppresses nature that he beats out the natural desire and stirs up a desire that is contrary to nature."¹⁸
- In Philadelphia, an Episcopal priest was defrocked for stating that the church had become too liberal on issues such as the ordination of women and the recognition of same-sex "unions."¹⁹
- In Canada, an Anglican church diocese agreed to bless same sex unions. The result was that a number of conservative Anglican churches voted to split from the diocese. At a conference of the dissident churches, Archbishop Yong Ping Chung of Southeast Asia said that the church needed to adhere to biblical teaching with regard to homosexual behavior, stating: “The world is confused and chaotic without the Bible. The value and moral state of life, or lack of it, is forever changing according to what’s seen to be the latest trend or fashion.”²⁰ What is happening in the Anglican church is happening in other mainline denominations as well: the acceptance and affirmation of homosexual behavior is causing them to implode.

- The leader of Americans United for the Separation of Church and State, an ordained United Church of Christ minister, claimed during a debate on homosexual behavior that the Roman centurion commended by Jesus for his faith had a male sex slave kept with Jesus’ approval (Matt. 8:5-13). He then compared Jesus to homosexuals, stating “was he not engaged fundamentally in an unnatural relationship” because he never married, comparing celibacy and homosexuality as equivalent. After the debate, this individual tried to suppress the distribution of the tape even though he had previously agreed to allow it to be made available.²¹
- A liberal Southern Baptist pastor in Wedgewood, North Carolina, Dr. Chris Ayers, preached a sermon titled “Homosexuality Is Not a Sin: The Christian Education of a Baptist Minister.” Wedgewood Baptist, the church Ayers pastors, left the Southern Baptist Convention several years ago because of the SBC’s biblical stand on homosexual behavior. The pastor cited the work of theologian Walter Wink, rather than a biblical discussion of why he felt that homosexual behavior was not sinful. According to Wink, those who condemn homosexual behavior are guilty of “pick and choose” theology, discarding some Bible verses while hanging on to others. Ayers said that even Jesus was guilty of engaging in “pick and choose” theology. Yet, in his sermon, Ayers never discussed any of the New Testament verses that deal with homosexual behavior.²² It is interesting to note that those who advocate homosexual behavior “pick and choose” which Scriptures they choose to abide by and which they choose to ignore.

There has been a radical cultural shift in the past ten years. Attitudes toward gays and lesbians have changed in the workplace, schools, and other civic entities. For the church to continue to stall seems archaic and irrelevant.

—Unnamed homosexual “pastor”

- Boston College, a Catholic University, has granted official recognition to a gay-straight student alliance, even though homosexual behavior is incompatible with the church’s teachings.²³
- United Methodist theologian Rev. Theodore Jennings Jr. and Dr. Morton Smith of Columbia University said that there is “irrefutable evidence” that Jesus was bisexual if not homosexual. Dr. Rollan McCleary (who is homosexual) of the University of Queensland in Australia said that he “discovered” that three of the disciples were homosexual. Jennings says that the references to the “disciple Jesus loved” in the Gospel of John refers to his “gay boyfriend.” Smith says that he found a manuscript at a monastery near Jerusalem that refers to Jesus having a homosexual relationship with a young boy. McCleary adds that Christianity was founded on “gay principles.” Homosexual activist Peter Tatchell commented, “Since there is no proof of the heterosexuality of Jesus, the theological basis of Church homophobia is all the more shaky and indefensible.”²⁴

- The New Hampshire Episcopal Diocese elected Rev. Canon V. Gene Robinson, an openly practicing homosexual, to head the diocese. He quickly embraced his “partner” when he heard the news.²⁵ He later won the consent of the General Convention and accolades from the national media.
- Vermont’s Episcopal Diocese has developed a liturgy for same-sex “marriages.” Stan Baker, the lead plaintiff in the Vermont “civil unions” case and the senior warden of St. Paul’s Episcopal Church, said, “There isn’t another diocese that has this complete a policy, with the theological background supporting it, the liturgy itself and the resources for the couple.”²⁶
- Homosexual activists have developed a plan with left leaning mainline churches to argue that the proposed Federal Marriage Amendment limits the free exercise of religion—claiming that the amendment might ban prohomosexual clergy from performing same-sex “marriages.” It is their hope to “co-opt” the marriage issue from religious conservatives.²⁷
- Historic churches in Cambridge, Massachusetts, have hoisted large posters on their exterior that say, “Support Marriage Equality—We Do!”

To see how the radical homosexual agenda can permeate an entire church to the point where the church stands for nothing but the affirmation of homosexual behavior, consider this excerpt from the March 20, 2000, issue of Newsweek:

When Sylvia Kunst and Linda Meeker met in a Detroit church five years ago, it felt like both a blessing and a curse. For years the two deeply religious women had denied their sexuality. Linda stayed in a heterosexual marriage for thirty years. Sylvia became born again and convinced herself she was “cured” of her lesbianism. Be with God or be gay, that’s what they were always taught. It seemed an impossible choice to make. “We knew that we loved one another but we also loved the Lord,” says Meeker...“We prayed and prayed for an answer.”

The couple gave up finding a church until they saw a listing in a gay circular for Fellowship United Methodist, “a diverse and welcoming church.”...Tucked off the road, in a prim upper middle-class neighborhood in Troy, Michigan, the tiny church looked very traditional. The congregation consisted of mostly older, button-down and carefully coiffed married couples and widows. But the pastor wore a rainbow stole, a symbol of diversity.²⁸

The article proceeds to describe the very same path that has led to the “homosexual liturgy” emerging in the Church of England. The Michigan church compromised once, hiring a homosexual choir director. That, in turn, led to the appointment of a pastor who preaches seemingly nothing but total acceptance of homosexual behavior.

According to the article, the Reverend Marjorie Munger “accessorizes her pastor’s garb with iridescent gay-pride stickers, includes lessons on homosexuality in her sermons and lists the church in gay magazines.”²⁹ Munger has also protested the church’s position on homosexual behavior at the denomination’s annual conference, stating, “Right now the church is intricately involved in creating a climate of spiritual violence. If you don’t say anything at all, then you allow the voices of hate to be the dominant voices.”³⁰

It must be interesting to see how the Reverend Munger interprets the Scriptures that deal with homosexual behavior. The most likely is probably the same dodge used in the past by radical feminists and others who have tried to reshape the church and the gospel in their own image. That dodge can be best summarized as “the Bible has to be interpreted in the context of the time it was written and therefore that passage is no longer relevant today.” That mind-set has opened the church and seminary doors to radical feminism,* (including goddess worship),³¹ the rewriting of God’s Word into “gender-inclusive” language,³² and in the most liberal examples, praying to “Mother and Father God” or “that great cosmic force in the sky.”†

* Craig attended a seminary in southern California that is renowned worldwide for its supposedly conservative, evangelical teaching. In the early eighties, the seminary had compromised on the issue of inclusive language, issuing a policy that a paper would automatically be given a failing grade if masculine pronouns were used for God and “mankind” was used instead of “humankind.” By the late eighties, the head of the “women’s study” department at the seminary proudly posted the following signs on her office door: “Not the church, not the state, only I will decide my fate” (the credo of militant abortion supporters), “Lesbian Rights Now,” and “My Karma Ran Over Your Dogma.” Alan briefly attended another nationally acclaimed seminary where he was taught on the first day that the Bible was nothing but a book of myths and fables and that Pharoah’s army drowned in “less than a foot of water” if there was anything to such a tale.

† Craig grew up in a Methodist church in northern California during the 1970s that became increasingly liberal over the years. By the end of the decade, the church was praying to “Mother and Father God” and to “O Cosmic One.” The associate pastor at the church eventually left his wife (who was also a pastor) for another man.

The Metropolitan Community Church

The Metropolitan Community Church was founded by an openly homosexual former Baptist minister named Troy Perry, and it now claims more than seventy-seven thousand members. According to the church’s Web site, members believe the following:

- The Bible is full of errors that have resulted from being copied, recopied, and translated over and over again.
- Homosexual behavior is not a sin in God’s eyes. Instead, the teaching that homosexual behavior is sinful is the result of twisted teaching of “homophobic” men.

- The references to homosexual behavior in the Bible really don't mean what they say.
- Sodom and Gomorrah were destroyed not because of homosexual behavior but because the people there ignored the poor and needy.
- Jonathan and David were homosexual lovers.
- Ruth and Naomi were lesbian lovers.
- As we mentioned before, Christ lived an alternative lifestyle and he loved other men besides John.
- Christ wore a purple robe to the cross as a connotation of his homosexuality.³³

Another method of denial is to change the definition of being a Christian. Consider this piece, “On Being Christian and Gay,” featuring a lesbian “family” and posted on the Web site of the prohomosexual Human Rights Campaign:

My partner and I have spent a lot of time talking about organized religion and what does and what does not constitute a “Christian” person or family. [This topic] has something that has become a bit of a thorn in the side of our family. Although we do not attend a church or claim an organized religion, Sonya and I consider our home to be a loving, Christian home in which we raise our son. We have tried and tried to find a church that will accept us as a family here in our area. We have found several that have told us we were welcome to attend but they would openly state that homosexuality was a sin. How could we attend a church that taught our son that we were sinners?...Sonya and I were raised in different faiths with one common belief. We were taught to believe that God is a loving God. God does not hate or condemn anyone....In our beliefs, a Christian would be defined as someone who is kind and giving to others....A Christian treats all people equally and does not judge others for being different, but instead embraces and learns from diversity.³⁴

Sadly, these women have a skewed notion of what a Christian is. Yes, as Christians we are called to love one another and to be kind and giving to one another. However, that is only one part of the equation. We are called to obey as well, and as we have already discussed, the practice of homosexual behavior is clearly not obedient. Obedience is a natural result of a personal relationship with Jesus Christ. Using their definition of being a Christian means that you can practice any kind of sin you want, and as long as you are loving and kind to others, you are fine.

Their statements are an indictment of the churches we have described above as well. When the church no longer preaches the gospel or takes the teachings of the Bible seriously, then it does not matter what you believe or what actions you engage in because the only basis for membership is being civil to one another rather than calling sinners to repentance and new life in Jesus Christ.

In addition, the comment about their son learning that his family members are sinners goes right to the struggle between homosexual behavior and religious freedom. The two are incompatible. The goal of the radical homosexual activists is to make sure that no church can say that homosexual behavior is sinful, lest they feel stigmatized. The only church they want is one that either affirms their behavior or merely exists for potluck dinners and bingo tournaments or for the advancement of leftist causes.

As one homosexual activist said about the issue of same-sex “marriage”: “Ultimately I think it is religion, the liberal faith traditions, that are making the issue [of same-sex “marriage”] possible because they have already said, from Judaism to the United Church of Christ, that gay and lesbian couples can marry.”³⁵

Columnist Dennis Prager, a conservative Jew, probably put it best when it came to the spiritual confusion of pro-homosexual churches and synagogues. He wrote,

There is nothing in mainstream Christianity or Judaism that supports same-sex marriage. There is nothing biblically supportive—and there is much biblically opposed—and there was not one major religious leader or thinker in Jewish or Christian history prior to the present generation who argued for same-sex marriage. Religious supporters of same-sex marriage have either substituted their own feelings for God, for the Bible, and for religious law, or they have simply attached a cross or a yarmulke to their leftist politics. Clergy and laypeople who stand the Bible on its head, no matter how well-intentioned they may be, are thoroughly distorting Judaism and Christianity. Intellectual honesty demands that they either support same-sex marriage solely from a secular standpoint or create a new religion from which to do so. If Judaism and Christianity do not stand for man-woman marriage and the father-mother family, they stand for nothing.³⁶

Spiritual Apathy

But it is not only pro-homosexual churches and synagogues that are empowering the advancement of same-sex “marriage” and the homosexual agenda. Many evangelical Christians are unwittingly doing so as well by treating the issue of same-sex “marriage” and other aspects of the homosexual agenda with little more than a shrug of the shoulders. Many have either thrown up their hands in a “what’s the use” attitude, are ambivalent about the effect on samesex “marriage” on their children and grandchildren, or are fearful of being seen as “intolerant.”

The New York Times reported the following on February 28, 2004: “[D]own in the pews of Western Michigan, a major center of evangelical Protestantism, not everyone is sure that the proposed [federal marriage] amendment matters so much. ‘For me personally, even though I have a strong religious belief, who am I to say?’ said Grant Reed...a member of the non-denominational evangelical Ada Bible Church in Ada, a suburb of Grand Rapids...‘I think we have bigger things to worry about than whether two men or two women want to get married.’”

The article goes on to quote Jeff Manion, pastor of Ada Bible Church: “Though the church, and though I, have firm convictions about sexuality, our ministry is primarily about people's spiritual life and not about pushing a political agenda.”³⁷

Unfortunately, like many others in the evangelical community, this pastor is unable to connect the dots between same-sex “marriage” and people's spiritual condition. How can one minister to someone's spiritual life when the government openly sanctions and enables the very behaviors that trap him and that will ultimately lead to his eternal destruction? Secondly, what about the spiritual life of future generations, who will be taught that same-sex “marriage” is as normal as heterosexual marriage—and will be further indoctrinated in either pursuing homosexual behavior or have their ability to live and proclaim the gospel seriously impaired?

Christian commentator Chuck Colson summarized this spiritual ambivalence succinctly: “What's our excuse for staying silent? I think some [Christians] don't really believe this is such a critical battle. To them I say—wake up and pay attention. The issue has the potential to redefine and, ultimately, to destroy the institution of marriage in this country—and with marriage goes the family....But there are other Christians who recognize the importance of this battle over same-sex “marriage” but are still not speaking up. For many of them, I think the problem is a lack of faith....A lot of Christians—even some of our most prominent leaders—seem to have succumbed to the ‘what's the use?’ attitude. They believe that the cultural climate has turned so much against us that we'll never be able to stop the advance of same-sex ‘marriage.’”³⁸

As Dennis Prager wrote, if the church is silent on this issue—or embraces the promotion of same-sex “marriage” and homosexual behavior—then what does the church stand for?

The Campolos

In addition, several individuals who would describe themselves as “evangelicals” also have promoted much of the homosexual agenda. Like Lot in Genesis 19, they have chosen to associate themselves with the radical homosexual movement and have focused on love without repentance.

Tony Campolo and his wife Peggy have spent the last ten to fifteen years touring the country and weaving part of the homosexual agenda into many of their presentations at unwitting churches and Christian organizations. Tony has done wonderful things in ministry for the poor and should be commended for his efforts in that area. He also has had a wide following on college campuses and is extremely influential with a major college ministry. His extremely charismatic personality has had a tremendous, and life-changing, impact on many young adults.

However, in the mid-to-late 1980s, the Campolos started to edge toward the promotion of much of the homosexual agenda.*

* Peggy Campolo is a national leader of the Association of Welcoming and Affirming Baptists, a homosexual friendly caucus in the American Baptist Denomination.

In 1987, Tony was invited by a committee of evangelical pastors and leaders in the Sacramento, California, area to conduct a crusade at Arco Arena, the home of the Sacramento Kings basketball team. Craig was on staff at one of the churches that invited Tony to the event.

While Tony thought the crusade was a smashing success and that the committee believed he was great,³⁹ that was not necessarily the case.*

* At a staff meeting later that week the pastor of the church that Craig worked in said that the committee would never invite Campolo back again.

The last night of the crusade, Campolo convinced the crusade organizers to do a “media ploy” and have the offering go to a local AIDS group. It was his thought that the sight of evangelicals giving money to an AIDS group would garner media attention for the crusade.⁴⁰ While we would agree that many Christians acted callously toward AIDS victims in the 1980s and that we must minister (by living and sharing the gospel) to those who are dying a sad, painful, but preventable, death, Campolo used the incident in his book 20 Hot Potatoes Christians Are Afraid to Touch as a launching pad to castigate Christians, saying, “I hope that we will see church people show as much love for AIDS victims as has been shown by actress Elizabeth Taylor, who has worked relentlessly on their behalf.”⁴¹

Apartheid is a sin. Racism is a sin. Sexism is a sin. Heterosexism is a sin....How God created us to love is not sinful.

—Rev. Susan A. Minasian, pastor, Disciples United Community Church, Lancaster, Pennsylvania

Yet, is it love to work as Elizabeth Taylor has in the promotion of “safe sex” and special privileges for homosexuals, which only enable the harmful behavior, or is it love to share the full, uncensored gospel with those who are in desperate need?

Peggy Campolo has gone even further in the promotion of the homosexual agenda. She has stated publicly that she believes Romans 1 does not apply to monogamous, “loving,” homosexual relationships.⁴² She also has stated support for same-sex marriage. While Tony has argued on behalf of homosexuals in the military⁴³ and extending federal civil rights protections to practicing homosexuals,⁴⁴ he does not go as far as Peggy in these areas and has stated publicly that he does disagree with her interpretation of Romans 1 and with her stance on same-sex marriage.

Despite this, many conservative, evangelical Christians remain unaware of the Campolos' support for the homosexual agenda in the church and welcome them into their ministries with open arms.

The actions of the Campolos and other evangelicals who have given aid and comfort to radical homosexual activists reminds us of the story of Sodom and Gomorrah, in which Lot refers to those who seek to engage in homosexual behavior. On one hand, these evangelicals say, “Don’t do this wicked thing,” and yet call homosexual activists “my friends” and attack those who are trying to take a stand for righteousness.

Mel White is the founder of Soulforce, an organization dedicated to the silencing of the church with regard to homosexual behavior. His organization pickets the Southern Baptist Convention on an annual basis because of that denomination’s biblical stand on the issue.⁴⁵ White has written a book justifying homosexual behavior and regularly receives positive press coverage about his pleas for “understanding.”

White also staged a hunger strike in light of Focus on the Family’s support of Amendment 2, which attempted to prohibit cities in Colorado from granting special legal privileges to homosexuals, and planned to stage a homosexual protest next to the ministry’s campus.

One of White’s assertions is that conservative Christians lack grace when dealing with those trapped in homosexual behavior. However, we need to look at the biblical understanding of “grace” as written by the apostle Paul in Romans 6. It is not something to be taken lightly:

What shall we say then? Shall we go on sinning so that grace may increase? By no means! We died to sin; how can we live in it any longer?...Therefore do not let sin reign in your mortal body so that you obey its evil desires. Do not offer the parts of your body to sin, as instruments of wickedness, but rather offer yourselves to God, as those who have been brought from death to life; and offer the parts of your body to him as instruments of righteousness. For sin shall not be your master, because you are not under the law, but under grace. What then? Shall we sin because we are not under law but under grace? By no means! Don’t you know that when you offer yourselves to someone to obey him as slaves, you are slaves to the one whom you obey—whether you are slaves to sin, which leads to death, or to obedience, which leads to righteousness? (vv. 1-2, 12-16).

Those who are trapped in homosexual behavior, just like those who engage in adultery or are addicted to hard-core pornography or other sexual sins, are slaves to that sin. Yet, while most in the church continue to take a fairly hard line on adultery, for instance, the same leaders have chosen, in many instances, to ignore the fact that homosexuals are also slaves to sin and are in need of being pointed to the way of obedience, which leads to righteousness.

Unfortunately, many evangelicals fear the I word (intolerant) and therefore seek appeasement with those who seek to undermine and silence the moral authority of the church and the gospel. It is much like Neville Chamberlain’s going to see Adolf Hitler at Munich in 1938 and selling out his own country and its allies for the sake of “peace in our time.”

The bottom line is that with radical homosexual activists appeasement is not enough. As we have seen, they are demanding total submission to their agenda. Therefore, with each compromise the church makes, another compromise is expected, until the church has nothing left to defend. That is the exact strategy developed by Kirk and Madsen in 1987, and much of the church has unwittingly fallen into their trap.

Attacks on the Church

Let us take a turn here from the appeasement of the church to the trench warfare being waged by radical homosexual activists and their allies in the media against the moral authority of the church. It is not much unlike Chamberlain being convinced that by appeasing Hitler he would avoid war with Germany, at the same time Hitler was lining up his troops to invade Poland.

The most vivid example of the type of warfare being staged by radical homosexual activists and their allies is the sexual abuse scandal in the Roman Catholic Church.

It has been documented that a cadre of homosexual priests has caused a large amount—if not virtually all—of this abuse. However, the radical homosexual activists, the media, and all others who despise what the church stands for, have seized the opportunity in an attempt to swing the church doors open wide for the practice of homosexual behavior, militant feminism, support for abortion, and so forth—all of which fly in the face of the basic tenets of the faith.

For two thousand years, the Roman Catholic Church has taken an unequivocal stand on the Scriptures' teaching regarding homosexual behavior and traditional relationships between men and women. From the writings of Saint Thomas Aquinas to the most recent version of the Catechism of the Catholic Church, homosexual behavior, adultery, and other sexual sins are condemned. Here are some excerpts that deal specifically with homosexual behavior:

- “Lust is disordered desire for or inordinate enjoyment of sexual pleasure. Sexual pleasure is morally disordered when sought for itself, isolated from its procreative and unitive purposes.”⁴⁶
- “Homosexuality refers to relations between men or between women who experience an exclusive or predominant sexual attraction towards persons of the same sex. It has taken a great variety of forms through the centuries and in different cultures. Its psychological genesis remains largely unexplained. Basing itself on Sacred Scripture, which presents homosexual acts as acts of grave depravity,^{*} tradition has always declared that homosexual acts are intrinsically disordered. They are contrary to the natural law. They close the sexual act to the gift of life. They do not proceed from genuine affection and sexual complementarity. Under no circumstances can they be approved.”⁴⁷
- “The number of men and women who have deep-seated homosexual tendencies is not negligible. They do not choose their homosexual condition; for most of them it is a trial. This must be accepted with respect, compassion, and sensitivity. Every sign of unjust discrimination in their regard should be avoided....”⁴⁸

- “Homosexual persons are called to chastity. By the virtues of self-mastery that teach them inner freedom, at times by the support of disinterested friendship, by prayer and sacramental grace, they can and should gradually and resolutely approach Christian perfection.”⁴⁹

* Cf. Genesis 19:1-29; Romans 1:24-27; 1 Corinthians 6:9-10; 1 Timothy 1:10.

The Roman Catholic Church takes an uncompromising stand on the nature of human sexuality. The church's call for celibacy is meant to liberate its priests from sexual temptation. It is not meant to oppress them and force them to act out on so-called suppressed sexual desires, including homosexual behavior and pedophilia. The Catechism also stresses the need to have compassion for the individual trapped in homosexual behavior.

Despite what the catechism says, those who wish to remake the church in their image have attacked celibacy as the cause of the horrible incidents that have occurred in the church. Rather than attack the root of the problem, seminarians and priests who have chosen not to live by the teachings of the church have adapted the world's view of sexuality and therefore have given themselves over (as in Rom. 1) to “shameful lusts.”

Sad to say, because of the fear of ridicule and rejection for taking biblical stands, many in the Roman Catholic Church itself have played into the hands of those who seek to destroy it. George Weigel in his book, The Courage to Be Catholic, describes the tension that has occurred within the church from the infiltration of practicing homosexuals into the priesthood. Many Catholics, in fear of already being “politically incorrect” and the object of secular scorn on the issues of abortion and the ordination of women, try to do anything possible to make themselves look politically liberal and tolerant. (This is also a trend that is seen among many evangelical Protestants as well.) Weigel writes,

Many U.S. bishops, feeling stuck in politically and culturally uncomfortable company on the pro-life and women's ordination issues, were eager to look “liberal” on as many other issues as possible....This determination not-to-appear “conservative,” which fit neatly with what bishops had absorbed from the therapeutic culture, seems to have created a fear of appearing “judgmental” and “homophobic” in dealing with cases of clergy sexual abuse. The bishop surely knew by the early 1990s that the overwhelmingly majority of cases of abuse had to do with the abuse of teenage boys and young men by homosexual clergy. Yet they were slow to act? Why? The determination to appear liberal on social issues other than abortion and euthanasia, and the fear of adding “homophobe” and “misogynist” in the standard American high-cultural vocabulary of put-downs of the Catholic Church, may well have blunted the bishops' ability to deal vigorously with the breakout of the scandal of clergy sexual abuse.⁵⁰

Before we continue with our discussion on the attack on the Catholic Church by radical homosexual activists and their allies, we need to make it clear that we are not condoning the cover-up of, or the terrible sexual abuse that has unfortunately occurred. We have great compassion on those who were abused as children by sexual predators who disguised themselves as men of God.

However, despite the abhorrent nature of what has occurred, we cannot remain silent about how radical homosexual activists and their allies are exploiting this tragedy for their own personal, political, and legal gains.

Paul Likourdis, writing in The Wanderer, properly described the exploitation of this tragedy when he observed, "Catholics who thought there might be some reticence on the part of gay activists in the face of the Church's current homosexual scandals, can see now how homosexual misconduct and crimes actually advance their agenda, just as the AIDS disease was exploited, spun, and twisted to enormously advance public support for homosexual acts and homosexuals, exemplified by the AIDS activists' slogan, 'AIDS Is Our Power!'"¹

So-called progressive Catholics (who perhaps should not call themselves Catholic since they oppose every basic tenet of the faith), like Frances Kissling of Catholics for a Free Choice and the homosexual Catholic group Dignity,^{*} have used this unfortunate scandal as a wedge issue in their drive to remake the church the way they want it to be. Writing for National Review Online, Michael Novak explains their agenda:

* Dignity has gone as far as to sue the Newman Center and Chapel (a Roman Catholic meeting center) in Minneapolis, Minnesota, because the center did not renew Dignity's lease because of legitimate biblical differences. Dignity had wanted to conduct a mass on the church property. The Newman Center was initially found in violation of the city's Civil Rights Ordinance protection against discrimination on the basis of "affectional preference," and faced a civil fine of $ 15,000 plus other related legal costs. The Minnesota Court of Appeals overturned the decision.

According to Tom Fox, long-time publisher/editor of The National Catholic Reporter, the flagship publication of "progressive" Catholics, a new wind is blowing, a new surge of energy, and the moment has come for charging into the breach in the thick walls of the Church, just blasted by the current scandals, in order to install at last the once-deferred new "progressive" church.

That dream has two essential parts....The second part consists in changing the sexual teachings of the Church, to make it conform to current understandings and practices...not only to welcome a homosexual ordination as a good [thing] but also to accept (as long as they are loving and respectful of the other) homosexual acts, to acquiesce in the naturalness of premarital sexuality, to permit divorce and remarriage, and generally to extend a warmer and more poetic acceptance of sensual, erotic, and sexual experience....In short, the Roman Catholic Church should become rather more like the Church of England. The cross can be taken down from the steeples and replaced with a weathervane....

The reason for this heightened optimism among the "progressives" is a sudden opportunity thrust upon them to defame the legacy of Pope John Paul II, which they had feared would extend far beyond their own lifetimes. Now, they sense, is their last opportunity to dismantle the church as we have known it.⁵²

Kissling, who has made it her own personal crusade to get the Vatican kicked out of the United Nations because of its anti-abortion stand, has exploited the abuse tragedy to push her agenda. Kissling has called upon the United Nations to sanction the Vatican. Her mission and that of the radical homosexual activists? It is best summed up in the words of Austin Ruse, president of the Catholic Family and Human Rights Institute, "Their concern is not with the church. Their concern is with overthrowing the church."⁵³

And sure enough the media is attacking with a vengeance the elderly and frail pope, who has taken courageous biblical positions on homosexual behavior and the sanctity of human life. In a virulent New York Times op-ed column titled "Is the Pope Catholic?" Bill Keller not only attacked the pope but the entire moral foundation of the church: "The uncomfortable and largely unspoken truth is that the current turmoil in the Roman Catholic Church is not just a sad footnote to the life of a beloved figure. This is a crisis of the Pope's making....The distrust is the legacy of Pope John Paul II."⁵⁴

And how was the pope responsible for the crisis, according to Keller? By abiding by the moral teachings of the church. He continued his diatribe:

But the struggle within the church is interesting as part of a larger struggle within the human race, between the forces of tolerance and absolutism....Implored by Catholics to consider, at least, the lifesaving power of condoms in the age of AIDS, Pope John Paul II was unyielding. He actually grouped contraception with genocide in a litany of "intrinsically evil" acts that condemn sinners to hell for eternity....In America, most Catholics ignore the Pope on this, as they do on divorce and remarriage, abortion, sex out of wedlock, homosexuality, and many other things that Rome condemns as violations of natural law. It seems fair to say that a church that was not so estranged from its own members on subjects of sex and gender, a more collegial [i.e., tolerant] church, would have handled the issue of child abuse earlier and better.⁵⁵

* Catholics such as Frances Kissling.

To follow this line of thought means that, in Keller's eyes, the church's problem (and these statements can be translated to every church that takes these biblical teachings seriously, not just the Catholic Church) is that it defends biblical morality by actually calling sinners to repentance. In his viewpoint, and those who call themselves progressives, the last thing the church should be doing is preaching moral absolutes but should instead allow homosexual behavior, along with other sexual sins, to run rampant through the church. Thus, the Catholic Church (and all other churches) would become like the tolerant liberal churches, i.e., not much more than a country club.

In response to Keller's vicious attack on the pope and the moral absolutes of the church, Pat Buchanan wrote, "That Keller would hail the salvific properties of condoms is also understandable when one realizes who he works for. According to its political correspondent Richard Berke, speaking to the Gay and Lesbian Journalists Association, 'Three-quarters of the people who decide what goes on the front page [of the Times] are “not-so-closeted” homosexuals.”⁵⁶

The duplicity of the argument (“Intrinsically disordered behavior caused the problem so let's open up the doors to more such behavior”) put forth by radical homosexual activists and progressives boggles the mind. It is always interesting to note that they always demand that conservative, Bible-believing institutions reject their beliefs and embrace modern sexuality (which has brought us AIDS, teenage pregnancy, sexually transmitted diseases, to name just a few “benefits”). This is despite the fact that, in the case of the Catholic Church, it was a contingent of homosexuals violating their promises to celibacy in the priesthood that has caused the problem to begin with! In addition, there is never a link to the fact that while at the same time homosexual activists are attacking the church for allowing men who prey on teenage boys to infiltrate the priesthood, they are attacking the Boy Scouts for keeping the same individuals out!

This argument reminds us of the old adage “We need to destroy this city to save it.” Jon Meacham wrote a prime example of this in the May 6, 2002, issue of Newsweek: “Some Catholic traditionalists are trying to manage the scandal's fallout by arguing that the sexual predation of children and teens by priests is largely a homosexual issue. Such a stance isolates the problem and, conservatives seem to hope, forecloses talk about the future of celibacy, married priests or, at the farthest edge, ordaining openly gay clergy and allowing samesex unions. By pointing their fingers mainly at homosexuality, these church leaders are avoiding discussion of the questions that should be front and center: the roots and costs of a culture of sexual repression and secrecy.”⁵⁷

Meacham went on to call for the ordination of homosexual priests,^{*} the open practice of homosexual and heterosexual sexual license in the church, and rejection of traditional marriage. He stated: “Being more open about sexual orientation might lead to less repression, and less repression—for heterosexuals and homosexuals—might well lead to a climate in which there is less destructive behavior.” He adds: “Isn't the role of the church to encourage people to enter into stable relationships? [No, it is to preach the gospel. Loving, stable opposite-sex marital relationships flow naturally out of submission to Christ—the authors.] The purpose of marriage, or ‘unions,’ or whatever we want to call them, should be the establishment of a committed, loving family. Heterosexuals who do not produce children are no less ‘married.’...We've changed the definition of marriage before, both to liberate women from being legal property and to allow people of different races to marry. Such an approach should encourage monogamy and bring homosexuals into the fuller life of the community.”⁵⁸ †

* This is in despite of a 1961 Catholic Church document that bars the ordination of homosexuals to the priesthood. The document reads: “Those affected by the perverse inclination to homosexuality or pederasty should be excluded from religious vows and ordination.”

† A top Vatican official announced on December 5, 2002, that the church must not bring homosexuals into the priesthood. Cardinal Jorge Arturo Medina Estevez wrote that ordination of “homosexual men or men with homosexual tendencies is absolutely inadvisable and imprudent and, from a pastoral point of view, very risky” See Nicole Winfield, “Vatican Aide Rejects Ordination of Gays,” Associated Press, December 6, 2002.

In a very blunt column for Universal Press Syndicate, Ann Coulter exposed the shallowness of these arguments. She wrote:

Since liberals categorically reject the notion that homosexual conduct is often correlated with homosexuality, they have responded to the gay sex abuse crisis in the priesthood by blaming Catholicism. In particular, liberals have identified the church's celibacy requirement as the root of the problem.

There is absolutely no logic to this theory. It is nothing more than liberals reacting to the concept of sexual restraint like The Exorcist's Linda Blair did to holy water....When did celibacy become a gay magnet?...If celibacy is to blame, this is a show-stopping, Nobel Prize winning discovery overturning years of liberal claptrap. In all other circumstances, it is punishable by death to suggest that sexual behavior is not determined at birth or that gays can be “cured.” Now liberals are hawking the idea that gay priests could have been cured by marriage! It's nice to see liberals becoming such big marriage-boosters. Too bad their newfound respect for marriage—an eminently dissolvable agreement, rescindable by either party without cause or notice—is limited to gays and priests.

Blaming celibacy is not only contrary to various liberal dogmas, but contrary to all known evidence about any vice. Total avoidance, not limited temptation, is the only hope for controlling weakness.⁵⁹

I've never felt condemned by God—it's just the church that's the problem.

—Mark Matson, a homosexual human relations director, Columbus, Ohio

Columnist John Leo, writing in U.S. News and World Report, added that the increasing tolerance of homosexual behavior and other sexual behaviors, inside and outside the church, played a significant role in the scandal.

The rise of the sexually active gay subculture among the clergy didn't cause the horrors of priestly sex abuse. The vast majority of gay priests would never prey on the young. But did the subculture play the role of enabler in the scandals? I think it did, expanding tolerance for the forbidden and generating a sense of futility among the rule-keepers [emphasis added]. Self-deception is infinitely expandable. One man's justification for violating celibacy or the ban on nonmarital sex is another man's justification for “intergenerational love,” formerly child rape.

The way out for the church is not to hunt down and expel every last gay priest, which would be impossible anyway. But it should restore the pressures to keep priests, gay and straight, from acting out sexually, whether by showering with a mature friend or preying on a child. The key principles are easily learned: Maybe celibacy will be changed some day, but if you make a vow to stay celibate, you ought to keep your word. And in the seminaries, Catholic sexual morality should be taught by people who actually believe it. Is this controversial?⁶⁰

Sad to say, according to the homosexual activists and the media, it is controversial for the church to actually teach and live out what the Bible says about homosexual behavior. Therefore, while radical homosexual activists and their allies within the church are trying to reshape it into a modern-day Sodom and Gomorrah, others are attacking it from the outside in hopes of bringing the church to its knees. Both routes can lead to the church's eventual destruction. This is the strategic approach that radical homosexual activists use to achieve their agenda. They try to convince the media and the general public that they represent the "high road" while bombing their enemy incessantly.

Here are just a few examples of this tactic:

- In California, a bill was introduced by Senate President Pro Tem John L. Burton of San Francisco (any coincidence?) that would lengthen the statute of limitations so adult victims could sue the Roman Catholic Church for damages. The bill passed a Senate committee unanimously.⁶¹
- A Saint Paul, Minnesota, attorney named Jeff Anderson, who has made a career out of clergy abuse cases, included the Vatican in a RICO (Racketeering, Intimidation, and Corrupt Organization) lawsuit. In RICO suits, defendants, if found guilty, have to pay triple the amount of court-ordered damages. The law, which was created for dealing with organized crime, is meant to bankrupt such organizations. Anderson said, "We filed a lawsuit naming several dioceses and bishops as racketeers in an ongoing conspiracy to conceal child sexual abuse. We also named the Vatican as in part responsible for the racketeering activity."⁶²
- In San Francisco, openly homosexual district attorney Terence Hallinan asked the archdiocese there for seventy-five years of records related to sexual misconduct by priests.⁶³

Regardless of claims to the contrary, the current sexual problem in the Catholic Church is primarily a homosexual behavior problem. As Rod Dreher wrote in the National Review: "The reluctance [to mention homosexuality] arises, no doubt, partly out of a fear of antagonizing homosexual anti-defamation groups, who resent the stereotype of male homosexuals as pederasts. It's much safer to focus inquiry on the question of mandatory celibacy, or the issue of ordaining women. Yet it defies common sense to imagine that an ordinary man, having made a vow not to marry, is therefore going to be sexually attracted to boys."⁶⁴

To get a glimpse of why this is a homosexual issue, one need not look any further than the Reverend Paul R. Shanley, one of the most notorious priests caught in the scandal. He has been indicted in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts for various crimes.⁶⁵ During his time in the priesthood, Shanley allegedly engaged in the following:

- While on “sick leave” in California, his payroll checks were sent to the Cabana Club Resort, a racy homosexual club in the Palm Springs, California, area. Shanley became an owner of the hotel along with another homosexual priest who was on sick leave as well.⁶⁶
- He attended the 1979 meeting that created the North American Man-Boy Love Association (NAMBLA).⁶⁷

It has also been well documented that many liberal Catholic seminaries have a gay subculture.* For example, it has been estimated that at one time homosexuals made up anywhere from 30 to 70 percent of the student body at St. John's Seminary in Camarillo, California.⁶⁸ R. Scott Appleby, a history professor at Notre Dame University, said, “People I know quite well have left the seminary either in disgust because people are not keeping their vows, or in alienation because they're not gay. In some cases, it's a serious problem.”⁶⁹

* One of the more detailed books on this subject is Goodbye Good Men! by Michael Rose. He devotes an entire chapter to the homosexual subculture at Catholic seminaries. Other chapters include a detailed discussion of the impact of left-leaning theology and its application on two generations of prospective Catholic priests. Interestingly, he documents an increase in the number of seminarians and dioceses loyal to traditional biblical teaching on homosexual behavior, e.g., the Diocese of Omaha, led by Bishop Fabian Bruschewitz.

Joel Mowbray, a lifelong, practicing Catholic, put the problem this way:

Male homosexuality is inherently promiscuous. In a heterosexual relationship, women moderate the innate, intense male sex drive. But in a homosexual conduct, there is no such check. In short, gay couples have two people with male attitudes about sex, which naturally leads to a more permissive view of sexuality. And when seminaries began filling up with homosexuals—both in terms of seminarians and in leadership positions—promiscuity inevitably followed....So how does this relate to the sex abuse scandals? The generation of priests who are largely responsible for the rash of sexual abuse cases mostly entered the priesthood at an extremely early age, ushered into an ensconced environment where they never got a chance to grow up. Teenage boys are the natural objects of sexual desire for an immature homosexual who was enveloped in a promiscuous, homosexual culture in the seminary.⁷⁰

John Leo echoed these thoughts in U.S. News and World Report: “The church's ‘pedophile priest’ problem is actually two problems blurred into one. True pedophiles are rare. Most sexual abuse victims of priests are teenage boys—perhaps 95 percent, according to one estimate. A study of Chicago's 2,200 priests identified 40 sexual abusers, only one of whom was a pedophile. Abusers of teens are generally treatable. Pedophiles aren't. But the church is reluctant to mention the distinction, most likely because opening up the issue of sexually active gay priests is itself explosive, even apart from charges of abuse.”⁷¹ [emphasis ours]

Father Donald B. Cozzens, author of The Changing Face of the Priesthood, asked the pointed question: “Why are 90 to 95—and some estimates say as high as 98—percent of the victims of clergy acting out against teenagers, boys? Why isn't there a higher percentage of teenage girls?”⁷²

The Knights of Columbus ran an advertisement in the Washington Times that stated: “We speak of homosexuality, for this indeed is the problem. We all know the truth: The vast majority of the exposed scandals are cases of pedophilic homosexuality, and thus a particularly heinous spillover of the more widespread problem of homosexuality. Large sectors of the media, however, choose to gloss over the homosexuality and highlight the pedophilia.”⁷³

In fact, while the media was concentrating so hard on the problem in the Catholic Church, homosexual priests and nuns within the church continued on as if nothing had happened. The National Association of Diocesan Lesbian and Gay Ministries had a conference in Cincinnati in September 2002 that featured seminars on “Creating a Welcoming Parish,” “Catholics Respecting Youth in Sexual Minorities,” and “Spirituality for Gay Men.”⁷⁴

The New York Times, Time and Newsweek, to mention a few, brought up the specter of homosexual priests but trod on that turf quite lightly, because they were aware that too much discussion of the issue might derail the homosexual agenda. Rob Dreher wrote, “For journalists, to confront the issue is to risk touching the electrified third rail of American popular culture: the dark side of homosexuality.”⁷⁵

The homosexual activist groups are well aware that this issue, which many hope to exploit to undermine the moral authority of the Catholic Church, could explode directly in their faces. Paul Bedard wrote in U.S. News and World Report, “Gay groups are freaking out over the progression in news coverage of the Roman Catholic Church sex scandal. What started as a story about a few bad men in black has moved to headlines about a subculture of gay priests, some of whom sexually abuse altar boys, and others who may tolerate the crimes.... Their worry: After making homosexuality acceptable in the media, the fight might be back to square one.”⁷⁶

As secular news publications started to raise the specter of homosexuality in the priesthood and its link to the sexual abuse of teenage boys, the Gay and Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation (GLAAD) and the Human Rights Campaign (HRC) put out the following “talking points” to members of the media in order to spin the story away from homosexual behavior:

Do not imply, suggest or allow others to suggest a cause/effect relationship between homosexuality and child sexual abuse. Attempts to insinuate that gay men—either within or outside of the priesthood—have a natural propensity to sexually abuse minors are baseless, defamatory and calculated to fuel anti-gay sentiment among the general public. Please also note that priests who sexually abuse children are guilty of abusive exploitation that is not reflective of any healthy adult sexual orientation—gay or straight.... When your coverage touches on sexual orientation/identity issues, please broaden your resource base to include “openly gay Catholics.” One of the “openly gay Catholic” groups GLAAD and HRC recommends [sic] for media people is Dignity/U.S.A.⁷⁷

The radical homosexual activists know that this can either be a golden moment to weaken the Catholic Church and further restrict religious freedom, or a moment when people will see the dark side of homosexuality and its link to pedophilia and other sexually disordered behavior. As Anthony DeStefano wrote in USA Today: “Their [critics of the Catholic church] true aim is to hurt the church, to damage its credibility in order to reduce its ability to work effectively against the immorality of an increasingly godless society....That is the real meaning of the attacks on the church.”⁷⁸

And that is the point that needs to be made when it comes to the homosexual legal activists, their allies in the media, and their attack on the Catholic Church. It is hypocrisy, pure and simple. While they attack the church for the pedophilia scandal, they promote homosexual sex with teenage boys on TV programs such as Queer as Folk (see chap. 2). The Knights of Columbus in the advertisement we mentioned earlier states: “This same media [that promotes homosexuality and pedophilia] has no qualms about unleashing a ferocious uproar against the Church, Her doctrine and morals.”⁷⁹

Chuck Donovan, former vice president of the Family Research Council and now president of the Family Action Alliance, also predicted this hypocrisy in the media, and from homosexual activists themselves, when he wrote,

When homosexual activists marched outside of the House of Parliament several years ago, they carried signs saying “Stroppy queens [obstreperous homosexuals] demand sixteen.” They were demanding, not asking, that the age of consent for homosexual relations be lowered to sixteen. Tony Blair’s government gave in without hesitation. Are we really certain that all those 16-year-old boys thus liberated will make mature decisions to engage in homosexual relations when invited or pressured by older, more powerful, probably richer males? When a priest entices a 16-year-old boy, it is truly a scandal. But what will be the press response if a British banker, an Oxford don, or a member of the House of Lords seduces a teen? I suspect it will be a bemused world-weariness—unless the seducer is a prominent Catholic.⁸⁰

And where does this all lead? To the persecution of the church for taking a stand against the problem! In Lexington, Kentucky, three priests who have taken a biblical stand on homosexual behavior received threatening letters warning them to stop “persecuting homosexual” priests in their diocese. The letters were purported to be from “The Gay Priests Association” and stated that one of the priests must get “under control and out of the country...That is if you would like to continue to receive a salary and keep your life intact.” The priest said he was targeted because he teaches “Gospel values and Gospel principles.” One of the other priests said to his parishioners, “So many people didn’t believe there was a gay culture throughout the priesthood, and here it is right here. This is how far we have degenerated.”

Interestingly, the former bishop of Lexington had resigned after three men had sued the church and accused him of sexual misconduct. Now these three priests are having their lives threatened for taking a biblical stand against the very behavior charged that caused the bishop to resign!⁸¹

The Price for Taking a Stand

The reality is that radical homosexual activists and their allies are looking for any opportunity to attack and silence any church that takes a biblical stand with regard to homosexual behavior, regardless of denomination. The scenario being played out against the Catholic Church is just a small part of the persecution that many believers and other churches in homosexual enclaves, such as San Francisco, face on a daily basis. What these believers are experiencing now is a snapshot of what will happen to the church in America if it continues to resist the demands of radical homosexual activists. The heat is only going to get higher and the temptation to compromise the gospel in face of persecution is going to become more attractive. However, if the church fails to stand strong in the face of attack, then its very reason to exist (evangelization to spread the gospel) is compromised.

We have already briefly discussed what happened to Focus on the Family in the early 1990s after Colorado's Amendment 2 had passed. Craig was employed there at the time and can attest to the following:

- Rocks were frequently thrown through the windows of the ministry's then-downtown headquarters. In addition, pink triangles were frequently plastered on the walls of the building.
- Dead-animal parts and a casket were left on the ministry's front door after a homosexual teen committed suicide, and homosexual activists blamed his death on the passage of Amendment 2 and the "hostile" climate toward homosexuals in Colorado.
- On the light poles in front of the ministry's headquarters and throughout the downtown area, flyers were posted, calling for conservative Christians to be thrown to the lions.
- Focus on the Family employees were verbally assaulted in local restaurants by homosexual activists and their allies. As a result, employees were told for their safety to remove their name tags in public.
- Homosexual activists played a part in helping launch an expensive, time-consuming IRS audit of the ministry, which turned up nothing.
- Homosexual activists accused the ministry of conducting a witch-hunt against homosexual teachers. The rumor was quickly denied by the local school district. Despite this, homosexual activists continued to make this allegation, with no documentation to support it.
- Bomb threats were made on a regular basis to the ministry's headquarters.
- At the dedication of Focus on the Family's new facilities in 1993, a group named Lesbian Avengers attempted to stage a kiss-in and remove their tops to expose their breasts to the public. Craig was sitting in the same section as the Avengers and quickly summoned security before they were successful in their protest. The Avengers made sure that their eviction was videotaped and then tried to peddle the video to various news outlets.

* Craig Osten was employed at Focus on the Family 1988-2001 and was an assistant to Dr. James Dobson, 1993-2001. He witnessed all of these events during his time there.

Focus on the Family and Dr. James Dobson are not the only ones to experience the wrath of angry homosexual activists. Three years ago, at a crusade in Charlotte, North Carolina, several homosexual members of the Seigle Avenue Presbyterian Church choir walked out in protest after Anne Graham Lotz, the daughter of Billy Graham, stated that homosexual behavior is a sin. To her credit, Lotz did not back down from her assertion.⁸²

What Focus on the Family experienced in the days after Amendment 2, what the Catholic Church is experiencing in the sex abuse scandal, and what Anne Graham Lotz experienced at her crusade are only a small sampling of what sincere religious believers have faced when they have taken a stand against the affirmation of homosexual behavior. For example:

- Ron Greer, an eighteen-year veteran of the Madison, Wisconsin, fire department handed out a tract to his fellow firefighters and friends that outlined the biblical position on homosexual behavior. Greer was suspended without pay and ordered to attend diversity training. When he refused, he was fired.⁸³
- In April 1996, Scott Southworth was scheduled to speak at a Madison, Wisconsin, church about homosexual behavior and the Bible. About one hour before the speaking event, roughly four hundred to five hundred homosexual activists gathered across the street from the church. They chanted things (all caught on video) like “Queer mob rule,” “Hey, Hey, Ho, Ho, homophobia's got to go,” “Go away,” and “Two-four-sixeight! We don't want your Christian hate.” One demonstrator repeatedly yelled, “Bring back the lions!” Other protesters carried flags and signs that read “Bigots are Perverse,” “Gay Love is Divine,” “Haters—Repent or Perish,” “Hate is Not a Family Value,” and “God is Gay—He Loves Men.” Eventually the demonstrators found their way into the church and disrupted the entire presentation.⁸⁴
- Orthodox Presbyterian minister Chuck McIlhenny dismissed his church organist when the organist divulged that he was a practicing homosexual. The organist sued the church, tying up McIlhenny in five years of legal battles in which he and the church ultimately prevailed. During that time, he and his family received death threats, had their residence firebombed, and were told by the San Francisco Police Department that there was nothing they could do to stop radical homosexual activists from threatening him and his family.*
- Eugene Lumpkin was a member of San Francisco's Human Rights Commission. He was also the pastor of a local Baptist church. In the June 23, 1993, issue of the San Francisco Chronicle, Lumpkin expressed his sincere religious beliefs about the sinfulness of homosexual behavior. He was immediately fired from the commission and was quickly branded a homophobe. A pro-homosexual group proclaimed, "It's about time hate-spewing Christian priests got their bigoted remarks 'corrected.' Let's hope this correction serves as a warning to other homophobic religious bigots that their intolerance just isn't going to be tolerated."⁸⁵

- Also in 1993, the Hamilton Square Baptist Church in San Francisco invited a well-known pro-family leader to speak at the church. Radical homosexual activists stormed the church doors, pounding on them and screaming, "We want your children! Give us your children!" The church experienced a great deal of vandalism, and again the San Francisco Police Department said it could do nothing to stop the rampaging homosexual activists. Dr. David Innes, the senior pastor, was told: "You have to understand, this is San Francisco."⁸⁶ †
- Radical homosexual groups in Ferndale, Michigan, attempted to have the city's police chaplain fired because he expressed the biblical position with regard to homosexual behavior. Rev. Tom Hansen of Bethel Missionary Church had objected to the city hosting the state's largest annual gaypride festival. Erin James, of Mel White's "Soulforce" group, said: "He [Hansen] believes the Bible condemns homosexuality....Homosexuality is not a sin and not a sickness." A homosexual resident said: "Rev. Hansen's interpretation of the Bible is hurtful and divisive."⁸⁷
- U.S. Senator Mark Dayton (D-Minn.), in a speech to the Rainbow Families Conference, said religious people who support traditional marriage show "only disgust and disdain while they spew hatred and inhumanity." He continued, "Jesus Christ didn't say, 'Love only thy opposite-sex neighbors.' Christ was silent on homosexuality even as he repeatedly condemned adultery and divorce." A group of pastors immediately sought an apology from the Senator, writing, "We are grieved by your name-calling of those who hold to a traditional view of marriage and we believe you owe the people of Minnesota a public apology for your harsh and intemperate attacks on people seeking to uphold basic Christian beliefs. You also stated that Jesus was silent on homosexuality. Jesus was also silent on rape and incest but we are not to interpret the lack of recorded comments as approval of such behaviors. Both the Old and New Testaments condemned homosexual behavior and Christians are obligated to uphold the Scriptures' teaching."⁸⁸
- Two men were arrested in Dayton, Tennessee, for attempting to assemble two large wooden crosses during the city's "Gay Day" gathering. They were cited for disorderly conduct. One of the men, Michael Siemer, said, "This is the first time I've been arrested for being a Christian." The two men were standing across the freeway from the park where the "Gay Day" event was being held.⁸⁹
- On April 28, 2004, the Canadian Parliament passed Bill C-250, which could make certain portions of the Bible that deal with homosexual behavior be classified as "hate speech" with criminal penalties. The Canadian Bible Society put out repeated warnings that the bill could have a chilling effect on religious freedom and evangelism in Canada. Janet Epp of the Buckingham Evangelical Fellowship of Canada said, "Pastors are afraid. They're afraid to preach on this subject. Nobody wants to have the police come to the door."⁹⁰ The bill, which added "sexual orientation" to Canada's hate-propaganda law, passed by a vote of 59-11. The bill reads, "Every one, who by communicating statements, other than in private conversation, willfully promotes hatred against an identifiable group, is guilty of an indictable offense and is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years."⁹¹ Meanwhile, the author of the bill, openly homosexual Svend Robinson has stepped down after video surveillance cameras caught him stealing a $50,000 ring from an auction house.⁹²

- When Christians met at a Calgary, Alberta, hotel to discuss the bill's implications, they were interrupted by a group called the "Gay Militia." The homosexuals beat sticks together, roared slogans, and drowned out a speech by Rev. Tristan Emmanuel on the increasing hostility to Christians. The homosexual men ignored both meeting organizers and hotel security personnel who asked them to leave. "Haters!" screamed the protesters. "Bigots!...what you are doing is a hate crime!"⁹³
- An openly homosexual Canadian senator, Laurier L. LaPierre, sent an e-mail back to individuals who opposed C-250: "God! You people are sick. God should strike you dead! In a book [the Bible] that is supposed (sic) to speak of love and you find passages of hatred: You should be ashamed of yourself for reading such books!...If your god teaches you to hate and judge, then get another god." The senator did somewhat apologize, saying, "On February 7 I answered some e-mails in a less than Senatorial manner. I am apologizing for my vitriolic answers to two e-mails. [I] mistakenly let out months of frustration."⁹⁴
- Officials in the Canadian province of Ontario fined a Christian mayor $10,000 for refusing to proclaim "Gay Pride Day" in his city. A Christian businessman was fined $5,000 for refusing to print materials for a homosexual rights group. Attorney Bruce Long, writing in the March 2004 issue of Church Law Bulletin, said, "Churches and religious institutions may want to consider...avoiding public criticisms of identifiable groups...limiting opinions to private conversations, and if targeted or investigated, rely on the constitutional right to remain silent."
- In England, an elderly evangelical Christian, who had been repeatedly assaulted for speaking out against homosexual behavior, was ruled to have been "properly convicted" by the British High Court of "breaching the peace." The sixty-nine-year-old man, who had passed away before the final judgment was rendered, had been fined 300 British pounds (approximately $550 American dollars) by a lower court for simply holding a sign that read "Stop Immorality. Stop Homosexuality. Stop Lesbianism" and featured a reference to Jesus. Despite the fact that the man had been repeatedly physically assaulted, the high court judges ruled that the restriction on Hammond's right to free expression was justified under the European Convention on Human Rights.⁹⁵
- Back in the United States, the Canyon Ferry Road Baptist Church in Helena, Montana, hosted a closed-circuit presentation of a rally to support the proposed Federal Marriage Amendment that was held in Colorado Springs. During the rally, petitions were circulated asking state legislators to place a constitutional amendment protecting traditional marriage on the Montana ballot—an activity that churches can legally engage in without jeopardizing their tax-exempt status. Homosexual rights groups and their allies complained that the church had not filed the “proper paperwork” and should have its tax-exempt status revoked as well as pay a stiff fine. An ADF allied attorney—working with ADF staff counsel Gary McCaleb—has intervened legally on the church's behalf.⁹⁶ †

* The McIlhennys' long struggle against radical homosexual activists is chronicled in the book When the Wicked Seize a City by Pastor McIlhenny and Frank York (Huntington House Publishers).

† A tape of the homosexual protesters later aired on Focus on the Family and is still available through that ministry.

* In appendix 2 of this book, we include a letter from ADF staff counsel Gary McCaleb on what churches can legally do with regard to public policy matters without jeopardizing their tax-exempt, non-profit status.

This last item is something that many are warning will happen when evangelical churches refuse to perform same-sex “marriages.” Raymond Flynn, a former U.S. ambassador to the Vatican (appointed by President Clinton) and mayor of Boston, believes that there is a “distinct possibility” that homosexual activists will try to force churches to redefine religious marriage or lose their tax-exempt, nonprofit status. Flynn says, “The issue of legalizing same-sex marriages in Massachusetts and California raises the question: Does this mean there will be cases brought against the Catholic Church for discrimination? I think it is the next step.”

Allan Carlson, president of the pro-family Howard Center and a distinguished fellow with the Family Research Council, adds, “I think there's vulnerability [to the tax-exempt status] there. If same-sex marriage is determined to be a fundamental human right, would churches still be allowed to ban such things and also claim a tax exemption? I don't know.”⁹⁷ †

† In appendix 1, we provide a detailed examination of how the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in the Bob Jones University case could conceivably be used by homosexual activists and their legal allies to revoke the tax-exempt status of churches that engage in “discrimination.”

Nowhere is the fight for religious freedom more evident than in the assault of radical homosexual activists upon the church. Radical homosexual activists will not be satisfied until the church either becomes an advocate for their behavior, as we have seen in the Church of England and Marjorie Munger's church, or is silenced by intimidation or legal action—as we have seen in Canada. Some activists will exploit anything (as we have seen in the Catholic Church scandal) to achieve their aims. The ultimate goal is to not only restrict, but also to punish any speech that does not affirm homosexual behavior. As Cathy Renna of the Gay and Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation put it, “People often get their views from their religions, so we don't want the pulpit saying that gay is wrong.”⁹⁸

Renna is right on one point. It is religious belief that plays a major determining role in the acceptance of homosexual behavior. A 2004 Pew

Research Center poll found that while 55 percent of Americans believe homosexual behavior is sinful, 76 percent of individuals with a high religious commitment believe so. Individuals with high religious commitment oppose same-sex “marriage” by more than a 6-1 margin.⁹⁹ That is why the silencing—or as we discussed earlier—the spiritual apathy of the church is so essential to the fulfillment of the homosexual agenda.

To take a look at what possibly awaits for the church, we need look no further than the past. As we stated in the first chapter, the radical homosexual activist community has adopted many of the techniques used in Nazi Germany.

The Rutgers Journal of Law and Religion recently published an article that summarized several documents from the World War II era. One of these documents was “The Persecution of Christian Churches” by the Office of Strategic Services (OSS), the intelligence agency that had been set up in World War II to spy on Germany and its allies.

The report reads as follows: “The Nazis believed that the churches could be starved and strangled spiritually in a relatively short time when they were deprived of all means of communication with the faithful beyond the church building.”¹⁰⁰

Chuck Donovan, whose father served in the OSS, writes about what happened in Nazi Germany:

At first Nazi leadership feigned a desire for peace with Christian churches through the Concordat of 1933 with the Catholic Church and pledging to honor the freedom of Protestant churches, so long as the churches gave up their involvement in political issues. Then the Nazis began tightening the screws. “Under the pretext that the Churches themselves were interfering in political and state matters, the [Nazis] would deprive the Churches step by step, of all opportunity to affect German public life.

Breaking the back of Christianity in Germany was aimed at cutting off the education and formation of the rising generation from its heritage of faith [eerily similar to what is happening in government schools today]. As extreme as these goals seemed then, capturing youth and pressuring the Church to abandon its witness in the public square are almost universal phenomena now.¹⁰¹

The assault on religious freedom also extends beyond the church walls to individual believers in the workplace and religious organizations that do not accept and embrace homosexual behavior. If intimidation does not work, homosexual activists are willing to unleash the power of federal, state, and local governments to cow the church and believers into silence, just as Kirk and Madsen advocated back in the late 1980s.

And once the church is silenced on the sexual behavior issue, it will not take long before it is silenced on many other issues. Already in Canada, churches and other religious organizations cannot speak out on homosexual behavior for fear of finding themselves in violation of hate-crime laws. If speaking out against homosexual behavior is considered “hate,” then what about other sexual behavior now called sin, such as adultery? Without moral authority, the church in the United States will become like so many are now in Europe, museum pieces from an era long, long ago. The result will be tragic for the millions of individuals who will be unable to hear and respond to the gospel—the good news of Jesus Christ—because the church may no longer be allowed to proclaim it.

Let's conclude again with the story of Lot.

The two angels arrived at Sodom in the evening, and Lot was sitting in the gateway of the city. When he saw them, he got up to meet them and bowed down with his face to the ground. “My lords,” he said, “please turn aside to your servant's house. You can wash your feet and spend the night and then go on your way early in the morning.” “No,” they answered, “we will spend the night in the square.” But he insisted so strongly that they did go with him and entered his house.

He prepared a meal for them, baking bread without yeast, and they ate. Before they had gone to bed, all of the men from every part of the city of Sodom—both young and old—surrounded the house.

They called to Lot, “Where are the men who came to you tonight?

Bring them out to us so that we can have sex with them.”

Lot went outside to meet them and shut the door behind him and said, “No, my friends. Don't do this wicked thing.” [emphasis ours]

—Genesis 19:1-7

From being forbidden by God to enter the city, to sitting in a place of authority there, to calling sexual activists his friends, Lot's behavior was not unlike all too many people of faith today.

The Seduction of Corporate America

In many regards, the workplace is the leading edge of change for the GLBT [Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual, and Transgender] community. Company CEOs and executives can often wield more power than state and local officials in creating significant changes that affect their employees' lives. They can enact new policies with the approval of a few board members rather than thousands or even millions of voters. ...Through the enactment of DP (domestic partner) benefits, employers send the message that all employees, including GLBT workers, are valued and accepted as equal, which paves the way for more employees to come out.

—National Gay and Lesbian Task Force Organizing Manual

Betty Sabatino was an employee for a San Antonio bank. One day, she was ordered to attend a session on “fair employment practices.” During a question-and-answer portion of the program, billed as being a “safe zone” and open to all questions, she inquired as to why the company would provide special considerations for employees based on their sexual behavior. After the session was over, her boss approached her and expressed “concern” about her question. A few weeks later, she was fired because of “management's loss of confidence” in her.¹

In Hollywood, California, two homosexual employees stopped near the desk of an Orthodox Jewish employee and proceeded to have a graphic discussion of the homosexual pornographic films one of them had seen. The Orthodox Jew asked the two men to stop and they refused. When he voiced his concern to the company's human relations department, he was told it was his problem that he disapproved of the men's sexual orientation and he should “lighten up.”²

These are just two examples of what has happened to individuals who object to the promotion of homosexual behavior in the workplace. Yet, they are a microcosm of how some in corporate America have embraced the homosexual agenda, and allowed radical homosexual activists to silence, and in some cases, fire, those who do not bow at the altar of so-called tolerance.

Radical homosexual activists have adapted numerous strategies to push their agenda through corporations and marginalize and intimidate those who would object.

Did you know that 213 companies out of the Fortune 500³ now offer domestic-partner benefits, including 82 percent of the Fortune 500.⁴ And yet, despite these numbers, many corporate leaders have no idea what the enactment of these policies of financial subsidy really mean for their companies and for society as a whole. In addition, many of these corporate leaders are also not doing this on their own initiative; they are being forced to—by local laws and unrelenting pressure from radical homosexual activists. Others are doing so because they see a potential gold mine waiting to be tapped—the homosexual community, a community mostly without children and with large disposable incomes.

By pressuring corporations to accept their agenda and adopt domestic-partner benefits, homosexual legal activists hope to succeed in their goal to redefine marriage and the family. Nowhere is this better explained than in this statement from the organizing manual of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force: “[An ideal policy would cover] a wide range of family types. If possible, an employer should offer benefits to same-and-opposite sex couples, both romantic and non-romantic, as well as the partner’s children. By crafting an inclusive policy such as this, the employer allows the employee to define his or her own family and responds to the family’s needs. Moreover, an inclusive policy is more flexible and can adapt to employee family structures as they continue to change.”[emphasis ours]

The key phrase in this statement is “the employer allows the employee to define his or her own family.” That line shows the ultimate objective of radical homosexual activists: to use corporate America to advance their agenda of rejecting God’s definition of the family and replacing it with one of their own, whether it be with three mommies, two daddies, or whatever arrangement they can devise.

If this were not enough, domestic-partner policies open up the door to fraud and deceit. New York Magazine reported that a number of “straight” individuals without health insurance are now claiming to be domestic partners with friends who work for companies that offer these benefits. In the words of one executive assistant, “All we had to do was swear we were in a committed relationship. They didn’t ask for any proof or anything.” One human relations employee stated that a man tried to register his cat as a domestic partner. The paperwork had already been submitted to the insurance company by the employer before the ruse was realized.⁷

To achieve these aims, the activists have adopted a strategy that pressures corporations from various directions. Whether it is through local government ordinances,⁸ shareholder resolutions, collective bargaining, or one-on-one meetings with management, homosexual activists are attacking on all fronts to achieve their goals. Again, they will keep coming back time and time again to wear down corporate decision makers. This strategy can be best summed up in an advertisement placed by IBM in support of a gay, lesbian, bisexual, transgendered leadership conference in Seattle, Washington, in 2000. Quoting Samuel Jackson, the ad states: “Great works are performed not by strength but by perseverance.”

The effort to get corporations on board with the homosexual agenda is a multipronged strategy. According to the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force organizing manual, the first step is the establishment of a GLBT employee group: “Before starting to work on specific issues in the workplace, it is important to form an employee organization to identify needs, operate with [a] common cause, and link employees who are interested in working for change. Even if it is not possible to form an official group of GLBT employees, it is valuable [to] create an informal unofficial group from which the organizing efforts can be launched.”⁹

The Foot in the Door

The second step in the homosexual activist strategy is for corporations to adopt a sexual-orientation policy. Although often presented as an urgently needed policy to stop egregious discrimination, the NGLTF manual readily admits that getting corporations to change their anti-discrimination policies and to provide domestic partners benefits is just the beginning of their campaign for their eventual goal of same-sex marriage and beyond. Yet at public shareholder meetings, activists publically and deceitfully claim that all they want is a limited anti-bias policy. At the annual meeting of Emerson Electric, for instance, homosexual activists stated that having a sexual-orientation policy does “not require the company to offer equal benefits to partners of gay employees.”¹⁰ However, this statement contradicts the strategy as outlined in the NGLTF training manual, which reads as follows: “Before attempting to get domestic partner benefits from your employer, it is imperative that the company's non-discrimination policy include sexual orientation. ...Inclusion in a company's employment equal opportunity (EEO) policies also implies inclusion in any of its diversity programs, which provide many opportunities for educational work and involvement in policy making decisions. ...A common rationale for establishing domestic partner benefits is that the failure to do so is contradictory to a nondiscrimination clause.”¹¹

After reading this statement it is fairly obvious that the addition of sexual orientation to company anti-discrimination policies is the Trojan horse that leads to domestic-partner benefits, contrary to assertions made relating to the Emerson Electric shareholders meeting.

Many mainstream corporations actively seek this [homosexual] audience in their marketing and advertising for products from beer to liquor to life insurance, and depict openly gay and lesbian relationships. Further, an increasing number of major corporations are openly depicting non-traditional sexual activities in traditional advertisements and including elements of fetish attire and dominance and submission role-playing between adults.

—Judy Guerin, executive director, National Coalition for Sexual Freedom

This leads to the third step: domestic partner benefits. And, if corporations don't voluntarily offer domestic-partner benefits, they are increasingly forced by cities and municipalities with large homosexual communities to do so. In 1996, the San Francisco Board of Supervisors passed an ordinance that required all companies that do business with the city and county to offer domestic-partner benefits to their employees. Because of this ordinance, thousands of corporations have chosen to offer domestic-partner benefits rather than risk closing their businesses in one of the top five population markets in the United States. Corporations caved into homosexual activist demands not because of social concerns, but because of economic ones. Without the influence of this ordinance, the overall growth in domestic-partner benefits would be much less. According to the Human Rights Campaign, of the 4,285 companies that adopted domestic-partner benefit policies, 3,087 had done so because of the San Francisco ordinance.¹²

(A brief side note: A homosexual newspaper disclosed on March 7, 2003, that nearly three years ago (in 2001), the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force, a champion of domestic partner policies, actually tried to cut domestic partner benefits for its own employees! NGLTF said that the policies were “prohibitively expensive” but compromised by paying 50 percent after negotiations with the staff.¹³ Yet, on its own Web site, NGLTF denies that these benefits will cost employers too much money. The site reads: “The most common reason cited by companies who do not implement domestic partner benefits is the perception that to do so would be cost prohibitive...these concerns are baseless. ...If a company cares about its employees and about the values of fairness and non-discrimination, it should treat all employees equitably, no matter the price tag.”¹⁴)

Radical homosexual activists are now claiming that since corporate America has embraced domestic-partner policies (involuntarily in most cases), even though their statistics only show 4,285 out of 5 million corporations have adopted such policies, it is time for local, state, and federal governments to do so as well. This is despite the fact that it was compliance with a local ordinance that caused the dramatic growth in corporate domestic-partner policies to begin with!

The Alliance Defense Fund supported a case to challenge the San Francisco ordinance.¹⁵ It involves S. D. Myers, a small Christian company that operates out of Ohio and has sold electrical transformers as low bidder to San Francisco for years. With ADF's help, Myers challenged the ordinance on state and federal constitutional grounds in the United States District Court in Oakland, California. Unfortunately, the court ruled against Myers, and it appealed to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, where it lost again. The court ruled that the city and county ordinance did not place an “undue burden” on interstate commerce in violation of the federal constitution's commerce and due process clauses. While this case has been lost at the Court of Appeals level, it is now pending before the United States Supreme Court for possible review.

“Safe Spaces” (Except for Those Who Disagree)

The fourth step for homosexual activists is to then use corporate employment policies to promote homosexual behavior and stigmatize, isolate, and silence any employees who may express opposition to such behavior. The most vivid example of this is the “Safe Spaces” programs at Lucent and Xerox.

(Unfortunately, the Orthodox Jewish man mentioned earlier was not allowed to have a safe space to have his beliefs respected.)

These programs encourage employees to display a sign that designates their work areas as safe spaces where individuals can talk openly (in a positive manner) about homosexual behavior. The flyer promoting this program tells employees how they can be supportive of gay people. It reads as follows:

- “Don't assume everyone is heterosexual.”
- “Don't permit homophobic jokes or comments.” [Since expressing one's biblically held beliefs on homosexual behavior has been labeled homophobia by radical homosexual activists, this is effectively calling for the censorship of religious speech.]
- “Treat the subject in a positive way.”
- “Use inclusive language (partner or significant other)” and “Respect the privacy of the individual.” [Only speech that affirms homosexual behavior is approved, and thus the gospel is silenced. Sadly, people like Betty Sabatino find themselves out of a job if they object to the promotion of homosexual behavior.]

The sign goes on to say, “Remember, most gay people remain completely or partially closeted within the work environment for various reasons including fear of rejection and lack of acceptance. Even though you may be supportive of your lesbian and gay coworkers, making them comfortable with you is more important than asking if they are gay. Displaying the ‘Safe Space’ emblem is a great way to start!”¹⁶

The sign consists of a bright pink triangle, the symbol that has been adopted by the homosexual activist movement to symbolize its cause.^{*} Of course, this program also can be used to identify and stigmatize those who do not agree with homosexual behavior, since individuals who do not display the sign can be easily targeted.

* According to homosexual activists, the pink triangle was used by Nazi Germany to identify homosexuals who were rounded up and sent to concentration camps. Their history ignores the role of homosexuals in top positions in Hitler's regime.

In the final steps the manual discusses how to enlist corporations in the public relations effort by homosexual activists to link homosexual behavior with civil rights: “Companies should clearly express to employees, consumers, and the community that domestic partner benefits are not special rights; they are equal rights....The company is recognizing diversity and acknowledging the needs of all of its employees within that framework; all of its employees are equal and therefore all relationships are also equal.”¹⁷ And “[Domestic partner] benefits are not the final step in the GLBT [Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual, Transgender] quest for equality, but they are integral to its achievement.”¹⁸

“Diversity” Training

Another way that religious freedom is threatened in the workplace is through “diversity training” sessions for employees in which biblical beliefs on homosexual behavior and marriage are openly ridiculed. Brian McNaught, who is considered the diversity guru and conducts workshops for AT&T, has written, “There are people who believe that homosexual behavior is forbidden by the Bible. This too is a personal belief.”¹⁹ With regard to marriage, he has said, “Heterosexist language can be changed. We can say, for instance, partner or significant other rather than spouse. We can say, ‘Are you in a relationship?’ rather than ‘Are you married?’”²⁰ This ties into the statement from the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force organizing manual that all relationships must be perceived on equal footing with marriage, therefore devaluing marriage and exalting alternative lifestyles.

Diversity training is also used to spread misleading or untruthful statistics with regard to homosexual behavior. At one such “diversity” training session at American Express, employees were told that 11 percent of the population is homosexual, despite the fact that no credible study has shown the percentage of homosexuals to be above 2 to 4 percent of the population.²¹

Homosexual Dollars Equal Corporate Support

The fourth step is to get corporate America to financially support radical homosexual activism. The activists have achieved this with surprising ease.

Why has corporate America been such an easy target for homosexual activists to push their agenda? One of the main reasons is that the homosexual community has a much higher level of disposable income than most families,* and therefore in order to tap that market, many corporations have gone overboard in their willingness to bow to the demands of radical homosexual activists. In addition, homosexual activists, with the aid of the media, have become so adept at demonizing any corporation that does not give in to their agenda that most companies quietly cower at their feet rather than face the public relations wrath of the activists.

* A study released by Simmons Research in 2000 found the average income of gay and lesbian households to be $85,000, more than twice the national average. According to a Syracuse University/Opus Comm Group/G Society study released in October 2001, the median household income of homosexual households is $65,000—nearly 60 percent higher than the national average of $40,800. More than a fifth of the respondents in the Syracuse study reported a household income of $ 100,000 or above, while nearly 60 percent of homosexual male households and 46 percent of lesbian households reported income in excess of $60,000. According to Simmons Research, 59 percent of gay and lesbian consumers buy “whatever they want.” The homosexual market is estimated to be in the range of $250-$350 billion. Finally, 62 percent of homosexual men and 59 percent of lesbians are college graduates, and 47 percent of homosexual men and 40 percent of lesbians hold professional or managerial jobs—more than twice the figure for the general population. What is interesting is that homosexuals deny these demographics when they are mentioned in the context of anti-discrimination, but then trumpet them when they are convincing corporations to cater to them.

One example of this is the number of corporations that support radical homosexual training conferences. One such conference is the “Out and Equal Leadership Summit,” held on an annual basis to develop strategies to push the homosexual agenda on corporations. The following were listed among the 2004 conference sponsors:

- American Airlines
- Best Buy
- Intel Corp.
- NCR
- California State Automobile Assoc.
- Kaiser Permanente
- IBM
- Cargill Inc.
- Lucent Technologies
- Eastman Kodak
- Charles Schwab & Co.
- Microsoft
- Chubb Insurance Group
- Chevron/Texaco
- Proctor and Gamble
- JP Morgan Chase & Co.
- Daimler Chrysler
- Prudential Financial
- Motorola
- Cingular Wireless
- Qwest
- Ford Motor Company
- Coors Brewing Co.
- Raytheon
- SC Johnson
- Dell Computers
- Sun Microsystems
- Shell Oil
- E-Trade
- Target
- Walt Disney World
- Fleet
- Boeing
- Aetna
- General Mills
- United Airlines
- Agilent Technologies
- General Motors
- Verizon
- American Express
- Hewlett-Packard
- Wells Fargo ank
- Bank One
- IBM
- Whirlpool
- Xerox

The Ford Foundation has provided grants to the Gill Foundation²² (which promotes homosexual causes in Colorado), the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force,²³ International Gay and Lesbian Human Rights Commission,²⁴ National Gay and Lesbian Task Force Policy Institute,²⁵ and the Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund,²⁶ which is the largest legal advocate for same-sex marriage in the United States.

The Human Rights Campaign, which bills itself as the “largest lobbying group for gay and lesbian rights in the United States,” lists American Airlines, Volvo,* IBM, Washington Mutual, Cingular Wireless, Nike, John Hancock, Coors, and Capital One among the corporate sponsors on the HRC Web site.²⁷

* Volvo ran an ad in homosexual publications that depicted a homosexual couple with a baby and a pregnant lesbian. The ad had the tagline “Whether you’re starting a family or creating one as you go...Volvo. For life.”

Catering to the Homosexual Market

Corporations have also been lining up to advertise in homosexual publications and to publish and air advertisements sympathetic to the homosexual agenda. This ties into a strategy of using corporate America to soften up Americans for acceptance of homosexual behavior.

Joe Landry, publisher of Out and The Advocate, says “Lots of companies are adding diversity marketing to their budgets, which used to mean money for advertising mainly to blacks and Hispanics, but now it’s meant largely, and sometimes mainly, for gay and lesbian customers.”²⁸

In fact, from 1997 to 1999, advertising in gay publications went up 20.2 percent, to $120.4 million. This does not include homosexual-themed advertisements in other media.”²⁹

And corporations eager for homosexual dollars have been able to pursue a marketing strategy aimed at those who practice homosexual behavior without much backlash. Bob Witeck of Witeck-Combs Communications says, “I think we’re near a tipping point. Backlash against such [homosexual] advertising has dropped and there’s a higher comfort level. I see more evidence of that all the time.”³⁰

Homosexual activists demand more than just advertising directed toward them, they demand total support for their agenda. A Human Rights Campaign survey found that “seventy-two percent of gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender consumers said it was important for ‘companies who advertise to the GLBT community to demonstrate effective corporate citizenship by supporting their causes.’”³¹

During the 2000 Summer Olympics, the John Hancock Financial Services deliberately marketed itself to the homosexual community and it appeared they did just as the radical activists demanded: The advertisement showed total support for their agenda. One commercial featured two women holding a newborn Chinese baby and telling each other what wonderful mothers they will both make. The ad ended with the tag line “We are family.” Obviously, the viewer could assume the women were open lesbians. It was only after adoption groups expressed concern that the Chinese government would forbid future adoptions of children since one of the conditions of such adoptions was that they be to two-parent, heterosexual homes, did John Hancock alter the commercial. How did John Hancock alter it? By changing the nationality of the baby from Chinese to Cambodian!”³²

Subaru has also been a major marketer to the homosexual community and proudly states that it is the number-one choice of lesbian households.³³ In addition, Subaru has used a homosexual ad agency to promote its product.³⁴ To ensure the continued support from the lesbian community, Subaru’s national advertising campaign features lesbian tennis star Martina Navratilova and includes the slogan “It’s not a choice. It’s the way we’re built.”³⁵ The implication is fairly obvious.

The airline industry, particularly American Airlines and United Airlines, has been a big supporter of the homosexual agenda. For American, the lure of homosexual travel dollars is too enticing to pass up. American spokesman Tim Kinkaid says, “We’re doing this for a great business reason. It’s been very rewarding to us. We’ve made millions of dollars over the years simply by reaching out to this community and acknowledging that they are important to us....There was a negative reaction from conservative religious organizations, but every other airline is doing it now....”³⁶ activists. After the 1996 San Francisco ordinance was passed, United initially balked at providing domestic-partner benefits and became the target of blistering attacks from radical homosexual activists and their friends in the media.³⁷ San Francisco International Airport is the airline's West Coast hub, and United controls a large number of gates there. After it became evident that the city might be willing to boot the largest leaser of gates from its airport rather than relent on the ordinance, United not only caved in, but in order to prove itself to the homosexual community, became a full-fledged supporter of homosexual organizations.

For United Airlines, the issue has been damage control with homosexual

For example, the summer 2000 update from the Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund reported on the corporate largesse of United: "Lambda has forged a new three-year partnership with United Airlines....Valued at over $300,000, it is the largest corporate sponsorship in Lambda's history to date. The benefits of this new strategic alliance includes underwriting of all staff air travel for Lambda for the next three years, round trip tickets to be used as prizes at Lambda events, discount coupons for event attendees, and special travel to Liberty and Partner Circle donors and new Lambda members."³⁸

Can you imagine the uproar in the media and from radical homosexual activists if, for example, Delta Airlines gave three years of free flights, discounts, and so forth to Focus on the Family or to the First Baptist Church to oppose Lambda's agenda? Delta would probably be picketed and skewered on CNN, MSNBC, and the New York Times editorial page for providing support to an "extremist" agenda. Yet no one blinks an eye when United Airlines provides free travel to radical homosexual activists, especially in light of the government bailout of the airline industry after the events of September 11, 2001.* As Tim Kinkaid of American Airlines said, the opinion of religious conservatives does not frighten airlines at all. However, if a radical homosexual group raises one little objection, they quake in fear and give in to every one of its demands.³⁹ †

* The total amount set aside by the federal government to bail out the airlines was $15 billion. According to the airline industry, they lost $7.7 billion in 2001. Meanwhile, they are providing free travel to homosexual activists. United Airlines' application for a federal loan in 2002 was rejected, and the company has declared Chapter 11 bankruptcy.

† For more information on how corporations can stand up to the demands of homosexual activists and promote pro-family policies, see www.communityresourcecouncil.org.

The WNBA—Targeting the Lesbian Market

Professional sports have also made efforts to tap into the homosexual financial gold mine. The Women's National Basketball Association (WNBA) has deliberately marketed itself to lesbians. In fact, it has been estimated that 30 percent of the WNBA's fan base is lesbian.⁴⁰ WNBA president Val Ackerman said, "We welcome any fan who wants to come out and support our sport. We have a broad range of fans....To the extent that members of the lesbian community are indicating their support, I think that's terrific."⁴¹

The WNBA has a working relationship with the Human Rights Campaign. After the Washington Mystics home opener a few years ago, HRC hosted a post-game party attended by more than seven hundred lesbians and supporters, including the Mystics general manager and other league officials. At the party, the head of the Seattle Storm and the director of development for the WNBA publicly came out.⁴²

The Mystics are also regularly frequented by the Lesbian Avengers (whose logo is an exploding bomb), a group that stages kiss-ins and demonstrations at which participants remove their tops in public. They include protests in front of the Family Research Council (which is across the street from the MCI Center where the Mystics play) before going to the game.⁴³

Other WNBA teams besides the Mystics deliberately market themselves to lesbians. Karen Bryant, vice president of operations for the Seattle Storm, says, "Lesbians have been a strong core group of our fans in this town."⁴⁴ Kat Fox, spokeswoman for the "Davis Dykes" (the name of a lesbian organization in Davis, California) and a season-ticket holder for the Sacramento Monarchs, said, "Lesbians have been the WNBA fan base since 1997. We're saying our money is the same as the traditional family money....[The WNBA] needs the money, and their marketing efforts are brilliant if they target the lesbians."⁴⁵

What would be the reaction if a sports league specifically targeted people who go to church? It would probably result in a lawsuit. In fact, such a scenario took place a few years ago when an atheist, with the help of the ACLU, sued a minor-league baseball team that provided discount tickets for a Sunday afternoon ball game if they were presented with a church bulletin.⁴⁶ ADF was involved in the defense of the team's right to hold such a promotion, and a compromise was reached that allowed the team to continue the promotion as long as programs from civic or non-profit groups were included as well.

The WNBA's Los Angeles Sparks held events at the popular Los Angeles lesbian "Girl Bar" to help spur season ticket sales and game attendance. Sparks players provided autographs, and the fans bought Sparks pennants, notebooks, basketballs, and season-ticket packages. The Miami Sol had already appeared at lesbian bars and events more than two years earlier, and the Phoenix Mercury proudly acknowledged its marketing efforts to the lesbian community.⁴⁷

The Phoenix Suns basketball team, which owns the Mercury, dropped the pro-family Center for Arizona Policy as sponsor of its "Church Night" promotion after homosexual activists complained about the Center's opposition to same-sex "marriage" and other prohomosexual initiatives supporting homosexual behavior. Tom Ambrose, a team vice president, said that the Center's sponsorship was "problematic" because the Mercury had cultivated a large lesbian fan base. According to media reports, homosexual activists joined with pro-homosexual churches to get the Center booted from the church night promotion.⁴⁸ *

* At the time of this incident, the Suns general managing partner was a prominent evangelical Christian in the Phoenix community.

So, the next time your daughter asks you to take her to a WNBA game, you might want to consider the influences she might be exposed to there.

Welcome to the Gay Riviera

The travel industry has also cast a covetous eye toward the income demographics of the homosexual community. The homosexual travel market is estimated at $54 million a year.⁴⁹ Miami-Dade County has prepared a twenty-page brochure that features maps and information about hotels, shopping, and special events of interest to homosexual tourists. The pamphlet proudly proclaims, “Our ‘gay’ friendly environment extends beyond our local businesses to our government officials and policies. Come and see why Greater Miami is truly the gay Riviera.”⁵⁰ Fodor’s has produced the “gay guide” to America as well. Nicki Grossman of the Great Fort Lauderdale Visitors Bureau said, “You can’t ignore the kind of spending that gay and lesbian travelers do.”⁵¹

The city of Atlanta created an entire advertising campaign catered to homosexual tourists. Caroline Wilbert wrote in the Atlanta Journal-Constitution, “The thinking goes: Gay people, many of whom don’t have children, have disposable income. So let’s get them to spend it here.”⁵² The Web site promoting the campaign—gayatlanta.com—features the slogan, “We’re out to show you a good time.” The city spent $55,000 on the campaign.⁵³

In November 2003, the city of Philadelphia announced its new $300,000 “gay travel” promotion—which included images of Ben Franklin (who is shown flying a rainbow kite), Betsy Ross, and George Washington. The campaign mixes the historical figures with rainbow banners and features the tagline “Get your history straight and your nightlife gay.”⁵⁴ The campaign calls Philadelphia the “city of brotherly love and sisterly attraction.”

That’s just the beginning. It gets worse. The first Philadelphia spot to air featured a man in Colonial dress waiting by Independence Hall, holding a bouquet of flowers. He has just finished writing a letter to his “dearest beloved.” An attractive young female walks by and makes a flirtatious overture toward him. The man quickly rejects her and hands the flowers to his male lover instead.⁵⁵

Washington, D.C., also launched a homosexual ad campaign with the slogan “Where More Than Just the Cherry Blossoms Come Out.”⁵⁶

Community Marketing, a San Francisco firm that helps the travel industry reach homosexual consumers, sums up the motivation of corporations and tourist destinations to market to “oppressed” homosexual travelers in the following demographic information:

- Took vacation in the last 12 months: all travelers: 64 percent; gay travelers: 85 percent.
- Took an international vacation in the last 12 months: all travelers: 9 percent; gay travelers: 45 percent.
- Hold a valid passport: all travelers: 29 percent; gay travelers: 78 percent.

- Belong to a frequent flyer program: all travelers: 25 percent; gay travelers: 64 percent
- Seventy-five percent of gay and lesbian households have incomes over the $40,000 national average.⁵⁷

Thomas Roth, the president of Community Marketing said, “It boils down to two things: dual income and no kids. People with money and no responsibility for kids have two spending priorities—shopping and travel. When you start adding up the comparisons, you see why tourist offices and CVBs (convention visitors bureaus) are interested in reaching out to the gay market.”⁵⁸

The homosexual dollar is so powerful that corporations and destinations that were once the epitome of family values have now openly marketed themselves to the homosexual community.

If you ever plan a trip to Disney World in Orlando, Florida, here is one word of advice: don't go the first weekend in June. Why? That weekend is the annual Gay Days in the land of Mickey, Donald, and Goofy. While Disney states it does not sponsor gay days, it has done little to deter them and much to encourage them.

Gay days started in 1990 when Doug Swallow, a practicing homosexual, and his buddies from a homosexual computer bulletin board decided to get together and meet at the Magic Kingdom. Since then, their numbers have swelled to more than 125,000 attendees, all who wear red shirts to identify themselves as homosexuals.⁵⁹

At first, Disney tried to distance itself from the event. However, as time went by and the homosexual dollars started to roll in, the event became as unofficially official as you could get, as Mike Schneider wrote in this 2000 Associated Press piece: “Walt Disney World used to keep Gay Days in the closet, fearing the wrath of religious groups. One year, Disney posted signs at the entrance warning guests that there was a gathering of homosexuals in the Magic Kingdom. In other years, passes to other Disney parks were offered to guests who might be offended by large numbers of gays. As the celebration enters its 10th year this weekend, it's now as much as part of Disney as Mickey Mouse....‘During the first couple of years, their greatest fear was what other guests would think,’ said Tom Dyer, editor and publisher of Watermark, a gay newspaper in Orlando. ‘Their view has shifted to caring about how their gay and lesbian guests are treated.’”⁶⁰

It is not just religious conservatives who are uncomfortable at gay days. Columnist Steve Otto, who states that he is not part of the religious right, wrote this about his family's experience at Disney World on Gay Days weekend: “Gay Days is no celebration of diversity to sit back and enjoy. Gay Days is a political statement. It's thousands of men and women wearing red shirts with labels such as ‘Gay Days and Magic Nights,’ groping and grabbing their way from one fantasy land to the next....You couldn't help but listen as you stood in line. You could only stare into space for so long if you were trapped with them in a monorail car or a bus. Too many in the red-shirted crowd were obscene....They were vulgar and they were determined to make a statement. That statement had nothing to do with acceptance or equality or even the right to stand in long lines for two-minute rides. What they were saying was that if you didn't like their vulgarity, then you were somehow a smaller person. They were saying that it's all right to be as crude in a crowd as you would be anywhere."⁶¹

What Steve Otto and his family experienced at Disney World vividly illustrates that the radical homosexual agenda is not about tolerance; it is about acceptance and an in-your-face desire to flaunt homosexuals' sexuality and related behavior at the expense of others. And, as long as their money rolls into the corporate coffers, many corporations seemingly have little or no trouble going along with them.

Yet, much of this is very sad. It is unfortunate that those caught up in homosexual behavior are now trying so hard to seek the joy that they missed in their own childhoods, by immersing themselves in the fantasy environment of Disney World.

The Bottom Line

So, what is the bottom line for radical homosexual activists and corporate America? Their strategy can be best summed up as follows:

1. To force corporate America to accept sexual orientation as a protected class.
2. To force corporate America to provide domestic-partner benefits (which is a neutral name for sex-partner subsidies).
3. To use corporate America to force government at all levels to adopt sexual-orientation laws.
4. To use corporate America to force government at all levels to provide domestic-partner benefits.
5. To then persuade government to force all Americans to treat sexual behavior other than marriage as the equivalent of marriage.
6. To produce more "equality" for all genders, as defined by homosexual activists.

The government in states such as California has already moved to step 5 of their agenda. In San Francisco, homosexual activists have reached Step 6. Openly homosexual Congressman Barney Frank, a Democrat from Massachusetts, has adopted the line that "what is good for corporate America is good for the country" in pushing for federal domestic-partner legislation.⁶² The strategy of the homosexual activists with regard to corporate America is coming dangerously close to completion.

Henry Blackaby, author of Experiencing God, says he believes that if revival is going to happen in America, it may very well happen through corporate America.⁶³ Why? Because corporations play a vital role in shaping the culture, whether it is through advertising, philanthropy, or human resources policy. A number of believers are chief executives of major corporations, but they are going to need the support of God's people to withstand the onslaught of demands by radical homosexual activists.

While corporate America can be a tool for revival in America, it can also be the tool used by radical homosexual activists to transform our country into the image they desire, an image of unlimited sexual license and a silent church. That is why radical homosexual activists have targeted corporations. They know that executives and boards of directors make most corporate decisions, and therefore it is easier to implement their agenda via this route rather than through a vote of the people.

It is going to take a concerted effort by serious people of faith to educate corporate America on the real agenda of the radical homosexual activists and why they should not adopt it. It is an agenda that not only undermines the family and promotes irresponsible sexual behavior; it is also detrimental to the best interests of both corporations and the country.

Most of all, it is going to take the persistence, prayers, and the sacrifice of God's people to help turn the tide. The gains—destructive to biblical values, the gospel, and the traditional family—made by the radical homosexual activists can be reversed and other demands halted. It will happen only if God's people are willing to take a stand, whether it be in shareholder meetings, providing economic support to companies that have stood up to radical homosexual activists, or economic punishment for those corporations that aggressively push the homosexual agenda. Corporations are run with the bottom line in mind, hence the active courting of the disposable income of practicing homosexuals. Few companies now look beyond the next quarter or fiscal year in their pursuit of a favorable balance sheet and almost none consider the next generation. Therefore, their policies are targeted to the quickest gain possible, and the affluent members of the homosexual community are an attractive market to tap. If they can be convinced that the promotion of the homosexual agenda is hurtful of that bottom line in the long run, they will change their tune.

The End of Tolerance (for Those Who Disagree)

*If I were the United Way, and all the agencies that depend on it, I'd build a big pile of wood with a pole stuck in the middle of it.
Then I'd tie the leaders of the Boy Scouts of America to the pole, using only the most secure half-hitches and square knots. Then I'd rub the two sticks together and work on that campfire merit badge.*

—Mike Thomas, columnist, Orlando Sentinel, in response to the United Way's financial support of the Boy Scouts of America

In the last chapter we discussed a couple of instances in which employees who objected to homosexual behavior either faced disciplinary action or were terminated because of their beliefs. In this chapter we are going to look at how this is just an extension of what can be called “The End of Tolerance” for those who disagree with the homosexual agenda.

Albert Buonanno was an employee for AT&T Broadband. When he was told that he would have to sign an employee handbook that demanded that he “value” a person's sexual orientation, he respectfully declined, citing his religious beliefs. He told his supervisors: “As a Christian, I am supposed to love my neighbor, regardless of what their sexual orientation is, but I'm not supposed to value the lifestyle of any person that contradicts the Word of God.” He was fired almost immediately.¹

A prime candidate for the football coaching job at Stanford University was disqualified because he held biblically based views on homosexual behavior. Ron Brown, an assistant coach at the University of Nebraska, had called homosexual behavior a sin while talking on a Christian radio show in 1999. Alan Glenn, the assistant athletic director of human resources at Stanford, said: “[Brown's religion] was definitely something that had to be considered.”²

Courtney Wooten, the social director of Stanford's Queer Straight Social and Political Alliance made it clear that Brown's beliefs were a problem: “We're a very diverse community with diverse alumni. Wow, it would have been really hard for him here. He would be poorly received by the student body in general.”³ Brown noted the different standard held for Christians who don't toe the line on homosexual behavior. He stated, “If I had been discriminated against for being black, they would've never told me that. They had no problem telling me it was because of my Christian beliefs. That's amazing to me.”⁴ He added:

There was talk at a particular school [Stanford] of concern over my beliefs in Christ and how that would play out on that particular campus. It's how people live out their faith in a bold and public way that bothers people. The reason why I have not pressed forward with specifics [about what he was told by Stanford] on that is because I did not want people to lose track of the major intention, [which] is to remind Christians that we live in a world that claims to be tolerant. But they're not really tolerant of Christians [or] the Christian world view. ...Any university or group...that claims the tolerance message cannot include truth in that tolerance message. The two just do not go hand in hand. If you are saying you're tolerant, and there's a Biblical mandate to stay away from a certain type of sin, then you're not going to be tolerant of that sin. You cannot possibly be tolerant over every lifestyle and every message that's given. Obviously you don't condemn other people, and you don't harm anyone else. But there's got to be some opportunity of expression of what one believes is the truth.⁵

Chris Kempling, an instructor at the British Columbia College of Teachers, was facing the suspension of his teaching license because he expressed his biblically-held view that homosexual behavior was immoral and that it should not be presented to British Columbia students as a normal and alternative lifestyle. Kempling faces a $25,000 fine as well. Jinny Sims, the head of the teachers union that should be defending Kempling said: “I really believe that as teachers we cannot let our personal religious beliefs dominate the way we communicate to our students and what we say.”⁶

The bottom line is that the right of people of faith to hold sincere beliefs, along with the right to work in one's field, is under attack unless they are willing to muzzle any expression of their faith.

In Alexandria, Virginia, a Christian print shop owner refused the business of a lesbian customer who wanted him to print materials promoting a homosexual activist organization. The owner had previously printed flyers promoting the client's cleaning service, but his company's written policy clearly reserved the right to “refuse to reproduce anything that the owner deems morally questionable” and that the owner felt violated his religious beliefs. The list of objectionable material included pornography, hate literature, and pro-abortion items, as well as materials promoting homosexual behavior.

The lesbian client filed a complaint against the printer with the Alexandria Human Rights Commission. The print shop owner successfully stood up to the commission, and as a result, the city finally agreed not to bring charges against him. But the mere fact that he was brought before the commission for abiding by his deeply held religious beliefs is frightening to those who believe in religious freedom.

Larry Phillips, a Missouri state social worker, had always had exemplary performance reviews until he raised an objection to the state's licensing of practicing homosexuals as foster parents. His supervisor told him that “his religious beliefs were affecting his ability to do his job effectively”⁷ and that he was “too moral.”⁸ He was subsequently fired on a charge that other employees just received a written reprimand on.

During oral arguments before the Eighth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, the deputy attorney general of Missouri argued that an employee's religious beliefs with regard to homosexual behavior could be taken into consideration when making employment decisions. This is an absolutely chilling statement for the religious freedom of all believers.

After the court issued a 3-0 decision in favor of Phillips, David Smith of the Human Rights Campaign put his organization's view of religious freedom this way: “Diversity of religious beliefs should be respected, as long as they don't influence public policy that should treat all people fairly.”⁹ Translated, that means that a person of faith has to check his religious convictions at the door and remain silent if his convictions are at odds with the homosexual agenda. Tolerance trumps religious freedom.

In Louisville, Kentucky, Dr. J. Barret Hyman, a Christian physician, challenged a city ordinance that required him to hire openly homosexual individuals in violation of his religious beliefs. The U.S. Justice Department, in an unprecedented action (under former President Clinton) became involved in the case, filing a brief in support of the local homosexual ordinance. A federal judge dismissed his lawsuit and ruled in favor of the homosexual ordinance.

Jeff Vessels, the Kentucky state director for the ACLU, stated that this decision made it clear that personal religious beliefs do not exempt someone from civil rights laws. Hyman said about the decision: “It is a sad day for Christians and most people who believe in the Bible.”¹⁰

In the case of Peterson v. Hewlett-Packard Co., a Christian was fired for putting Bible verses about homosexual behavior on the overhead bins of his work station. He did this in response to a poster of two homosexual men that the company had placed near his cubicle. When he refused to remove the verses until the company took down the poster, he was told: “You have to accept our values or be fired.” He was terminated shortly afterward.

These are just a few examples of how individual Christians and religious liberty have been affected by the homosexual agenda.

Another way that religious freedom is limited is through the enactment of so-called anti-bias policies. For an example of how these policies can effectively silence those who object to homosexual behavior, consider this letter from an official in the Hennepin County, Minnesota, prison system to the volunteer chaplains who ministered there:

A disturbing matter has come to my attention from several residents and staff of the women's facility. Without going into detail, as I understand it, an incident occurred in which volunteers told residents that homosexuality is a sin. While I will be talking personally to the Coordinator and volunteers involved, I want to make it clear to all of you that Hennepin

County's overall policy is: Respect Diversity. Whether differences are based on religion, national origin, race, sexual orientation, disability...Hennepin County is committed to providing an environment which is respectful of differences and free of comments or actions which may be offensive. It is crucial that all volunteers, as well as paid staff, understand this requirement....I need to make it clear that in performing [volunteer service] you are required to abide by the County's diversity policy....Those who, for reasons of conscience or otherwise, who don't agree to this will be requested not to be involved in the volunteer program. ...¹¹

So, if you teach what the Bible says about homosexual behavior, your volunteer service is not tolerated. Such a gag order meant that a chaplain couldn't tell an inmate whether his or her sexual behavior was a sin that Christ could forgive. If an inmate asked a chaplain, "Do you think homosexual behavior is a sin?" the chaplain would have to remain silent or have to say, "I'm sorry, government policy prevents me from answering that question." While this policy was overturned as a result of an ADF-backed legal action, it demonstrates the lengths to which homosexual activists and their allies will go to censor religious speech when it comes to homosexual behavior.

Yet another method often used by homosexual activists and their allies to deny religious freedom is their special form of diversity training. This is nothing more than indoctrination to accept homosexual behavior and ridicule anyone who holds biblical beliefs on the issue.

In another Minnesota case, three members of the Department of Corrections were forced to attend a mandatory diversity training workshop titled "Gays and Lesbians in the Workplace." When one of the employees e-mailed the warden and expressed his faith-based belief that homosexual behavior was a sin and therefore attendance should not be mandatory, the warden fired back a memo to all staff demanding participation. The three employees in the case, all Christians, attended the session, as mandated and quietly read their Bibles in the back of the room. (It should be noted that other employees were reading magazines, newspapers, sleeping, or talking with other employees during the training session.)

A month and a half after the session, the three Christian employees were singled out and given written reprimands for "inappropriate and unprofessional conduct" displayed during the training session. The reprimands specifically noted that reading their Bibles was "disrespectful and not acceptable." The three believers were the only attendees to receive the reprimands, and two of them were taken out of consideration for any future promotions. In a particularly chilling statement, one of the diversity trainers said that the mere presence of a Bible in their room created a "hostile work environment."

* This reminds Alan of a trial while he was a federal prosecutor. During the trial, which took place in federal court, the defense lawyer tried a motion to bar Bibles and silent prayer by the spectators from the courtroom as they created an "atmosphere not conducive" for defense of obscenity charges.

With the help of an ADF funded attorney, the plaintiffs filed a federal action stating that the department's reprimand violated their rights to free speech, free exercise of religion, freedom of conscience, and Title VII of the Civil Rights Act. The district court ruled in favor of the employees on their freedom of religion and freedom of conscience claims but denied the free speech claim.

† Title VII prohibits employment discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex, and national origin.

Both sides appealed to the U.S. Appeals Court for the Eighth Circuit, which flipped the earlier decision on its head. The court ruled in favor of the plaintiff's free speech, equal protection, and Title VII rights, while denying their freedom of religion and conscience claims [emphasis ours]. The case awaits further court action.

In addition, the court included a disturbing note in its opinion that stated, "The only burden placed on the Appellants [the plaintiffs] was a requirement they attend a seventy-five minute training program on which they were exposed to widely accepted views that they oppose on faith-based principles."

Think about that statement for a moment. It essentially says that the acceptance of homosexual behavior is the "widely accepted view" and that biblical beliefs on the issue are marginal at best.

In early August 2002, the prison guards finally received justice. A nine-person jury unanimously agreed that the Minnesota Department of Corrections had violated the free speech and equal protection rights of the employees and concluded that they had been discriminated against because of their religious beliefs. The three prison guards were awarded punitive damages.

It is quite obvious from all these examples that radical homosexual activists have no qualms about forcing people of faith to violate their own religious beliefs about homosexual behavior or face the consequences. Now they are going after the very right of private organizations (including religious non-profits, organizations such as the Salvation Army, Christian businesses, and churches) to hold to their biblical beliefs when it comes to employment decisions.

The Attack on the Boy Scouts of America

There is no more visible illustration of this than the onslaught of attacks on the Boy Scouts of America by homosexual activists and their allies. There is no more vivid example of how far our country has fallen away from the principles instilled in young men by the Boy Scouts.

Yet it is ironic that while the media, homosexual activists, and their allies in government blast bishops of the Catholic Church for letting those who prey on teenage boys in, they criticize the Boy Scouts for its efforts to keep potential sexual predators out.

When we were growing up, the Boy Scouts of America were admired worldwide for teaching young men to be honest, trustworthy, good citizens, and perhaps most importantly, to have good morals and to be reverent toward God.

Craig was a Life Scout (the highest rank one can obtain except Eagle) and an assistant scoutmaster for several years; Alan was involved in Cub Scouts.

James Dale was an Eagle Scout and assistant scoutmaster who publicly acknowledged his practice of homosexual behavior in a gay magazine. No one had gone on a “witch hunt” to “out” him. Because homosexual behavior is incompatible with the scouting oath and its admonition to be morally straight, he was asked to resign his leadership position. Dale instead sued the Scouts, stating that they were in violation of the state of New Jersey's anti-discrimination law, which included sexual orientation.¹²

This case had serious ramifications for the rights of all private organizations, not just the Boy Scouts of America. If the case had been lost, further legal challenges by homosexual activists (and we will discuss some of these legal challenges later) could have forced churches and private organizations to lose their right to determine their own criteria for leadership and related hiring practices.

Why? Because churches and religious organizations could also be subjected to public accommodation laws like New Jersey's because they invite others from the general public to attend and join, just like the Boy Scouts. The only possible way for churches to avoid this would be to just let the members in and lock the door and leave those who need to hear the gospel out in the street.

After a defeat at the New Jersey Supreme Court, which ruled that the Scouts were governed by public accommodation laws and would have to admit homosexual scoutmasters, the Boy Scouts appealed the decision to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court ruled in a close 5-4 decision that the Scouts were not subject to New Jersey's law. The court stated that the Scouts were a private group and were free to bar individuals from leadership whose behavior was incompatible with the group's beliefs.*

* Key precedent for this victory was established in one of the very first cases the Alliance Defense Fund supported before the U.S. Supreme Court: Hurley v. The Irish-American Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Group of Boston (GLIB). In that case, the United States Supreme Court upheld the right of the organizers of a private Boston Veterans Parade to bar advocates of homosexual behavior from participating. The homosexual activists had sued to be included in the event. The case had been lost several times by the veterans group as it worked its way through the judicial system. ADF became involved in the case when the attorney for the veterans asked for funding to appeal the case to the high court. With funding and additional training, the attorney was successful. In a stunning and rare 9-0 opinion, the Court overruled the previous decisions in this case, stating that the veterans had the right to bar the homosexual group from marching in its privately sponsored parade.

This decision set up a tsunami of protest from radical homosexual activists and their allies in the media and government. Sympathetic city and county governments threatened to (and in some cases did) throw the Boy Scouts out of their public, tax-funded meeting places. The Boy Scouts were booed by delegates at the 2000 Democratic National Convention while presenting the colors there.¹³ Numerous corporations* and thirty-nine chapters of the United Way (under pressure from homosexual activists) withheld funding from the Scouts in the form of financial blackmail to try to force them to change their policy.¹⁴

* Among the corporations that have pulled support from the Boy Scouts are Wells Fargo Bank, Levi Strauss, Chase Manhattan Bank, and Bank of America.

Rep. Lynn Woolsey, a California Democrat who represents the North San Francisco Bay Area, introduced legislation, which was defeated, to revoke the Scouts' federal charter.¹⁵ Members of the Clinton administration also tried to enforce an executive order that would have evicted Scouts from using federal lands but backed down after public backlash.¹⁶

Also in San Francisco, the local bar association issued a policy prohibiting its members (including judges) "from activities that may give the appearance of bias based on sexual orientation." The policy states that judges "should not participate as members in a chapter or branch of any organization [such as the Boy Scouts] that invidiously discriminates on the ground of sexual orientation by excluding members on the ground of their sexual orientation, unless the judge's chapter or branch has disavowed that invidiously discriminatory policy." Angela Bradstreet, the president of the bar association said: "The bar association was very concerned about some of the language included in the lawyers' briefs in Boy Scouts v. Dale, as well as in subsequent cases, referring to homosexuals as not morally straight and unclear....We are absolutely delighted that the San Francisco Superior Court bench has joined with the Bar Association of San Francisco in taking the lead on this issue of fairness....We are now approaching other metropolitan bar associations and local courts to ask them to follow the Superior Court's lead in ensuring that there is both perception and actuality of equality and impartiality in our court system for everyone."¹⁷ The California Supreme Court is now considering extending this ban to 1,600 judges statewide.¹⁸

Columnist Dave Thomas of the Orlando Sentinel viciously attacked the Scouts and basically called for the death of their leaders. He wrote: "If I were the United Way, and all the agencies that depend on it, I'd build a big pile of wood with a pole stuck in the middle of it. Then I'd tie the leaders of the Boy Scouts of America to the pole, using only the most secure half-hitches and square knots. Then I'd rub two sticks together and work on that campfire merit badge."¹⁹

If someone substituted the leaders of the Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund or the Human Rights Campaign in the text instead of the Boy Scouts of America, homosexual activists and the media would scream "hate speech" and demand prosecution.

In Gloucester, Massachusetts, the mayor cancelled a city-sponsored fundraiser for the United Way because of the organization's financial support of the Scouts. "You don't take a first step on the slippery slope of discrimination," Mayor Bruce Tobey said. "The Boy Scouts do a lot of good service for a lot of people, but the good cannot be coupled when there is public involvement with discrimination.”²⁰

In Santa Barbara, California, the county board of supervisors voted 3-2 to condemn the Scouts, finding them “incompatible” with the county’s anti-discrimination policy, and therefore “unsupportable” by the county of Santa Barbara. Who would have ever thought that honesty, good citizenship, and upright morals would be unsupportable by a local government? Only after a group of citizens expressed outrage and prepared an initiative, with the assistance of an ADF-trained volunteer attorney, for the local ballot to protect the Scouts, did the board back down. Otherwise, Santa Barbara could have denied the Scouts access to public facilities.

In San Diego, California, the ACLU filed a lawsuit to evict the Boy Scouts from using public property they had leased from the city. The suit was filed almost immediately after the Scouts’ victory at the U.S. Supreme Court. Dale Kelly Bankhead, an ACLU spokeswoman, said the lease “[made] the city a partner in the Boy Scouts’ discrimination against gays and religious non-believers. While the Boy Scouts may not be for everybody, city parks are.”²¹ After a federal court ruled that the Boy Scouts were a “religious” organization because of their moral beliefs and should have their lease terminated, the city of San Diego caved in—and left the Scouts to fend for themselves against the ACLU. The city agreed to pay $950,000 in attorneys fees to the ACLU—money that can be used to continue the legal war by the ACLU and homosexual activists on the Boy Scouts.²²

Other challenges to the Boy Scouts’ right to use public facilities have occurred in Fort Lauderdale,²³ * New York City, Los Angeles, and Minneapolis, among other cities.²⁴

* The Scouts successfully sued the Broward County, Florida, school district (where Fort Lauderdale is located) to win equal access to the school buildings.

In Berkeley, California, the mayor cancelled a meeting with a group of Japanese scouts from their sister city after receiving pressure from an openly homosexual city councilman. The mayor finally agreed to meet the Scouts but moved the meeting from city hall to a private home.²⁵

A federal judge in Connecticut ruled that the state did not violate the rights of the Boy Scouts when it dropped them from a list of charities that state employees could contribute to via payroll deductions. A state human relations commission had previously accused the Scouts of violating the state’s anti-discrimination laws.²⁶

And, the American Medical Association went as far as to propose a resolution that stated that the Scouts’ ban on homosexual leaders had “negative health consequences” because it would cause “psychological distress” for adolescents.²⁷

Syndicated columnist David Limbaugh wrote:

It’s not enough that even the liberal United States Supreme Court ruled in Boy Scouts of America v. Dale that the Constitution guarantees the BSA's right to exclude homosexuals from leadership positions in its organization. Homosexual activists will not take no for an answer. Their brand of tolerance insists that no tolerance be accorded the Scouts. Forget the BSA's constitutional right to freely associate with whomever they please. No one dares to withhold approval of the homosexual lifestyle lest they invite the unquenchable wrath of homosexual activists who, ironically, insist their aim is to prevent hatred.²⁸

One of the saddest parts of the attack on the Boy Scouts is that it is one of the few organizations that have been able to make a significant positive impact on troubled boys in poor urban neighborhoods.²⁹ When local governments evict the Scouts, these boys lose the moral guidance and life skills they so desperately need. However, in the view of homosexual activists and their allies it is more important, in some cases, to move the homosexual agenda forward than to save troubled boys.

Why do some homosexual activists want so desperately to become scoutmasters? In many cases so they can have key roles in the formative years of boys and young men. As we outlined in chapter 3 on education, the activists know the earlier they can influence young people the more effective they are in advancing their agenda. One need only consider the priest sex scandal to identify a plausible theory along with their efforts in other countries to lower the age of consent for sex. In some countries, such as Spain, that age has been lowered to twelve! Homosexual activists in those countries have led this effort.³⁰

Therefore, it is not too difficult to link homosexual behavior and predatory behaviors toward accessible teenage boys by those in positions of authority. The Scouts have genuine concern for those who are entrusted with the young men in their charge. As David Kupelian wrote, "The Scouting folks know what everyone with half a brain understands: that adults interested in sexual contact with young people gravitate toward careers and volunteer positions allowing proximity to their prey, positions such as coaches, teachers, scoutmasters—and priests."³¹

Columnist Ann Coulter added these thoughts to the debate:

Despite the growing media consensus that Catholicism causes sodomy, an alternative view—adopted by the Boy Scouts—is that sodomites cause sodomy....No spate of sex scandals is engulfing the Boy Scouts of America. Inasmuch as the Boy Scouts were not taking risk-assessment advice from Norman Mineta, they decided to eliminate a whole category of potential problems by refusing to allow gay men to be scout leaders. Perhaps gay scout leaders just really liked camping. But it was also possible that gay men who wanted to lead troops of adolescent boys into the woods were up to no good.

For their politically incorrect risk-assessment technique, the Boy Scouts were denounced as troglodyte bigots in all outlets of appropriate liberal opinion. Cities and states across the country dropped their support for the scouts. The United Way, Chase Manhattan Bank, and Textron withdrew millions of dollars in contributions.

And hell hath no fury like a New York Times editor spurned. The Times denounced the Supreme Court decision merely permitting the Boy Scouts to refuse gay scoutmasters as one of the court's "lowest moments." The Times "ethicist" advised readers that pulling their sons out of the Boy Scouts was the "ethical thing to do."³²

And what can happen when a sexually predatory homosexual male does become a scoutmaster? In New York City, the leader of a Boy Scout troop pleaded guilty to four counts of third-degree sodomy after admitting that he had sexually abused a boy in his home.³³ Between 1971 and 1991, more than eighteen hundred—1,800!—Scout volunteers had to be dismissed because of sexual activity.³⁴ * And, the pedophilia advocacy group, NAMBLA (the North American Man-Boy Love Association)[†] has written a letter to the Scouts' national office asking the Boy Scouts of America "to cease its discrimination against openly gay and lesbian persons in the appointment of its scoutmasters and scouters and in membership. This will permit scouts to be exposed to a variety of lifestyles and will permit more of those individuals who genuinely wish to serve boys to do so."³⁵

* This issue particularly hits home for Craig. Several years after he had been a Boy Scout, one of his former scoutmasters was arrested and later confessed to and was convicted of sexually molesting teenage boys in a home for troubled youth where he was providing counseling. Fortunately, Craig was not a victim of such abuse at the hands of this individual. While no system is foolproof and these actions happened after this individual was no longer a scoutmaster, it illustrates the potential danger of letting anyone openly displaying or even boasting of a proclivity for homosexual behavior (and in some cases pedophilia) be a leader of teenage boys.

† NAMBLA's literature states that one of its goals is "cooperating with the lesbian, gay, and other movements for sexual liberation." See NAMBLA: Introducing the Man-Boy Love Association, 1980.

Unfortunately, some Boy Scout chapters in liberal areas of the country are cracking under the attacks from homosexual activist groups and their allies in the media. The Boston Minuteman Council has introduced a new diversity merit badge, adopted a so-called antidiscrimination clause that included sexual orientation, and had an openly homosexual Boston radio personality host its annual fundraiser.³⁶ The radio personality, David Brudnoy, said: "There are a lot of straight guys out there who could do this [emcee]." He added that the council wanted to send a signal, through his hiring, that it would not discriminate because of sexual orientation.³⁷

It is not just the Boy Scouts that are under attack however. Religious-based businesses, non-profit organizations, and churches are finding themselves increasingly painted into a corner by homosexual activists.

Employers' Rights in Jeopardy

Kentucky Baptist Homes for Children (KBHC) is a religious nonprofit organization that contracts with the state of Kentucky to provide a range of services for at-risk youth. It is the state's largest provider of child-care services and has a statewide network of shelters and care centers.

Alicia Pedreira worked as a therapist at KBHC. When she was hired for the position, she agreed to the terms of employment that stated that KBHC had biblical objections to homosexual behavior and that any employee who engaged in such behavior would be immediately asked to resign or would be terminated. When Pedreira identified herself as an advocate of lesbian behavior, KBHC asked for her resignation. She refused, and KBHC had no other choice but to discharge her.

Pedreira, with the help of the ACLU and Americans United for the Separation of Church and State, then filed a lawsuit in U.S. District Court that directly challenged the right of private religious organizations to determine their employment policies. She claimed that she had suffered “religious discrimination” under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act and that use of government funds by KBHC violated the establishment clause of the U.S. Constitution.³⁸ ADF supported allied attorneys assisting KBHC's defense.

* Note the argument that acting on one's religious beliefs is illegal “religious discrimination,” a far-fetched but ominous legal argument.

† See footnote on page 170.

If I had been discriminated against for being black, they would've never told me that. They had no problem telling me it was because of my Christian beliefs. That's amazing to me.

—Ron Brown, who was denied the head football coaching job at Stanford University because he said homosexual behavior was a sin

The New York Times on April 1, 2001, hailed this case as “the most important gay rights case since Boy Scouts of America v. Dale.”³⁹ It is obvious that radical homosexual activists know that this case could open a Pandora's box full of trouble for religious organizations because a victory for Pedreira could conceivably force religious organizations that receive any form of funding from the state to employ persons who engage in homosexual behavior.

For an example, if a seminary accepts a student who has received a student loan through the federal government, the seminary could become subject to anti-discrimination laws that include sexual orientation. Why? Because the seminary is the indirect beneficiary of government funds, since those monies are going to the school to pay for a student's tuition. Or, for instance, a church runs a soup kitchen and accepts a few cases of government-excess foods to help feed the needy. The church, too, could then be made subject to the same law.

On July 23, 2001, the U.S. District Court ruled that KBHC did not violate Title VII of the Civil Rights Act when it terminated Pedreira's employment. The court correctly stated, “The civil rights statutes protect religious freedom, not personal lifestyle choices.”⁴⁰ However, the judge did leave open related questions of whether the acceptance of government funds by religious organizations violates the establishment clause of the U.S. Constitution. As this case will continue to wind its way through our judicial system, the rights of faith-based organizations that receive any form of government funding will continue to remain in doubt. This case is still pending.

Bill Smithwick, the president of KBHC, stated the threat to religious freedom succinctly, “The final ruling on this issue will affect thousands of non-profits and faith-based organizations across the country.”⁴¹

To its credit, KBHC has said that it will forgo the state funds rather than compromise its principles. Smithwick says if the court rules against KBHC, “We may have to break ranks with public funding.”⁴² In fact, it is already taken steps in that direction. It has announced that it will try to rely solely on donations from supporters instead.⁴³

This case also bears watching because of President Bush's faith-based initiative programs. Pro-homosexual lawmakers, both Democrats and Republicans, and the media have seized upon this sincere effort by the president to allow religious groups to play a larger role in dealing with social issues, to push the homosexual agenda and force religious organizations to violate their beliefs.

On July 11, 2001, the Washington Post ran a scathing report on how the Bush administration had cut a “secret deal” with the Salvation Army to make sure that it was exempt from antidiscrimination laws (many of which include sexual orientation) if it accepted funds from the president's faith-based program.⁴⁴ A media and homosexual activist firestorm erupted, which led the Bush administration to back down.

Homosexual activists are relentless in trying to force religiously affiliated organizations to bow to their agenda. For example, the Greater Louisville YMCA found itself attacked by a homosexual rights group called The Fairness Campaign because it denied family memberships to same-sex couples. The group said that the YMCA's policy of offering the memberships only to heterosexual families violated the spirit of the Louisville and Jefferson County fairness ordinances, both of which include sexual orientation as a class that cannot be discriminated against in housing, employment, and accommodations. Sadly, the YMCA formed a committee “to reexamine the policy,” rather than take a stance in defense of its policy.⁴⁵ The result: the YMCA gave in to the demands of those who practice homosexual behavior. When one Christian organization caves in, it makes it tougher for those trying to stand up against the assault of homosexual activists.

* The Young Women's Christian Association (YWCA) proclaimed in November 2002 that it had been a “very, very long time” since the organization had focused on Christian values. “Now the focus is empowering women and families,” said spokesperson Crystal McNeal. That “empowerment” consists of dispensing contraceptives and condoms to girls and women, as well as support for legalized abortion. See Michael L. Betsch, "Christianity No Longer Focus of Christian Group," CNSNews. com, November 12, 2002.

The Big Brothers/Big Sisters of America announced in July 2002 that it would require its local affiliates to allow practicing homosexuals to mentor children of their gender. At least a dozen of its local affiliates have formally protested the change in policy and are in the process of severing their relationship with the national office. One executive director noted that donations were down 10 percent since the change in policy. She said that the change had "zapped our energy and our focus. It's taken countless man-hours and time and energy away from what we all want to be doing and that's serving kids." Another local director reported 100 percent opposition from parents and others to the change.⁴⁶

The Big Brothers/Big Sisters made this change despite problems with homosexual counselors in some of its affiliates. In one example, a thirty-four-year-old mentor sexually molested a ten-year-old boy. Another homosexual Internet child pornography sting operation resulted in the arrest of two Big Brothers. Finally, another thirty-four year-old mentor was indicted by a Kentucky grand jury on seventy-three child-sex related charges involving young boys.⁴⁷

Salvation Army chapters across the nation are beginning to pay the price for refusing to provide health care benefits to domestic partners. In Portland, Maine, the Army lost $60,000 in annual local government funding because it refused to offer such benefits and therefore violated the city's ordinance that all groups that receive funding from the city must provide such benefits.⁴⁸ The Portland City Council rejected an amendment that would have allowed a religious exemption for faith-based organizations with sincere religious objections to homosexual behavior.⁴⁹

Freedom of Speech?

One other method used by homosexual activists to silence believers are so-called speech codes. These codes are pernicious, since they so blatantly violate the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

The State College (Pennsylvania) Area School District instituted a speech-code policy in order to stop students from expressing negative views about homosexual behavior, among other things. When David Saxe, a professor at Penn State University heard about this speech code, he realized the possible ramifications for his two children who were students in the school district. Saxe felt that Christians have the right and duty to share their beliefs with other students, including beliefs regarding sexual behavior.

If his children shared the gospel or called homosexual behavior disordered or something similar, they could have been subjected to a range of disciplinary actions, from a warning to expulsion, under the district policy.

Saxe, with the help of ADF-allied attorneys, challenged the constitutionality of the speech code. The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit ruled in his favor, stating that such speech codes “[strike at the very] heart of moral and political discourse—the lifeblood of constitutional self-government [and democratic education] and the core concern of the First Amendment.”⁵⁰

While the result was favorable for the free speech rights of people of faith, we cannot count on the courts to continue to rule in this direction. We only need to look at what is happening internationally (for example, Bill C-250 in Canada that added “sexual orientation” to the nation’s “hate speech” law) to see how far the silencing and punishment of those who do not comply with the homosexual agenda can go. Here are just a few examples:

- In Canada, serious limits have been placed on Christian broadcasters who take a biblical stand against homosexual behavior. Focus on the Family, for instance, cannot air programs that might portray homosexual behavior in a negative light, or it will face sanctions from the Canadian Communications Commission.
- In the Canadian Province of Saskatchewan, the Human Rights Commission ruled that a newspaper ad with biblical references against homosexual activity exposed homosexual men to “hatred.” The advertisement featured an icon of two stick figures holding hands. The figures were covered with a circle and a slash and were accompanied by four references from the Bible, without ever quoting the words. The commission said: “the slashed figures alone were not enough to communicate the hatred...but the addition of Biblical references are more dangerous.” The newspaper that carried the item and the man who placed the advertisement were forced to pay $1,500 to three complainants. Attorney Valerie Watson, who represented the homosexual activists, said, “It is obvious that certain of the Biblical quotations suggest more dire consequences and there can be no question that the advertisement can be objectively seen as exposing homosexuals to hatred or ridicule.”⁵¹ This ruling has now been upheld by the Court of Queen's Branch in Saskatchewan.⁵²
- Students at Trinity Western University, a Christian teachers college in British Columbia, were refused accreditation to teach in public schools because they might be “unsympathetic to homosexual students” since the Christian university’s policy forbids homosexual sexual relations. Students who wanted to be accredited would have to finish their training at a secular school that promoted the acceptance of homosexual behavior. John Fisher, the head of a Canadian homosexual activist group, said the Trinity students would not be able to counsel homosexual students “in a sensitive and non-judgmental way.” While the Canadian Supreme Court eventually ruled 8-1 in favor of the school and said that its students did not have to go elsewhere to receive a teaching degree, the one dissenting justice, Claire L’Heureux Dube wrote that “a lack of expertise among school staff creates missed opportunities to help lesbian, bisexual, and gay youth before a crisis develops.”⁵³
- In British Columbia, a high school teacher was suspended for a month because he wrote letters to the local newspaper stating that homosexual behavior is not a “fixed orientation” but a condition that should be treated.⁵⁴
- Also in British Columbia, the Human Rights Tribunal was told that the

- provincial ministry of education discriminates against homosexual and bisexual students if it does not provide “positive” messages of sexual orientation and gender identity in the classroom.⁵⁵
- In New Zealand, two Christian videos that dealt with the link between AIDS and homosexual activity, questioned “safe sex,” and investigated the homosexual agenda were subject to being outlawed by the New Zealand parliament as promoting “hate speech.”⁵⁶
 - One more British Columbia example: All marriage commissioners in the province who were not willing to perform same-sex “marriage” ceremonies were told they had to resign unless they relented and did so. Vancouver city councillor Tim Stevenson said, “You either do it or you look for another job.”⁵⁷
 - In Sweden, the parliament approved an amendment that bans all speech and materials opposing homosexual behavior and other alternative lifestyles. Violators could spend up to four years in jail. According to Annalie Enochson, a Christian member of parliament, Christians could be arrested for speaking about homosexual behavior in churches. “That means people coming from [the homosexual] lobby group could sit in our churches having on the tape recorder and listen to somebody and say, ‘What you’re saying now is against our constitution.’”⁵⁸ In June 2004, a Swedish court sentenced a Pentecostal pastor to a month in prison, under this law, for “offending” homosexuals in a sermon.⁵⁹
 - Also in Sweden, a company was forced to pay a former employee approximately $6,800 in damages after the employee accused her boss of homophobia for expressing his displeasure over a public lesbian kiss she shared with her girlfriend. The lesbian said that she felt “ostracized” at work and felt that she had to quit.⁶⁰
 - The French government approved a bill outlawing “homophobia.” The bill made “incitement to discrimination, hatred, or violence against a person on the basis of gender or sexual orientation” punishable by a year in prison or a 45,000 euro ($54,000 American) fine. Of course, like C-250, religious speech that disapproves of homosexual behavior could be construed to cause “incitement,” just as innocent Christian leaders were accused of in the days after the Matthew Shepard case here in America.⁶¹
 - In Great Britain, homosexual activists tried to challenge the charitable status of a Christian organization that had spoken out against the liberalization of age of consent laws (again the link between homosexual behavior and the sexual pursuit of teenage boys). While the charitable status of the organization was upheld, it was silenced when it agreed to “no longer influence public policy.”⁶²
 - In England, Prime Minister Tony Blair’s government has sought to repeal a law that barred the use of public funds to promote homosexual behavior because the law served “no public purpose” and would “offend ‘gays.’”⁶³
 - In the Netherlands, Dutch authorities pondered whether or not to prosecute Pope John Paul II on discrimination charges after he said that a homosexual advocacy march in Rome was “an offense to Christian values.”⁶⁴ While they eventually recognized that the pope had “global immunity” because of his position as the head of the Vatican, the very thought of possible prosecution of a worldwide religious leader for his stance on homosexual behavior in another country demonstrates where the concept of speech codes and hate crimes legislation can eventually lead.

Many Christians still say to themselves, “But that is happening over in Europe and in Canada; it's not happening in America.” Well, we have some bad news for such wishful thinkers. It is beginning to occur here as well.

Matt Foreman, the executive director of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force, said in Between the Lines, a Detroit homosexual news magazine, that he will “punish,” “terrify,” and “torture” anyone who opposes the homosexual agenda. He went on to say that such actions would bring him “endless satisfaction.” He said, “I'm interested...in going after, politically, local legislators and leaders that have launched these anti-gay initiatives (to protect traditional marriage). We beat you; now we're going to back and we're going to affirmatively punish you.”⁶⁵

After a pro-marriage rally staged by the Center for Arizona Policy, E. J. Montini, a columnist for the Arizona Republic, wrote mockingly, “We are at war with extremists whose hatred is based on moral superiority and religious fanaticism.”⁶⁶

A California state appeals court has found that two Christian doctors in San Diego County were wrong when they refused to artificially inseminate a lesbian. The lesbian's attorney, Jennifer Pizer, said her clients were “traumatized” by the “discrimination.”⁶⁷ The attorney said on “Hannity and Colmes,” “When the doctor is in her church, she can do religion, but not in the medical office.”⁶⁸ David Limbaugh added, “Gay rights groups...are always the first to demand tolerance, but apparently their idea of tolerance is a one-way street. To demonstrate their commitment to tolerance, they should respect the doctors' religious convictions. Until they do, they will be signaling that it is not tolerance they seek, but conformity to their worldview they demand.”⁶⁹

In Pennsylvania, a recent amendment to the state's “hate crimes” law added “sexual orientation” and “gender identity” as “motives that trigger heavier penalties for individuals found guilty of ‘harassment.’” In addition, the definition of harassment was expanded to include “harassment by communication.” Kevin Hasson, president of the Becket Fund for Religious Liberty said, “Although legislators expressly disavowed the motive at the time, one might be forgiven the impression that one purpose of this legislation was to generate a fear of prosecution among those who would preach and teach in favor of the traditional prohibition on homosexual behavior....It is a measure of our times that religious leaders have lately considered taking out liability insurance to cover remarks made from the pulpit.”⁷⁰

Where do radical homosexual activists want to take us with regard to religious freedom and public acknowledgment of God? One needs to look no further than the United Kingdom, where a British homosexual group has demanded that all references to God be stricken out of the preamble to a new

European Union constitution. Gay and Lesbian Humanist Association spokesman Terry Sanderson said, "Religion is dying throughout Europe and we have to realize that." The group added, "To include references to God or our 'Christian heritage' would start turning back on our 500-year journey from the Enlightenment. Instead, we should be proud of our progress and growing humanity."⁷¹

Or we can take another look to Canada. At a February 12, 2003, University of Toronto symposium on "Religion vs. Sexual Orientation: A Clash of Human Rights?", Dr. Robert Wintemute of the School of Law at King's College at the University of London said, "The religious majority may seek to have their beliefs reflected in secular laws, but they must do so through reasoned secular arguments. Religious text or doctrines must be excluded from legislative and judicial debates because unlike secular law, they rely on [an] inaccessible, extra democratic source of authority, which cannot be challenged or overturned by reasoned arguments....Religious doctrines must be deemed absolutely irrelevant in determining the content of secular laws."⁷²

Canadian lawyer Barbara Finley, an open lesbian, said, "The legal struggle for queer rights will one day be a struggle between religious freedom versus sexual orientation."⁷³

Finally, we can look to the United Nations. At a meeting sponsored by the UN Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Employees, or UNGLOBE, a multipronged strategy for a "showdown with religion" on homosexual "rights" was launched. At this meeting, attended briefly by UN Secretary General Kofi Annan, Roman Catholics and evangelical Christians were targeted as the "chief opponents" of the homosexual agenda. Princeton University professor Anthony Appiah pondered whether religion should be "limited" because it poses a "challenge" to homosexual activists. Svend Robinson, the author of C-250, openly mocked born-again Christians, saying, "Do they have to come back as themselves?"⁷⁴

In the radical homosexual activist manifesto After the Ball, Marshall Kirk and Hunter Madsen wrote, "[In regards to those] who feel compelled to adhere rigidly to an authoritarian belief structure (i.e., an orthodox religion), that condemns homosexuality...our primary objective regarding die-hard homophobes of this sort is to cow and silence them."⁷⁵ As we have seen in this chapter, their strategy is being played out on a daily basis against people of faith and religious organizations. We have a choice: We can either stand up and fight for our religious freedoms or allow the radical homosexual activists to cow and silence us. The choice is ours to make, and sad to say, to this point, many believers have chosen the latter option.

The Full Weight of the Government

Their goal is to get sexual orientation included [into “hate crimes” legislation]. Once they do that, this is laying the foundation for law enforcement to take care of those people that they consider to be members of the hate group. Churches, pastors, the whole nine yards.

I don't think there will be any group left untouched when their agenda is finally completed.

—Kevin McCoy, West Virginia Family Foundation

On June 25, 2001, Judy Guerin of the National Coalition for Sexual Freedom gave a speech at the fifteenth annual World Congress of Sexology in Paris. Her speech discussed her organization's plan to reform sexual laws in the United States. Her talk outlined the agenda of radical homosexual activists and their allies to push their agenda through federal, state, and local legislatures and bring the full weight of government pressure and laws down on those who hold biblical standards of sexual behavior.

In her speech, Guerin discussed at length the changing “sexual ethos” of Americans, much of it driven by the gains made by the radical homosexual activists in the past decade. She stated: “The public discussion of sex appears to have increased tolerance for a broader range of sexual expression. As a result, the time seems right to press for the abolition of laws that prohibit consensual sexual activities such as sodomy, adultery, pornography, sadomasochism, and what constitutes public sex.”¹

In June 2004, the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force (NGLTF) stated that it was time to repeal America's “archaic and unjust” sex laws. NGLTF launched a project to “identify” which laws need to be done away with. The task force press release said that the point of the project was “to educate Americans about the prevalence and abuse of antiquated and unjust sex laws in the nation, and to give grassroots activists policy and organizing tools to work to change these laws.” Targeted laws included those against public lewdness that, in the words of NGLTF, “are routinely misused to persecute and prosecute people who participate in non-traditional forms of sexual expression.” NGLTF also said that it looked at age-of-consent laws as well.²

As we have discussed earlier, the increasing exposure to and “tolerance” of homosexual behavior leads to the normalization and acceptance of other disordered sexual behaviors. As former law professor and federal circuit court judge Robert Bork put it so succinctly, we, as Americans, are indeed “slouching towards Gomorrah” (referring to the city that God destroyed in the Book of Genesis because of the rampant sexual sin there).^{*} The result is that sexual disorders and extreme behavior are exalted, and the traditional family and religious freedoms are attacked.

^{*} See Genesis 19.

What is alarming though, is that the radical homosexual activists and their allies want to write into law their special manifestations of a so-called right to privacy (a right that appears nowhere in the Constitution and was created in its present form by a majority of the Supreme Court in the infamous Roe v. Wade decision). This will allow them to openly practice and celebrate any variety of sexual behavior and to punish those who hold to biblical standards of sexual behavior. Guerin said, “The right to privacy must be extended to include one's choice of an adult sexual partner, or partners, in or outside of marriage [which used to be called adultery] and the full range of consensual sexual behaviors in which people engage, so, too, must the definition of ‘privacy’ be broadened to include public spaces such as sex clubs and live entertainment.”³ [emphasis added]

In fact, in December 2002, the radical homosexual activists had one of their long-term wishes fulfilled when the United States Supreme Court accepted a legal challenge (Lawrence v. Texas) to its 1986 decision in Bowers v. Hardwick that held that states could proscribe same-sex sodomy.^{*} Oral arguments were held on March 26, 2003, and a decision was issued on June 25, 2003.

^{*} The Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund is basing their case in part on the so-called “right to privacy” that was the linchpin in the infamous Roe v. Wade decision. This “right to privacy” was fabricated from a moon shadow by former Justice William O. Douglas in the case of Griswold v. Connecticut. Douglas claimed that he “discovered” this “right to privacy” in the “emanations” from the “penumbra” mystically hidden in the 3rd and 4th Amendments to the Constitution and between the 9th and 10th Amendments. What is a “penumbra”? It is a cloudy shadow around the moon. This ended up being the basis for the Roe decision.

In this case, two homosexual men living in Texas were engaging in same-sex sodomy when police and other emergency personnel entered their property, responding to an emergency call to investigate a report that a man was “going crazy” with a gun.⁴ Since same-sex sodomy is illegal in Texas, the two men were fined.

Overturning the Bowers decision has been the top item on the wish list for homosexual activists since 1986. If they got rid of Bowers, their sexual behavior (which carries tremendous public health risks, including the rapid spread of HIV/AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases) can no longer be proscribed by the state. These behaviors that have cost Americans billions of dollars, millions of broken, wounded souls, and the very lives of thousands will be recognized as a protected activity! With this they believe all of the other legal “dominoes” that stand in the way of their agenda will begin to fall, such as prohibitions on same-sex “marriage,” the lifting of the “don't ask, don't tell” policy on homosexuals in the military, nationwide adoption of children by same-sex couples, and most of all, the restricting of free speech rights for all who have biblical or faith-based objections to endorsing, funding, or supporting the sexual behavior.

† In February 2003, Rolling Stone magazine, hardly a conservative publication, ran a story on “bug chasing, the behavior of homosexual men who deliberately engage in activities that could cause them to contract HIV/AIDS as a “badge of honor.” The writer cited sources estimating that 25 percent of all newly-positive HIV positive men had contracted the disease this way. Radical homosexual activists immediately went into spin control and tried to discredit the study in Newsweek magazine and other sources. Whether or not the 25 percent figure is accurate, “bug chasing” and the abandonment of so-called “safe-sex” has been well-documented over the years in several mainstream media sources, including the New York Times and San Francisco Chronicle. See Gregory A. Freeman, “Bug Chasers: The Men Who Long to Be HIV+,” Rolling Stone, February 2003. Also see Seth Mnookin, “Is Rolling Stone’s HIV Story Wildly Exaggerated?” Newsweek, January 24, 2003.

In fact, in their petition to the Supreme Court to hear the case, the radical homosexual organization Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund wrote that laws that prohibit or restrict sodomy are used to “justify discrimination against ‘gay’ men and lesbians, in parenting, employment, access to civil rights laws, and many other aspects of everyday life.”⁵ The homosexual activists have made it clear where they want to go if they win Lawrence.

Annis Parker, an openly lesbian member of the Houston City Council said about Lawrence: “It’s one more battle, one more step. I think there will be a huge celebration if we win it.”⁶ Ruth Harlow, a Lambda attorney arguing the case, said: “It’s the most important gay rights case in a generation.”⁷

Christians had reason to be concerned when the Supreme Court granted review of this case, which challenged Texas’s law designed to protect marriage and the public health by barring same-sex sodomy (thirteen states still had such a bar as of 2003). The court rarely grants review to a case that challenges a previous High Court opinion if the voting justices do not believe they have the votes to overturn it.

Remember, just seventeen years ago, then Chief Justice Warren Burger said this about sodomy in his 1986 concurring majority opinion in Bowers: “Decisions of individuals relating to homosexual conduct have been subject to state intervention throughout the history of Western civilization. Condemnation of those practices is firmly rooted in Judeo-Christian moral and ethical standards....[Sir William] Blackstone described ‘the infamous crime against nature’ as an offense of ‘deeper malignity’ than rape, a heinous act ‘the very mention of which is a disgrace to human nature’ and ‘a crime not fit to be named.’ To hold that the act of homosexual sodomy is some-how protected as a fundamental right would be to cast aside millennia of moral teaching.”⁸ did not look to the U.S. Constitution for guidance but instead to “trends” in state laws and, even more alarmingly, to “international law” as the basis for the decision! Quickly afterward, radical homosexual activists started to use the Lawrence decision to press for the total completion of their agenda, including same-sex marriage, adoption, and the elimination of the “don’t ask, don’t tell” policy of the U.S. military.

In a 6-3 decision, the U.S. Supreme Court provided exactly what the radical homosexual activists wanted: the extension of the so-called “right to privacy” to include homosexual sodomy. In his majority opinion, Justice Anthony Kennedy

Still some people may be saying, “So what? Who cares what homosexuals do in their bedroom?” But as former Chief Justice Warren Burger wrote, good governments have always regulated sexual behavior. Once one state law protecting marriage and regulating sex is found to be unconstitutional, all others are fair game, such as laws against pedophilia, sex between close relatives, polygamy, bestiality, and all other distortions and violations of God’s plan. In addition, to the impact on human and marital relations, the state has a great interest in the public health costs and the moral impact on the culture.

The efforts to reverse the experience of Western civilization all ties into the overall strategy of desensitization toward deviant and now often unlawful sexual behavior, as outlined by Kirk and Madsen. Once homosexual behavior is seen as something to be tolerated or even affirmed then other sexual activists can come back and say, “Then what about our sexual preferences and behaviors?”

Another issue is the definition of consent by sexual liberation activists. Efforts to lower ages for consent would apply it to all kinds of deviant sexual behavior. Guerin stated that she felt that the homosexual movement had forced Americans to “confront” and “begin to overcome” traditional gender roles. She was encouraged the most by the “non-judgmental” attitude that Americans had adopted to deviant sexual behavior.⁹

She continued: “The new societal attitudes of openness and tolerance as to sexuality are evidencing themselves in a variety of ways. A major indication is the inclusion of an ever-broader range of sexually-defined groups in the U.S. anti-discrimination laws at the Federal and State levels: women, gays and lesbians, transgender people (the latter only in a few recent instances), with the types of protection (jobs, housing, parental rights, etc.) also expanding.”¹⁰

Guerin concluded that the time is ripe for the United States to legislate acceptance of more and more forms of sexual behavior. She called for the elimination of all statutes and government regulations regarding the choice by so-called sexual minorities of a marriage partner (including those who are “gender variant” or engage in wife-swapping); extending the principles of freedom of speech to all forms of pornography; and changing the attitudes of law enforcement and the medical professionals toward all forms of sexual behavior.¹¹

California: The Brave New World

Much of the brave new world of sexual liberation that Guerin described is already occurring in the state of California. A cadre of homosexual lawmakers, working with political allies and with a sympathetic governor, have begun turning the state into what they describe as “the friendliest place in America for homosexuals.”¹² And, not coincidentally, it has become one of the increasingly hostile areas in the country for religious liberty.

What is happening in California may eventually occur at the federal level if people of faith continue to turn a blind eye to what is happening in local and state governments. The result will be increasingly dramatic losses of religious freedom and mandatory (under penalty of law) violation of conscience.

As so-called “anti-discrimination” laws are expanded to include more and more sexual minorities and an ever-expanding list of what constitutes discrimination, serious Christians will find themselves more and more isolated and discriminated against in a society that has turned its back on God's plan for human sexual behavior.

For example, in 2001, former Governor. Gray Davis signed AB1475. This bill removed the “religious exemption” that had protected religious health care providers, such as Catholic or Baptist hospitals, from being subjected to anti-discrimination laws that include sexual orientation. The bill stated that it would “make the provisions of the act prohibiting harassment [which is defined in the bill as refusing to hire or employ a practicing homosexual or to fire someone because of his or her sexual orientation] applicable” if the hospital accepts patients who are non-adherents of the religion of the hospital.¹³ Thus, if a Catholic or Baptist hospital accepts a non-Catholic or non-Baptist patient as part of its ministry, the hospital is immediately subject to anti-discrimination laws that include sexual orientation.

Another bill the governor signed into law was SB225. This bill required that private (which in many cases means religious) schools with interscholastic sports teams adopt non-discrimination policies supporting sexual orientation and “perceived gender” or face the prospect of being banned from the California Interscholastic Federation (CIF) or other interscholastic sports programs.¹⁴ In a nutshell, schools, both public and private, must have a non-discrimination policy that includes sexual orientation in place or otherwise they can no longer compete in interscholastic sports. As the law is written, a religious-based school that refuses to abandon its convictions and challenges this law may have to explain its “religious tenets” to a judge who will ultimately decide the case.

* In chapter 5 we discussed former Governor. Gray Davis's signing a domestic partners bill (passed on September 12, 2001, the day after the attacks on the Pentagon and World Trade Center) that gave domestic partners a dozen of the same rights as married couples. This was in despite of a 2-1 popular vote in March 2000 that reaffirmed marriage in California as being between one man and one woman. See Jim Wasserman, “California Governor Signs Gay Rights Bill,” Associated Press, October 15, 2001.

In May 2002, the California Senate approved a tax break for unmarried couples that gives them the same property tax exemptions as traditional married couples. Unmarried couples that have lived together for at least five years will not be subject to property tax assessments when one of them dies. Jackie Speier, the sponsor of the bill, said: “We can no longer define the family in the traditional way, and the state should not be judging individuals' living arrangements.”¹⁵ But of course, the state is making a judgment by granting this special exception to advance fornication, sodomy, and other behaviors leading to non-normal living arrangements.

In early August 2003, then-Governor Davis signed into law AB196, authored by openly homosexual assemblyman Mark Leno of San Francisco. This bill prohibits housing and workplace discrimination based on “gender characteristics” (i.e., “transgenderism”). The bill was coauthored by four members of the state’s “Legislative Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgender Caucus.”¹⁶ Leno tried to take advantage of the war in Iraq by stating, “Particularly at this time when we are at war supposedly defending democracy, everyone without exception should have an opportunity to pursue their dreams and become all that they are God-given.”¹⁷ The bill contains no exemption for religious business owners, owners of Bible book-stores, or for non-profit organizations such as the Boy Scouts if they refused to hire someone because they are a transsexual. Those found in violation of the proposed law would be fined $150,000.¹⁸

The Pretense of Tolerance Is Over Part 2

While many would tend to dismiss what is happening in California because of its liberal reputation, it still illustrates the growing national threat to people of faith. This is because it is the largest state in the nation, and if it were an independent nation it would be the sixth largest economy in the world. Homosexual activists have had virtual carte blanche in the state legislature in efforts to advance their agenda and restrict the freedoms of those who hold and practice sincere religious beliefs opposing homosexual behavior. California is not the only place that has begun to open its doors wide to homosexual activism. It is happening at the federal, state, and local levels nationwide. Here are just a few examples, including some more from the Golden State:

- In Philadelphia, Mayor John Street signed an ordinance that added gender identity to the city’s anti-discrimination ordinance. It was adopted on April 30, 2002. New York, San Francisco, Denver, and Minneapolis also have similar laws.¹⁹
- When San Francisco’s law was passed back in 1994, former Supervisor Terence Hallinan said: “Very seldom do we have the opportunity to make history, to reach out beyond the mundane and make justice. We are doing it here. We are creating a new civil right.”²⁰
- In July 2001, the state of Rhode Island enacted a measure that extended civil rights protection to transsexuals and cross-dressers. The Associated Press reported, “The measure was enacted on the final day of the legislative session, barely raising a fuss—a sign perhaps of the growing trend around the country of offering anti-discrimination protections to transgendered individuals.”²¹ Even homosexual activists didn’t expect this bill to pass. “We thought it would be very controversial, but legislators seemed to understand it was an issue of basic human rights,” said Tina Wood of the Rhode Island

Alliance for Lesbian and Gay Civil Rights.²²

- A New Jersey Appeals court ruled that the state's anti-discrimination law applied to transgendered individuals. The decision read as follows: "It is incomprehensible to us that our Legislature would ban discrimination against heterosexual men and women; against homosexual men and women; against bisexual men and women; against men and women who are perceived, presumed or identified by others as not conforming to the stereotypical notions of how men and women behave, but would condone discrimination against men or women who seek to change their anatomical sex because they suffer from a gender identity disorder."²³ Such a decision opens up a whole slew of expanding rights for various sexual behaviors.*
- On May 1, 2002, the New York Times expressed its editorial support for a "transgendered rights" bill that was signed into law by New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg. The Times wrote, "The transgendered category covers a wide array of people who do not fit into traditional gender groups, whether due to appearance, behavior or physical attributes. ...Because the rights of the transgendered have gotten little attention, it might seem that New York broke new ground yesterday. But in fact, more than 40 towns, counties, cities, and states—including Iowa City, Louisville, Kentucky, and Rhode Island—have written transgendered people into their anti-discrimination laws. New York City's action yesterday was not path-breaking, but it should light the way for other jurisdictions to extend protection to their own transgendered citizens."²⁴ In regard to such laws, Paisley Currah, associate professor of political science at City University of New York, said, "It's [transgendered protection] totally exploding—in law, the amount of litigation, the laws passed, the law reviews written. Transgendered people have become more organized and [are] moving beyond merely a support system for each other to actually fighting for their rights."²⁵
- In Minnesota, former governor Jesse Ventura proclaimed June 2002 Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual, Transgender Pride Celebration Month after refusing to issue a proclamation in support of the National Day of Prayer. Ventura's proclamation read: "Members of the gay, lesbian, bisexual, transgender community have made significant contributions towards the enhancement of our quality of life through active involvement in the economic and political activities of the community."²⁶
- In Sacramento, an elaborate display proclaiming June as "Gay Pride Month" was featured in the rotunda of the state Capitol where a Christmas nativity display would bring lawsuits and screams of protest. It included a pink triangle (the homosexual symbol of pride) and photographs of the state's four lesbian lawmakers.²⁷
- The chief justice of Quebec, Michel Robert, said that the work of the Canadian judiciary had been to re-create a new and moral social order that affirmed homosexual behavior. In an interview with the National Post, the chief justice said that the nature of the judiciary is to create social policy and redefine public policy without public oversight and without reference to "traditional moral norms." He concluded: "We are defining the fundamental socio-economic values of the society and I don't think this will change." He then linked legalized abortion and same-sex "marriage": "If same-sex marriages are legal and being performed every day, it's because of three courts' decisions—BC, Ontario, and Quebec. The courts defined what is permitted and what is not permitted in terms of abortion in this country, and the same thing might happen with...same-sex marriage.”²⁸

- Attorney General John Ashcroft, who himself has often taken a strong stance against homosexual behavior, allowed his deputy attorney general, Larry Thompson, to speak at a “Gay Pride” celebration in the United States Department of Justice's great hall.²⁹ Betty DeGeneres, the mother of Ellen DeGeneres, also spoke at the Office of Personnel Management's Gay Pride celebration.³⁰ The Bush administration also appointed an actively practicing homosexual man to the post of Ambassador to Romania, and Secretary of State Colin Powell pointedly introduced the man's partner, who will reside in government-funded housing, at the State Department swearing-in ceremony.³¹ Robert Steers, of the GOP homosexual group, the Log Cabin Republicans, said, “We have never had this much access to a Republican White House before.”³² Finally, the Bush administration let stand Clinton White House policies that extended workplace discrimination claims to include sexual orientation.³³
- It was reported on March 24, 2004, that in 2003 the number of individuals discharged from the armed forces for violations of military standards relating to homosexual behavior had fallen to 787, the lowest level since 1995.³⁴ (For the prior five years, the armed services discharged more than 1,000 members annually, and a total of more than 8,500 members since implementation of former President Bill Clinton's “Don't Ask, Don't Tell” policy).

* Many homosexuals acknowledge implicitly that deviating from God's norms for marriage get worse and worse. Now, many use the word queer because it embodies more sexual minorities than just homosexuals.

Under this policy, men and women who engage in homosexual behavior were allowed to remain in the military as long as they kept their “sexual orientation” private and refrained from homosexual behavior. In fact, under the present military policy, a service member's commander—who may not ask a member to reveal their sexual “orientation”—is able to initiate an inquiry or process for discharge only if the member (1) makes a statement that he or she is lesbian, gay, or bisexual; (2) engaged in physical contact with someone of the same sex for purposes of sexual gratification; or (3) married or attempted to marry someone of the same sex.

Even these very limited rules were too restrictive for the homosexual advocates who sued the military repeatedly to challenge its rules. The Alliance Defense Fund provided funding for allied attorneys in their efforts to help defend the law in three separate legal challenges to the military's proscription on active, open homosexual behavior in the armed services of the United States. These legal challenges were heard by federal circuit courts of appeal. In each case, the Pentagon was deeply concerned about the impact of such open behavior on the high standards of conduct and performance essential for military readiness.

The Department of Defense has not commented on the 2002 decline in involuntary separations for homosexual conduct, nor is it clear that the decline is statistically significant. Nevertheless, homosexual activist C. Dixon Osburn, the executive director of the Servicemembers Legal Defense Network (dedicated to the removal of the “don’t ask, don’t tell” policy and for the open participation in homosexual behavior in the military), said: “When they need lesbian, gay, and bisexual Americans most, military leaders keep us close at hand.”³⁵ It is unlikely, however, that most commanders knowingly retain individuals who fail to obey the “don’t tell” and “don’t engage in homosexual conduct” policy. In fact, recruitment is up and retention standards in general are tighter than in today’s armed forces. Still, considering the limited proscriptions³⁶ of the current policy, it is astounding that so many men and women each year fail to keep their homosexual desires, activities, or behaviors private and to themselves.

* This comment is from Melissa Wells-Petry, a former major in the U.S. Army.

- In Benton County, Oregon, county commissioner Linda Modrell announced that the county would not issue marriage licenses to heterosexual couples until the homosexual couples were allowed to marry. Modrell said, “To maintain consistency with our oath to uphold Oregon’s Constitution’s anti-discrimination provisions, we must temporarily cease issuing marriage licenses to any couple, regardless of gender until there is a state determination.”³⁶
- The Centers for Disease Control launched a campaign called “STOP AIDS: Sex in the City.” Included in this campaign were workshops on “Sex Toys and Gay Masturbation Techniques” and “Exploration of ‘Gay’ Intimacy and Fantasy” and a live bondage/sadomasochistic show featuring toys, role-playing, and “scene negotiation.” This program received $698,000 in federal funding in fiscal year 2000 under then-President Clinton.³⁷
- Another Centers for Disease Control Web site featured a link to Internet pages of “pro-sex” activist organizations that provided teenagers with explicit advice on homosexual behavior, sodomy, and masturbation. The link was to the Coalition for Positive Sexuality and featured statements like: “If you think you might be queer, relax! If you think you might be queer, try to find a lesbian/bisexual/gay/transgender community center near you.”³⁸
- In Portland, Oregon, Mayor Vera Katz issued an official proclamation commemorating “Leather Pride Week” in honor of the National Leather Association’s Bondage, Discipline, and Sadomasochism Event in the city. A spokesman for the mayor said that the proclamation “cited the importance of a diverse community and praised the motto of ‘Safe, Sane, and Consensual’ adopted by the leather community.” Susan Brownlow, the state director of Concerned Women for America, said: “Where are you going to stop? Is it going to be pedophilia next?”³⁹

As you can see from each of these pieces of legislation and other actions by federal, state, and local governments, the affirmation of homosexual behavior is just the beginning. Once homosexual behavior is affirmed by government, promoters of other disordered sexual behaviors (behaviors prohibited by Scripture) start to demand their rights. After all, if you are going to tolerate one, you have to tolerate all.

For the Christian, the issue becomes especially problematic when the government adopts special legal privileges for those engaging in homosexual and other extramarital sexual behavior. As we have seen with the Catholic and other religious hospitals in California, the passage of such legislation is just one short step away from forcing Christians, churches, and religious organizations to violate their sincere beliefs with regard to homosexual behavior or cease to function.

The Supreme Court has already upheld the exclusive power of the Internal Revenue Service to determine when the “public interest” trumps religious liberty for tax exemption purposes. In 1983, the Court, in an 8-1 decision, upheld the revocation of the tax-exempt, non-profit status of Bob Jones University⁴⁰ because school officials genuinely believed “that the Bible forbids interracial dating and marriage.” (See appendix 1 for a more detailed discussion of this decision.) Therefore, if homosexual behavior is legally equated with race as the radical activists demand, and is granted heretofore unimagined constitutional protection, then the next logical step, based on the decision in Bob Jones University v. United States of America, could be for traditional Bible-based religious organizations and churches to have their tax-exempt status revoked because they engage in “discriminatory” behavior. The U.S. Supreme Court wrote: “History buttresses logic to make it clear that, to warrant exemption under 501c3, an institution must...be in harmony with the public interest. The institution's purpose must not be so at odds with the common community conscience as to undermine any public interest that might otherwise be conferred.”⁴⁰

* In 1970, a federal court decision prohibited the IRS From allowing tax-exempt status for certain private schools whose admission policies discriminated on the basis of race. See Green v. Kennedy, 309 F. Supp. 1127, appeal dism'd sub nom. Cannon v. Green, 398 U.S. 956 (1970).

Very seldom do we have the opportunity to make history, to reach out beyond the mundane and make justice. We are doing it here. We are creating a civil right.

—Former San Francisco Supervisor Terence Hallinan on the city's passage of a transgender anti-discrimination law

We are beginning to see the first stages of radical homosexual activists playing this trump card. As reported in chapter 6, the Canyon Ferry Baptist Church in Montana found itself under investigation after it hosted a closed-circuit television feed of pro-marriage speakers in Colorado Springs. During the rally a petition was circulated in support of an amendment to the Montana Constitution that would define marriage to be between one man and one woman. These actions are perfectly legal under IRS guidelines (see Gary McCaleb's letter in appendix 2). ADF counsel Gary McCaleb—with local lawyers Timothy C. Fox and Alan Jocelyn—filed a lawsuit in Helena, Montana, seeking declaratory relief from the state's efforts to apply state election law to churches that merely teach and preach in support of traditional marriage and make petitions available on church premises to qualify the constitutional amendment for the Montana ballot.⁴¹

In addition, as also reported in chapter 6, churches that do not perform same-sex “marriages” could also face legal challenges to their tax-exempt status if they are found to engage in “discrimination.” (See appendix I.)⁴²

Therefore, if homosexual behavior is found by the IRS and the courts to be in “harmony” with the public interest, and if biblical teachings and practices of churches and religious organizations are “at odds” with the common community conscience that affirms homosexual behavior, their financial status will be seriously compromised.

The ENDA of Religious Freedom

This is where the danger of the federal Employment Non-Discrimination Act, better known as ENDA, comes in. This legislation, which was barely defeated in the U.S. Senate in 1996 (and would have been readily signed by then-President Bill Clinton) by a margin of 50-49,⁴³ would have added the category of sexual orientation to the 1964 federal Civil Rights Act. It continues to be brought up year after year until it is passed.

When one looks at the demographics of the homosexual community, it becomes quite obvious that those who identify themselves as homosexual or engaging in homosexual behavior are not nearly the oppressed class portrayed. In fact, the marketing strategies of entire industries, such as airlines, cruise lines, and alcoholic beverages, are based on their knowledge of the ready cash available to the active homosexual and the homosexual media's knowledge of that cash to sell advertising.

In a 2000 study released by Simmons Research, the average income of homosexual and lesbian households was found to be $85,000, or more than twice the national average⁴⁴ (see chap. 7). Another study by Syracuse University in 2001 found that the median income for homosexual couples in the United States was $65,000, nearly 60 percent higher than the national median of $40,800. More than a fifth of those who responded to the Syracuse study reported an income of $100,000 or more.⁴⁵ It is interesting to note that homosexual advocates, conference leaders, and activists promote these figures when trying to convince corporations, like United Airlines, to market to them or grant special privileges but then deny the existence of the very same statistics when they are trying to make the argument that they are an “oppressed” class.⁴⁶

In fact, Rich Tafel, head of the GOP homosexual organization, the Log Cabin Republicans, questioned the need for ENDA. He said, “I can tell you anecdotally that as I travel all over the country, I almost never hear from anyone who was fired because they were gay.”⁴⁷ After a firestorm of protest from homosexual activists, observers predict Tafel will either quietly reverse his position or no longer head the Log Cabin Republicans.

It becomes quite obvious that the single greatest reason for ENDA to exist is to limit, stop, and punish individuals and organizations that believe that homosexual behavior is sinful or disordered and that so-called personal sexual and related behavior can in fact have a public or employment related impact.

ENDA's supporters claim that religious organizations, including schools and institutions of higher learning owned and operated by a religious organization would have been exempt from the bill,⁴⁸ However, Roger Clegg, general counsel for the Center for Equal Opportunity, writing in the National Review, shows how the bill, even with a so-called religious "exemption" (which has been shown in California to be worth practically nothing as homosexual activists incrementally strip it away) would violate the religious freedom of millions of Americans. He wrote: "Something should be said at the outset about the distinction between homosexuality and homosexual behavior....Millions of Americans believe that homosexual behavior violates sincerely and deeply held religious beliefs. It is, in other words, a sin. What is the relevance of this fact for law and government? Well, sometimes sins are made illegal—murder and theft, for instance. Sometimes they are not; no one is jailed for failing to honor his father and mother. And sometimes they are made illegal but seldom prosecuted. Much fornication, including homosexual behavior, falls into this category. The idea is to stigmatize the behavior, even if it is unrealistic to prosecute it."⁴⁹

Clegg then continued to show how ENDA would have stigmatized those who have sincerely held religious objections to homosexual behavior:

It might be objected that this is not an appropriate role for law and government. Instead, if some people want to stigmatize certain behavior then they should find ways to do so without dragging legislators and lawyers, let alone prosecutors, into the act. Which, of course, is exactly what the Employment Non-Discrimination Act makes it impossible to do....Who wants to make a private behavior [religious objection to homosexual behavior] by an adult illegal—those supporting the bill or those opposing it? And who wants to use the government to force people to act against deeply held personal beliefs? It is, of course, the proponents [emphasis ours] of the bill who want to make private behavior illegal, not its opponents. The private behavior is the exercise of one's freedom of association and control of one's own property to refuse, on occasion, if one wishes, to hire homosexuals.⁵⁰

Therefore, what would have been stigmatized is not homosexual behavior, which has serious negative ramifications for society, but religious, public health, or other objections to such behavior. The religious freedom to talk about the sinfulness or disordered nature of homosexual behavior and the need for redemption would be ridiculed, while the behavior that often leads to death would be exalted. It is also important to realize that the tendency of courts interpreting such legislation is almost always to expand coverage, not to retract it. Eventually religious exemptions are whittled away in subsequent legislation until no exemption is left.

* In recent years, unprotected homosexual sex has led to a serious spike in new HIV/AIDS infections. Since 1981, more than 1 million Americans have been infected with the AIDS virus, and about 450,000 have died. In addition, syphilis and gonorrhea among homosexuals in San Francisco has doubled in recent years. (Source: Rene Sanchez, "A City Combats AIDS Complacency," Washington Post, May 12, 2002, p. A3). Another recent study found that a majority of young homosexual men who are infected with HIV/AIDS have no idea that they are infected. (Source: Leonard Altman, "Alarming Finding on HIV in Gay Men," New York Times, July 8, 2002).

Censoring the Pulpit

Another type of law that will be used to silence or punish people with religious objections to homosexual behavior is so-called hate crimes legislation. We have already shown how such legislation in Canada, Sweden, and Holland will lead to the censoring and punishment of anyone who raises an objection to homosexual behavior, even from the pulpit.

In fact, Sen. Ted Kennedy, who is the co-sponsor of ENDA and a federal hate-crimes bill, called religious objections to homosexual behavior "an insidious aspect of American life."⁵¹

Stop and ponder these comments for a moment. The force that launched America, the belief system that made it great, the freedom that allowed the Kennedy family to become rich and powerful is "insidious."

As can be seen from other countries, the expansion of hate crimes will be used against any religious viewpoint that objects to homosexual behavior—because the philosophy underlying so-called hate crimes goes far beyond the commitment of an actual crime—it punishes the thought in some ways, the belief system behind the crime. These laws can be quickly expanded and separated from any form of traditional crime to include any speech that homosexual activists would claim incited someone to harm a homosexual person. Therefore, it is logical to expect that, just as Dutch authorities were urged to prosecute Pope John Paul II,⁵² individuals such as Dr. James Dobson—who was bizarrely blamed indirectly and wrongfully with regard to the tragic murder of Matthew Shepard—could be charged with committing a hate crime anytime they mentioned the biblical position on homosexual behavior. This same rule could possibly extend to churches (that is on the verge of happening across the Atlantic).

In municipalities with an assortment of hate crime laws or similar speech limiting laws, religious freedom is already at peril. In 1998, the San Francisco Board of Supervisors took the unusual action of denouncing an advertising campaign sponsored by a national ministry that said homosexual behavior was sinful and that homosexuals can change. The ministry's advertisement, which appeared in the San Francisco Chronicle, said that Christians love those trapped in homosexual behavior but pointed out the destructiveness of homosexual behavior and the need for Jesus Christ to bring healing to the lives of those practicing homosexuality. The board passed two resolutions that said such advertising "validates oppression of gays and lesbians" and creates a climate "that may encourage violence." The ministry took the board to court over the resolutions, but the Ninth U.S. Court of Appeals in San Francisco rejected the claim, stating, “The main purpose and effect of the Supervisors' actions was to promote equality and condemn hate crimes, not to attack or inhibit religious beliefs.”⁵³ Yet that is exactly what the resolutions did. This is just a taste of what is to come if expanded federal hate crimes legislation in its various forms comes to pass. Imagine the explosion of outrage and the court's decision if on the other hand, the board had passed resolutions supporting the ads?

In West Virginia, it was reported that an assistant attorney general in that state had been teaching police about hate crimes. The manual he was using was allegedly written by employees of the U.S. Justice Department under former Attorney General Janet Reno. A sentence about hate groups reads, “Some groups include apocalyptic Christianity in their ideology and believe we are in, or approaching, a period of violence and social turmoil which will precede the Second Coming of Christ.” Kevin McCoy, the head of the West Virginia Family Foundation commented, “[This curricula is] laying the foundation for certain types of speech that are not politically correct and how they could be possibly perceived to be not appropriate within the law enforcement community....If this curricula is continued to be taught to law enforcement in this state, it will not be long before they roll out the big guns and start cracking the whip....Their goal is to get sexual orientation included. Once they do that, this is laying the foundation for law enforcement to take care of those people that they consider to be members of the hate group. Churches, pastors, the whole nine yards...I don't think there will be any group left untouched when their agenda is finally completed.”⁵⁴

An individual who posted a message in response to the article containing McCoy's comments, wrote, “Yes, Christianity is a hate group....Not all Christians are hateful but their beliefs are hateful.”⁵⁵

Still, many Christians are unaware of the threats posed to their religious freedoms by potential laws like ENDA and hate crimes legislation. Some Christians even support various forms of such laws because it seems like the “fair thing to do.” What they don't know is that when they support or are ambivalent about such legislation, they are signing a death warrant for religious liberty. Many Christians will come to realize the famous lament of the German pastor, Martin Niemöller, is true for them as well: “First they came for the Jews, but I did nothing because I am not a Jew. Then they came for the socialists, but I did nothing because I am not a socialist. Then they came for the Catholics, but I did nothing because I am not a Catholic. Finally, they came for me, but by then there was no one left to help me.”⁵⁶

Where Do We Go from Here?

Those who want to win the world for Christ must have the courage to come into conflict with it.

—Titus Brandsma, martyr, who died at Dachau as a victim of Adolf Hitler in 1942

A new missionary was walking the streets of Colombia one day, a nation ravaged by organized crime and rampant drug use, accompanied by a Christian native of the country. As he walked the streets of the country, child after child would come up to the missionary and beg him for money. Even though he had limited funds, it was his inclination to give whatever he could to these poor and destitute children. However, his Christian companion quickly admonished him that giving into the demands of the children would cause the children more harm than good.

“You see,” his companion said, “these children are trapped by the mafia at an early age to go begging in the streets. The crime syndicate breaks their fingers and other horrible things are done to them. But if you give in and just hand them the money, they will just take the money to the mafia and all it will do is perpetuate the problem. You may have thought that you helped the child, but all you did was treat a symptom, the cause of the problem will go on and on, and future generations of children will fall into the same trap.”

* This story was told to Craig by an employee of Food for the Hungry, an international relief ministry.

This story also serves as an analogy when it comes to our response to those trapped in homosexual behavior.

As Christians, we find ourselves in a difficult position when it comes to the demands of homosexual activists. How can we be compassionate toward those trapped in homosexual behavior while not also falling into the trap of enabling it? We are called to love our neighbors. For the sincere Christian, this means many things (see Matt. 25:31-46) but especially introducing them to the love and saving grace of Jesus Christ (Matt. 28:18). And what is the greatest obstacle to faith and life in Jesus Christ? It is a person's sinful nature. If a person cannot see or be told or be allowed to hear or read that their ignorance, their behavior, their sin is blocking them from God's full plan for them, they may miss the abundant life, the eternal life that Christ died to provide for all kinds of persons, including those trapped in sexually disordered behavior. Nor can they be able to understand why Christ had to die for us and be resurrected and emerge victorious over sin.

And speaking the truth in love does not mean telling those who are violating God's standards for marriage and sexual activity that what they are doing is "OK" in God's eyes.

A vivid example of the dilemma for Christians is illustrated in the following letter that we received at ADF:

My husband and I became Christians 8 years ago. Our previous 30 plus years gives us numerous relationships that we consider our mission field. We have many close homosexual friendships that we are continuing to maintain in a godly manner.

Recently, we were invited to a "commitment ceremony." When the invitation was declined I was questioned why? These friends all know our commitment to Christ and the lifestyle changes we have made. I stated that God's word states that homosexuality is a sin and we cannot support this sinful ceremony. You can imagine the justification and denial of God's word. We decided to end the conversation because no opinions were being changed.

We have maintained the relationships the past eight years in a loving and godly manner. I am so disappointed that when I stated God's Word I am told that our friendship cannot continue. I was told that if I cannot accept the homosexual lifestyle then I could not be a friend. Who is being intolerant? When I became a Christian, I never wanted to sever my homosexual friendships. The relationships have changed but [were] never denied...¹

The barrier to sharing the gospel with an individual trapped in homosexual behavior is seemingly higher every day, whether through limits on religious freedom or hardened hearts. As Joe Dallas, a former homosexual, has said: "If you gave homosexual [activists] everything they want, they still will not be satisfied until the church is silenced."² Yet, as Christians, we cannot give up trying to share Christ's love, nor the gospel's full message of repentance leading to forgiveness and wholeness, even when faced with rejection. Neither can we allow our right to share the good news of Christ's love with homosexuals or any other persons to be taken away from us.

It is vital for members of the Body of Christ to understand the homosexual agenda and how it threatens many personal and religious freedoms. If we sit back and surrender, giving those involved in homosexual behavior everything they think they want, we are just like the missionary in Colombia who thought he was solving a problem but instead making it worse. The dear man or woman lost in the trap of homosexual behavior and relationships will never be able to hear and respond to Christ's redemptive love for him or her.

Not only is our ability to share Christ's love with those trapped in homosexual behavior threatened, but our ability to raise our own children to know and live the uncensored Christian life and faith is at risk as well. Parental rights are also an essential part of religious freedom: the ability to raise and guide one's children according to one's beliefs. So what are we to do?

The letter we just shared with you illustrates a good place for Christians to start. Although rejected by her homosexual friends, the writer still tried to be a consistent witness and friend to those caught in extramarital sexual behavior. Remember, it was the consistent witness and love of a quiet Christian couple—not just in words but in deeds—that led John Paulk to Christ. That persistence by the couple and the willingness to adjust, without theological compromise, to provide what John needed and not push him into a situation that would have made him instantly uncomfortable had the great impact. Despite the obstacles placed in our paths, we must continue to share the gospel with those who so desperately need to hear it, even if it means rejection and even persecution.

Despite the need for us to demonstrate love and to be a strong witness to our fellow citizens, including those who engage in homosexual behavior, we cannot compromise on the church's traditional teachings of the gospel and people's need for repentance. Unfortunately, this is where many in the church and in our culture have stumbled. In our desire to be relevant and to be seen as tolerant and loving, we have failed to speak the truth both in love and with love. As one internationally known Christian leader says: “We cannot allow [a false understanding] of love to trump truth.” In our hope of being accepted, we have often backed away from the spiritual battle for the hearts and souls of men. Rather than confront the culture, we have often chosen to conform to it. Instead of promoting self-fulfillment in our churches, we must get back to modeling self-sacrifice. Christ made the ultimate sacrifice for us, and like him, we must be humble servants and not haughty judges. We need to point the individual trapped in homosexual behavior to the true cross, not a revised, meaningless gospel that requires no sacrifice, no repentance, and provides no real lasting deliverance from sin and its pain and sorrow.

We must be willing to be salt and light in our culture, no matter what the price. When a television show ridicules fellow Christians or biblical beliefs and exalts homosexual behavior, we should speak out. For an effective example of what speaking out can accomplish we can look at what has happened in New York City. After years of blatant anti-Catholic bigotry on the Broadway stage, no play is presently running there that ridicules Catholicism. Why? Because of the brave stand taken by one man, William Donahue of the Catholic League, who has made sure, through his protests and effective use of the media, that there is a price to be paid for bashing Catholics.

We must not remain silent, we must speak up, when Christ and his teachings are ridiculed and sexual deviancy is exalted. This includes the media, our public schools, our elected officials, and our workplace. There may be a price that we will all have to pay, but whatever that price is, we must remember it pales in comparison to the price Christ paid for us. If we stay silent, our children and grandchildren will reap the consequences of our apathy.

Our voice must be consistent: we must love homosexual men and women, and because of this love for them we must want to see them redeemed from a lifestyle of certain, ultimate despair. John Paulk, Melissa Fryrear, Mike Haley, Teresa Britton, and so many others are living testaments to the joy and healing —through faith in Jesus Christ—available to the person who escapes from homosexual behavior.

We need to support ministries that provide outreach and are trying to minister to the homosexual, such as Exodus International, Focus on the Family's "Love Won Out" conferences, the Church of the Open Door in San Rafael, California, and the efforts of individual pastors, priests, rabbis, and churches. Organizations advocating homosexual behavior such as the Human Rights Campaign, the ACLU, GLAAD, and others, dwarf all of them in comparison when it comes to allocation of dollars and other resources. We also need to support churches, synagogues, and ministries that have had the courage to speak the truth on this issue and confront the agenda of the intolerant homosexual activists.

We need to get involved in legal and public policy matters that will determine our nation's future. The Alliance Defense Fund (1-800-TELL-ADF or www.telladf.org) was founded by thirty-five ministry leaders across many denominational lines to deal exclusively in the legal arena. Through our God-given vision of strategy, training, and funding, we have been able, through God's grace, to equip God's people to stand up for religious freedom and for the gospel in hundreds of successful cases in our nation's courts. So often we who call ourselves "brothers and sisters in Christ" have fought among ourselves, while the homosexual advocacy groups and their allies have worked together with relative harmony. If we effectively coordinate our strategy by creating alliances with other organizations, recruit and train our friends and allies in how to respond to and resist the homosexual agenda, and provide the critical funding needed to battle on an equal basis with those who wish to silence the gospel, we are confident that the threat the homosexual agenda poses to religious freedom will be greatly diminished. For many years, the church and Christians were essentially AWOL from the courthouse while dozens of legal cases were litigated, setting precedents the homosexual activists rely on today. We can no longer ignore the legal realm.

On the political front, we need to be aware of candidates and where they stand on the issues. For example, here in Arizona, homosexual advocates recently ran for public office as conservative or even profamily Republicans in an apparent attempt to deceive conservative voters. While many of these candidates went down to defeat once voters became aware of their agenda, the Arizona Republic (whose managing editor featured the move of his homosexual partner to Phoenix in a news article) spun the story as a victory for homosexual activists.³ That is why we need to look much further than the party label and learn about the person who is running. Focus on the Family has state family policy councils in more than thirty-five states that can provide you with the information you need to make an informed decision. You can get in touch with the one for your state by calling 1-800-A-FAMILY.

In the public schools, we have already mentioned the need for Christian parents to be organized and to confront the school administration head-on when it comes to reviewing curriculum. In addition, whether we have any children in public schools or not, we must be informed about candidates for local school boards or be willing to make the sacrifice and go to school board meetings to voice our objections to the homosexual indoctrination of our children. It will not be easy. Anyone who goes against the homosexual agenda is bound to be ridiculed and vilified and face possible persecution. If we consider the fact that the future of our children, grandchildren, and our nation is at stake, we must ask ourselves, "Is this too high a price to pay?" We think not.

Finally and most importantly, we need to pray. We must be on our knees, for those in sexual sin, for our children and grandchildren, and for our culture. Remember the words of the Lord to Solomon in 2 Chronicles 7:14: "If my people, who are called by my name, will humble themselves and pray and seek my face and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear from heaven and will forgive their sin and will heal their land" God's promise for those with humble and contrite hearts is the same for all generations.

If God's people get on their knees and do these other things, we are confident that the Lord will honor this faithfulness and help turn around the seemingly inevitable direction our culture is on with regard to the affirmation of homosexual behavior and the silencing of the gospel.

In 1987, President Ronald Reagan stood in West Berlin and challenged the leader of the Soviet Union, Mikhail Gorbachev, to "tear down this wall." In Berlin, even in his own administration, few shared Reagan's conviction that a seemingly, all-powerful Soviet empire was doomed. Yet a few years later not only did the wall fall, but the entire Iron Curtain came down with it. With the same determination—to stand up to the radical homosexual activist community...and to preserve religious freedom—we can and will win.

Let us conclude with the words of the Most Reverend Peter Jensen, the Anglican archbishop of Sydney, Australia. His words sum up beautifully the position in which the church finds itself today in response to the threat of the homosexual agenda. It is an admonishment and an encouragement to us all:

Churches must have the courage to win influence back from a secular world. The role of the Christian churches...today is to speak the truth in love....We have accepted the secular world's verdict that we have nothing of importance to say, and we have adjusted ourselves to this reality. We have become domesticated....Instead of explaining and defending the Gospel, we have sought the path of relevance....The Christian Gospel is the insertion of truth into the untrustworthy discourse of the world. Some of us want to be kind, so loving that we will not speak the truth. The therapeutic model of pastoral care has been perverted into mere affirmations of human behaviour. Our love is no love, for it refuses this great test: will it speak boldly, frankly, truthfully?...One of the chief reasons why we have ceased to speak the truth is we are fearful of the reaction of those around us....We have contributed towards the gagging of God, perhaps because we are frightened of suffering. But there is one fundamental task to which we must be committed, come whatever may: Speak the truth in love.⁴

We must speak the truth in love. We must live the truth in love. This is the true love of the gospel. We cannot shy away from this task, regardless of the price. We need to ask ourselves: Are we willing to take a stand, to keep the door open for the gospel, or are we going to allow it to be silenced? Are we willing to share Christ's love with the person trapped in homosexual behavior, or will we simply walk by them like the Levite and the priest on the road to Jericho and not offer a helping hand? (Luke 10:25-37)

The answers to those questions will determine the future of marriage, the family, culture, and the gospel in America, and of America itself. They will determine the futures of millions of hurting individuals in need of a loving Father who alone can provide them with the true affirmation, true fulfillment, and the true love they so desperately need. And the good news—even a nation's heart can turn in a single day (Jonah 3:10).

Soli Deo Gloria.

Background Brief:

The Future of Tax Exemption and Homosexual Behavior

Question: Could the application of a new legal test, of “strict scrutiny” by the United States Supreme Court as proposed in various cases or other sex/gender case decisions relating to sodomy and sexual behavior, lead to the revocation of church and charitable organization tax exemptions by the Internal Revenue Service?

Answer: In 1983, the High Court found that an organization's tax exempt status and deductibility of gifts to that organization can be revoked for acts contrary to the “public interest” as determined by the IRS and federal courts—even when those acts are based on sincerely held religious beliefs.¹

Discussion: Many major religious colleges, denominations, churches, ministries, and charitable organizations that are tax exempt today differentiate (or in the view of intolerant radical activists “discriminate”) on the basis of sex/gender and sexual behavior in employment, position, ordination, performance of marriage and other ceremonies or sacraments, and many other matters based upon their genuinely held religious beliefs. In fact, most of those who engage in such practices believe they are acting upon and in conformity with “revealed truth” from Scripture and/or tradition. Their future tax exemption status is uncertain with the advance of the homosexual legal agenda.

If the Supreme Court, or a plethora of courts of appeal, adopts a new test—a new standard for Constitutional review—for all claims of sex/gender discrimination under the same rules and policies that racial discrimination is now viewed (i.e., “strict scrutiny”), or decides that the Constitution, public policy, or law of the United States protects or provides special privileges for sodomy and other homosexual behavior, it is only a matter of time, application of legal “logic,” and litigation before it is claimed that sex/gender and sexual orientation/behavior “discrimination” is akin to racial discrimination and thus is in all instances contrary to public policy and therefore those who engage in such actions are not “entitled” to the public “benefit” of tax exemption.

To put it plainly, there is either a lawful basis to differentiate (“discriminate”) between persons based upon sex/gender and/or their forms of sexual behavior or there is not. Present sex/gender and sexual behavior law, though dramatically changed from one hundred to two hundred years ago, uses an “intermediate level” of scrutiny for sex/gender issues, and courts still permit differentiation for many things.²

Bob Jones University's sponsors genuinely believed "that the Bible forbade interracial dating and marriage." As a result of those beliefs, the university engaged in various practices, finally forbidding interracial marriage or dating by enrolled students. The federal courts found Bob Jones's "policies violated the clearly defined public policy" and after years of litigation determined that it was proper for the IRS, exercising its discretion, to revoke the university's tax exempt status. The courts also rejected Bob Jones's arguments that revoking the tax exemption violated the Free Exercise of Religion and Establishment Clauses of the First Amendment.

Bob Jones was permitted to "practice its religious beliefs," though held by the government to be discriminatory, but it was prevented from receiving the "benefit" of tax exemption and receipt of tax deductible gifts.

Until 1970, the Internal Revenue Service recognized tax exempt status and allowed tax deductions to private schools without regard to their faith-based racial policies. In 1970, a federal court decision prohibited the IRS from allowing tax exempt status for certain private schools whose admission policies discriminated on the basis of race.³ As a result of that, and subsequent court decisions, the IRS revised its policies to state, in part, "the statutory requirement of being 'organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable...or educational purposes' was intended to express the basic common law concept [of 'charity']...[and] the purpose of the trust may not be illegal or contrary to public policy."⁴

The Supreme Court, analyzing the government's grant of tax exemptions or allowance of deductions, stated: "History buttresses logic to make it clear that, to warrant exemption under 501 (c)(3), an institution must...be in harmony with the public interest. The institution's purpose must not be so at odds with the common community conscience as to undermine any public interest that might otherwise be conferred."⁵ [emphasis added]

In its review of the national policy consensus on race, which led the courts to conclude that Bob Jones's dating policy was offensive to that policy, the Supreme Court specifically noted various congressional acts concurred that racial discrimination violated public policy and further noted, "The Executive Branch has consistently placed its support behind the eradication of racial discrimination" and that "few social or political questions have been more vigorously debated."⁶

Radical and intolerant homosexual activists are working overtime to equate distinctions and differentiation based on sex/gender, sexual orientation, and various forms of sexual behavior with the public and thus legal public policy equivalent of racial discrimination, despite the dramatic differences. If these activists are successful, there is no reason that the IRS and federal courts could not make the same findings regarding sex/gender and sexual behavior and that such "discrimination" could require revocation of tax exempt status and prohibit tax deductible contributions. In the twenty years since this decision, the IRS has not expanded the Bob Jones ruling to other forms of "discrimination," but this is no guarantee that it will not do so in the future.

Letter to Pastors

Alliance Defense Fund.

Gary S. McCaleb
Senior Counsel

June 4, 2004

Dear Pastors:

A great battle rages within our nation; a battle to determine whether the very foundation of our society—one man and one woman, joined in marriage—will survive. Advocates of same-sex “marriage” fight fiercely for new “rights,” focusing on individuals’ emotions and government benefits. But marriage is more than feelings and money; its about providing a mom and a dad for every child; about building a strong society through time-tested, certain methods rather than radical social experiments. Indeed, the very reason that governments choose to benefit and regulate marriage is because it is the proven basis for western civilization. Proponents of same-sex “marriage” cannot show otherwise.

I write to assure you that the Alliance Defense Fund will spare no effort to ensure that America’s Christians will not be silenced in the battle for marriage.

In the past decade, radical advocates of same-sex “marriage” have sought to establish new “rights” in Alaska, Hawaii, Vermont, Massachusetts, Arizona, and elsewhere. All but one of these battles resulted in their defeat—and pro-homosexual forces may yet be defeated in Massachusetts, where court actions and constitutional amendments to defend traditional marriage remain very much alive.

Across America, citizens are fighting to save marriage by advancing pro-marriage legislation at the state and federal level. Homosexual activists know that their arguments will fail if they are put squarely before our nation’s citizens, and they do all that they can to prevent the issue from ever coming to a vote. Thus, pro-homosexual groups are threatening churches across the nation with the loss of tax-exempt status, and/or they allege that various state political campaign laws were violated, when churches simply preach about marriage or allow petitions on their property. It is a simple scare tactic, designed to silence Christians.

Such tactics are not new. They have been tried time and again, and have consistently failed. For example, in 1996, 1998, and 2000, pro-homosexual activists targeted churches that supported a proposition in California that defined marriage as being between one man and one woman. In one mailing, activists sent out some 80,000 threat letters. See Erik J. Ablin, The Price of Not Rendering to Caesar: Restrictions on Church Participation in Political Campaigns, 13 Notre Dame J. L. Ethics & Pub. Pol’y 541, 557 (1999). These would-be censors failed to suppress Christian speech—the California measure ultimately passed and no church had its tax-exempt status revoked. These tactics of hate and intolerance must fail again in 2004.

By this letter, we assure you that churches have broad constitutional rights to express their views on marriage, as explained below. Furthermore, other activities such as allowing parishioners to sign petitions for legislative action to protect marriage are almost undoubtedly permissible under federal tax law. In the same way, the First Amendment to the United States Constitution most likely prevents states from demanding that churches register as a "political committee" or report "contributions" when the churches merely preach about marriage or allow petitions to be signed at their facilities.

If you are contacted by any government official or private activist group on such issues, please call us immediately. The Alliance Defense Fund's attorneys will promptly review your situation and make every effort to defend your church's legal rights to speak freely in support of marriage. Below we briefly discuss the relevant law.

Legal Analysis: Federal tax law

There are two broad areas of concern regarding the effect of political activity by churches that hold tax exempt status under Internal Revenue Code ("IRC") § 501(c)(3). First, the IRC prohibits churches from participating or intervening in the political campaign of a candidate for public office. However, the IRC is much more accommodating in regard to churches that work to influence legislation, allowing such activity so long as a "substantial part" of church efforts is not devoted to such activities. This "legislative" issue is what we are concerned about here.

Fortunately, the courts understand that advocating morality, both in church and in civil life, is properly at the heart of religious faith:

Religion includes a way of life as well as beliefs upon the nature of the world and the admonitions to be "Doers of the word and not hearers only" (James 1:22) and "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations . . ." (Matthew 28:19) are as old as the Christian Church. The step from acceptance by the believer to his seeking to influence others in the same direction is a perfectly natural one, and is found in countless religious groups.

Girard Trust Co. v. Comm'r, 122 F.2d 108, 110 (3d Cir. 1941) (emphasis added; omission in original). As the Supreme Court put it, "[a]dherents of particular faiths and individual churches frequently take strong positions on public issues including . . . vigorous advocacy of legal or constitutional positions. Of course, churches as much as secular bodies, and private citizens have that [constitutional] right." Walt v. Tax Comm'n, 397 U.S. 664, 670 (1969).

Whether a church devotes a "substantial" part of its resources to influencing legislation is a question of facts and circumstances. Kentucky Bar Foundation, Inc. v. Commissioner, 78 T.C. 971 (1982), and courts have taken different approaches to the matter. For example, in Seasongood v. Commissioner, 227 F.2d 907 (6th Cir. 1955), the court established a five percent (5%) safe harbor rule based on total expenditures applied to legislative activities. Id. at 912. More recently, the decision in World Family Corporation v. Commissioner, 81 T.C. 958 (1983) raised that bar when the Tax Court ruled that an exempt organization's lobbying activities which utilized between five and ten percent of the group's resources were "insubstantial."

It should be noted that one court relied on a balancing test, rather than a percentage of expenditures, in determining that a tax exempt religious organization had devoted a "substantial part" of its resources to influencing legislation. See Christian Echoes Nat'l Ministry, Inc. v. U.S., 470 F.2d 849 (10th Cir. 1972). This court observed that the percentage test obscured the "complexity of balancing the organization's activities in relation to its objectives and circumstances." Id. at 855.

The Christian Echoes court stated that "the political [activities of a charity] must be balanced in the context of the objectives and circumstances of the organization to determine whether a substantial part of its objectives [not just expenditures] was to influence or attempt to influence legislation." Id. However, the lobbying undertaken by the Christian Echoes ministry went far beyond simply preaching about a moral issue or circulating petitions for proposed legislation. Rather, the group "attempted to mold public opinion in civil rights legislation, medicare, the Postage Revision Act of 1967, the Honest Election Law of 1967, the Nuclear Test Ban Treaty, the Panama Canal Treaty, firearms control legislation, and the Outer Space Treaty." Id. It urged its supporters to take no less than 22 different actions to influence American and international politics, including urging congressional representatives to support or oppose specific bills, abolish the federal income tax, withdraw from the United Nations, and so on. Id. Under these unusual facts—including support of candidates as well as legislation—the Christian Echoes court found that the defendant organization had devoted a "substantial part" of its resources to lobbying and affirmed the revocation of its tax exempt status. Id. at 858.

Unless a church has an extensive history of lobbying efforts (as exemplified by the Christian Echoes case) it is extremely unlikely that simple efforts to defend marriage, such as preaching about marriage or making petitions available to be signed—would be seen as a "substantial" portion of church resources. Such activities should be entirely permissible under federal tax law. Certainly, a church that devotes less than five percent of its resources to influencing legislation should be on very safe ground in this respect.

State Political Campaign Law

State governments have an interest in informing the public about campaign financing. The theory is that such information helps voters evaluate which interests are supporting particular legislation. See, e.g., Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976) (upholding federal campaign disclosure requirements). Yet however strong that interest may be, it does not justify imposing campaign law willy-nilly on churches that incidentally support legislation.

It is not possible to consider the political campaign laws of each state in this brief letter. Nonetheless, any requirement that a church register as a "political action committee" or report "expenditures" supporting legislation, simply because the church preached about marriage or allowed parishioners to sign petitions, raises serious questions under the Free Speech Clause and Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution.

Indeed, the courts have recognized that applying broadly worded campaign reporting statutes to groups that do not engage in substantial advocacy would violate the First Amendment. For example, in New Jersey State Chamber of Commerce v. New Jersey Election Law Enforcement Commission, 411 A.2d 168 (N.J. 1980), various secular groups challenged a campaign reporting law as being unconstitutionally overbroad because it was triggered by virtually any communication between a private person and a legislator which sought to "influence" legislation. The court held that the law was constitutional, but only if it was narrowly construed so that it applied "only to persons whose direct, express, and intentional communication with legislators for the purpose of affecting the outcome of legislation are undertaken on a substantial basis." Id. at 179, accord Bemis Pentecostal Church v. Tennessee, 731 S.W.2d 897 (Tenn. 1987) (holding church responsible to report expenditures for purchasing media advertisements that opposed specific liquor legislation, but also held that broadcasting the church's religious services and distributing church newsletters, even if advocating a particular election result, were not subject to campaign law). In other words, campaign law is not carre blanche for the government to limit private church speech or religious exercise.

Other issues are implicated by unlimited application of state political campaign laws to churches. For example, demanding that churches register as "political committees" would operate as a "prior restraint" on speech, which is strongly disfavored under the U. S. Supreme Court's First Amendment jurisprudence. Similarly, it would chill the speech of other churches that would rightfully fear investigation and possible punishment by state election officials. Both situations offer solid bases to invalidate a state campaign law if that law were applied to churches in this context.

Homosexual activists' outrageous, intolerant effort to stop churches from expressing their faith will succeed only if pastors succumb to fear and stand mute when marriage is attacked. But nothing in the law supports these activists' demands, and no pastor should yield to fear. Rather, pastors can (and should) speak clearly regarding moral truth and freely participate in the political processes within the limits set forth by our laws.

This material is a brief overview of a complex area of the law and should not be construed as legal advice relevant to a particular church's situation. If you have any questions or believe your church's rights were violated, please feel free to contact us at the Alliance Defense Fund.

Sincerely

Gary S. McCaleb
Senior Counsel

Notes

Introduction

1. Testimony of John Paulk, given at Focus on the Family, October 31, 2001.
2. Ibid.
3. Robert S. Hogg and others, "Modeling the Impact of HIV Disease on Mortality in Gay and Bisexual Men," International Journal of Epidemiology 26 (1997), 657.
4. Eileen E. Flynn, "Former Lesbian Discusses Life-Changing Experience," Austin American-Statesman, February 16, 2003.
5. Robert Stacy McCain, "Kansas Pastor's Brimstone for Gays Draws Some Hellfire: Both Christians and Homosexuals Attack Brutal Tactics," Washington Times, July 14, 1999.
6. Marco R. della Cava, "Church Calls Acts 'Disordered,' Gays Feel Blamed," USA Today, June 12, 2002.

Chapter One—How Did We Get Here?

1. The Advocate, June 2004.
2. Alissa J. Rubin, "Public More Accepting of Gays, Poll Finds," Los Angeles Times, June 18, 2000.
3. Gene Edward Veith, "News They Can Use," World, October 12, 2002.
4. Marshall K. Kirk and Erastes Pill, "The Overhauling of Straight America," Guide, November 1987.
5. Ibid.
6. Rona Marech, "Nuances of Gay Identities Reflected in New Language, 'Homosexual' is Passe in a 'Boi's' Life," San Francisco Chronicle, February 8, 2004.
7. Ibid.
8. Ibid.
9. Kirk and Pill, "Overhauling."
10. Ibid.
11. Ibid.
12. Michael Weisskopf, "Energized by Public or Passion, the Public is Calling: 'Gospel Grapevine' Displays Strength in Controversy over Military Gay Ban," Washington Post, February 1, 1993.
13. Julia Duin, "NBC Flooded with Calls after Couric's Remarks: Family Groups Irked at Links to Death of Gay Man," Washington Times, October 16, 1998.
14. Deborah Mathis, "Many Share in the Hate-Filled Killing of Gay Student," Orlando Sentinel, October 15, 1998.

15. Robert B. Bluey, "Documents Reveal San Francisco Mayor's Ties to Homosexual Activists," CNSNews.com., June 21, 2004.
16. Kirk and Pill, "Overhauling."
17. Star Parker, "Gay Politics, Black Reality," Townhall.com, January 12, 2004.
18. Christopher Curtis, "Jesse Jackson: Gay Marriage Rights are Not Civil Rights," PlanetOut.com, February 17, 2004.
19. Kirk and Pill, "Overhauling."
20. "The 2000 Census and Same-Sex Households: A User's Guide," published by the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force Policy Institute.
21. Jim Hopkins, "QuarkXPress Grew out of Shy Guy's Love of Solitude, Now He's a Huge Philanthropist," USA Today, August 15, 2001.
22. Valerie Richardson, "Money Can Buy You Love: The Gill Foundation's Uphill Battle for Gay Rights," Philanthropy, September/October 2000, 22.
23. Jim Hopkins, "Gay Entrepreneurs Pour Tech Cash into Causes," GFN.com, June 19, 2001. See <http://www.gfn.com/business/story.phtml? sid = 9689>.
24. Hopkins, "QuarkXPress."
25. Richardson, "Money Can Buy."
26. Gina Perales, "PrideFest Draws 4,000," Colorado Springs Gazette, August 28, 2000.
27. Ed Sealover, "Same-Sex Partners Get City Benefits," Colorado Springs Gazette, November 8, 2002.
28. Frank Eltman, "Bronx Attorney Named New Head of American Civil Liberties Union," Associated Press, May 1, 2001.
29. The American Civil Liberties Union: Freedom Is Why We're Here, ACLU position paper, Fall 1999.
30. Robyn E. Blumner, "ACLU National Director Retires for Much More Freedom," Saint Petersburg Times, September 3, 2000. Also see "Individual Donor Sets Record with $7 Million Donation," ACLU press release, July 18, 2001.
31. "Ford Foundation Gives $7 Million to ACLU Endowment Campaign," ACLU press release, June 28, 1999.
32. Internet News Bureau, "The ACLU on Morality: Special Web Collection on 'Public Morality' Launched," November 13, 1998.
33. See <http://www.lmbdalegal.org>.
34. See <http://www.hrc.org/corporate/index.asp>.
35. Hopkins, "Gay Entrepreneurs Pour."
36. Ibid.
37. Ibid.
38. Ibid.
39. Washington Blade, January 30, 1991.

40. Adolf Hitler, Mein Kampf (Boston: Houghton Mifflin Co., 1971), 230.

41. Ibid., 232.

42. Ibid., 276.

43. Marshal Kirk and Hunter Madsen, After the Ball (New York, N.Y.: Plume/Doubleday, 1990), 154.

44. Ibid., 161.

45. Ibid., 163.

Chapter Two—That's Entertainment?

1. Michael Lipton and Craig Tomashoff, "Will Power: Happily Married Eric McCormack Plays a Gay Lawyer on Will & Grace," People, October 26, 1998.

2. Correspondence between Mike Haley of Focus on the Family and Jon Kinnally.

3. "Iowa Study Suggests Tolerance of Homosexuals is Growing," Associated Press, March 23, 2001.

4. Ibid.

5. Ibid.

6. Murray Dubin, "Hollywood Living a Fantasy Where Gay Actors Concerned," Houston Chronicle, August 18, 1985.

7. Peter Stack, "Discovering Who's 'Out' at the Movies: Encyclopedist Tried to Respect Gay Stars' Privacy," San Francisco Chronicle, December 28, 1994.

8. Dubin, "Hollywood Living."

9. Dennis Drabelle, "The Box Office King of 1930," Washington Post, January 18, 1998.

10. Barry Paris, "Letter Bombs? Museum Will Open Garbo Correspondence to Alleged Socialite Lover," Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, April 13, 2000.

11. Stack, "Discovering Who's 'Out'."

12. Ibid.

13. Joanne Weintraub, "Homosexuality Was the Key to Cukor's Hollywood Success," Capitol Times, November 22, 2000.

14. Eleanor Ringel, "George Cukor: A Double Life," Atlanta Journal-Constitution, February 2, 1992.

15. Michelangelo Signorile, "Our Gay Century," Advocate, 2000.

16. Stephen Hunter, "Gay or Not, Cary Grant's Image is Unflickering," Washington Post, June 5, 1997.

17. Joe Newlin, "Drama Queens," New Orleans Times-Picayune, January 13, 2002.

18. Burt Styler and Norman Lear, "Judging Books by Covers," All in the Family, dir. John Rich, aired February 9, 1971.

19. Bob Schiller and Bob Weisskopf, "Cousin Liz," All in the Family, story by Barry Harmon and Harve Brosten, dir. Paul Bogart, aired October 9, 1977.
20. Bob Schiller and others, "Edith's Crisis of Faith," All in the Family, dir. Paul Bogart, aired December 18 and 25, 1977.
21. Jerry Reiger and Gary Moskowitz, "George," *M*A*S*H*, dir. Gene Reynolds, aired February 16, 1974.
22. Christine Sparta, "Emergence from the Closet," USA Today, March 11, 2002.
23. Ibid.
24. Ken Levine and David Isaacs, "The Boys in the Bar," Cheers, dir. James Burrows, aired January 27, 1983.
25. See the final report of the Attorney General's Commission on Pornography, 1986.
26. David Tuller, "Ellen's Coming Out No Shock to Gays, Lesbians in S.F.," San Francisco Chronicle, April 8, 1997.
27. Kinney Littlefield, "'Ellen' to Show a Bit of Gentle Puppy Love," Orange County Register, April 9, 1997.
28. Bruce Handy, "Roll Over Ward Cleaver," Time, April 14, 1997.
29. "Vows," Ellen, aired July 22, 1998.
30. Joanne Weintraub, "Ellen Finds New Place on TV," Milwaukee Journal-Sentinel, July 26, 2001.
31. Some of the most notable failures have included John Goodman's sitcom Normal, Ohio; Some of My Best Friends on CBS; and Ellen DeGeneres's second attempt, The Ellen Show, on CBS.
32. See <http://www.glaad.org>.
33. Ibid.
34. Campbell, "Gays on Prime Time."
35. Ibid.
36. Don Kaplan, "Don't Call Her a 'He,'" New York Post, August 21, 2001.
37. Matthew Gilbert, "Sexual Identity Getting Difficult to Keep Straight," Boston Globe, July 1, 2004.
38. Elizabeth Snead, "Gellar Seduced by 'Cruel' Opportunity," USA Today, March 8, 1999.
39. Adam Buckman, "Kiss of Death—Tonight's Girl-Girl Friends' Lip-Lock Means It's Over," New York Post, April 26, 2001.
40. Lisa de Moraes, "The Smooch That Drew a Crowd," Washington Post, November 4, 1999.
41. Tanya Richardson, "'Gilmore Girls' Goes Wild with Girl-on-Girl Kiss," New York Post, April 7, 2004.
42. Barbara D. Phillips, "TV: A Straight-On Look at Gay Life," Wall Street Journal, November 27, 2000.

43. Kim Campbell, "Gay Characters, Before and After 'Ellen,'" Christian Science Monitor, April 6, 2001.
44. "TV Show Depicts Gay 'Teen' Character," WorldNetDaily.com, January 23, 2004.
45. Joe Flint, "Viacom Plans a Gay Channel, but Reception Isn't Clear," Wall Street Journal, March 29, 2004.
46. J. Max Robins, "Gay Network Could Debut within a Year," TV Guide, January 7, 2002.
47. "Channels Race to Launch Gay TV," Associated Press, May 1, 2002.
48. Brent Bozell, "More Gays, More Often?" Creators Syndicate, January 31, 2002.
49. Ibid.
50. Ibid.
51. "MTV Networks to Launch LOGO, A New Television Network for Gay, Lesbian Viewers," U.S. Newswire Press Releases, May 25, 2004.
52. Some notable examples were Sunday Bloody Sunday, The Lion in Winter (which featured an implied homosexual relationship), and Women in Love.
53. Bernard Weinraub, "Play a Gay? More Actors Say 'Yes' to Portraying Gay Characters," New York Times, September 14, 1997.
54. Ibid.
55. David Lyman, "'Philadelphia' Goes Beyond AIDS," Cincinnati Post, January 14, 1994.
56. Bill Zwecker, "Hanks Pays Tribute to Gays in His Life," Chicago Sun-Times, March 22, 1994.
57. Richard Lorent, "Speech Brings Praise from Tom Hanks' Former Drama Teacher," Associated Press, March 23, 1994.
58. James P. Pinkerton, "Hollywood Honors a Subversive Take on Suburbia," Newsday, March 28, 2000.
59. "Sharon Osbourne, I Wish I Had 'Gay' Child," WorldNetDaily.com, March 31, 2004.
60. "Iowa Study Suggests Tolerance of Homosexuals Is Growing," Associated Press, March 23, 2001.
61. Hogg and others, "Modeling the Impact of HIV."

Chapter Three—"Stupid" Parents, "Enlightened" Kids

1. Don Feder, "Welcome to the NEA-Dominated Schoolhouse," Creators Syndicate, September 5, 2001.
2. Debra Saunders, "Gay-Ed for Tots," Weekly Standard, August 19, 1996, 21.
3. John Chase, "School's Gay-Straight Group Offers Teens a Place to Fit In," Chicago Daily-Herald, June 7, 1998.

4. "Teens and Adults Have Little Chance of Accepting Christ as Their Savior," Barna Research Online, November 15, 1999. See <http://www.barna.org>.
5. Torres, "Conference 'New Moment.'"
6. Ibid.
7. NEA 1999-2000 Resolutions, B-9, "Racism, Sexism, and Sexual Orientation Discrimination." See www.nea.org/resolutions/99/99b-9.html.
8. Matt Pyeatt, "NEA Task Force Issues Report on Sexual Orientation," CNSNews.com, February 13, 2002.
9. John Rossomondo, "NEA Mum about Homosexuality Task Force," CNSNews.com, August 15, 2001.
10. Katy Kelly, "Gay Parents Get Endorsed by Kids' Docs," U.S. News and World Report, February 18, 2002.
11. "Just the Facts about Sexual Orientation and Youth: A Primer for Principals, Educators, and School Personnel," authored by American Academy of Pediatrics, National Education Association and others, 3, 8, 9.
12. David Gelman, "Tune In, Come Out," Newsweek, November 8, 1993, 70.
13. Ibid.
14. Rona Marech, "Nuances of Gay Identities Reflected in New Language, 'Homosexual' is Passe in a 'Boi's' Life," San Francisco Chronicle, February 8, 2004.
15. Laura Sessions Stepp, "Partway Gay? For Some Teen Girls, Sexual Preference is a Shifting Concept," Washington Post, January 4, 2004.
16. Gelman, "Tune In, Come Out."
17. Rob Dreher, "Banned in Boston: Better Not Complain about the Gay Agenda for Massachusetts Schools," Weekly Standard, July 3-10, 2000, 16.
18. See <http://www.glsen.org>.
19. Saunders, "Gay-Ed for Tots."
20. Ibid.
21. Ibid.
22. Resolution B-69: Home Schooling. see <http://www.nea.org/resolutions/01/01b-69.html>.
23. Women's Educational Media, It's Elementary, dir. Debra Chasnoff.
24. Pete Winn and Kristie Rutherford, "Antifamily Agenda Becomes Law in California," Focus on the Family Citizen Link, October 16, 2001. See <http://www.family.org/cforum/feature/a0018150.html>.
25. "Teachers Vote to Lobby for Gay Schoolbooks," Canadian Press, August 15, 2001.
26. Michael Betsch, "Homosexual Activists Want to Silence Nation's Youth," CNSNews.com, April 8, 2002.
27. Melanie Hunter, "Family Group Threatens to Sue Homosexual Activists over Day of Silence," CNSNews.com, April 9, 2002.

28. Peter LaBarbera, "When Silence Would Have Been Golden," Culture and Family Institute, April 10, 2002.
29. Ibid.
30. Ibid.
31. Ibid.
32. "Make It Real: A Student Organizing Manual for Implementing California's School Nondiscrimination Law," ©2001, Gay-Straight Alliance Network/Tides Center and Friends of Project 10, pp. 5, 19, 44, and 50.
33. Robert B. Bluey, "Teachers Urged to Ignore GLSEN's Marriage Curriculum," CNSNews.com, May 26, 2004.
34. Dreher, "Banned in Boston."
35. Women's Educational Media, It's Elementary.
36. Ibid.
37. Ibid.
38. "Falling Boulder," World, February 14, 2004.
39. "K-12 Academy Hosts 'Queer State of the Union,'" WorldNetDaily.com, March 4, 2004.
40. "Education Priorities," Fox News, January 7, 2002.
41. Carol Innerst, "'Diversity' Leads to Classes in Homosexuality: Parents Seek to Control Curriculum," Washington Times, November 25, 1997.
42. Ibid.
43. Ibid.
44. E-mail from Alliance Defense Fund volunteer attorney, March 5, 2002.
45. John Haskins, "It's 1984 in Massachusetts—And Big Brother is Gay," Insight on the News, December 17, 2001.
46. Ibid.
47. Ibid.
48. Ibid.
49. Ibid.
50. Ibid.
51. Ibid.
52. Ibid.
53. Cheryl Wetzstein, "Educator Gets Laughs, Lawsuit With Her Hot Talk about Safe Sex," Washington Times, March 20, 1994.
54. Cheryl Wetzstein, "Sex Teacher Faces Suit for High School Performance," Washington Times, March 7, 1994.
55. Jerry Taylor, "In Face of Suit, Landolphi Wins Chelmsford Student Support," Boston Globe, September 5, 1993.
56. Joe Heaney, "Massachusetts Students Lose Suit over School Sex Program,"

Boston Herald, March 5, 1996.

57. Dreher, "Banned in Boston."

58. Ibid.

59. "'Gay' Sex Trainer Regains Job, Back Pay," WorldNetDaily.com, August 23, 2001.

60. Scott Lively, "Gay Days at Santa Rosa High School." See <http://www.abidingtruth.com>.

61. See <http://www.centeryes.org/SIGNS/upcoming/index.html>.

62. "In Groundbreaking Federal Lawsuit Settlement, School Agrees to Strongest Antigay Harassment Program in Nation," ACLU press release, August 13, 2002.

63. Christopher Michaud, "Survey: Students Hold Mostly Progay Views," Reuters, August 27, 2001.

64. Ibid.

65. "Assault on Gay America" Viewers Guide. See <http://www.pbs.org/wgbh/pages/frontline/teach/diversity/assault>.

66. See Carroll Smith-Rosenberg, Disorderly Conduct: Visions of Gender in Victorian America (Oxford University Press, 1999).

67. Josh White, "In the District, Walking with Pride: 'Out in DC Tours Explore Events That Shaped Gay History,'" Washington Post, August 23, 1998.

68. Samara Kalk, "Lincoln Was Gay, Activist Contends," Madison Capital Times, February 23, 1999.

69. Ibid.

70. Jessica Kowal, "School Debate: Teach Gay Issues," Newsday October 17, 1999.

71. "U.S. Teens Struggle with History," Associated Press, July 3, 2001.

72. Marilyn Elias, "Gay Teens Less Suicidal than Thought, Report Says," USA Today, November 26, 2001.

73. Rhonda Smith, "P-FLAG Receives Grant for $250,000: Funds Will Expand Organization's National Safe Schools Campaign," Washington Blade, July 16, 2001.

74. Gelman, "Tune In, Come Out."

75. Haskins, "It's 1984."

Chapter Four—The Lavender Tower

1. "Comedy and Tragedy: College Course Descriptions and What They Tell Us about Higher Education Today," Young America's Foundation, 2002, 14. See <http://www.yaf.org>.

2. Ibid., 16.

3. Ibid., 25.

4. Ibid., 32.
5. Ibid., 43.
6. Ibid., 43.
7. Ibid., 53.
8. Ibid., 60.
9. Ibid., 62.
10. Ibid., 64.
11. Ibid., 65.
12. Ibid., 65.
13. Ibid., 67.
14. Ibid., 74.
15. Ibid., 77.
16. Anne D. Neal, Exfemina, Independent Women's Forum, April 2001.
17. University of Colorado course catalog (www.colorado.edu).
18. Jason Pierce, "Tax Money Aids Homosexual Scholarship Fund," CNSNews.com, September 19, 2001.
19. Patrick Healy, "College Recruiters Look to Gays but Schools See Problem in Identifying Students," Boston Globe, May 21, 2002.
20. Ibid.
21. Ibid.
22. Gene Edward Veith, "Gay Authority," World, June 1, 2002, 13.
23. See www.l.law.ucla.edu/~williamsproj/about/index.html.
24. Ibid.
25. Ibid.
26. Scott Norvell, "PETA Protests Gay Dorms, Soda Jerks," Fox News, May 20, 2002.
27. William Hermann, "First Lesbian Sorority is Organized at ASU," Arizona Republic, February 18, 2004.
28. Gene Edward Veith, "Identity Crisis," World, March 27, 2004, 27.
29. Ibid.
30. Joyce Howard Price, "Transgender Restrooms Urged for Schools," Washington Times, February 11, 2002.
31. George Orwell, Animal Farm (White Plains, N.Y.: Longman Publishing Group, 1946).
32. Chronicle of Higher Education, August 7, 1998, B10.
33. Jeremy Beer, "Postmodern Paradise," Countumacy, January 2, 1998.
34. Merrell Noden, "Edmund White's Own Story," Princeton Alumni Weekly, March 10, 2004.

35. Ron Grossman, "At Notre Dame, A Gay Film Fest," Chicago Tribune, February 11, 2004.
36. Mattingly, "Campus Christian Groups."
37. Ibid.
38. Ibid.
39. John Leo, "Playing That Bias Card," U.S. News and World Report, January 13, 2003.
40. Laura Ingraham, "Universities Throwing Christians to the Lions," Laura Ingraham E-Blast, January 6, 2003.
41. Rachel Zabarkes, "Desperately Seeking Diversity," National Review Online, August 1, 2002.
42. "Students Protest Blood Drive Screening," Associated Press, March 17, 2004.
43. Laura Mansnerus, "Court Revives Lesbians' Suit over Housing," New York Times, July 3, 2001.
44. Seth Lewis, "Court Lets Homosexuals Sue for Access to Married Housing," CNSNews.com, July 2, 2001.
45. "Jefferson's Bill for Establishing Religious Freedom in the State of Virginia," 1779 Papers 2:545.
46. Southworth v. Board of Regents University of Wisconsin System, 221 F3d 1339 (7th Cir. 2000).
47. Eugene Abel and others, "Self-Reported Sex Crimes of Nonincarcerated Pedophiliacs," Journal of Interpersonal Violence, Vol. 3 No. 5 (1987).
48. K. Freud and R. I. Watson, "The Proportions of Heterosexual and Homosexual Pedophiles Among Sex Offenders against Children: An Exploratory Study," Journal of Marital Therapy, Vol. 34, 1992, 34—43.
49. W. D. Erickson and others, "Behavior Patterns of Child Molesters," Archives of Sexual Behavior, Vol. 17, 1988.
50. M. Tomeo, D. Templar, S. Anderson, D. Kotler, "Comparative Data of Childhood and Adolescence Molestation in Heterosexual and Homosexual Persons," Archives of Sexual Behavior, Vol. 30, No. 3, 2001, 535-531.
51. "No Place for Homo-Homophobia," San Francisco Sentinel, March 26, 1992.
52. Edward Brongersma, "Boy-Lovers and Their Influence on Boys," Journal of Homosexuality, Vol. 20, No. 1/2 (1990), 162.
53. "The Real Child Abuse," Guide, July 1995.
54. Bruce Rind, Ph.D., Robert Bauserman, Ph.D., and Phillip Tromovitch, Ph.D., "An Examination of Assumed Properties Based on Nonclinical Samples," presented at the Paulus Kirk, Rotterdam, the Netherlands, December 18, 1998.
55. American Psychiatric Association, "Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders," DSM-IV-TR, Fourth Edition, No. 302.2, p. 571.
56. "Child Sex Abuse Study Denounced," Associated Press, July 13, 1999.

57. Robert Stacy McCain, "Endorsement of Adult-Child Sex on Rise," Washington Times, April 19, 2002.
58. Ibid.
59. Ibid.
60. Chuck Colson, "Apples, Teachers, and Serpents: Academia's Assault on Our Children," Breakpoint, September 24, 2002. This quote is also posted on the Web site of the North American Man-Boy Love Association (NAMBLA).
61. John Leo, "Apologists for Pedophilia," U.S. News.com, April 22, 2002.
62. Jennifer Walsh, "Make Sex Education a Topic for the Pulpit, Black Pastors Are Urged," Boston Globe, July 7, 2000.
63. "Mainstream Book Advocating Adult-Child Sex Draws Howls of Protest," Fox News, April 2, 2002.
64. McCain, "Endorsement of Adult-Child."
65. Leo, "Apologists for Pedophilia."
66. Jodi Wilgoren, "Scholar's Pedophilia Essay Stirs Outrage and Revenge," New York Times, April 30, 2002.
67. Ibid.
68. "Pedophilia for Progressives," Wall Street Journal, May 6, 2002.

Chapter Five—The Family under Attack

1. Jeff Jacoby, "The End of the Gay Marriage Debate?" Boston Globe, May 17, 2004.
2. Veith, "Doing without Marriage."
3. Stanley Kurtz, "Slipping Toward Scandinavia," National Review Online, February 2, 2004.
4. U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, National Center for Health Statistics, "Births to Unmarried Mothers, 1980-92" and assorted national and monthly vital statistics reports.
5. Bureau of Labor Statistics, National Longitudinal Survey of Youth, 1996.
6. Veith, "Doing without Marriage."
7. Stanley Kurtz, "The Marriage Mentality," National Review Online, May 4, 2004.
8. "Legal Recognition of Same-Sex Marriage: A Conference on National European and International Law," King's College at the University of London, July 1-3, 1999.
9. "Netherlands OKs Gay Marriages," Associated Press, September 13, 2000.
10. "Parliamentary Vote Turns Belgium Into Second Country to Approve Gay Marriages," CBCNews, January 31, 2003.
11. "Spain's New Government to Legalize Gay Marriage," Reuters, April 15, 2004.

12. Alister Doyle, "Norwegian Finance Minister Marries Gay Partner," Reuters, January 15, 2002.
13. "Germany's First Gay Couple Wed," CNN, August 1, 2001.
14. Malcolm Thornberry, "Restricting TG Marriage Illegal, European Court Rules," 365Gay.com, January 8, 2004.
15. David Frum, "The Fall of France," National Review, November 8, 1999.
16. Chris Crain, "Gays May Ruin Traditional Marriage," New York Blade, August 3, 2001.
17. Stanley Kurtz, "Going Dutch?" The Weekly Standard, May 31, 2004.
18. Suzanne Fields, "'Queer Eye' for the Straight Courtship, Tribune Media Services, March 11, 2004.
19. Gene Edward Veith, "Wages for Sin: Marriage Benefits Are Starting to Go to Those Who Are Shacking Up," World, August 18, 2001.
20. "All Together Now," The Advocate, September 11, 2001.
21. George W. Dent Jr., "The Defense of Traditional Marriage," Journal of Law and Politics, Vol. XV, No. 4, Fall 1999, 628-637.
22. ACLU Policy Guide, 1992.
23. "Boston Globe to Cover Gay Unions," Associated Press, September 29, 2002.
24. Richard Ostling, "Same-Sex Marriages? Civil Unions? A Gay Theologian Thinks They're Only the Beginning," Associated Press, January 28, 2004.
25. "Same-sex Couple Flaunts 'Open Marriage,'" WorldNetDaily.com, May 18, 2004.
26. Elizabeth F. Emens, Monogamy's Law: Compulsory Monogamy and Polyamorous Existence, Public Law and Legal Theory Working Paper No. 58, The Law School, The University of Chicago, February 2003, www.law.uchicago.edu/academics/publiclaw/index.html.
27. Don Lattin, "Committed to Marriage for the Masses, Polyamorists Say They Relate Honestly to Multiple Partners," San Francisco Chronicle, April 20, 2004.
28. Alexandria Sage, "Attorney Challenges Utah Polygamy Ban," Associated Press, January 26, 2004.
29. Mark Thiessen, "Utah Polygamist Invokes Ruling on Gay Sex," Associated Press, December 1, 2003.
30. Camille Paglia, "I'll Take Religion over Gay Culture," Salon.com, June 1998.
31. "Uncle Sam Should Care about Who Gets Married," Insight on the News, August 27, 2001.
32. Andrew Sullivan, Virtually Normal: An Argument about Homosexuality, 1995.
33. Paul Olson, "Civil Union Study Gives Insight Into First Year Couples," Out in the Mountains, January 2003.
34. Don Feder, "Vermont Storms Citadel of Marriage," Jewish World Review May 1, 2000.

35. William N. Eskridge, "The Case for Same-Sex Marriage," 1996.
36. Michaelangelo Signorile, "Bridal Wave," OUT, December-January 1994.
37. Barbara Cox, "A (Personal) Essay on Same-Sex Marriage," National Journal of Sexual Orientation Law, Vol. 1, Issue 1, 1995.
38. Stanley Kurtz, "The End of Marriage in Scandinavia," The Weekly Standard, February 2, 2004.
39. Michael Powell, "For Some, A Sanitized Movement," Washington Post, March 31, 2004.
40. Patrick Moore, "Gays: Assimilated and Asexual?" Los Angeles Times, January 27, 2004.
41. Fredrich U. Dicker, "Wipe Out Marriage, Legislator Says," New York Post, April 8, 2004.
42. Lisa Leff, "Divorce Deemed a Benefit of Gay Marriage," Associated Press, May 22, 2004.
43. Frank Langett, "Many Evangelicals Oppose Ban on Same-Sex Marriage," Baltimore Sun, April 14, 2004.
44. See <http://www.metroweekly.com/feature/?ak=1123>
45. "Netherlands OKs Gay Marriages," Associated Press.
46. "Civil Liberties At Risk through Ballot Initiatives," ACLU press release, November 4, 1998.
47. "Vermont's Civil Unions," Gay-Civil-Unions.com, October 13, 2002.
48. Jeffrey Gold, "New Jersey High Court Has Record of Support for Gay Rights," Associated Press, June 27, 2002.
49. Jessica Cantelon, "Homosexuals Seek More Progress in Battle over 'Marriage Equality,'" CNSNews.com, July 8, 2002.
50. Cindy Wockner, "Transsexual Marriage Is Ruled Valid," London Telegraph, October 15, 2001.
51. Goodridge v. Massachusetts Dept. of Public Health, Docket #2001-1647A (Suffolk Co. Sup. Ct, Mass.).
52. Robert B. Bluey, "Author of Homosexual Marriage Ruling is Under Fire, Won't Budge," CNSNews.com, April 28, 2004.
53. Associated Press Raw Vote Totals, November 3, 2004.
54. Walter Shapiro, "Presidential Election May Have Hinged on One Issue: Issue 1," USA Today, November 5, 2004 and Lawrence Kudlow, "A Virtuous Victory," National Review, November 3, 2004.
55. Kentucky Registry of Election Finance.
56. Kelly Weise, "Big Campaign Spending Doesn't Translate to Victory on Moral Issues," Associated Press, August 16, 2004.
57. Carolyn Lochhead, "Gay Leaders Try to Reframe Struggle for Marriage Rights," San Francisco Chronicle, November 10, 2004.

58. "Gay Marriage Lawsuit Filed," Associated Press, November 9, 2004.
59. "Lords Back Appeal on Transsexual Marriage," Scotsman, January 22, 2002.
60. "Ontario Province Will Not Appeal Marriage Ruling," Canadian Press, July 17, 2002.
61. E-mail from Matt Daniels of the Alliance for Marriage to Alan E. Sears, July 13, 2002.
62. Patrick White, "Gay Civil Unions Are Legalized in Quebec," Philadelphia Inquirer, June 9, 2002.
63. Chris Wilson-Smith, "Lesbian Couple Seeks Divorce," CNews, July 21, 2004.
64. Chris Bull, "Northern Enlightenment," The Advocate, September 17, 2002.
65. "Lambda Legal Appeals Prudential Financial's Denial of Medical Insurance Coverage for Lesbian Retiree's
66. Winston Churchill, "Speech at the Royal Academy," April 30, 1938.
67. "The Battle Over Same-Sex Marriage," San Francisco Chronicle, March 21, 2004.
68. Phillip Mattier, Andrew Ross, "Newsom Hasn't Been Ad-Libbing," San Francisco Chronicle, February 28, 2004.
69. Stanley Kurtz, "'Marriage' Mayhem," National Review Online, May 20, 2004.
70. Bruce Carroll, "A Fine Mess We're in Now," Washington Blade, April 23, 2004.
71. John Derbyshire, "Here to Stay," National Review Online, May 14, 2004.
72. Dennis Prager, "Same-Sex Marriage: Good for Gays, Bad for Children," Creators Syndicate, May 4, 2004.
73. Jenifer Warren, "Capitol Gains for Gay Pols," Los Angeles Times, December 10, 2001.
74. Don Feder, "Gay Marriage Undermines Institution," Creators Syndicate, August 1, 2001.
75. Matt Pyeatt, "Pennsylvania Supreme Court Extends Same-Sex Parental Rights," CNSNews.com, January 8, 2002.
76. Jane Meredith Adams, "Love vs. the Law," Rosie, April 2002, p. 50.
77. Ann Oldenburg, "For Rosie, Coming Out Is Merely about What's Right," USA Today, March 11, 2002.
78. Daniel Merkle, "More Americans Support Gay Adoption," ABCNews.com, April 2, 2002.
79. Katy Kelley, "Gay Parents Get Endorsed by Kids' Docs," Associated Press, February 18, 2002.
80. Robert Lerner, Ph.D, and Althea Nagai, Ph.D, No Basis: What the Studies Don't Tell Us about Same-Sex Parenting (Washington D.C.: Marriage Law Project, 2001), 13-15.
81. Ibid., 27.

82. Ibid., 28.
83. Ibid., 53.
84. Ibid., 75.
85. Maggie Gallagher, "Homosexual Parenting Findings Based on Faulty Studies," Universal Press Syndicate, February 5, 2002.
86. See Judith Wallerstein, Julia Lewis and Sandra Blakeslee, "The Unexpected Legacy of Divorce: A 25 Year Landmark Study," (New York, N.Y.: Hyperion Books, 2000).
87. Kathryn Jean Lopez, "Another Divorce?" National Review Online, April 12, 2002.
88. Michael Gurian, Patricia Henley, and Terry Trueman, "Boys and Girls Learn Differently! A Guide for Teachers and Parents," (San Francisco, CA: Jossey-Bass, 2001).
89. George Archibald, "U.S. to Help U.N. Redefine Families," Washington Times, April 22, 2002.
90. Ibid.
91. Peter LaBarbera, "Gores Give $50,000 to Promote 'Gay' Parenting," Culture and Family Report, March 1, 2002.
92. "Gores Court Booksellers for New Publication," Associated Press, May 1, 2002.
93. Dennis Prager, "How the Nuclear Family Became Controversial," Creators Syndicate, August 14, 2002.
94. Inga Gilchrist, "Boy in Lesbian Tug-of-War," Auckland Herald-Sun, January 25, 2002.
95. "Boy Officially Has 3 Parents," WorldNetDaily.com, April 18, 2004.
96. Mike Wendling, "British Study Links Single Parenthood, Social Problems," CNSNews.com, February 11, 2002.
97. James Doherty, "Anger as Lesbian Couple Wins Full Parental Rights," Scotsman, April 8, 2002.
98. Matt Pyeatt, "Deaf Lesbians Criticized for Efforts to Create Deaf Child," CNSNews.com, April 2, 2002.
99. Leslie Brady, "Judge's Ruling Pleases Supporters of Gay Rights," Bergen County Record, March 12, 2003.
100. Stanley Kurtz, "Heather Has Three Mommies," National Review Online, March 12, 2003.
101. Cynthia Hubert, "Birth of Change: Thanks to Medical and Legal Advances, Sadie Karpay-Brody Has Two Mothers Who Are Both Her Natural Parents," Sacramento Bee, November 2, 2003.
102. Tessa Mayes and Rosie Waterhouse, "Gay Couples Join Forces to Have Babies as Foursomes," London Times, June 17, 2001.
103. "Lesbian Couple Sentenced for Abusing Their 5 Sons," 365Gay.com, January 15, 2004.

104. Bruce Kluger, “Kids Teach Us Lessons about Gays, Inclusiveness,” USA Today, August 27, 2001.

105. See Andrew H. Friedman, Same-Sex Marriage and the Right to Privacy: Abandoning Scriptural, Canonical, and Natural Law Based Definitions of Marriage, 35 Howard L.J. 173, 222-23 (1991).

106. C. S. Lewis, The Four Loves (Harvest Books, 1960).

107. George Dent, “The Defense of Traditional Marriage,” Journal of Law and Politics (University of Virginia, 2001), Vol. XV, No. 4, 590-591.

108. Shaena Eagle, “College Freshmen More Politically Liberal Than in the Past, UCLA Survey Reveals.” See <http://www.gseis.ucla.edu/heri/heri.html>.

109. Marilyn Elias, “Divorce Is Likelier for Kids of Divorce,” USA Today, May 14, 1991.

110. David Popenoe, Life without Father (New York: The Free Press, 1996).

111. Ibid.

112. Elias, “Divorce Is Likelier.”

113. Phillip Vassallo, “More Than Grades: How Choice Boosts Parental Involvement and Benefits Children,” Policy Analysis, Cato Institute, October 26, 2000.

114. “Back to School 1999: National Survey of American Attitudes: Substance Abuse V: Teens and Their Parents,” National Center on Addiction and Substance Abuse at Columbia University, September 1999. See <http://www.casacolumbia.org>.

115. Stanley Kurtz, “Deathblow to Marriage,” National Review Online, February 5, 2004.

Chapter Six—The Silence (and Silencing) of the Church

1. Ed Magnuson, “In a Rage over Aids: A Militant Protest Group Targets the Catholic Church,” Time, December 25, 1989.

2. Rosemary Harris, “Church Service Is Interrupted by Gay Activists Throwing Condoms,” Colorado Springs Gazette Telegraph, November 8, 1993.

3. Steph Smith, “Gay Catholics Refused Communion at Chicago Cathedral,” 365Gay.com, May 31, 2004.

4. Jonathan Peter and Jonathan Wynne-Jones, “Labour Minister Backs New ‘Gay Jesus’ Prayerbook,” London Guardian, March 11, 2002.

5. Hanna Rosin, “Lesbian ‘Marriage’ Threatens to Split United Methodists,” Washington Post, June 16, 1999.

6. Jason B. Johnson, “Methodist Clergy at Gay ‘Wedding’ Won’t Be Punished,” San Francisco Chronicle, February 12, 2000.

7. Allan Dobras, “Radical Methodist Church Ends Marriage Ceremonies in Prohomosexual Protest,” Culture and Family Report, October 25, 2001.

8. see

<http://www.princetonreview.com/college/research/rankings/rankingTeaser.asp?CategoryID=3TopicID=24>.

9. Mark I. Pinsky, “Longtime Orlando Pastor Resigns,” Orlando Sentinel, December 5, 2002.

10. Sean Salai, “Assembly OKs Transsexual,” Washington Times, June 7, 2002.

11. Rhonda Smith, “Trans Minister Seeks Local Methodist Appointment,” Washington Blade, June 14, 2002.

12. Sean Salai, “Transsexual Methodist Minister Resigns,” Washington Times, July 2, 2002.

13. “Ask but Don’t Tell,” World, July/August 2002.

14. “Lesbian Pastor Acquitted of Breaking Church Law,” 365Gay.com., March 21, 2004.

15. Laurie Goodstein, “Methodists Put Pastor on Trial for Declaring Herself a Lesbian,” New York Times, March 17, 2004.

16. Marsha King, “Religions Divided over Gays in Clergy,” Seattle Times, July 1, 2001.

17. Hanna Rosin, “Lutherans Vote to Study Gay Issues: Activists Sought More Rapid Liberalizations,” Washington Post, August 14, 2001.

18. Jaroslav Pelikan, ed., Luther’s Words III (St. Louis, MO: Concordia Publishing House, 1961), 255.

19. Priest Defrocked Over Church Views,” Associated Press, September 6, 2002.

20. Alison Appelbe, “Homosexual Unions Pose Challenge for Canadian Church Officials,” CNSNews.com, September 30, 2002.

21. Gary Rohrbough, “Barry Lynn Claims Roman Centurion in Bible Had Male Sex Slave,” CNSNews.com, October 3, 2002.

22. Gary D. Harwood, “North Carolina Pastor: ‘Homosexuality is Not a Sin,’” Baptist News, October 9, 2002.

23. Michael Meade, “Catholic College Approves Gay-Straight Alliance,” 365Gay.com, February 3, 2003.

24. Matt Johns, “Was Jesus Gay?” 365Gay.com, December 25, 2003.

25. Laurie Goodstein, “New Hampshire Episcopalians Choose Gay Bishop, and Conflict,” New York Times, June 8, 2003.

26. David Gram, “Liturgy for Gay Marriages Developed in Vermont,” Associated Press, June 18, 2004.

27. “Religious Left Strategizes on Homosexual ‘Marriage,’” MichNews.com, June 22, 2004.

28. “A Search for God’s Welcome, Two Deeply Religious Women Discover a Church that Accepts Them as They Are,” Newsweek, March 20, 2000.

29. Ibid.

30. Ibid.

31. Martha Sawyer Allen, "New Perspective on the Divine is Attacked: 'Re-Imagine' Conference Criticized as Repudiation of Traditional Beliefs," Minneapolis Star-Tribune, January 23, 1994.

32. Richard N. Ostling, "No Mention of 'Man' in New Bible," Associated Press, January 29, 2002.

33. Stephen Bennett, "Was Jesus 'Gay'?" WorldNetDaily.com, July 16, 2002.

34. Carol Stenger, "On Being Christian and Gay." See <http://www.hrc.org/familynet/chapter.asp?article=582>.

35. Josh Friedes, "Can Anyone Show Just Cause Why These Two Should Not Be Lawfully Joined Together?" New England Law Review, Spring 2004.

36. Dennis Prager, "Who Supports Same-Sex Marriage?" Creators Syndicate, March 9, 2004.

37. David D. Kirkpatrick, "Gay-Marriage Fight Finds Ambivalence from Evangelicals," New York Times, February 28, 2004.

38. Chuck Colson, "Why Bother? Why Some Christians Aren't Fighting Same-Sex 'Marriage,'" Breakpoint, June 23, 2004.

39. Tony Campolo, 20 Hot Potatoes Christians Are Afraid to Touch (Nashville, TN: Thomas Nelson, 1988), 13.

40. Ibid.

41. Ibid., 16.

42. Speech by Tony and Peggy Campolo at North Park College Chapel, February 29, 1996.

43. Ed Golder, "Campolo Shares His Convictions," Grand Rapids Press, February 20, 1993.

44. Ibid.

45. "Baptist Pastor Won't Respond to Challenge," Maranatha Christian Journal, June 7, 2002.

46. Catechism of the Catholic Church. United States Conference of Catholic Bishops, Article 6, The Sixth Commandment, 2nd edition, 2002.

47. Ibid., No. 2357.

48. Ibid., No. 2358.

49. Ibid., No. 2359.

50. George Weigel, The Courage to be Catholic (New York: Basic Books, 2002), 109.

51. Paul Likoudis, "New Ways Ministry Forges Ahead with Defiance," Wanderer, March 21, 2002, 1.

52. Michael Novak, "The Fall of the Progressive Church," National Review Online, May 1, 2002.

53. Lawrence Morahan, "Lay Group Calls on UN to Sanction Vatican over Sex Abuse," CNSNews.com, April 24, 2002.
54. Bill Keller, "Is the Pope Catholic?" New York Times, May 4, 2002.
55. Ibid.
56. Pat Buchanan, "Anti-Catholicism at the New York Times," Creators Syndicate, May 8, 2002.
57. Jon Meacham, "Sex and the Church: A Case for Change," Newsweek, April 30, 2002.
58. Ibid.
59. Ann Coulter, "Should Gay Priests Adopt?" Universal Press Syndicate, March 21, 2002.
60. John Leo, "A Gay Culture in the Church," U.S. News and World Report, June 3, 2002, 16.
61. Carl Ingram, "Panel Backs Child Abuse Bill," Los Angeles Times, May 8, 2002.
62. Lawrence Morahan, "RICO Sex Abuse Lawsuit Names Vatican as Defendant," CNSNews.com, April 19, 2002.
63. David Lazarus, "Church Problems Include Insurance: Scandal May Mean Higher Rates," San Francisco Chronicle, April 24, 2002.
64. Rod Dreher, "The Gay Question," National Review, April 22, 2002.
65. "NAMBLA' Priest Arrested for Child Rape," Fox News, May 2, 2002.
66. Nick Madigan, "Sent to California on Sick Leave, Boston Priest Bought Racy Gay Resort," New York Times, April 15, 2002.
67. "NAMBLA' Priest Arrested for Child Rape," Fox News, May 2, 2002.
68. David France, "Gays and the Seminary," Newsweek, May 20, 2002.
69. Ibid.
70. Joel Mowbray, "Homosexuality a Factor in Sex Abuse by Priests," copyright 2002 Joel Mowbray.
71. John Leo, "Of Rage and Revolution," U.S. News and World Report, April 1, 2002.
72. Joyce Howard Price, "Predator Priests," Washington Times, April 16, 2002.
73. "The Church, Holy and Immortal, Shall Prevail!" Wanderer, April 25, 2002.
74. NACDLGM 2002 National Conference.
75. Dreher, "The Gay Question."
76. Paul Bedard, "Father Gay," U.S. News and World Report, April 29, 2002.
77. Allyson Smith, "Homosexual Groups Go into Spin Mode on Catholic Crisis," Culture and Family Institute, April 25, 2002.
78. Anthony DeStefano, "Loyal Catholics Defend Church," USA Today, May 5, 2002.
79. "The Church, Holy and Immortal," Wanderer.

80. Charles A. Donovan, "A Red Hat for a Stop Sign," Washington Times, April 23, 2002.
81. "Letters Threaten 3 Priests," Associated Press, October 1, 2002.
82. Ken Garfield, "Lotz's Views on Gays Meets Dissent," Charlotte Observer, May 14, 2002.
83. "Federal Judge Upholds Firing of Madison Firefighter," Associated Press, June 23, 1999.
84. Sworn testimony of Ralph Ovadal before the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Wisconsin, No. 96-C-0292-S.
85. See <http://www.skeptictank.org/firegay.html>.
86. News release: official statement by Dr. David Innes. See <http://www.hsbchurch.org/riotl.html>.
87. della Cava, "Church Calls Acts 'Disordered.'"
88. Melanie Hunter, "Pastors Urge Apology from Senator for Remarks Regarding Marriage Amendment," CNSNews.com, March 8, 2004.
89. Kelli Samantha Hewett, "Two Men Preparing to Carry Crosses Charged with Disorderly Conduct," The Tennessean, May 9, 2004.
90. "Canada's Anti-Gay Violence Law Worries Some," Fox News.com, May 18, 2004.
91. Lynn Vincent, "Remaining Silent," World, May 8, 2004.
92. Ibid.
93. Ibid.
94. "Senator Delivers Death Wish to Christian," WorldNetDaily.com., February 18, 2004.
95. "Christian 'Properly Convicted' for 'Anti-Gay' Sign," WorldNetDaily.com, January 15, 2004.
96. Allison Ferrell, "Gay Rights Group: Church Broke Law," Billings Gazette, May 27, 2004.
97. Robert B. Bluey, "Marriage Changes May Shake Churches' Tax Exemption," CNSNews.com, February 23, 2004.
98. Michael P. McConnell, "Pro-Gay Group Wants Police Chaplain Removed," The Daily Tribune, October 16, 2002.
99. "Religious Beliefs Underpin Opposition to Homosexuality," The Pew Forum on Religion and Public Life," see <http://www.pewforum.org/docs/index.php?DocID=37>.
100. Office of Strategic Services Research and Analysis Branch, "The Nazi Master Plan: The Persecution of Christian Churches," July 6, 1945. See <http://www-camlaw.rutgers.edu/publications/law-religion/>. Also see Claire Hulme and Dr. Michael Salter, "The Nazi's Persecution of Religion as a War Crime: The OSS's Response within the Nuremberg Trials Process," Rutgers Journal of Law and Religion, Vol. 3 No.1, 2001-2002.

101. Chuck Donovan, "At War with God," Focus on the Family Citizen, August 2002, 28-29.

Chapter Seven—The Seduction of Corporate America

1. Robert Knight and Kenneth L. Ervin II, "Can I Question Homosexuality? Don't Bank on It," from The Other Side of Tolerance: Victims of Homosexual Activism, Family Research Council, 1997, 8.

2. Ibid.

3. The Human Rights Campaign (HRC), www.hrc.org.

4. Ibid.

5. See www.glcensus.org.

6. Sally Kohn, "The Domestic Partnership Organizing Manual for Employee Benefits," Policy Institute of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force, 6. See <http://www.ngltf.org/library/index.cfm>.

7. Amanda May, "Odd Couples," New York Magazine, July 8, 2002.

8. Human Rights Campaign press release, June 15, 2001.

9. Kohn, 8.

10. A. Stamborski, "Guests Add Spice to Emerson's Annual Meeting," St. Louis Post-Dispatch, February 7, 2001.

11. Kohn, 8.

12. See <http://www.hrc.org>.

13. Lou Chibbaro Jr., "NGLTF Leaders Quit Amid Major Reorganization," Washington Blade, March 7, 2003.

14. The NGLTF Domestic Partnership Organizing Manual, 11.

15. S. D. Myers, Inc. v. City and County of San Francisco, 253 F3d 461 (9th Cir. 2001).

16. "Safe Space" flyer, published by Galaxe Pride at Work. See <http://www.galaxe.world.xerox.com>.

17. Ibid., 26.

18. Ibid., 1.

19. Brian McNaught, Gay Issues in the Workplace (New York, N.Y.: St. Martin's Press, 1993), 10.

20. Ibid.

21. Personal conversation between American Express employee and Craig Osten.

22. Information from the Ford Foundation Web site. See <http://www.fordfoundation.org> under "Peace and Social Justice: Governance and Society, 2001 Grants."

23. Ibid.

24. Ibid., under “Peace and Social Justice: Human Rights and International Cooperation, 2000 Grants.”
25. Ibid., under “Peace and Social Justice: Human Rights and International Cooperation, 1999.”
26. Ford Foundation advertisement in the Out and Equal Leadership Summit 2000 Program.
27. See <http://www.hrc.org>.
28. Adam Pertman, “In Gay Market, Ads Target Big Dollars, Not Big Change,” Boston Globe, February 4, 2001.
29. Ibid.
30. Greg Jonnson, “More Advertisers Pursue Gay and Lesbian Customers,” St. Louis Post-Dispatch, June 22, 2001.
31. See <http://www.hrc.org>.
32. “Hancock Changes ‘Adoption’ Commercial Again,” Chicago Tribune, September 22, 2000.
33. Pertman, “In Gay Market.”
34. Catherine Donaldson-Evans, “Fortune 500 Companies See Money in Gay Families,” FoxNews.com., May 26, 2004.
35. Ibid.
36. Jonnson, “More Advertisers.”
37. Edward Epstein, “S.F. Warns Airlines on Partners Law: United Must Comply to Get Facility Lease,” San Francisco Chronicle, January 15, 1997 and “Airline Fears Global Effects from Domestic Partner Law:” Associated Press, January 28, 1997.
38. Donor Profile: United Airlines, Lambda Update, Summer 2000.
39. Pertman, “In Gay Market.”
40. Ira Berkow, “A Lesbian Group Protests Too Much,” New York Times, August 5, 2002.
41. Tom Weir, “WNBA Sells Diversity,” USA Today, July 24, 2001.
42. Al Dobras, “Women's Pro Teams Reach Out to Lesbians,” Culture and Family Report, July 11, 2001.
43. Marc Fisher, “Caught in the Mystics' Net: Basketball Team's Diverse Fan Base Is in a League of Its Own,” Washington Post, August 4, 1998.
44. Dobras, “Women's Pro Teams Reach Out.”
45. Weir, “WNBA Sells.”
46. Todd Richissin, “Lawsuit No Longer in the Lineup for Suns,” Baltimore Sun, January 12, 2000.
47. Dobras, “Women's Pro Teams Reach Out.”
48. Michael Clancy, “‘Church Night’ Drags Suns Into Gay Marriage Debate,” Arizona Republic, January 15, 2004.

49. Maya Bell, "Miami Beckons to Gays: Visit the Gay Riviera," Orlando Sentinel, February 13, 2002.
50. Ibid.
51. Deborah Sharp, "Cities Come Out About Wooing Gays—and their Dollars," USA Today, December 7, 2003.
52. Caroline Wilbert, "Wanted: Gay Tourists, Atlanta to Follow Lead of Other Cities with Ad Campaign," Atlanta Journal-Constitution, May 16, 2002.
53. "Rolling Out the 'Rainbow Carpet,'" World, June 1, 2002, p.12.
54. Susan Jones, "Betsy Ross, Ben Franklin Part of 'Gay Friendly' Tourism Campaign," CNSNews.com., November 14, 2003 and Sharp, op.cit.
55. "Philadelphia Debuts First Commercial Aimed at Gay Travelers," Associated Press, June 2, 2004.
56. Sharp, op. cit.
57. "News, Tips, and Bargains: Just the Facts: Gay Travelers," Los Angeles Times, January 23, 2000.
58. Ibid.
59. Mike Schneider, "Christian Group to Show Gay Days Video at Disney Meeting," Associated Press, February 12, 2002.
60. Mike Schneider, "Gay Days Part of Disney Landscape," Associated Press, June 3, 2000.
61. Steve Otto, "A Weekend Visit to the Gay '90s," Tampa Tribune, June 14, 1999.
62. Lawrence Morahan, "Domestic Partnership Bill Would Hurt Families," CNSNews.com, April 17, 2001.
63. Speech at Alliance Defense Fund Fall Briefing, September 5, 2001.

Chapter Eight—The End of Tolerance (for Those Who Disagree)

1. Steve Jordahl, "Employee Says Beliefs Prompted Firing," Family News in Focus, May 9, 2002.
2. "School Rejects Coach over Christian Beliefs," Lincoln Daily Nebraskan.
3. Ibid.
4. Ibid.
5. Christine Hall, "Coach Says Christian Beliefs Doomed His Chances for New Job," CNSNews.com, June 13, 2002.
6. Claude Adams, "Teacher Battles Union Over Published Views," National Post, November 25, 2002.
7. Phillips v. Missouri, Text of Complaint.
8. "The Other Side of Tolerance," Family Research Council, 1997, p. 14.
9. Joyce Howard Price, "State Erred in Firing Worker Opposing Gay Foster Parents,” Washington Times, July 22, 2001.

10. “Federal Judge Dismisses Suit vs. ‘Fairness’ Ordinance,” Associated Press, March 21, 2001.

11. Letter from Marilyn Schoonover, Specialist/Volunteer Department to Chaplaincy Coordinators and Volunteer Members, April 7, 1995.

12. Boy Scouts of America v. Dale, 530 US 640 (2000).

13. Charley Reese, “An Incredible Attack on the Boy Scouts,” Grand Rapids Press, September 4, 2000.

14. Joyce Howard Price, “Scouts Lose United Way Funds over Gay Ban,” Washington Times, March 15, 2002.

15. “House Rejects Effort to End Boy Scouts’ U.S. Charter,” Associated Press, September 14, 2000.

16. Michael J. Sniffen, “Attorney General Will Keep Federal Lands Open to Scouts,” Associated Press, September 3, 2000.

17. Press release issued by Bar Association of San Francisco, July 23, 2002.

18. Adam Liptik, “California Might Bar Judges From Scouts,” New York Times, December 21, 2002.

19. Mike Thomas, “United Way Makes Giving Not Easy,” Orlando Sentinel, July 23, 2001.

20. Seth Lewis, “Massachusetts Mayor Boycotts Boy Scouts,” CNSNews.com, July 31, 2001.

21. Ken Ellingwood, “Scouts’ Use of San Diego Park at Issue,” Los Angeles Times, December 4, 2001.

22. “Boy Scouts Statement in Response to City Settlement,” Desert Pacific Council of the Boy Scouts of America Press Release, January 8, 2004.

23. Bill Hirschman, “Boy Scouts Sue to Stay in Schools,” Orlando Sentinel, December 6, 2000.

24. Laura Parker, “Debate Simmers Over Scouts’ Ban,” USA Today, June 15, 2001.

25. Olga R. Rodriguez, “Japanese Scout Troops Left in Lurch by Berkeley Councilman,” Associated Press, August 7, 2001.

26. “Connecticut Can Bar Scouts as Charity,” Associated Press, July 30, 2002.

27. Robyn Suriano, “Doctors Say Scout Rules Damage Health of Gays,” Orlando Sentinel, June 20, 2001.

28. David Limbaugh, “Boy Scouts Still Under Heavy Fire,” Creators Syndicate, June 4, 2004.

29. Annette Scalise, “On the Recruiting Trail, The Boy Scouts Extend Their Efforts in Ethnic Communities,” Newsday, May 24, 2002.

30. See <http://www.ageofconsent.com>.

31. David Kupelian, “Pedophile Priests and Boy Scouts,” WorldNetDaily.com,

May 8, 2002.

32. Coulter, "Should Gay Priests Adopt?"

33. "Scout Leader Pleads Guilty to Sodomy," Associated Press, May 8, 2002.

34. Brief of Amici Curiae Public Advocate and others. Dale v. Boy Scouts of America, 734 A.2d 1196 (N.J. 1999) (No. 99-699). Also see Steve Geissinger, "Scouts Remove 1800 Scoutmasters for Suspected Abuse Over Two Decades," Associated Press, October 14, 1993.

35. Letter from Leland Stevenson, co-recording secretary, NAMBLA, to Ben Love, Chief Scout Executive, Boy Scouts of America (Nov. 1992). See <http://www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/archives/livelybites/3-21-2001.html>.

36. Ken McGuire, "Local Boy Scout Council Takes Another Stand for Diversity," Associated Press, June 10, 2002.

37. Ibid.

38. Pedreira v. Kentucky Baptist Homes for Children, Inc., 186 F. Supp. 2d 757 (W.D. Ky. 2001).

39. Eyal Press, "Faith Based Furor," New York Times Magazine, April 1, 2001, p. 62.

40. Mary Leonard, "Judge Sees No Bias in Firing of Lesbian," Boston Globe, July 25, 2001.

41. Chris Poynter, "Baptists' Homes' Firing of Lesbian Is Upheld," Louisville Courier-Journal, July 25, 2001.

42. Ibid.

43. Peter Smith, "Baptist Homes Prepares to Do without State Money," Louisville Courier-Journal, November 15, 2001.

44. "Salvation Army Memo Cites Deal with Bush," Washington Post, July 11, 2001.

45. Chris Kenning, "Gay Rights Group Questions YMCA Member Rules," Louisville Courier-Journal, June 7, 2002.

46. Lynn Vincent, "Brothers Up in Arms," World, October 26, 2002.

47. Ibid.

48. "Salvation Army Gives Up City Money," Associated Press, July 2, 2002.

49. Oubai Shabandar, "Salvation Army to Lose Funding over Domestic Partner Flap," CNSNews.com, June 20, 2002.

50. "U.S. Court of Appeals Strikes Down Public School's Hate Speech Code," AFA press release, February 15, 2001.

51. Joanne Laucius, "Bible Had Role in Exposing Gays to Hatred," Ottawa Citizen, June 20, 2001.

52. Owens v. Saskatchewan (Human Rights Commission).

53. Debra Fieguth, "Justices Affirm Ban on Homosexual Conduct at Christian University," Christianity Today, July 9, 2001.

54. John Leo, "Stomping on Free Speech," Universal Press Syndicate, April 12, 2004.
55. Rich Peters, "Schools Which Do Not Teach GLBT Sexuality Discriminate," 365Gay.com, January 7, 2003.
56. Patrick Goodenough, "Videos on Homosexuality: Free Speech or Hate Speech?" CNSNews.com, March 12, 2003.
57. Elaine O'Connor, "Edict on Gay Weddings: Do Them or Split," see www.canada.com.
58. Bob Kellogg, "Sweden Moves to Criminalize Opposition to Homosexuality," Family News in Focus, June 10, 2002.
59. "Swedish Pastor Sentenced to One Month's Jail for Offending Homosexuals," ENI News, June 2004.
60. "Lesbian Kiss Comment Costs Firm," News.com.au, July 3, 2002.
61. "France to Outlaw Homophobia," News.com.au, June 23, 2004.
62. Patrick Goodenough, "UK Christian Group Challenged by Homosexuals Keeps Charity Status," CNSNews.com, August 23, 2001.
63. "UK Government Supports Repealing Gay Law," Associated Press, January 7, 2003.
64. "Dutch Will Not Prosecute Pope for Antigay Remarks," Reuters, July 18, 2000.
65. "Homosexual Leader Vows to 'Torture' Opponents," WorldNetDaily.com, April 30, 2004.
66. E. J. Montini, "Rally Crowd Takes a Vow to Love, Honor, Abhor," The Arizona Republic, May 18, 2004.
67. "Can Doctors Refuse to Artificially Inseminate Lesbians Because of Religious Beliefs?" Hannity and Colmes, February 18, 2003.
68. David Limbaugh, "Tolerance is a Two-Way Street," Creators Syndicate, February 22, 2003.
69. See http://www.samesexmarriage.ca/equality/bertha_wilson.htm.
70. "Becket Fund Warns Clergy of Amendment to State's Hate Crimes Law for Preaching About Sexual Orientation and Gender Identity," see www.becketfund.org.
71. Kirk and Madsen, After the Ball, 176.
72. Mike Wendling, "Group Wants God Left Out of European Constitution," CNSNews.com, February 4, 2003.
73. Leo, April 12, 2004, op.cit.
74. "U.N. Group in 'Showdown with Religion,'" WorldNetDaily.com, August 8, 2003.
75. Kirk and Madsen, After the Ball, 176.

Chapter Nine—The Full Weight of the Government

1. Guerin, "The Politics of Sexuality."
2. Susan Jones, "Sexual Freedom Activists Target 'Archaic, Unjust' Sex Laws," CNSNews.com., June 1, 2004.
3. Guerin, "The Politics of Sexuality."
4. Gina Holland, "Supreme Court Hears Arguments in Major Gay Rights Case," Associated Press, March 27, 2003.
5. To access Lambda's brief on-line go to:http://www.lambdalegal.org/binarydata/LAMBDA_PDF/pdf/177.pdf.
6. Kristin Hays, "Case of Two Texas Men Turns Into Major Gay Rights Battle Before the Supreme Court," Associated Press, March 23, 2003.
7. Carolyn Lochhead, "Top Court to Rule on 'Most Important Gay Rights Case,' Texas Law Forbids Sodomy Only by Same-Sex Couples," San Francisco Chronicle, March 26, 2003.
8. Bowers v. Hardwick, 1986, Burger C.J. concurring opinion.
9. Guerin, "The Politics of Sexuality."
10. Ibid.
11. Ibid.
12. Thomas Elias, "California Now the Best Place for Gays: Governor Tries to Foster Tolerance, Hope," Washington Times, December 6, 1999.
13. Text of AB1475.
14. Text of SB225.
15. "Senate OKs Measure Allowing Tax Break for Nontraditional Families," Sacramento Bee, May 30, 2002.
16. Press release from the California Alliance for Pride and Equality, March 19, 2003.
17. Robert Salladay, "Gay Legislators Step Up Push for Rights: 9 Bills Seek to Extend Protections," San Francisco Chronicle, March 25, 2003.
18. Press release from the Campaign for California Families, March 20, 2003.
19. Jason Pierce, "Coming Soon to Philadelphia," CNSNews.com, May 17, 2002.
20. Rachel Gordon, "S.F. Board OKs Transgender Rights: Mayor is Expected to Sign Toughest Anti-Bias Law of Its Kind in the Nation," San Francisco Examiner, December 13, 1994.
21. "Rhode Island Becomes Third State to Ban Transgender Discrimination," Associated Press, July 19, 2001.
22. Ibid.
23. Martha Kleder, "Transsexuality: New Jersey's Newest 'Disability,'" Culture and Family Report, July 11, 2001.
24. "Civil Rights for the Transgendered," New York Times, May 1, 2002.
25. Kelley Beaucar Vlahos, "Transgender Law Making Strides," Fox News, August

6, 2002.

26. Jim Burns, "Ventura Proclamation a 'Celebration of Homosexuality,' Says Profamily Group," CNSNews.com, April 10, 2002.

27. "Gay Display in Capitol Rotunda," Capitol Resource Institute Press Release, June 11, 2002.

28. "Quebec Chief Justice Admits Courts Recreating Canadian Social and Moral Norms," LifeSiteNews.com, May 4, 2004.

29. Ellen Nakashima, "With Gay Pride Observances, a Balancing Act," Washington Post, June 12, 2002.

30. Ibid.

31. Christopher Heredia, "Gay Man Earns Envoy Position without Discord, Activists Praise Selection for Romanian Post," San Francisco Chronicle, September 24, 2001.

32. Martha Brant, "A New GOP?" Newsweek, December 24, 1991.

33. Jerry Seper, "Bush Backs Policy Against Bias," Washington Times, April 2, 2004.

34. John Files, "Study Says Discharges Continue Under 'Don't Ask, Don't Tell,'" New York Times, March 24, 2004.

35. U.S. Military Has Lowest Gay Dismissal Rate Since '96—Group," Dow Jones Newswires, March 26, 2003

36. Joe Kovacs, "Oregon County Bans All Marriage Licenses," WorldNetDaily.com, March 25, 2004.

37. Kelly Beaucar Vlahos, "Feds Take Aim at Taxpayer-Funded AIDS Prevention Programs," Fox News, January 7, 2002.

38. Robert Stacy McCain, "CDC Links to 'Pro-Sex' Teen Site," Washington Times, March 7, 2002.

39. "Leather Pride Proclamation Disgraces City, Critic Says," Portland Oregonian, September 19, 2002.

40. Bob Jones University v. United States, 461 U.S. 574 (1983). Opinion by Burger, C.J. Joined by Brennan, White, Marshall, Blackmun, Stevens, and O'Connor. Rehnquist, J. filed a dissent.

41. Allison Ferrell, "Gay Rights Group: Church Broke Law," Billings Gazette, May 27, 2004.

42. Robert B. Bluey, "Marriage Changes May Shake Churches' Tax Exemption," CNSNews.com, February 23, 2004.

43. Adam Clymer, "Senate Panel Moves to Block Bias against Gays at Work," New York Times, April 25, 2002.

44. See www.smr.com.

45. See www.glcensus.org.

46. Ronald Alsop, "Are Gay People More Affluent Than Others? Advertisers Say Yes, Citing Surveys, But Activists Call Data Overstated," Wall Street Journal, December 30, 1999.

47. Lou Chibbaro Jr., “Log Cabin Questions Need for ENDA, Angering Activists, GOP Lawmakers,” Washington Blade, May 13, 2002.

48. “ACLU Fact Sheet: Employment Nondiscrimination Act,” see <http://www.aclu.org/issues/gay/endafact.html>.

49. Roger Clegg, “Bad ENDA,” National Review Online, May 9, 2002.

50. Ibid.

51. Clymer, “Senate Panel Moves.”

52. “Dutch Will Not Prosecute Pope for Antigay Remarks,” Reuters, July 18, 2000.

53. Bob Egelko, “S.F. Reaction to Antigay Ads Ruled OK,” San Francisco Chronicle, January 17, 2002.

54. Porterfield, “Christians a ‘Hate Group.’”

55. Ibid.

56. Martin Niemoller, “Speaking Up for Each Other.”

Chapter Ten—Where Do We Go from Here?

1. Letter from Diann Luebker to Alan Sears, April 17, 2002. Used with permission.

2. Speech at Focus on the Family, October 31, 2001.

3. Steve Freiss, “Arizona Republic’s ME is Highest-Ranking ‘Out’ Editor,” Editor and Publisher, March 29, 2002.

4. Peter Jensen, “Fear of Criticism Has Made Christians Silent Instead of Significant,” Sydney Morning Herald, May 11, 2002.

Appendix 1—Background Brief

1. Bob Jones University v. United States, 461 U.S. 574 (1983). Opinion by Burger, C.J., joined by Brennan, White, Marshall, Blackmun, Stevens and O'Connor. Rehnquist, J. filed the sole dissent.

2. Changes such as voting, property rights, inheritance, and marriage law have occurred; however, there are still legitimate distinctions made such as men and women’s roles in the military, separate public bathrooms, etc.

3. Green v. Kennedy, 309 F. Supp. 1127, appeal dismissed sub nom. Cannon v. Green, 398 U.S. 956 (1970).

4. Revenue Ruling 71-447, 1971-2 Cum. Bull. 230. (Rehnquist, J. dissented from Jones decision, in part because the IRS and lower courts made these determinations rather than Congress through legislation.)

5. 461 U.S. 591-2.

6. 461 U.S. 594-5.

In The Homosexual Agenda Alan Sears and Craig Osten expose the goals of the homosexual movement and its rising legal activism. The homosexual agenda has as its primary aim to "trump" the rights of all other groups, especially those of people of faith. Sears and Osten provide well-documented proof that America is not only becoming more tolerant of homosexual behavior, it is becoming less tolerant of those who disagree with the lifestyle.

"The Alliance Defense Fund . . . is doing a wonderful work in defending religious liberty and preserving the rights of Christian people."

—Dr. James Dobson, AUTHOR AND FOUNDER, FOCUS ON THE FAMILY

"The message of this book is must-reading for every concerned American."

—THE LATE Bill Bright, FOUNDER AND CHAIRMAN, CAMPUS CRUSADE FOR CHRIST

"This book could be the instrument that will reverse the tide of influence that this devastating vice is having on American society today."

—D. James Kennedy, AUTHOR AND SENIOR MINISTER, CORAL RIDGE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, FL LAUDERDALE, FLORIDA

"I commend Alan Sears and Craig Osten for having the courage to tell the truth about this highly destructive movement."

—Marlin Maddoux, USA RADIO

"This may well be the most significant religious liberty issue of our times."

—R. Albert Mohler Jr., AUTHOR AND PRESIDENT, THE SOUTHERN BAPTIST THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

"This ground-breaking book destroys the myth that homosexual activists simply want equal rights . . . A must-read for every pastor."

—Alfred Poirier, SENIOR PASTOR ROCKY MOUNTAIN COMMUNITY CHURCH, BILLINGS, MONTANA

"This book is courageously but compassionately written."

—THE LATE Adrian Rogers, AUTHOR AND SENIOR PASTOR, BELLEVUE BAPTIST CHURCH, MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE

ALAN SEARS is the president, CEO, and general counsel of the Alliance Defense Fund, an organization dedicated to the defense of religious freedom, the sanctity of human life, and traditional values.

CRAIG OSTEN is the Vice-President of Creative Services for the Alliance Defense Fund.

www.bhpubhalingroup.com

Learning About Homosexuality

The Public Assault Upon Truth

Homosexual Bias at NY Times
Boston Globe Pimps For Pedophiles

Fistgate: What the Boston Globe Ignored
Newton MA Teach Outs Self to 1st Grade
Berkshire Eagle Censors News

Demonization of Christianity

Rome 'Gay' March Affront to Christians
Gore Rebukes Vatican
Berkshire Eagle Slams Scouts, Christians

Targeting Children

"Look It Up!" 254 "Boy Words"
Recent Defenses of Pedophilia Corruption of the APA
Mirkin : Deconstructing Pedophilia Corruption of the APA
Creating "Gay" Children by Dr. Judith Reisman 347K pdf
Report: Pedophilia more common among 'gays' 4/29/02
Another Homosexual Scoutmaster
Homosexuals And The Young
Holocaust Survivor Molested By Homosexual Guards
Children: Victims Of Parents' Choices
Pedophilia And Sex Education
Child Molestation & Homosexuality Higher pedophilia rates

The Church & Homosexuality

How the Church Sees The Issue Of Homosexuality
Non-Discrimination Of Homosexual Persons
The Sin that Will Not Shut Up
The Gay Priest Problem Fr. Paul Shaughnessy
Entangled on the Web James Hitchcock
Homosexual Assault on Marriage
Marginalization Of Women
Same-Sex Unions:The End of Marriage? Gerard V. Bradley Logic, Weed-eaters, Homosexuality and Contraception
 Janet E. Smith

Help for Same Sex Attraction Syndrome

Homosexuality And Hope Statement Of The Catholic Medical Association
Real Love for Homosexuals By David Morrison
Recovery, Change Is Possible What The Experts Have To Say
Help For Homosexuals Important Sources for info & help
An Answer for Andrew
The Battle for Normality, reviewed by Linda Ames Nicolosi
Apostolate to the Homosexual Ralph M. McInerney
The Dilemma of Homosexuality
 An Interview with Dr. Joseph Nicolosi
Authentic Freedom and the Homosexual Person Mark Lowery
The Neuroticism of Homosexuality Gerard van den Aardweg

The Homosexual Victimization Stratgy

Matthew Shepard Important perspectives
Protected Status For Homosexuals
From Tolerance to Affirmation "The Safe Schools Scam"
The Pink Swastika
Homosexuals Change Public Opinion
The Pro-"Gay" Agenda

Homosexuality & Genetics

Homosexuality & Genetics
The 10 Percent Lie used to propagandize Innate-Immutable Argument Finds No Basis in Science - NEW
Is There a "Gay Gene"?
The Importance of Twin Studies
Is There a Link Between Left-Handedness and Homosexuality?
The New Finger-Length Study on Lesbians
How Might Homosexuality Develop? Putting the Pieces Together
The Biological Research on Homosexuality
The Fading "Gay Gene"

"Portray gays as victims, not as aggressive challengers. In any campaign to win over the public, gays must be cast as victims in need of protection so that straights will be inclined by reflex action to assume the role of protector ... Straight viewers must be able to identify with gays as victims. Mr. and Mrs. Public must be given no extra excuses to say 'they are not like us' 'Our campaign should not demand direct support for homosexual practices, but should instead take anti-discrimination as its theme'" (emphasis the authors)

Homosexual activists Marshall Kirk and Erastes Pill, recommending political strategies designed to lead to, as they put it, "The Overhauling of Straight America" (Guide Magazine, November, 1987)

Is Sexual Orientation Fixed at Birth?

Can Prenatal Hormone Exposure Influence Gender-Identity Development? -- One Theory

From Their Mouths

Content Analysis Of The Advocate

Lethal Lifestyle of Practicing Homosexuals

Short & Lethal Life-Span Intrn'l Journal of Epidemiology
Monogamy For Homosexuals
Homosexual Lifestyle & Practices
HOMOSEXUALITY / SUICIDE LINK
The Advocate \("Gay" Magazine\) Survey

Governmental Collusion

"Gay" Rights: A Proclamation By Clinton
Rhode Island Liable for Lying About Homosexuality
VP Gore Backs Anti-Catholic 'Gay' March
Martyrs Slain by Pederast King

Protecting Children & Marriage

Fighting Back
4 Single Issue Voting
Our Likely Future...

Back to 'Learning About

Homosexuality' main page

NY Times Reporter: Homosexuals 75% of Front Page Staff!

'Gay' Propaganda Juggernaut Explained?

by T. Athanasius

(Friday July 28, 2000) In a stunning revelation that goes far in explaining the relentless attacks against those protecting Boy Scouts from buggery and the intense pro-homosexual and heterophobic propaganda issuing from mainstream media, NewsMax.com carried a story regarding Accuracy in Media's Reed Irving's investigation into NY Times lying and media bias.:

"Irvine reports that Richard Berke, a national political correspondent for the Times, spoke to a recent gathering of the National Lesbian and Gay Journalists Association.

Irvine says that Berke reassured the gathering that the Times would remain very sympathetic to the gay agenda because "three-fourths of those who regularly attend the daily meetings that determine what will be on the front page of the Times the next morning are 'not-so-closeted' homosexuals."

No surprise, Irvine claims, that the Times and other big media which take their cue from the Times, are not reporting fairly on gay issues." In a July 17 column in the NY Post, Brent Bozell discussed the Boston Globe treatment of Jeff Jacoby, and the Globe / NY Times lenient treatment of others caught in much more egregious conduct, and noted that Bob Hardman was a gay copy editor who had attacked Jacoby's columns as being infected with "homophobia".

The seriousness of the charge against the famous "Gray Lady" is compounded by several facts: First, not only are the Boston Globe, Worcester Telegram & Gazette and Internet service Boston.com , all based in New England subsidiaries of the NY Times, but many other papers, radio stations and TV are also owned by the Times (see list below). Second, the NY Times News Service is a major source subscribed to across the world. Third, not only do many backwater NY Times wannabees subscribe to their services, but given the seamless uniformity of their pro-homosexual stance in editorial and news content, legitimate questions can be raised about the objectivity of many of the media influenced by the NY Times.

This may also explain the of the mainstream medias' relentless suppression of the many studies disproving the genetic and inherent nature of homosexuality, those showing the homosexuals' pedophilic obsessions or showing the lethality and degradation of the life-style.

It also gives a more potent meaning to famed (and recently fired) NY Times editor and writer Abe Rosenthal's not so cryptic reply when asked about his most significant contribution in his NY Times career: "I kept it straight!"

Other NY Times Owned Mass Media (from NY Times Form 10-K, Fiscal Yr 12/26/99)

Alabama: The Gadsden Times, The Tuscaloosa News, Times Daily (Florence)

California: Santa Barbara News-Press, The Press Democrat (Santa Rosa)

Florida: Lake City Reporter, Marco Island Eagle, Sarasota Herald-Tribune, Star-Banner (Ocala), The Gainesville Sun, The Ledger Lakeland, The News-Leader (Fernandina Beach), The News-Sun (Sebring/Avon Park), Daily News (Palatka)

Louisiana: Daily World (Opelousas), The Courier Houma, The Daily Comet (Thibodaux)

Massachusetts: Boston Globe, Worcester Telegram & Gazette and Internet service Boston.com

North Carolina: The Dispatch (Lexington), Times-News (Hendersonville), Wilmington Morning Star

South Carolina: Spartanburg Herald-Journal

WTKR-TV (Norfolk, VA) WHNT-TV (Huntsville, AL) KFSM-TV (Ft. Smith, AR)

WREG-TV (Memphis, TN) WQAD-TV (Moline, IL) WHO-TV (Des Moines, IA)

KFOR-TV (Oklahoma City, OK)

WNEP-TV (Scranton, PA)

WQXR(FM) (New York, NY)

WREG-TV 40 CBS WTKR-TV 42 CBS VHF

KFOR-TV 45 NBC VHF WNEP-TV 51 ABC

The New York Times News Service serves approximately 650 newspapers and magazines in the US and in more than 50 countries .

© Copyright #Catholic Family Association of America# 2002. All rights reserved. Contact Us at info@cathfam.org

[Home | We need your help! | 3D Ultrasound Movies of Babies in the Womb]

Back to 'Learning About

Homosexuality' main page

Boston Globe Pimps for Pedophiles

The Boston Globe, a New York Times paper, has consistently followed the Times lead in denying the public a true accounting of the homosexual lifestyle. The anti-intellectualism of the Globe / Times policy is evident by their disdain for the volumes of studies proving that homosexual behavior is a disorder; studies showing that it is not genetically determined, and that it is grotesquely unhealthy. The documentation is readily accessible. But they know that they cannot refute the science. They cannot refute the medical records. They cannot refute the damage done to so many lives. If challenged, they refuse the news to you by myriad breast-beating excuses. And they originate and promote the Gay McCarthyism that threatens us all.

Homosexual behavior is protected and promoted daily by the media and those opposing are labeled "homophobic" and "hateful". The media, lead by the likes of the NY Times / Boston Globe, eager camp-follower-wannabes like the Berkshire Eagle, and giants such as Disney Co., pound away at the Christian civilization they so profoundly hate. While taxpayers have spent hundreds of billions to collect, transport and treat human waste, the media encourages those who swim their demented way upstream to wallow in it at the source. The following is an illustration of the Globe's complicity in creating a dangerous and perverse society, all done in the name of "tolerance". T.Athanasius

Pedophilia and Sex Education

by Eugene Narrett, excerpted from Culture Wars)

Click Here to Reach the Culture Wars web site

Early in October ('97), three gruesome and similar murders in the Northeast should have set off a national alarm about media-touted homosexual lifestyles, but there is no sign that mainstream media or legal authorities will provide much scrutiny. While children died, Al Gore flew to Hollywood to praise TV producers for "Ellen". Early in November, Bill Clinton met with the Human Rights Campaign, the nation's largest homosexual lobby. Since they are unwilling to note, much less explore the connections between sex ed, "diversity" and sex crimes, here are details that illuminate the issue.

In Waterbury, Connecticut, 13-year-old Stanley Edwards was lured into a neighbor's backyard and bludgeoned to death so the murderer could satisfy "an urge." In Jackson Township, New Jersey, Eddie Werner, selling candy door-to-door to raise money for his school, was pulled into a house by a fifteen year old who raped and murdered him.

The killer had regularly visited online homosexual "chat rooms," in one of which he'd met a 43 year old man with whom he'd become sexually involved and from whom he apparently learned a message of total, trans-generational permissibility. When his parents sought to break off the relationship, he found a younger victim to harm as he had been found himself.

Also on October 1, in East Cambridge, Massachusetts, ten year old Jeffrey Curley was lured into a car by two young men who promised him $50 and a new bicycle. The criminals, Salvatore Sicari and his homosexual lover, Charles Jaynes, mechanics and petty thieves, had spent months soliciting Jeffrey's trust. Once they had him in the car, Jaynes reportedly tried to force sex on Jeffrey. When the child resisted his 300 pound black assailant, Jaynes sat on and suffocated him with a gasoline-soaked rag. Sicari and Jaynes then drove to New Hampshire where Jaynes abused the boy's body before putting it in a barrel with concrete and dumping it into a river in Southern Maine.

As the details surfaced, media steered coverage to a renewed debate about the death penalty, lengthy descriptions of the search for Jeffrey's body and the grief of his father, Michael. All but invisible was the main issue: the close tie between homosexuality and pedophilia, and the increasingly brazen behavior of homosexuals whose urges for five decades have been publicized and celebrated by the political, educational and economic powers of the state.

Five days after the murder and far from the front pages, toward the end of a long story on the search for the body in the rivers of southern New Hampshire and Maine, it was noted that Jaynes's car had contained pornographic literature from NAMBLA, the North American Man/Boy Love Association. In a report, October 9, a lesbian apologist termed NAMBLA "a distant and tiny fringe of the gay community." Details were sparse, but there is plenty of information about NAMBLA and related groups in the public record for anyone who cares to look. In itself it may be a fringe, but its affiliations are both national and global, and through them, its influence and effects pervade government and education.

The agenda is horrid enough. The December 1995 issue of NAMBLA's monthly Bulletin carried a letter from one of its members, telling how he begun having sex with an 8-year-old boy for whom he had been babysitting for several years, gradually involving the child in sexual activities of the sort many gays and lesbians seek to legalize, as has Kinsey's Institute for Sex and Gender Research and SIECUS. Kinsey's former colleague, Dr. Wardell Pomeroy, has authored Boys and Sex and Girls and Sex which advocate the normality of incest, bestiality and masturbation.

"You are best advised to keep this behavior to yourself," Pomeroy wrote, "but you can feel secure in your knowledge that you are not a monster." Thanks to several decades of such spurious and seductive assurances, secrecy on such matters is going the way of the horse and carriage, as the globalist agenda for sex more and more resembles criminal insanity.

NAMBLA joins the global village through ILGA, an International Lesbian and Gay Association, which had "observer" status as a non-governmental organization at the UN. In 1993, when Congress drafted a bill to eliminate UN funding because of various pedophilic scandals (among them, at UNESCO, which addresses its attention to children), the world body banned ILGA. In an attempt to restore its status, ILGA planned to purge NAMBLA but its affiliated groups rebelled, forming the International Organization for the Liberation of Homosexuality (IOLH),

"open to all homosexual sub-groups including pederasts and pedophiles, transvestites, S&M activists, fetishists and others."

(It would be interesting to learn who funds IOLH, and where its activist leaders work). Faced with a principled revolt in the name of deviant diversity, ILGA backed down "out of fear of losing half its members," wrote a gay journalist.

Boston-based <<http://www.alyson.com/>> Alyson Publications is a major force in pushing the "diversity" agenda for children, and placing its titles in school libraries. Alyson publishes Heather Has Two Mommies, Daddy's Roommate and Daddy's Wedding in one of whose illustrations a beaming ten year old boy looks on while his father plants a "wedding" kiss on his homosexual "spouse."

Alyson has some other intriguing titles, like, Gay Sex: A Manual for Men Who Love Men which tells how "to minimize the risk" for "men who are involved with partners under the legal age of consent," that is, with children. Several of the suggestions are from NAMBLA, including advice to "avoid situations where many men have sex with the same boy over a period of time." Love 'em and dump 'em seems to be the paradigm, followed to logical conclusion by the murderers of Jeffrey Curley. Another Alyson title, Young, Gay & Proud for "homosexual-identified" school kids, includes graphic sexual advice on "Doing It, Gay" and repeats the familiar "1 in 10" lie.

Alyson also publishes "adult titles" like Macho Sluts in which a woman fantasizes about sadistic sex with her young daughter, The Lesbian S/M Safety Manual (including advice for "safe" whipping, not yet included in AYS) and The Alyson Almanac which lists NAMBLA as a resource "to educate society on the positive nature" of man-boy sex. Charles Jaynes must have skipped that chapter.

One wonders where the Middlesex, Norfolk and Suffolk County DA's have been while Alyson has published and promoted its ruinous texts. Massachusetts Attorney General, Scott Harshbarger, has spent substantial time working with Planned Parenthood, persecuting the Amiraaults (in the Fells Acre Day Care Case). Now, he is running for Governor. He would be an apt replacement for William Weld, a self-styled tough prosecutor, who also did nothing about Alyson or NAMBLA. The heads of state law enforcement have looked away while Boston's newspapers profiled Alyson Co's authors and illustrators, and while two lesbians promoted It's Elementary, a film teaching K-6 students that homosexuality is normal.

Similarly, DA's around the nation ignore promotion and publishing of slick homosexual magazines like XY, targeted at young people and filled with nudity and enticement. Beer commercials on prime time sports events now present transvestitism as a joke. The "justice" system prosecutes baseless allegations of "abuse" against devoted heterosexual parents while ignoring the overt child abuse of sexual perverts and their cheerleaders in Academia, government and business. This will not surprise those who have witnessed the government prosecute prolife speech while underwriting the abortion/population control industry which has a clear shared interest with promoters of sexual perversion. Wilful sterility is a perversion, and perversion is now an industry. Death is big business in the 20th century.

Alyson's parent company, Liberation Publications, issues The Advocate, a gay magazine with which Bill Clinton interviewed in 1996. The same day Jeffrey Curley was killed, Clinton announced that five of the 18 top White House staff positions would be set aside for homosexuals and he appointed lesbian activist, Virginia Apuzzo, to the top slot. The Clintons, and their Gaia-worshipping VP, Al Gore, consult with the Human Rights Campaign as part of their agenda to control children through the schools and a new National Child Care plan which will exploit the Woodward nanny case to further institutionalize the separation of children from their parents.

When a national Conference of psychologists and former homosexuals gather to discuss ways to free oneself of that dangerous preference, they can expect to be attacked by groups like the "Lesbian Avengers" as happened summer 1995 in San Diego, or October 10, 1997, at Harvard. When author Scott Lively lectured in Wisconsin about his book reviewing evidence on the dominance of the Nazi hierarchy by homosexuals, churches at which he spoke were attacked by homosexual mobs which threw rocks and urinated on the floor.

What is the response of the forces of official "justice?" In a particularly ugly coincidence, the U.S. Dept of Justice has urged and "commended" federal employees to attend "diversity seminars" in conjunction with National Coming Out Month. It is no longer mandatory, but employees who want commendation, promotion, raises and re-hiring, will be sure to attend. Such the indirect but official inducements for monsters like Jaynes and Sicari. It is as if the government had institutionalized Kinsey's notion that "diversity" would not be harmful if society didn't condemn it. It is, however, precisely government and the media/entertainment axis that have made a big and very public deal of diversity.

The word "homosexual" does not appear in the Boston Globe's coverage of the murder of Jeffrey Curley despite the history of Jaynes and Sicari whose attempts to win Jeffrey's trust cast a somber light on the line, "now we have a son to share," which comes at the climax of Daddy's Wedding. But the alleged murderers fit the pattern of research conducted by <<http://www.frc.org/>> The Family Research Council from 1989-95 indicating that homosexuals molest children at ten times the rate of heterosexuals. Another study revealed October 16 that nearly half the child abuse cases in west suburban Boston result from the predations of pedophiles. "There's not much we can do," claims a Middlesex County (Mass.) prosecutor. He's wrong, and a suggestion from an unlikely source suggests why.

An October 17, 1997 letter to the Boston Globe angrily asserted that current disgust about pedophiles "is the same as was felt against those advocating black/white sexual relations forty years ago or toward homosexuals 25 years ago." Maybe he's righter than he knows, though inter-racial couples and even some homosexuals may not like the analogy. In any case, the implied time line (25 years until pedophilia is accepted by the elites as a "civil right" enforced by quotas and celebrated on TV), should spur society to pre-emptive action.

The letter writer defended NAMBLA, demanding, "if an article on sexuality from the Globe had been found in Jaynes' car [instead of literature from NAMBLA], would that mean the Globe's staff was implicated?" The answer is 'yes,' they are deeply implicated and so are all the corporate, governmental and professional groups that have been celebrating and demanding "rights" for those whose problems in identity formation result in sexual confusion. Those who do not turn to healing such as is offered by various "Transformation" or "Exodus" ministries, or other reparative therapies like those described by Dr. Jeffrey Satinover, risk the slippery slope to pedophilia and necrophilia. What today is called (or used to be called) obsession, is an empty word for sin. Death worship is the endgame of individuals and societies giddy with perversion, who deify transient impulse and rationalize the merits of sterility.

In The American Sex Revolution, Dr. Pitirim Sorokin wrote that sexual anarchy occurs when "society degrades the values of womanhood and manhood, motherhood and fatherhood, marriage, family and love, itself." The result is "an explosion of socio-political disturbances" which threaten every marriage and every child.

The pain of the Curley case and the depredations of "sex education" should prompt complete review of this nation's misguided championing of sexual deviance and its multi-faceted attacks on the traditional family and gender roles. This need is even greater than the absolute necessity of executing those who are the immediate perpetrators of such crimes. ☸

Back to 'Learning About

Homosexuality' main page

Fistgate: the Boston Globe & Berkshire Eagle Coverup

The following affidavit was available to the Boston Globe & Berkshire Eagle at the 4/25/2000, DOE meeting. Perhaps they just thought your child's safety was less important than protecting the right of homosexuals to assault them without your knowledge.

The Massachusetts Parents Rights Coalition had asserted that the type of perverted assault perpetrated by the Gay, Lesbian & Straight Education Network (GLSEN) in the Teach Out 2000 program was typical and not at all rare.

Only after the increasing local and national focus reached firestorm levels, was this assertion recognized, when one of the assailants, fired DOE employee Margot Ables, said that "This is absolutely sanctioned by the department." Continuing, she added "It's understood what we're going in there to do. It's standard. There's nothing we did that was a secret.", speaking of her seven year involvement. The Globe reported this only after the external firestorm made it necessary. Even then, a perusal of the Globe shows a continued and decided bias in favor of the homosexual side of the issue. The record shows that Globe coverage of the stink ONLY came about after it was printed in the Massachusetts News (massnews.com) and audio tapes were aired over Boston radios stations and finally picked up by WorldNetDaily.com. After the firestorm the Berkshire Eagle reported in the vaguest terms about the assault and only in articles that promoted homosexual rights. Boston.com, the Globe / NY Times web site, shielded the GLSEN assault team by a belated 5/19 reference to simply a "national gay organization". T.Athanasius

A Sample of What the Boston Globe and Berkshire Eagle Ignore

Affidavit Filed

Regarding MA Dept. Ed & Gay, Lesbian and Straight Education Network,

April 18, 2000

Hon. Martha Coakley

Middlesex District Attorney's Office

Middlesex Superior Courthouse

40 Thorndike Street, Floor 2

Cambridge, MA 02141

District Attorney Coakley:

It is my belief that three specific public servants should be investigated for their involvement in the corruption of minors at a recent student/teacher conference in Medford. Additionally, as the conference was supported by several publicly funded and private groups and the Department of Education, I believe that they may have some liability for the corruption of children.

On the weekend of March 25, 2000, I attended the tenth annual GLSEN/BOSTON & Project 10 East Teach Out! conference at Tufts University. GLSEN is a national Gay, Lesbian and Straight Education Network, led by Kevin Jennings a former Massachusetts teacher. GLSEN works with teachers and students throughout the nation and claims to fight what they deem homophobia. GLSEN/Boston is headed by Wallace Bachman and receives some funding from the Governor's Commission on Gay and Lesbian Youth and the Massachusetts Department of Education through the Safe Schools Program.

I attended two workshops while at the conference that should be brought to your attention. In the first workshop, What They Didn't Tell You About Queer Sex & Sexuality In Health Class: A Workshop For Youth Only ages 14-21, the three homosexual presenters acting in their professional capacities coaxed about 20 children into talking openly and graphically about homosexual sex. The three presenters were:

Margot E. Ables, Coordinator, HIV/AIDS Program, Massachusetts Department of Education, self-proclaimed lesbian

Julie Netherland, Coordinator, HIV/AIDS Program, Massachusetts Department of Education, self-proclaimed lesbian

Michael Gaucher, Consultant, HIV/AIDS Program, Massachusetts Department of Public Health, self-proclaimed gay man

The workshop syllabus was as follows:

This workshop for youth addresses what is different for glbt (gay, lesbian, bisexual, transgender, transsexual) youth when it comes to sex, dating, relationships, HIV etc. Come and discuss the questions you couldn't or didn't ask in health class. What's it like to be young, queer and beginning to date? Are lesbians at risk for HIV? What does it mean to identify as queer and still be sexually active with the opposite sex? Who can you talk to about these things? And, why aren't queer issues addressed in Sex Ed classes? We will address the information you want about queer sexuality and some of the politics that prevent us from getting our needs met.

The workshop opened by the three public employees asking the children how they knew, as gay people, whether or not they've had sex. Questions were thrown around the room about whether oral sex was sex, to which the Department of Public Health Employee stated, "If that's not sex, then the number of times I've had sex has traumatically decreased; from a mountain to a valley, baby. " Eventually the answer presented itself, and it was determined that whenever an orifice was filled with genitalia, then sex had occurred. In coming to that conclusion, one student, egged on by the Department of Public Health employee, said in response to the question, "What orifices are we talking about?"

Michael Gaucher: Don't be shy, honey; you can do it.

Student: Your mouth.

Michael Gaucher: Ok.

Student: Your ass.

Michael Gaucher: There you go.

Student: Your pussy. That kind of place.

By my estimation, that child was just about 16.

But since sex occurred when an orifice was filled, the next question was obviously whether lesbians could have sex. At one point, Margot Abels asked whether a dildo had to be involved; could one be too big or too small; and where would students go to get these questions answered?

The children were asked to role play at this point. The scene was set up like this. One student was a young lesbian who's really attracted to another woman, and it's really coming down to the wire and you're thinking about having sex. The other student played the hip GSA (gay, straight alliance) lesbian advisor, who you feel you can talk to. In effect, Michael Gaucher was telling these high school aged children that they should be talking about lesbian sex, oral-vaginal contact, or carpet munching, as one student put it, with a teacher. The student asked whether it would smell like fish.

At one point in the session, there was a five minute break so that all of the children could write down their questions for the homosexual presenters. The first question was read by Julie Netherland, What's fisting?

A student answered this question by informing the class that fisting is when you put your whole hand into the ass or pussy of another. When a few of the students winced, the Department of Public Health employee offered, "A little known fact about fisting, you don't make a fist, like this. It's like this," forming his hand into the shape of a tear drop rather than a balled fist. He informed the children that it was much easier.

Margot Abels told the students that fisting is not about forcing your hand into somebody's hole, opening or orifice if they don't want it there. She said that usually the person was very relaxed, and opened him or herself up to the other. She informed the class that it is a very emotional and intense experience.

At this point, a child of about 16 asked why someone would want to do that. He stated that if the hand were pulled out quickly, the whole thing didn't sound very appealing to him. Margot Abels was sure to point out that although fisting often gets a really bad rap, it usually isn't about the pain, "not that we're putting that down." Margot Abels informed him, and the class, that fisting was an experience of letting somebody into your body that you want to be that close and intimate with. Michael Gaucher provided the how-to of a lascivious act, and Margot Abels the incentive. When a child asked the question, why, Margot Abels provided comfort to the children, to put them into an exploratory mode.

Michael Gaucher asked the next question, Do lesbians rub their clits together?

Michael Gaucher and Margot Abels asked if it was possible, and whether someone would do a hand-diagram for the class. No one volunteered, but a girl who I estimate was 15 or 16, stepped up to the board and drew a three foot high vagina, and labeled each of the labia, the clitoris, and put up inside the G -spot. While drawing, Michael Gaucher told her to use the pink chalk, to which Margot Abels responded, not everyone is pink, honey. All of the children laughed.

After the chalk vagina was complete, the children remarked on the size of the clit, and the presenters stated that that was a gifted woman. Then, Margot Abels informed all of the young girls that indeed, you can rub your clitoris together, either with or without clothes, and you can definitely orgasm from it. Michael Gaucher told the entire class that there is a name for this: tribadism, which he wrote on the board, and told one girl who I estimate was 14 to bring that vocabulary word back to Bedford. Julie Netherland informed the children that it wasn't too difficult, because when you are sexually aroused, your clit gets bigger.

Michael Gaucher read the following from a card: Cum and calories: Spit versus swallow and the health concerns. Michael Gaucher informed the children that although he didn't know the calorie count of male ejaculation, he has heard that it's sweeter if people eat celery. The public employee thereafter asked, Is it rude not to swallow? Many of the high school boys mumbled, No, but one, about the age of 16, said emphatically, Oh no! One student, again about the age of 16, offered his advice on avoiding HIV/AIDS transmission while giving oral sex by not brushing your teeth or eating course food for four hours before you go down on a guy, because then you probably don't want to be swallowing cum.

Another question asked was whether oral sex was better with tongue rings. A 16 year old student murmured, yes, to which all of the children laughed. Michael Gaucher said, There you have it, and stated something to the effect that the debate has ended.

As often as we hear that there is an aggressive HIV/AIDS prevention campaign, the session ran 55 minutes before the first mention of protection and safer sex came. In the context of the safer sex discussion, however, it was pointed out that these children could make an informed decision not to use a condom. Outside in the conference hall, the children could easily obtain as many condoms, vaginal condoms, and other contraceptive devices as they wished from various organizations which distribute such.

The second session which I attended was far less graphic, but potentially more dangerous. This session was presented by the same three public employees in their professional capacity and was called, Putting the Sex Back Into Sexual Orientation: Classroom Strategies for Health & Sexuality Educators.

The workshop syllabus was as follows:

What does it mean to say being gay, lesbian and bisexual isn't about sex? Where do queer youth get their information about sex and sexuality? How can we deny that sexuality is central for all of us? How do we learn to address the unique concerns of queer youth? What about the epidemiology and risk behavior data concerning sexual activity, HIV and pregnancy for queer kids? This workshop is for educators to examine strategies for integrating sexuality education and HIV prevention content specific to gay, lesbian and bisexual students into the classroom and GSA's. Data will be presented, exercises from the GSA/HIV Prevention Project will be shared and additional strategies will be discussed.

These three presenters who just told a group of 14 to 18 year olds how to properly position your hand for fisting now assumed the task of teaching teachers how to facilitate discussions about queer sex with their students. Several of the attending teachers asked to review the questions which the students submitted.

Margot Abels opened by telling the room full of teachers and two high school students, We always feel like we are fighting against people who say publicly, who say privately, that being queer is not at all about sex & We believe otherwise. We think that sex is central to every single one of us, and particularly queer youth.

Margot Abels, Julie Netherland and Michael Gaucher reviewed a few campaigns that have been used to demonstrate to queer youth how to best be safe.

The campaign, Respect Yourself, protect yourself, was thought good in getting the message to kids that they should use protection, but since it made children who didn't protect themselves feel bad, it ultimately was a poor message. Michael Gaucher was sure to point out that children with an older partner, that they are not feeling they can discuss things with, does that mean that they don't respect themselves? My question is why does Michael Gaucher not consider boys having sexual relations with men, either with or without a condom, to be a problem. Let me put this into perspective. If I, a 26 year old man, were to approach a 16 year old girl for sexual intercourse, wouldn't I end up in trouble? Yet public employees, who are bound by law to report abuse under rule §51(A), are concerned more with how the young sodomized boy feels than whether he is being sodomized at all. This is absolutely outrageous.

The campaign, No Sex, No Problem, was ridiculed, as it assumed that children could opt not to have sex. Additionally, it made those children who had already had sex feel bad, or think they had a problem, since they had sex.

After reviewing a few of the campaigns, Margot Abels described the project she works on. The Gay/Straight Alliance HIV Education Project goes around five different schools each year conducting up to eight HIV prevention sessions in that school's gay club. These same presenters who just told a group of children how to properly position their hands for fisting were now telling a room full of educators that they would visit their schools and conduct their workshops for their students.

One participant remarked halfway through that Margot Abels just wasn't talking to her, since she, the participant, was a lesbian-middle school teacher. She wanted to know specifically what she could do to facilitate discussions about homosexuality in middle school. After I left that session, I met a few people and we compared notes. I was told of another session entitled, Struggles & Triumphs of Including Homosexuality in a Middle School Curriculum. Christine L. Hoyle, Special Education Teacher and workshop presenter, told the story of how she turned the holocaust portion of her curriculum into a "gay" affirming section. Ms. Hoyle allowed the group at the conference to watch a video which she had her students produce and which was narrated by a seventh grade girl. This girl told the audience that ancient Greeks encouraged homosexuals; in fact, it was considered normal for an adolescent boy to have an older, wiser man as his lover. In effect, this teacher informed her adolescent students that it is okay if an older man approaches them for sexual gratification.

I have a compendium of resources and information which I obtained at the conference encouraging young children to become actively engaged in homosexual activities. I approached the Sidney Borum Community Health Center table to obtain a cassette sized pocket sex kit, which included two condoms, two antiseptic moist towelettes, and six bandages, which were for when the sex got really rough according to the high school aged volunteer behind the desk. I now have a countless supply of condoms supplied by both Sidney Borum and Planned Parenthood, all of which was for the taking by any child who wanted them. Again I will restate, that the conference was for teachers and students and there were easily children as young as 12 or 13 at the conference.

I am extremely troubled by what I learned at the GLSEN conference, and even more troubled to report that it was led largely by Department of Education employees and was supported by Commissioner Driscoll and the Department of Education, which is demonstrated by the attached letter to participants as well as the Department's endorsement of the conference by offering six Professional Development Activities hours for teachers attending the conference.

The specific areas in the law I am asking for you to investigate are the abrogation of Massachusetts General Laws, ch. 272, § 2, 4, and 28: Enticing away a person for prostitution or sexual intercourse; Inducing person under 18 to have sexual intercourse; and Matter harmful to minors, dissemination; possession; defenses, respectively.

If you have any further questions regarding my knowledge of what occurred in that most disturbing and child corrupting conference, please do not hesitate to contact me at the phone number on the first page of this letter.

I swear under oath and the pains and penalties of perjury that everything written within this letter, to be best of my knowledge and recollection, is true and factually accurate.

Sincerely,

Scott T. Whiteman

Peabody, Massachusetts

Newton MA Teacher Outs Self to 1st Graders

Superintendent, Mayor & Boston Globe Applaud

On May 17, Newton MA first grade teacher David Gaita outed himself to his first grade class, and was supported by Newton Schools Superintendent Jeff Young and Mayor David Cohen. In stories that were overwhelmingly sympathetic to homosexuals, the Boston Globe, portrayed Gaita as the "victim", and the children as fortunate recipients of his "honesty".

The Globe reported that Schools Superintendent Jeff Young said "it was not a lesson about homosexuality, it was a discussion about families and partners, and the teacher's comments were made in the context of a classroom discussion," and that "This is not a story about sex, it is a story about human rights and respect for human differences.

D-u-h? Not to be outdone by this stunning defiance to logic and example of why the teaching profession has failed the children across the country, Democrat Mayor Cohen is reported to have said "I support how he handled it and the reaction of the administration."

The school administration and city government have in essence stated that there has been a defacto settlement of the morality issue regarding homosexuality in favor of homosexuals, and that expression of "conservative" moralities (Christian, Orthodox Judaism & Islam) constitute "hate speech" (if not a crime) and will not be allowed in the schools. ☸ T. Athanasius

Back to 'Learning About Homosexuality'

main page

Berkshire Eagle Censors News About DOE/GLSEN Fistgate Assault

by T. Athanasius

A Typical Example of How The Media Lies by Ommission

Most lying is done by structuring the news. The most frequently used method is the careful exclusion of the truth: simply not printing it. A typical example from the Berkshire Eagle (Pittsfield, MA) is the "Board of Ed acts to protect gay students" lead story (4/26/00). The story would have you believe that first graders and above are experiencing a wave of homophobic terror that require all schools to create protective "tolerance tinting" machinery so as to brainwash kids into believing that sexual orientation is an unchangeable part of human nature, that it is morally neutral, a healthy life-style, that "gays" are in the same category as those deserving special civil-rights protection, and that throngs of kids are persecuted. Each of the beliefs are flat wrong. Not a wee bit wrong. Big-time-lie-in-your-teeth wrong. Hatefully wrong.

Strong words? Not really. Like Hitler, and other socialists, the Eagle uses the Big Lie routine so consistently that when you, the public, are first exposed to the truth, the truth seems outlandish. It seems unbelievable.

While the April 25, 2000 testimony of Scott Whiteman of the Parents Rights Coalition and others indicated the grotesque, degenerate activities of the MA Department of Ed bank-rolled national Gay, Lesbian and Straight Education Network (GLSEN) Project 10 East Teach Out! conference at Tufts University 3/25/00, (see "Affidavit Filed") not a word of Whiteman's affiliation nor his content was mentioned in the Berkshire Eagle article. Testimony providing vital information regarding the lethal life-style of "gays" was given (see "Homosexual Life-style & Practices" , "The Advocate Survey" and Short & Lethal Life-span.), information needed especially by parents and teachers. Not a word of testimony made it to even the Eagle's Siberia Page, the Page of Public Amnesia, where vague mentions provide the paper with cover for accusations of censorship and distortion.

Indeed, the Eagle failed to print any significant follow up about the actual charges that led to the firing of DOE employees. But it did print a two column puff piece glorifying a MA lesbian state senator in the paper's ongoing "We're just plain ol' folks" series of propaganda articles. In a classic exercise in propaganda, the Eagle printed the two column spread with the senator's picture and "victim" status at the top of the story. A small reference to those opposed to the continuation of public funding of the homosexual sex-ed / recruitment sessions was tagged to the end. This is done to provide "cover" for the paper when it's pro-homosexual bias is questioned, for the Eagle, like all propagandists, knows that the public seldom reads to the end of the story.

Lethality Issue Censored

Given the "Lethality" charges against the "gay" life-style, the paper is morally obligated to investigate and present the facts. It's not as if the Eagle or Globe have not had the facts presented to them... multiple letters regarding the medical and scientific facts on the unhealthy "gay" life-style sent to the editor have never emerged from these New England PRAVDAs. And those that do are carefully edited to excise whatever meat was offered, with deletions designed to portray the most concise and benign writer as a ranting "homophobe". If someone said a behavior touted by the school as "normal", a behavior to be "tolerated", and then "affirmed", that that behavior took 30 years off the life of your child, do you think the local paper wouldn't have heard about this? Might they be a tad concerned? At least at the future downward sales portended by such a fact?

This self-censorship is a "prior consent" to the Big Brother "thought police" state, where the 1st Amendment will be a relic of freedom; piecemealed to "Gay" McCartyite oblivion by "compassionate" politicians borne into power by the politically correct mass media. We fail to remember that Hitler was applauded into power. C

Pope : Rome
"Gay"
March Insult to Christianity

VATICAN CITY, JULY 9
(ZENIT.org).-
Christians must regard homosexuals with respect and sensitivity.
However, the "Gay Pride" manifestation that paraded on the streets of Rome yesterday, was nothing less than an "affront" against the Jubilee. "On behalf of the Church of Rome I cannot but express the disappointment for the affront caused to the Great Jubilee of the Year 2000 and the offense to Christian values of a City that is so dear to the heart of Catholics throughout the world. The Church cannot silence truth, because it would diminish fidelity toward God the Creator and would not help to discern what is good from what is evil," the Pope said.

Gore Rebukes Vatican

Back to 'Learning About

Homosexuality' main page

Al Gore Rebukes Vatican

Picks tolerance of radical 'gay' rights over tolerance of Christianity. His letter to Italian 'gay' march leader praises Rome "World Gay Pride" event. She says : ""F--- you" to the Pope.

On June 1, Catholic League president William Donohue wrote to vice president Al Gore asking him to support the Vatican's request that the World Gay Pride march either be postponed or moved to another location; Donohue enclosed a copy of his news release of June 1 quoting leaders of the event who said they chose Rome as the venue so they could offend the Vatican. On July 3, Gore faxed Donohue his reply. "As you know," Gore said, "I deeply respect the work of the Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights and all organizations that are committed to ridding our society of bias and prejudice."; He added, "this is one issue where I will be unable to help."

The critical part of Gore's letter was as follows: "But I believe that the larger issue is one of tolerance. Just as I will stand by you whenever you are working to fight intolerance on religious grounds, I also believe we need to be tolerant when it comes to sexual orientation as well." Donohue had a few things to say about Gore's letter: "My letter to the vice president was occasioned by the expressed intolerance of Roman Catholicism by the leaders of the World Gay Pride march, and he writes back saying 'the larger issue here is one of tolerance' for sexual orientation! This is precisely the kind of spin that is deeply insulting. So wedded is Gore to the politics of the radical gay agenda that he never bothered to comment on what Imma Battaglia, the principal organizer of the event, said of the pope; in the news release that accompanied my letter to Gore, Battaglia was quoted as saying 'F---you' to the pope. "Gore's letter demonstrates how selective his commitment to tolerance really is. If only his professed interest in combating gay bashing were matched by his interest in combating Catholic bashing, then there would be no issue. But his letter to me speaks volumes about both his ethics and his politics, and on both counts he bombs with Catholics."

V. P. GORE BACKS ANTI-CATHOLIC GAY EVENT IN ROME

ROME (CWNews.com/LSN.ca) 4/12/00- Just weeks after having been criticized for not distancing himself from supporters who seek to oust the Vatican from the United Nations, US presidential hopeful Al Gore is embroiled in a controversy with critics calling him anti-Catholic.

Organizers of an international homosexual pride event to take place in Rome this year -- an event which they claim is a direct slap at the Catholic Church and the Jubilee Year celebrations -- said they have received a letter of endorsement from Gore. The event, World Pride 2000, plans to flood the city, which surrounds the Vatican, with hundreds of thousands of homosexual activists engaging in parody of the Church and overtly sexual displays. The Vatican had strenuously requested that Rome not allow the gay pride event, especially this year since millions of pilgrims are visiting Rome due to the Jubilee-year celebrations.

Rome's city government has allowed the gay pride week to take place from July 1 to 9 despite the Vatican pleas. Catholic commentators in Rome have called the homosexual initiative a calculated attack against the Church and an "anti-Jubilee." The pride parade's organizer in Rome, Imma Battaglia, president of the Mario Mieli gay center, swore at Pope John Paul II using the f-word in an interview with a homosexual newspaper. The paper, Toronto's NOW magazine, also quoted Battaglia as reading a letter of endorsement of World Pride 2000 signed by Gore. In the letter, Gore says he is "pleased to send greetings," and that her group is "building a good and just society on the bedrock principle of opportunity."

(Elizabeth Julian Potter, the official White House Liaison to homosexuals, confirmed to Culture Facts editor Peter LaBarbera that Gore had indeed endorsed the event "and so has the mayor of Rome." Gore's letter, is post-dated July 1, states, "While I regret that I am unable to join you, I want to offer my very best wishes for a successful event ...")

An Excerpt from "Gay" Rights: A Proclamation By Clinton

In the midst of the 2000th Anniversary of Christianity, our degenerate president has chosen to ignore the Jubilee and glorify perversion. Likewise, in a truly anti-Christian spirit, Al Gore has sent a letter endorsing the Pro-homosexual rally due in Rome this July, as a spit-in-your-face to not just Catholics, but all Christians.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

A PROCLAMATION: Gay and Lesbian Pride Month

Gay and lesbian Americans have made important and lasting contributions to our Nation in every field of endeavor. Too often, however, gays and lesbians face prejudice and discrimination; too many have had to hide or deny their sexual orientation in order to keep their jobs or to live safely in their communities.

In recent years, we have made some progress righting these wrongs. Since the Stonewall uprising in New York City more than 30 years ago, the gay and lesbian rights movement has united gays and lesbians, their families and friends, and all those committed to justice and equality in a crusade to outlaw discriminatory laws and practices and to protect gays and lesbians from prejudice and persecution.

I am proud of the part that my Administration has played to achieve these goals. Today, more openly gay and lesbian individuals serve in senior posts throughout the Federal Government than during any other Administration. To build on our progress, in 1998 I issued an Executive Order to prohibit discrimination in the Federal civilian workforce based on sexual orientation, and my Administration continues to fight for the Employment Non-Discrimination Act, which would outlaw discrimination in the workplace based on sexual orientation.

Yet many challenges still lie before us. As we have learned >from recent tragedies, prejudice against gays and lesbians can still erupt into acts of hatred and violence. I continue to call upon the Congress to pass meaningful hate crimes legislation to strengthen the Department of Justice's ability to prosecute hate crimes committed due to the victim's sexual orientation.

With each passing year the American people become more receptive to diversity and more open to those who are different from themselves. Our Nation is at last realizing that gays and lesbians must no longer be "strangers among friends," as the civil rights pioneer David Mixner once noted. Rather, we must finally recognize these Americans for what they are: our colleagues and neighbors, daughters and sons, sisters and brothers, friends and partners.

This June, recognizing the joys and sorrows that the gay and lesbian movement has witnessed and the work that remains to be done, we observe Gay and Lesbian Pride Month and celebrate the progress we have made in creating a society more inclusive and accepting of gays and lesbians. I hope that in this new millennium we will continue to break down the walls of fear and prejudice and work to build a bridge to understanding and tolerance, until gays and lesbians are afforded the same rights and responsibilities as all Americans.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, WILLIAM J. CLINTON, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and laws of the United States, do hereby proclaim June 2000 as Gay and Lesbian Pride Month. I encourage all Americans to observe this month with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities that celebrate our diversity and recognize the gay and lesbian Americans whose many and varied contributions have enriched our national life.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand this second day of June, in the year of our Lord two thousand, and of the Independence of the United States of America the two hundred and twenty-fourth.

WILLIAM J. CLINTON

Berkshire Eagle Slams Christians, Jews & Moslems in Attack on Evil Boy Scouts

by T.Athanasius

On the same day as it's whitewash piece on the MA Board of Ed meeting, 4/26/00, the Berkshire Eagle, carried another of it's irrational and condescending slams of the Boy Scouts. Citing the Scouts "repugnant rule barring gay men" and the exclusionary policy based on "groundless myths and stereotypes and on ancient prejudices", an obvious reference to the traditional beliefs of the worlds major religions, the Eagle left little to the imagination regarding the evils of the Boy Scouts.

"Groundless myths"? Since the Berkshire Eagle (New England Newspapers, Inc.), Boston Globe (NY Times, Inc.), et. al., know well the self-destructive behaviors admitted to by the militant "gays" in their own literature, and documented in scientific, medical and police journals, one must ask "What myths?". Certainly, 28 year old Christopher Reardon, arrested 6/16/00, a Boy Scout volunteer (who slipped through the screen), day-camp director and teacher and, according to the Essex DA, sodomite molester of as many as 250 boys in Middleton, Topsfield and Danvers, Massachusetts, approaches the wire for fame, if not mythological homosexual heroism. Actor and Assistant Scoutmaster John Levendosky, 52, of Derry, PA, arrested 6/14/2000 for assaulting boys (see Pg. 2) may be the Eagle's idea a "merely" normal homosexual Boy Scout leader.

But, while recently convicted Javad Iqbal, of Pakistan, with over 100 slain boys to his record, is of mythological proportions, all three of the above lend no support for the Eagle's charge against the Boy Scouts. Any cop can tell of the "gay"-on-"gay" horror stories... the obscene mutilations, etc. For every pornography-driven Ted Bundy there are scores of Jeffery Dhalmers and Wayne Gacys preying on hundreds of innocent boys; for every Matthew Shepard there are a hundred like 10-year-old Jeffrey Curley (Boston) and 13-year-old Jesse Dirkhising (Arkansas), raped and murdered by pedophiles, and ignored by the media. Pedophile victims don't stack up as newsworthy, certainly not when they challenge the grinding propaganda of the "homosexual rights" movement.

"Ancient prejudices"? Which prejudices? The Christian and Orthodox Jewish ones prohibiting sodomy? The one about not eating or rolling in human feces? Protecting children from sodomites? Urinating on each other? The one against bestiality? Or sadomasochism? Would the Eagle please let us know what aspect of homosexuality is natural? Perhaps the Eagle thinks that no sexual activity, no matter how sordid, unnatural or degenerate, is immoral? Recorded history shows the societal revulsion by, and rejection of, homosexuality based upon valid reasons. Good reasons. There is not a single viable culture that ever held homosexuality as a norm. In his book, "The American Sex Revolution," Harvard sociologist Pitirim Sorokin reviewed the history of societies through the ages, and found that none survived after they ceased honoring and upholding the institution of marriage between a man and a woman.

More than enough data is available regarding the predation of sodomites upon the Scouts (see "Content Analysis of The Advocate" pg. 4). But the Eagle doesn't want to see it. More importantly, it doesn't want you to see it. True to the emotion that drives the extreme left, the Eagle rants at the efforts of those protecting the boys from buggery. One has to wonder at the predilections of the editorial writers. Do they have a history of trying to gain access to the local clubs "where the boys are"?

In mindless lock-step with mainstream media and the extreme humanist ideology it serves, the Eagle despises the Judeo-Christian morality that provides the very framework of the creative society undergirding their well-being and tranquillity. They despise the "ancient" morality of Christians and Jews that protects boys (and girls) from all sexual predators. Instead, they promote the even more ancient pagan morality replaced by the Jews and Christians. Disconnecting sexuality from procreation, they have become so spiritually stupid they cannot see the chaos and devastation they spread, including that within their lives or that of their children.

They are the West's version of the Red Guards, moving with the mindless momentum of the stampede as they seek the destruction of everything "old", merely because it is old. Tradition is to be rejected and crushed. Shedding crocodile tears about "Children's Rights" they see children as so worthless that a mom staying home to rear them as civilized citizens is viewed as a crime against women. But, as Chesterton observed, "Tradition refuses to submit to that arrogant oligarchy who merely happen to be walking around." And we should not submit to the colossal arrogance of the extreme media in this country. And they are extreme. Extreme enough to hide the fact that your child could die living a savagely lethal life-style.

Mass Media Disregards Medical Studies

As one doctor noted," There is a different standard regarding the timeliness of medical literature. Although in [the news] profession, yesterday's news is yesterday's news, in the medical profession, a study done 50 years ago, if done within accepted scientific standards, is just as valid today as the day it was published. Anatomy, physiology, and human nature, the salient points of the articles ... quoted, do not significantly change within 1-2 decades.

The only thing that could be questioned ... is whether the behavior outlined still continues today. The most recent studies do conclude that these behaviors indeed persist and that they are more prevalent, not less. There was a decrease in unsafe sex in the mid to late eighties and the first year or two of the nineties, attributable to the "safe-sex" campaigns."

Those who advocate for so-called "homosexual rights" (which is oxymoronic: there is no such thing as "rights to aberrant behavior") should be made to see just what they are promoting, which is not a benign, normal, alternative to heterosexuality in any way, shape or form. Unnatural acts never fall into that category.

The Berkshire Eagle, Boston Globe, and their ilk despise reason and enshrine emotion. They are the most anti-intellectual crowd the West has ever seen. Red-necks with typewriters. They are so colossally stupid they are stunned by studies that suggest that boys and girls are different. They are so colossally stupid that they cannot see the criminality of placing women in combat. But that's what you get when you castrate a bull. Dull stupidity. It really doesn't matter whether they self-emascuate or acquiesce. But, one may safely surmise that the news and other mass media are mostly self mutilated. M-o-o-o... ☆

"LOOK IT UP!" 254 "BOY WORDS" (The Queens' Vernacular , a "dictionary to the gay underworld")

by
Dr. Judith A. Reisman and Eunice Van Winkle Ray

In the debate about the Boy Scouts, homosexuals mean something very different from heterosexuals relying on Webster's dictionary. According to The Queens' Vernacular, Bruce Rodgers' authoritative homophile lexicon, "Boy Scout" and "boys" are defined in the following ways.

"Boy-scout queen: (sexually experimenting boy scouts who fear giving a response); one who pretends to snooze as he is fucked or su-ked off." (All ellipses are inserted by the author.)

Those debating whether homosexuals should be scout leaders should take a look at the dictionary to help decide whether or not homosexuals have an inordinate interest in young boys. Or is it really as gay rights leaders say--they just labor in young boys' best interests. Let's look it up and see if pederasts (men who sexually assault boys) comprise just a small cadre within the much larger male homosexual population.

As noted above, the dictionary we are talking about is not in your local library. There, molester may be the only word "straights" would think of for men who sexually assault boys. No I am talking about The Queens' Vernacular (QV), which is advertised as, "[e]veryman's dictionary to the gay underworld," the "current language of a very large group of people who are members (part or full-time) of the homosexual community." In the QV there are 254 words for boys, most of these involve men sexually abusing boys.

Think about it. A dictionary has many words with subtle nuances for that which is important and fewer words for the obvious or trivial. Noah Webster collected 12,000 new words describing the governmental differences between America and Britain for his 1828 American Dictionary, which displaced Johnson's English dictionary. In The Queens' Vernacular, anthropologist Bruce Rodgers also collected 12,000 words which describe the essential differences between "gays" and "straights". Yes Virginia, gays have a their own 12,000 word dictionary because "straight" language cannot describe their world. It is really that different.

But, is The Queens' Vernacular an esoteric, unknown vocabulary? Here is what homophile leaders have to say. The 420 page, Long Road To Freedom: The Advocate History of the Gay and Lesbian Movement (1994) reports that:

The Queens' Vernacular firmly remains a form of homosexual slang "To gay men...something of a secret code" in a hostile culture. (Emphasis added)

Writing in his anthology of homosexual "dictionaries and glossaries," Wayne Dynes, Editor-in-Chief of the Encyclopedia of Homosexuality, notes that QV is the foremost gay lexicon, "reissued without change as Gaytalk." The Joys of Gay Sex authors Silverstein and White and Dennis Altman in The Homosexualization of America say amen to that!

Rodgers writes that his microcultural analysis required:

"years of interviews with hundreds of informants...revealing the common speech of a traditionally oppressed minority & It is a book about words & agreed-upon symbols for recognizing things and actions... We use words to give expression to our thoughts about our experience...The Queens' Vernacular demonstrates the imagination, subtlety, humor, self-pity and downright masochism with which gay people have forged the common language into a means of communicating their experience. "

These authors happened upon the QV while conducting research on Partner Solicitation Characteristics as a Reflection of Male Sexual Orientation (Judith Reisman and Charles Johnson, 1995). So what are some uniquely gay words for boys? Well remember this; boys are the largest--most important--thematic category in the QV/Gaytalk. Following is a small sample of the 254 "gay" words for boys, described as "chicken." Chicken is the primary QV term. It clearly implies that boys are for consumption. (All ellipses are inserted by the authors).

Chicken: a young recruit; any boy under the age of consent, heterosexual, fair of face and unfamiliar with homosexuality.

Freshly killed: [butchered] recently introduced to as_fuc_ing. "See how bowlegged that chicken walks--looks like he was freshly killed in the hayloft."

Pluck some feathers; rip off a drumstick; skin some chicken.

Head and heels: describing physical allurements, despite extreme youth, but too young or small to know what to do in bed: he must be helped by someone more experienced who will clasp the boy by his head and heels to lift him onto the co_k.

Jail Tail: any boy below the age of consent with whom sex merits a stretch in the pen.

Egg: a male child too young to be sexually developed and therefore considered neuter. Syn: bibette; peepee meat; yo-yo. Related terms: egg-sucker-a cradle robber; man who likes very young boys. Syn: peepee lover... "Anything older than ten is over the hill to a peepee lover". &"[R]eady to crack open," said of a boy on the verge of puberty. Also see chicken.

Baby butch; boyish, adolescent lesbian &.Syn: camper; camp truck; dinky dyke; semi-diesel.

Cupcake: young girlish boy, though not necessarily gay &.cupcakes; small but rounded buttocks, most temptingly found on narrow hipped boys. Syn: English Muffins; hone rolls; hot cross buns; rounders. "Ask that kid with the rounders if he'd be interested in joining in an ancient Greek initiation rite."

Bait: attractive, young male in league with the police or criminal element to entrap homosexuals into performing an act of sex in a public place. "Be careful of that tearoom &there's usually some bait positioned around the throne-room."

Benny house bordello: featuring young boys for its homosexual customers. Syn: boy's smoking house; fag factory, flower house...tad (boy)...sugar loaf; a kept boy; sugar babe, talent; young attractive boys; talent scout person recruiting what he considers promising young boys

Peter Pan: 1. superboby; 2. Young hustler who charges an arm and leg for fu_king; 3. a winsome boy hired to act as bait to entrap prominent homosexuals, Syn: worm for the hook.

Poultry dealer: man who pimps boys to interested homosexuals, ex. pluck some feathers; to make love with a young boy, especially ana--y, Syn: rip off a drumstick; skin some chicken (to force a boy to come across); chicken dinner, chicken looking chicken-little; pig meat; chicken feed; boy-eater, quail. [Also see] wagette, wag-little boy's penis.

Professional guest: kept boy who doesn't put out for his host; Syn: fresh fruit; freshly butchered; freshly killed; fresh meat; fresh one; fresh piece; fried chicken fuc-ing boy; gay lad; gay milk bar; half-boy; kept boy; rent boy; roundeye (if the lad is still a virgin, ana--y, he is called a kewpie doll); punk; gal-boy; girl-boy; green boy; kid; pussy boy; sex boy; youngster to be active in force-fuc_ing; to emasculate another man figuratively, etc.; praising a young, little, firm body, "I did this hitchhiker I picked up--he sure was a cute, little, tight thing."

Sixteenager: young man who tries out homosexuality, see chicken. Syn: come-on boy; decoy[er]; fairy hawk...angel with a dirty face; babette; baby; baby buggy; baby butch; baby Crockett; baby discovers; baby paste; baggage-boy; bait; bait the hook &barbie dogs; young action; young enough to get under the gate ...youngster, &young stuff, youthos.

Youth Worker: beauty; precious; punkie; puppy fresh; rustler, butchered chicken; peach fuzz; peeper, fawn; lifesaver; missy; dinner; young stuff; sweet thing; fried chicken; peep-peep; tender, babette; fragile number &quail; brunster; queer pup; bud chit; token chicken fresh, etc.

Etc., etc., etc., for over a hundred more. This lingo is absent >from all normal national dictionaries for now. And, no Virginia, affectionate, non-sexual or helpful words for boys did not exist.

It is fair to say that Rodger's 12,000 word QV lexicon supports Webster's statement--that language grows among the common people, and that it is the common language which most accurately describes that groups beliefs, conduct, hopes, legal and political aspirations.

In 1828, Webster explained his "new vocabulary directly reflected the American philosophy of government...[t]he Christian concept of individual liberty and property established under the Constitution." So too is Rodger's "new vocabulary directly related to the [homosexual] philosophy of government." In 254 words, this "traditionally oppressed minority" would legalize access to any age boys ("chickens") for sex.

So, the homosexual view of "life, individual liberty and property" is radically subversive of the document known as the Declaration of Independence. The QV should inform the debate on the Boy Scouts, Age of Consent, Affectional and Sexual Orientation and a wide array of "gay" programs which would eliminate the constraints of American law. As in "The UN Rights of the Child," sexual psychopathic zealots would have children become free agents, emancipated from their parents legal protections and controls. This was exactly what Alfred C. Kinsey, the father of the sexual and gay rights revolutions, planned to occur in the second half of the 20th century.

Let's come to terms in the debate. Look it up! Go get the homosexual dictionary and really learn what homosexual leaders--including legislators, judges, prosecuting attorneys--mean when they use their 12,000 word "secret code" among themselves. The real "gay" language exposes the well-hidden, vulnerable underbelly of the homosexual political agenda. As parents rights to rear and protect their children are destroyed to make room for more and more homosexual "civil rights," these sexual revolutionaries celebrate, making their way, classroom by classroom, toward legal access to all our children.

Hey, don't blame us, we just read the dictionary.

Judith Reisman is the author of Kinsey, Crimes & Consequences (1998, 2000) and Eunice Van Winkle Ray is the founder of RSVPAmerica

More Recent Defenses of Pedophilia

Click to Reach the NARTH at www.narth.com

Harris Mirkin recently wrote a lead article in the Journal of Homosexuality entitled "The Pattern of Sexual Politics: Feminism, Homosexuality and Pedophilia." Using social-constructionist theory, he argues that the concept of child molestation is a "culture- and class-specific creation" which can and should be changed.

He likens the battle for the legalization of pedophilia to the battles for women's rights, homosexual rights, and even the civil rights of blacks.

He sees the hoped-for shift as taking place in two stages. During the first stage, the opponents of pedophilia control the debate by insisting that the issue is non-negotiable--while using psychological and moral categories to silence all discussion.

But in the second stage, Mirkin says, the discussion must move on to such issues as the "right" of children to have and enjoy sex.

If this paradigm shift could be accomplished, the issue would move from the moral to the political arena, and therefore become open to negotiation. For example, rather than decrying sexual abuse, lawmakers would be forced to argue about when and under what conditions adult/child sex could be accepted. Once the issues becomes "discussible," it would only be a matter of time before the public would begin to view pedophilia as another sexual orientation, and not a choice for the pedophile.

The response to the APA article shows that for the present, social opposition to pedophilia continues to be strong. Finkelhor's response to Bauserman, which was included in Male Intergenerational Intimacy, explains why:

"Some types of social relationships violate deeply held values and principles in our culture about equality and self-determination. Sex between adults and children is one of them. Evidence that certain children have positive experiences does not challenge these values, which have deep roots in our worldview."

To pedophile advocates, any discussion of the benefits of child-adult sex is a victory. The APA should have understood this, should have known about Bauserman's connections, and should have been well aware of--and vocally resistant to--the growing movement to legalize pedophilia.

Endnote

Mirkin, Harris, "The Pattern of Sexual Politics: Feminism, Homosexuality and Pedophilia," Journal of Homosexuality vol. 37(2), 1999, p. 1-24.

Copyright © NARTH. All Rights Reserved.

Back to 'Learning About

Homosexuality' main page

NARTH

What the APA Should Have Known

By Joseph Nicolosi, Ph.D. and Dale O'Leary

Deconstructionists argue that distinctions between the genders are arbitrary and political. Now, the same argument is being advanced by man-boy love advocates about the distinction between the generations.

An article published last summer in the American Psychological Association's Psychological Bulletin has drawn a recent firestorm of criticism. Talk show hosts and congressmen are calling for investigations. The outrage has focused on the authors' conclusion, based on their analysis of child-molestation studies, that "the negative effects [of sexual abuse] were neither pervasive nor typically intense."

The article was entitled "A Meta-analytic Examination of Assumed Properties of Child Sexual Abuse Using College Samples."

APA spokeswoman Rhea Faberman defended publication of the article as part of the scientific work of the organization, saying, "We try to create a lot of dialogue." She labeled "ridiculous" the claim of radio talk-show host Dr. Laura Schlessinger that publication of the article and the attempt to normalize pedophilia were in any way related.

Contrary to Ms. Faberman's assertion, however:

1. There is a real and growing movement to legitimize and also legalize sexual relations between boys aged 10 to 16 and adult males; 2. Robert Bauserman, one of the authors of the article, has associated himself with the pedophilia movement through a previous article; 3. The movement's strategy is to promote the "objective" study of child/adult sex, free of moral considerations; 4. The APA should have known this before they published the article. Those who are interested in legalizing sexual relations between adults and children want to change the parameters of the discussion from the "absolutist" moral position, to the "relative" position that it can sometimes be beneficial. The A.P.A. article furthered exactly this position.

Deconstructionists have argued--with some success--that distinctions between the genders are arbitrary and politically motivated. Now, the same argument is being advanced about the distinction between the generations.

In a recent lead article of the Journal of Homosexuality (1), for example, Harris Mirkin says the "sexually privileged" have disadvantaged the pedophile through sheer political force in the same way that blacks were disadvantaged by whites before the civil-rights movement.

The Movement to Legitimize Pedophilia

In 1981, Dr. Theo Sandfort, co-director of the research program of the Department of Gay and Lesbian Studies at the University of Utrecht, Netherlands, interviewed 25 boys aged 10 to 16 who were currently involved in sexual relationships with adult men. The interviews took place in the homes of the men.

According to Sandfort, "For virtually all the boys ... the sexual contact itself was experienced positively..." Could an adult-child sexual contact, then, truly be called positive for the child? Based on the research presented, Sandfort answered that question in the affirmative.

The study was severely criticized by experts in the field of child sexual abuse. Dr. David Mrazek, co-editor of Sexually Abused Children and Their Families, attacked the Sandfort research as unethical, saying:

"In this study, the researchers joined with members of the National Pedophile Workshop to 'study' the boys who were the sexual 'partners' of its members ... there is no evidence that human subject safeguards were a paramount concern. However, there is ample evidence that the study was politically motivated to 'reform' legislation. "These researchers knowingly colluded with the perpetuation of secret illegal activity ... In the majority of cases, these boys' parents were unaware of these sexual activities with adult men, and the researchers contributed to this deception by their action." Child sexual-abuse expert Dr. David Finkelhor also criticized the Sandfort research, pointing to the numerous studies which show adult-child sexual contact as a predictor of later depression, suicidal behavior, dissociative disorders, alcohol and drug abuse, and sexual problems.

Dr. Finkelhor strongly defended laws against child/adult sex, saying that many of those now-grown children are very active in lobbying for such protection.

In 1990, the campaign to legalize man-boy sex was furthered by the publication of a two-issue special of the Journal on Homosexuality, reissued as Male Intergenerational Intimacy: Historical, Socio-Psychological, and Legal Perspectives.

This volume provided devastating information on the way psychologically immature pedophile men use vulnerable boys who are starved for adult nurturance and protection.

In the forward, Gunter Schmidt decries discrimination against and persecution of pedophiles, and describes "successful pedophile relationships which help and encourage the child, even though the child often agrees to sex while really seeking comfort and affection. These are often emotionally deprived, deeply lonely, socially isolated children who seek, as it were, a refuge in an adult's love and for whom, because of their misery, see it as a stroke of luck to have found such an 'enormously nurturant relationship'." There is another deeply disturbing article in the volume, revealingly titled, "The Main Thing is Being Wanted: Some Case Studies on Adult Sexual Experiences with Children." In it, pedophiles reveal their need to find a child who will satisfy their desire for uncritical affirmation and a lost youth. One of the men justifies his activity as a search for love, and complains that: "Although I've had physical relationships with probably, I don't know, maybe a hundred or more boys over the years, I can only point to four or five true relationships over that time."

The volume also contains an introductory article which decries society's anti-pedophile sentiment. The authors complain about the difficulty studying man-boy relationships in "an objective way," and they hope the social sciences will adopt a broader approach which could lead to understanding of the "diversity and possible benefits of intergenerational intimacy."

Bauserman Defends Sandfort's Research

The same volume contains an article by Robert Bauserman-co-author of the A.P.A. study--which complains that objective research is impossible in a social climate that condemns man-boy sexual relationships. Bauserman decries the prevailing ideology that labels all boys as "victims" and all adult pedophiles as "perpetrators." He attacks researchers Mzarek and Finkelhor as being driven by a "particular set of beliefs about adult-juvenile sex." Bauserman looks for a new "scientific objectivity," with the explicit call for research that will challenge the social-moral taboo against adult/child sex. The meta-analysis which he co-authored, and which the American Psychological Association published, can be seen as Bauserman's follow-up to his Journal of Homosexuality article.

More Recent Defenses of Pedophilia Harris Mirkin recently wrote a lead article in the Journal of Homosexuality entitled "The Pattern of Sexual Politics: Feminism, Homosexuality and Pedophilia." Using social-constructionist theory, he argues that the concept of child molestation is a "culture- and class-specific creation" which can and should be changed.

He likens the battle for the legalization of pedophilia to the battles for women's rights, homosexual rights, and even the civil rights of blacks.

He sees the hoped-for shift as taking place in two stages. During the first stage, the opponents of pedophilia control the debate by insisting that the issue is non-negotiable--while using psychological and moral categories to silence all discussion.

But in the second stage, Mirkin says, the discussion must move on to such issues as the "right" of children to have and enjoy sex.

If this paradigm shift could be accomplished, the issue would move from the moral to the political arena, and therefore become open to negotiation. For example, rather than decrying sexual abuse, lawmakers would be forced to argue about when and under what conditions adult/child sex could be accepted. Once the issues becomes "discussible," it would only be a matter of time before the public would begin to view pedophilia as another sexual orientation, and not a choice for the pedophile.

The response to the APA article shows that for the present, social opposition to pedophilia continues to be strong. Finkelhor's response to Bauserman, which was included in Male Intergenerational Intimacy, explains why:

"Some types of social relationships violate deeply held values and principles in our culture about equality and self-determination. Sex between adults and children is one of them. Evidence that certain children have positive experiences does not challenge these values, which have deep roots in our worldview." To pedophile advocates, any discussion of the benefits of child-adult sex is a victory. The APA should have understood this, should have known about Bauserman's connections, and should have been well aware of--and vocally resistant to--the growing movement to legalize pedophilia.

Endnote

Mirkin, Harris, "The Pattern of Sexual Politics: Feminism, Homosexuality and Pedophilia," Journal of Homosexuality vol. 37(2), 1999, p. 1-24.

Another Homosexual Scoutmaster

Assaults Boy Scouts

The The Tribune-Review(PA) reported 6/14/2000 that actor John Levendosky, 52, of Derry, PA, was charged with corruption of minors, simple assault, endangering the welfare of children and related charges and placed in prison in lieu of $25,000 bond. He was immediately suspended from his position as assistant Scoutmaster.

State police said Levendosky used a camping trip in Fairfield Township as a way to get the three boys to strip naked, spank each other and cavort about in various stages of dress. He told authorities he planned the weekend because he has always been fascinated by bondage and servitude, and bound and blindfolded the boys at various times.

Levendosky bound each boy's hands together with rope and blindfolded each with an Ace bandage. He then tied each boy to a separate tree, suspending them by their hands. He used a folding knife to carve the letter "T" into each boy's chest, at one point causing one of the boys to moan, "I can't take this anymore." Troopers found quantities of pornographic materials in his home.

HOMOSEXUALS & THE YOUNG

Society has agreed that ethnic status and special protections should not be awarded to child molesters. Child molestation is regarded in every state as a criminal offense. Yet it is common knowledge that homosexuals are notorious practitioners of sex with minors. The Gay Report (Summit Books, 1979, p. 275), a survey of homosexual attitudes and behavior by Jay and Young, two homosexual researchers, revealed that 73% of homosexuals surveyed had at some time had sex with boys 16 years of age or younger.

J.C. Coleman, in Abnormal Psychology and Modern Life (1964) lists early homosexual experience as the main cause of homosexuality. He found that more than 50% of adult homosexuals had been seduced by older homosexuals before the age of 14.

In a national random survey of 4,340 adults, 96% of heterosexual males and 97% of normal females reported that their first sexual experience was heterosexual. 85% of homosexuals and 29% of lesbians reported their first sexual experience as bisexual or homosexual (Nebraska Medical Journal, August, 1985).

A survey in the British journal of Sexual Medicine (April 1987) reported the mean age of homosexuals' first sexual encounters with other males as 15 years and one month. Crime statistics reveal that about 31% of children younger than 13 who claim to have been molested by men were homosexually assaulted ("Child Molestation and Homosexuality," Institute for the Scientific Investigation of Sexuality, 1987. See also Psychological Reports, 1986, #58, pp. 327 - 337, which reveals that homosexuals, [while representing perhaps 2% of the population] perpetrate more than one third of all reported child molestations.)

Boy Scouts Under Constant Attack

A nationwide investigation of child molestation in the Boy Scouts of America (see Insight magazine, June 17, 1991) reported 1,151 complaints by Boy Scouts of abuse by Scout leaders in the past 19 years, in all 50 States and the District of Columbia. This makes, the article stated, "sex abuse more common in Scouting than accidental deaths and serious injuries ... In that time, at least 416 men have been arrested or banned from Scouting for molesting boys in their care." The Boy Scouts have spent literally millions of dollars in litigation related to this abuse.

Knowing that between one fourth and one third of child molestations involve man - boy contact, homosexual extremists are now conveniently attempting to claim that male molesters of boys should not be considered homosexuals. However, a recent Canadian study of male child molesters revealed the following: (1) 30% of the offenders studied admitted to having engaged in homosexual acts with adults; and (2) 91% of molesters of non - familial boys admitted to no lifetime sexual contact other than homosexual - i.e., their sexual orientation was clearly homosexual (Marshall, W.L., et. al., "Early onset and deviant sexuality in child molesters," Journal of Interpersonal Violence, 1991,6,323 - 336).

Among homosexual activists themselves, a heated debate rages over whether the homosexual community should include among their ranks homosexuals who have sex with the young. In a typical editorial favoring inclusion that appeared recently in the homosexual newspaper Bay Area Reporter (Feb 13, 1992, p. 6), one Bradley Rose said:

..... What is a pedophile? A pedophile is not a rapist or a murderer, or a devil, but a person who loves ... As a gay child, I would have welcomed sexual relations with males, of adult age as well as my own ...

Gay liberation is stuck in backwaters as long as gay children are denied their sexuality and as long as parents are allowed to push their gay children into the roles of hetero adults ... Most of the heteros just don't know how to give gay affirming support to their children (the homosexual ones as well as the non - gay ones). Let's give them a hand.

Similarly, support for "gay men who love boys" is found in an editorial in the San Francisco Sentinel, another homosexual newspaper. In fact the editorial states that "the love between men and boys is at the foundation of homosexuality" ("No Place for Homo Homophobia," March 26,1992). .✪

© Copyright #Catholic Family Association of America# 2002. All rights reserved. Contact Us at info@cathfam.org
[Home | We need your help! | 3D Ultrasound Movies of Babies in the Womb]

Holocaust Survivor: Molested by Homosexual Guards

Founder of Boston Holocaust Museum spent five years in Nazi camps

(from the Massachusetts News, www.massnews.com)

It's commonly accepted that Hitler targeted homosexuals for extermination just as he did the Jews.

"Not so," says Stephan Ross, the Newton resident who is the founder of the Holocaust Museum in Boston.

And he should know. Ross was there. He lived, and almost died, in Nazi prison camps from the age of 9 to 14.

And while the abuse of the Nazis took many forms, he says he was sexually molested more than once by homosexual Nazi prison guards. He knew it was also going on with other prisoners, "although I didn't go looking for it."

He estimates that about 20 percent of those guarding Jewish prisoners were homosexual. And he says that Hitler may have taken a public stance against homosexuals, but he believes that stance was simply a device to round up Catholic priests or others Hitler wanted to remove from society.

"All they [those accused of being homosexual] had to do to get out [of the camp] was to sign a paper to say that they had been rehabilitated and wouldn't do it [engage in homosexual activity] anymore," he says. "They were allowed to go back to their families. "They were not targeted to die. Not like we were."

Now 68 and living in Newton, Ross is retired after a successful career. He says he attended three universities and became a licensed psychologist. His son, Michael Ross, was recently elected a city councilor in Boston.

He tells of horrors in the Nazi camps that range from hiding in the filth of outhouses to being hanged until he was almost dead for eating a piece of a potato he was peeling. And while he has tried for decades to forget, he says he is "still suffering, still living in pain. I still can't get it off my back."

Ross' sexual abuse came at the hands of a guard who intercepted him as he was going from the barracks one early morning to get water.

"We lived 1,800 to a barracks and 10 to a section," he says. We just laid on boards, and didn't cover ourselves with anything. We smelled horribly and lice were sucking the blood out of us.

"But they woke us in the mornings at about 4 a.m., and we would run to try to get a little water. A guard caught me one morning and made me 'do his d---.' I threw up. I couldn't handle it. To this day I'm very angry about it.

"Other times they would beat you and then make you do that [perform oral sex]."

Ross says he knows there have been books written on the topic. "I haven't seen them. I can only tell you what I saw," he says.

"But don't underestimate my knowledge just because I was a little kid at the time. I was very inquisitive, and I understood what was going on. I was able to watch the guards and even the commandant. I walked behind other people's beds, and I knew what was happening."

Ross says he is most furious about those who he says are trying to twist or deny the reality of what happened in the camps.

"How can I tell civilized people who have not gone through this? How can I speak the truth, when the truth is unspeakable?"

"You have these hysterical scholars who have ridiculed us. They come out of the silver-spoon world and talk about us murdering each other. What do they know about having a gun at your head?"

Ross says he has nothing against homosexuals in general. "I'm trying to build a foundation for tolerance for all people," he says. "I'm not really interested in aligning myself [against homosexuals]."

"But I don't consider their agenda to be normal, and I'm not pleased with this. I just look at them and think there has to be some kind of connection with how they were brought up."

"I really don't want to study or learn about it, I just don't want to have anything to do with it."

Is This Diversity, Or Tragedy? Children as Victims of their Parents' Choices

By Dale O'Leary

Buying Mother

A child was created by surrogate motherhood for two homosexual men who had decided they wanted to have a family. "Daddy" and his partner Don, twenty years younger, had arranged an artificial insemination with a woman who agreed to relinquish her parental rights in exchange for health care and financial compensation.

Researcher Barbara Eisold describes some of the child's trauma in an article entitled "Recreating Mother." (1).

Lacking a mother of his own, the child, Nick, was cared for by a hired nanny. He began attending school when he was only two. When he was 2 1/2, the nanny was abruptly fired and replaced. The replacement was also fired, and a third nanny hired. Then the men adopted a second child.

At age 4 1/2, Nick began acting out and was sent to a female child psychologist—the fifth mother-substitute hired by his fathers. Nick lived in a world where "mommies" were hired and fired, so he fantasized about buying a new mother.

The therapist described his desperate struggle to understand family relationships. "Nick was often beside himself with anxiety. He wanted desperately to be liked by other children and by [his teacher]. He had trouble waiting, and was not certain about what would make him likable."

The Evidence: Mother-Hunger May Be Innate

Eisold asks: "How do we explain why this child, the son of a male couple, seemed to need to construct a woman – "Mother" – with whom he could play the role of a loving boy/man? How did such an idea enter his mind? What inspired his intensity on the subject?"

And she wondered how the boy's psychological construction of the missing, longed-for mother affected his gender-identity development.

Eisold sees some normal, programmed developmental forces at work in a boy who has no mother: if he has none, he will need to make one. This must be part of what it means to be human: children need both mothers and fathers.

Mother-Hunger is Seen by Deconstructionists as "Gender Bias" Created by Society . But her article is critiqued in the same journal by Karen Saakvitne (2), who insists Eisold is applying cultural biases about gender, sexual orientation, attachment, and separation to this child's longing for a mother. Saakvitne sees the child's need for a mother, and his need to make sense of the world he has been forced to live in, as something imposed on him by a society filled with mere assumptions and biases about gender. She faults Eisold for accepting those biases.

Although the social-constructionist sees gender as something created by society, a great body of evidence reveals that children do best in homes with both mothers and fathers. Such exposure helps the child to fully develop his own sexual identity and to relate to persons of both sexes in the real world. New research on the way in which the brain functions makes clear that this need for a close relationship with persons of both sexes is not a mere social preference, but a response to the biological imperative (3).

Mom and Dad Are Not Interchangeable

Henry Biller has studied parent-child interaction and compared his findings with other work in the field (4). He says:

Differences between the mother and father can be very stimulating to the infant, even those that might appear quite superficial to the adult. Even if the father and mother behave in generally similar ways, they provide contrasting images for the infant. The father is usually larger than the mother, his voice is deeper, his clothes are not the same, and he moves and reacts differently...The infant also learns that different people can be expected to fulfill different needs. For example, the infant may prefer the mother when hungry or tired, and the father when seeking stimulation of more active play. The infant who receives verbal as well as physical stimulation from both mother and father profits from the experience...Mothers and fathers, in addition to having distinctive sounding voices, have different verbal styles when communicating to infants and children as well as to other adults. Such differences provide the infant with an important source of stimulation and learning (p. 12). Because some of my initial findings suggested that father absence during the first few years of life might inhibit certain aspects of the child's development, I began to observe more closely parent-infant relationships in various types of two-parent families. I discovered that when they are involved with infants, fathers tend to be more physically active with them than mothers are, playing more vigorously. This seems to be not only because fathers may be less concerned with their children's fragility, especially if they have sons, but also because they themselves have more of a need for physically stimulating activities (p. 12). It was also apparent that infants with involved fathers formed strong paternal attachments—and were usually at a developmental advantage, compared to those who had close relationships only with their mothers... Involved fathers are more likely to stimulate the infant to explore and investigate new objects, whereas mothers tend to engage their infants in relatively prestructured and predictable activities (p. 13). In the second year of life, the boys began to demonstrate more interest in interaction with their fathers, although the girls did not display any consistent preferences. In fact, by the end of the second year, all except one of the boys seemed to have a stronger paternal than maternal attachment [emphasis added]...(p. 14). Infants who have two positively involved parents tend to be more curious and eager to explore than those who do not have a close relationship with their fathers... Well-fathered infants are more secure and trusting in branching out in their explorations, and they may be somewhat more advanced in crawling, climbing and manipulating objects (p. 15). Advocates of gay marriage and adoption have admitted that it may be better for a child to have two parents than one, but argue that the sex of the two parents is irrelevant—two men or two women, they say, are just as good (or better) than opposite-sexed parents. But Biller discusses research which appears to refute that claim, in which teenage unwed mothers were studied:

Developmental psychology researcher Norma Radin and her colleagues (Radin, Oyserman, and Benn, 1991) have collected especially provocative evidence concerning the special significance of paternal involvement for infants and toddlers. They studied grandparent/grandchild relationships in predominantly working-class households in which adolescent unwed mothers were living with one or both of their parents. Overall, young children who had positively involved grandfathers displayed more competent behavior than those with relatively uninvolved grandfathers or absent grandfathers. Although other researchers have sometimes noted the contribution of the grandmother to the development of the child living in a single-mother family, Radin reported no clear-cut impact, suggesting a redundancy between the two forms of maternal influence [italics added]. On the other hand, the grandfather's nurturance seemed to contribute in several ways to the young child's adaptability. His observed nurturance was associated with infants being more responsive to maternal requests, and with the cognitive competence of two-year-olds. Furthermore, relatively high grandfather involvement in child care was related to observations of less fear, anger and distress being displayed by one-year-olds, especially boys (Biller 1993).

Removed from their fathers, it seems evident that children suffer. Although some of that suffering will be observed by researchers in childhood, we might speculate that more suffering will be seen in an interior sense of loss that will hamper the person's ability to form secure and intimate attachments in adulthood.

References:

(1) Eisold, B., 1998, "Recreating mother: The consolidation of 'heterosexual' gender identification in the young son of homosexual men, " American J. of Orthopsychiatry 68, 3:433-442.

(2) Saakvitne, K., 1998, "Recreating mother: A commentary on the case analysis, " American J. of Orthopsychiatry 68, 3:443-446.

(3) Biller, H. (1993) Fathers and Families: Paternal Factors in Child Development, Westport, CT: Auburn House.

© Copyright #Catholic Family Association of America# 2002. All rights reserved. Contact Us at info@cathfam.org

[Home | We need your help! | 3D Ultrasound Movies of Babies in the Womb]

Culture of Death Watch : An excerpt from "Pedophilia and Sex Education"

by Eugene Narrett, FRC

Click Here to Reach the Culture Wars web site

"These filmstrips were not designed to be exploitive," insisted the Rev. Roberta Nelson, a Unitarian Universalist minister from Concord, Massachusetts, on Public Eye (10/08/97). "They were not designed to be erotic. They were designed to answer young people's questions." Young people (ages 12 and 13) who did not have questions, or urges, before seeing Rev. Roberta's films were likely to have them afterward, for the material included graphic depictions of gay and lesbian lovemaking, auto-erotic techniques and transvestitism.

As CBS host Bryant Gumbel noted, Rev. Nelson "has been involved with church sex education for some time," for 25 years, in fact. "I've trained teachers, I've taught kids," she said, "and the overwhelming response in our churches has been one of gratitude and appreciation for the open, honest conversation we allow." In the 1990s, intercourse and conversation have regained their explicitly sexual connotation, in the name of educating and protecting children, in public schools and churches alike.

"Sex happens," said one single mother who indicated she supported the "conversation" in principle, though not all the details. When mother and psychologist, the quintessential modern person, has become another "liberal who had been mugged by reality." But what of the urges and fears bequeathed to the children? Their lives will become the stuff of daily horror films that rot unseen in the sewer this culture has become.

Although the children who were betrayed by their parents (or parent) into this labyrinth were readily exposed to the materials, concerned parents in Concord found them difficult to review. When they requested to see the texts and films, they repeatedly were rebuffed by the suddenly chaste Unitarians. "Was there any picture that stuck with you," the interviewer asked one of the kids. "Yeah," she replied, hesitantly, "the man licking his semen." Lick your own, why not lick someone else's, the message would seem to be. Whatever you do, don't discriminate. Church leader Van Loon said AYS "was the best thing for his son." Where are the child abuse zealots when stories like this break? The Unitarians' Sex Ed program has been used in 300 churches nationally since 1972, and parents have been struggling, futilely, since then to keep it from children. This battle is familiar, and the U-U's materials have their roots in the SIECUS-Planned Parenthood-Kinsey triangle which does it happen? "Usually two, three months before they go to high school," commented another soccer mom giving her view of youth sex today. One wonders what is taught, and not taught, in such homes, and how much of the "teaching" is delegated to TV. "We're giving them information so they don't get themselves in trouble," say parents supportive of the sex ed curriculum, seeming to assume that footage of adolescent cross dressing and sodomy will keep them out of trouble. Church leader Eric Van Loon stated, "I think this program has brought tremendous good for a huge number of kids."

Parents were invited to enter their adolescents in the AYS ("About Your Sexuality") program by signing of on a permission slip that blandly stated, "the kids will see contemporary media images." "What would you make of that!" demanded one parent, outraged after the fact, a day late and more than a dollar short. This single since 1948 has knocked this country off its moorings.

Part of Kinsey's teaching extolled the normality and frequency of sex between adults and children. Kinsey's researchers, after all, claimed that little children, even two month old infants were capable of multiple orgasms, although he acknowledged that "children will make violent attempts to avoid climax [sic], although they derive definite pleasure from the situation." If society did not "make so much of [pedophilia]," Kinsey felt, "children would not be harmed." Details of Kinsey's obsessions and methods have been discussed here previously, in comment on a new biography, Kinsey: A Public/Private Life (James Jones, 1997) [reviewed in this issue]. The point here is that his propaganda, as assimilated to the social engineering of the ruling elites, is bearing violent fruits of erotic perversion. ★

Back to 'Learning About

Homosexuality' main page

Child Molestation & Homosexuality

By Paul Cameron, Ph.D.

*Dr. Cameron is Chairman of the Family Research Institute. You may contact him at:
Family Research Institute, PO Box 62640, Colorado Springs, CO 80962 USA. Phone (303) 681-3113.*

Summary

Not only is the gay rights movement upfront in its desire to legitimize sex with children, but whether indexed by population reports of molestation, pedophile convictions, or teacher-pupil assaults, there is a strong, disproportionate association between child molestation and homosexuality. Ann Landers claim that homosexuals molest children at no higher a rate than heterosexuals do is untrue. The assertion by gay leaders and the American Psychological Association that a homosexual is less likely than a heterosexual to molest children is patently false.

Ann Landers (1) says the statement "Homosexuals are more inclined to molest children sexually than heterosexuals" is false. The American Psychological Association has sponsored a work that asserts: "Recognized researchers in the field on child abuse,... almost unanimously concur that homosexual people are actually less likely to approach children sexually." (2)

Why is it, then, that we read about sex between boys and men in every newspaper? Does it merely reflect sensationalist journalism? We know that heterosexual molestation also occurs. But since there are so many more heterosexuals than homosexuals, which kind of child molestation, homosexual or heterosexual, is proportionately more Likewise, between a fifth and a third of those who have been caught and/or convicted practiced homosexuality. Finally, a fifth to a third of surveyed gays admitted to child molestation. All-in-all, a rather consistent story.

Teacher-Pupil Sexual Interaction

Nowadays parents are labeled bigots for fearing that homosexual teachers might molest their children. But if homosexuals are more apt to molest children and are in a position to take advantage of them, this fear makes sense. Indeed, accounts of disproportionate homosexual teacher molestation appear throughout the scientific literature.

The original U.S. Kinsey study reported that common?

The Scientific Evidence

Three kinds of scientific evidence point to the proportion of homosexual molestation: 1) survey reports of molestation in the general population, 2) surveys of those caught and convicted of molestation, and 3) what homosexuals themselves have reported. These three lines of evidence suggest that the 1%-to-3% (of adults who practice homosexuality (3) account for between a fifth and a third of all child molestation.

Reports of Molestation by the General Population

In 1983, a probability survey of the sexual experiences of 4,340 adults in 5 U.S. cities found that about 3% of men and 7% of women reported sexual involvement with a man before the age of 134 (i.e., 30% was homosexual).

In 1983- (4), a random survey of 3,132 adults in Los Angeles found that 3.8% of men and 6.8% of women said that they had been sexually assaulted in childhood. Since 93% of the assailants were male, and only 1% of girls had been assaulted by females, about 35% of the assaults were homosexual. (5)

The Los Angeles Times (6) surveyed 2,628 adults across the U.S. in 1985. 27% of the women and 16% of the men claimed to have been sexually molested. Since 7% of the molestations of girls and 93% of the molestations of boys were by adults of the same sex, about 4 of every 10 molestations in this survey were homosexual.

In a random survey of British 15-to-19 yr

4% of the noncriminal white gays and 7% of the noncriminal white lesbians reported that they had their first homosexual experience with a teacher or other caretaker. None of the heterosexuals were recorded as having a teacher as their first sex partner. (18)

In England, Schofield reported that at least 2 of his 150 homosexuals had their first homosexual experience with a teacher and an additional 2 reported that their first homosexual contact with an adult was with a teacher. One of the 50 men in his comparison group had also been seduced by a homosexual teacher, while none of the men interviewed claimed involvement with a heterosexual teacher. (23)

In the 1978 McCall's magazine study of 1,400 principals, (24) 7% reported complaints about homosexual contact between teachers and pupils and 13% reported complaints about heterosexual contact between teachers and pupils (i.e., 35% of complaints were homosexual). 2% "knew of instances in which teachers discussed their homosexuality in class."

Of 400 consecutive Australian (25) cases of molestation, 7 boys and 4 girls were assaulted by male teachers. Thus 64% of those assaults were homosexual.

In 1987, Dr. Stephen Rubin, associate professor of psychology at Whitman College, conducted a 10 state survey (26) and found 199 sexual abuse cases involving teachers. 122 male teachers had abused female pupils and 14 female teachers had abused male students. In 59 cases, however, male teachers had abused male pupils and in 4 cases female teachers had abused female students (overall 32% were homosexual).

A 1983 survey asked 4,340 adults to report olds, 35% of the boys and 9% of the girls claimed to have been approached for sex by adult homosexuals and 2% of the boys and 1% of the girls admitted to succumbing. (7)

In science, a review of the professional literature published in a refereed scientific journal is considered to be an accurate summary of the current state of knowledge. The latest such review was published in 1985. (8) It concluded that homosexual acts were involved in 25% to 40% of the cases of child molestation recorded in the scientific and forensic literature.

Surveys of Those Convicted

Drs Freund and Heasman (9) of the Clarke Institute of Psychiatry in Toronto reviewed two sizeable studies and calculated that 34% and 32% of the offenders against children were homosexual. In cases they had personally handled, homosexuals accounted for 36% of their 457 pedophiles.

Dr. Adrian Copeland, a psychiatrist who works with sexual offenders at the Peters Institute in Philadelphia, said (10) that, from his experience, pedophiles tend to be homosexual and "40% to 45%" of child molesters have had "significant homosexual experiences."

Dr. C. H. McGaghy (11) estimated that "homosexual offenders probably constitute about half of molesters who work with children." Other studies are similar:

Of the approximately 100 child molesters in 1991 at the Massachusetts Treatment Center for Sexually Dangerous Persons, a third were heterosexual, a third bisexual and a third homosexual in orientation. (12)

A state-wide survey of 161 Vermont on any sexual advances and any physical sexual contact by elementary and secondary teachers (4% of those who were teachers in the survey claimed to be bisexual or homosexual).⁴ 29% of the advances by elementary and 16% of the advances by secondary school teachers were homosexual. In addition, 1 of 4 (25%) reports of actual sexual contact with an elementary school teacher were homosexual. In high school, 8 (22%) of 37 contacts between teacher and pupil were homosexual. 18% reported having had a homosexual teacher (8% of those over the age of 55 vs 25% of those under 26). Of those reporting a homosexual teacher, 6% said that the teacher influenced them to try homosexuality and 13% of the men and 4% of the women said that the teacher made sexual advances toward them.

Summary

Whether examining surveys of the general populace or counts of those caught, homosexual teachers are disproportionately apt to become sexually involved with children.

Proportionality: The Key

Study after nationwide study (3) has yielded estimates of male homosexuality that range between 1% and 3%. The proportion of lesbians in these studies is almost always lower, usually about half that of gays. So, overall, perhaps 2% of adults regularly indulge in homosexuality. Yet they account for between 20% to 40% of all molestations of children.

Child molestation is not to be taken lightly. Officials at a facility which serves about 1,500 runaway youngsters each year estimate that about half of the boys have been homosexually abused and 90% of the adolescents who committed sex offenses in 1984 found that 35 (22%) were homosexual. (13)

Of the 91 molesters of non-related children at Canada's Kingston Sexual Behaviour Clinic from 1978-1984, 38 (42%) engaged in homosexuality. (14)

Of 52 child molesters in Ottawa from 1983 to 1

In England for 1973, 802 persons (8 females) were convicted of indecent assault on a male, and 3,006 (6 of them female) were convicted of indecent assault on a female (i.e., 21% were homosexual). 88% of male and about 70% of female victims were under age sixteen. (16)

Because of this pattern, Judge J. T. Rees concluded that "the male homosexual naturally seeks the company of the male adolescent, or of the young male adult, in preference to that of the fully-grown man. [In 1947] 986 persons were convicted of homosexual and unnatural offences. Of those, 257 were indictable offences involving 402 male victims.... The great majority of [whom]... were under the age of 16. Only 11%... were over 21."

"[T]he problem of male homosexuality is in essence the problem of the corruption of youth by itself [i.e., by other boys] and by its elders. [And thereby]... the creation... of new addicts ready to corrupt a still further generation of young men and boys in the future." (17)

What Homosexuals Admit

The 1948 Kinsey survey found that 37% of the gays and 2% of the lesbians admitted to sexual relations with under-17-yr-olds, and girls heterosexually assaulted. (27) Investigation of those suffering severe chronic mental illness implicates child molestation as a primary cause (45% of Bigras et al s (28) patients were homosexually abused).

If 2% of the population is responsible for 20% to 40% of something as socially and personally troubling as child molestation, something must be desperately wrong with that 2%. Not every homosexual is a child molester. But enough gays do molest children so that the risk of a homosexual molesting a child is 10 to 20 times greater than that of a heterosexual.

Goals of the Gay Movement

The gay movement is forthright about seeking to legitimize child-adult homosexual sex. In 1987, The Journal of Homosexuality "the scholarly organ of the gay rights movement " published "Pedophilia and the Gay Movement." (29) Author Theo Sandfort detailed homosexual efforts to end "oppression towards pedophilia." In 1980 the largest Dutch gay organization (the COC) "adopted the position that the liberation of pedophilia must be viewed as a gay issue... [and that] ages of consent should therefore be abolished... by acknowledging the affinity between homosexuality and pedophilia, the COC has quite possibly made it easier for homosexual adults to become more sensitive to erotic desires of younger members of their sex, thereby broadening gay identity."

In 1990 COC achieved a significant victory: lowering of the age of consent for homosexual sex in Holland to 12 (unless the parents object, in which case it goes up to 15). (30) In the U.S. and Canada, the North American Man-Boy Love Association

28% of the gays and 1% of the lesbians admitted to sexual relations with under-16-yr-olds while they themselves were aged 18 or older. (18)

In 1970 the Kinsey Institute interviewed 565 white gays in San Francisco: 25% of them admitted to having had sex with boys aged 16 or younger while they themselves were at least 21. (19)

In The Gay Report, 23% of the gays and 6% of the lesbians admitted to sexual interaction with youth less than 16 years of age. (20)

In France, 129 convicted gays (21)(average age 34 years) said they had had sexual contact with a total of 11,007 boys (an average of 85 different boys per man). Abel et al reported similarly that men who molested girls outside their family had averaged 20 victims each; those who molested boys averaged 150 victims each. (22) 985, 31 (60%) were homosexual. (15)

Summary

About a third of the reports of molestation by the populace have involved homosexuality.

marches proudly in many gay pride parades with the stated goal of removing the barriers to man-boy sex. Note the phrases "oppression towards pedophilia" and "liberation of pedophilia." It is clear that those who advocate the legalization of sex between adults and children intend to argue that such conduct is a "civil right," deserving of the same legal protections afforded to other minorities. A large proportion of Americans regard that argument as a mere pretext to giving "sexual predators" free reign to take advantage of vulnerable children.

Conclusion

Not only is the gay rights movement upfront in its desire to legitimize sex with children, but whether indexed by population reports of molestation, pedophile convictions, or teacher-pupil assaults, there is a strong, disproportionate association between child molestation and homosexuality. Ann Landers claim that homosexuals molest children at no higher a rate than heterosexuals do is untrue. The assertion by gay leaders and the American Psychological Association that a homosexual is less likely than a heterosexual to molest children is patently false.

AS THE CATHOLIC CHURCH SEES THE ISSUE OF HOMOSEXUALITY

The teaching of the Roman Catholic Church on homosexuality is given in the official Latin version of the Catechism which has recently been released. Please reference the following paragraphs, 2357-2359. The Catholic teaching on this issue is in accord with Cardinal Ratzinger's pastoral, speaking for the Magisterium of the Roman Catholic Church, which was released in 1986 and is subsequently referenced below.

2357. Homosexuality refers to relations between men or between women who experience an exclusive or predominant sexual attraction toward persons of the same sex. It has taken a great variety of forms through the centuries and in different cultures. Its psychological genesis remains largely unexplained. Basing itself on Sacred Scripture, which presents homosexual acts as acts of grave depravity, tradition has always declared that homosexual acts are intrinsically disordered. They are contrary to the natural law. They close the sexual act to the gift of life. They do not proceed from a genuine affective and sexual complementarity. Under no circumstances can they be approved.

2358. The number of men and women who have deep-seated homosexual tendencies is not negligible. This inclination, which is objectively disordered, constitutes for most of them a trial. They must be accepted with respect, compassion, and sensitivity. Every sign of unjust discrimination in their regard should be avoided. These persons are called to fulfill God's will in their lives and, if they are Christians, to unite to the sacrifice of the Lord's Cross the difficulties they may encounter from their condition.

2359. Homosexual persons are called to chastity. By the virtues of self-mastery that teach them inner freedom, at times by the support of disinterested friendship, by prayer and sacramental grace, they can and should gradually and resolutely approach Christian perfection.

The definitive position of the teaching Magisterium of the Roman Catholic Church on homosexuality is presented in a Letter to the Bishops of the Catholic Church on the Pastoral Care of Homosexual persons given at Rome, 1 October 1986 by Joseph Cardinal Ratzinger, Prefect of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith. The major excerpts from that letter appear on page 10 under the title Concerning Legislative Proposals & The Non-discrimination Of Homosexual Persons. ☪

Foreword

Recently, legislation has been proposed in various places which would make discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation illegal. In some cities, municipal authorities have made public housing, otherwise reserved for families, available to homosexual (and unmarried heterosexual) couples. Such initiatives, even where they seem more directed toward support of basic civil rights than condonement of homosexual activity or a homosexual lifestyle, may in fact have a negative impact on the family and society. Such things as the adoption of children, the employment of teachers, the housing needs of genuine families, landlords' legitimate concerns in screening potential tenants, for example, are often implicated.

While it would be impossible to anticipate every eventuality in respect to legislative proposals in this area, these observations will try to identify some principles and distinctions of a general nature which should be taken into consideration by the conscientious legislator, voter, or church authority who is confronted with such issues.

The first section will recall relevant passages from the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith's 'Letter to the Bishops of the Catholic Church on the Pastoral Care of Homosexual Persons' of 1986. The second section will deal with their application.

I. Relevant Passages from the CDF's 'Letter'

1. The letter recalls that the CDF's 'Declaration on Certain Questions Concerning Sexual Ethics' of 1975 'took note of the distinction commonly drawn between the homosexual condition or tendency and individual homosexual actions'; the latter are "intrinsically disordered" and 'in no case to be approved of" (No. 3).
2. Since "[i]n the discussion which followed the publication of the (aforementioned) declaration ..., an overly benign interpretation was given to the homosexual condition itself, some going so far as to call it neutral or even good,' the letter goes on to clarify: 'Although the particular inclination of the homosexual person is not a sin, it is a more or less strong tendency ordered toward an intrinsic moral evil; and thus the inclination itself must be seen as an objective disorder. Therefore special concern and pastoral attention should be directed toward those who have this condition, lest they be led to believe that the living out of this orientation in homosexual activity is a morally acceptable option. It is not' (No. 3).
3. 'As in every moral disorder, homosexual activity prevents one's own fulfillment and happiness by acting contrary to the creative wisdom of God. The church, in rejecting erroneous opinions regarding homosexuality, does not limit but rather defends personal freedom and dignity realistically and authentically understood' (No. 7).
4. In reference to the homosexual movement, the letter states: 'One tactic used is to protest that any and all criticism of or reservations about homosexual people, their activity and lifestyle, are simply diverse forms of unjust discrimination' (No. 9).
5. 'There is an effort in some countries to manipulate the church by gaining the often well-intentioned support of her pastors with a view to changing civil statutes and laws. This is done in order to conform to these pressure groups' concept that homosexuality is at least a completely harmless, if not an entirely good, thing. Even when the practice of homosexuality may seriously threaten the lives and well-being of a large number of people, its advocates remain undeterred and refuse to consider the magnitude of the risks involved' (No. 9)

6. 'She (the church) is also aware that the view that homosexual activity is equivalent to or as acceptable as the sexual expression of conjugal love has a direct impact on society's understanding of the nature and rights of the family and puts them in jeopardy' (No. 9)

7. 'It is deplorable that homosexual persons have been and are the object of violent malice in speech or in action. Such treatment deserves condemnation from the church's pastors wherever it occurs. It reveals a kind of disregard for others which endangers the most fundamental principles of a healthy society. The intrinsic dignity of each person must always be respected in word, in action and in law.

'But the proper reaction to crimes committed against homosexual persons should not be to claim that the homosexual condition is not disordered. When such a claim is made and when homosexual activity is consequently condoned, or when civil legislation is introduced to protect behavior to which no one has any conceivable right, neither the church nor society at large should be surprised when other distorted notions and practices gain ground, and irrational and violent reactions increase (No. 10).

8. "What is at all costs to be avoided is the unfounded and demeaning assumption that the sexual behavior of homosexual persons is always and totally compulsive and therefore inculpable. What is essential is that the fundamental liberty which characterizes the human person and gives him his dignity be recognized as belonging to the homosexual person as well' (No. 11).

9. "In assessing proposed legislation, the bishops should keep as their uppermost concern the responsibility to defend and promote family life' (No. 17).

II. Applications

10. "Sexual orientation" does not constitute a quality comparable to race, ethnic background, etc. in respect to non-discrimination. Unlike these, homosexual orientation is an objective disorder (cf. "Letter," No. 3) and evokes moral concern.

11. There are areas in which it is not unjust discrimination to take sexual orientation into account, for example, in the placement of children for adoption or foster care, in employment of teachers or athletic coaches, and in military recruitment.

12. Homosexual persons, as human persons, have the same rights as all persons including the right of not being treated in a manner which offends their personal dignity (cf. No. 10). Among other rights, all persons have the right to work, to housing, etc. Nevertheless, these rights are not absolute. They can be legitimately limited for objectively disordered external conduct. This is sometimes not only licit but obligatory. This would obtain moreover not only in the case of culpable behavior but even in the case of actions of the physically or mentally ill. Thus it is accepted that the state may restrict the exercise of rights, for example, in the case of contagious or mentally ill persons, in order to protect the common good.

13. Including "homosexual orientation" among the considerations on the basis of which it is illegal to discriminate can easily lead to regarding homosexuality as a positive source of human rights, for example, in respect to so-called affirmative action or preferential treatment in hiring practices. This is all the more deleterious since there is no right to homosexuality (cf. No. 10) which therefore should not form the basis for judicial claims. The passage from the recognition of homosexuality as a factor on which basis it is illegal to discriminate can easily lead, if not automatically, to the legislative protection and promotion of homosexuality. A person's homosexuality would be invoked in opposition to alleged discrimination, and thus the exercise of rights would be defended precisely via the affirmation of the homosexual condition instead of in terms of a violation of basic human rights.

14. The "sexual orientation" of a person is not comparable to race, sex, age, etc. also for another reason than that given above which warrants attention. An individual's sexual orientation is generally not known to others unless he publicly identifies himself as having this orientation or unless some overt behavior manifests it. As a rule, the majority of homosexually oriented persons who seek to lead chaste lives do not publicize their sexual orientation. Hence the problem of discrimination in terms of employment, housing, etc., does not usually arise.

Homosexual persons who assert their homosexuality tend to be precisely those who judge homosexual behavior or lifestyle to be "either completely harmless, if not an entirely good thing" (cf. No. 3), and hence worthy of public approval. It is from this quarter that one is more likely to find those who seek to "manipulate the church by gaining the often well-intentioned support of her pastors with a view to changing civil statutes and laws" (cf. No. 5), those who use the tactic of protesting that "any and all criticism of or reservations about homosexual people... are simply diverse forms of unjust discrimination" (cf. No. 9).

In addition, there is a danger that legislation which would make homosexuality a basis for entitlements could actually encourage a person with a homosexual orientation to declare his homosexuality or even to seek a partner in order to exploit the provisions of the law.

15. Since in the assessment of proposed legislation uppermost concern should be given to the responsibility to defend and promote family life (cf. No. 17), strict attention should be paid to the single provisions of proposed measures. How would they affect adoption or foster care? Would they protect homosexual acts, public or private? Do they confer equivalent family status on homosexual unions, for example, in respect to public housing or by entitling the) homosexual partner to the privileges of employment which could include such things as "family" participation in the health benefits given to employees (cf. No. 9)?

16. Finally, where a matter of the common good is concerned, it is inappropriate for church authorities to endorse or remain neutral toward adverse legislation even if it grants exceptions to church organizations and institutions. The church has the responsibility to promote family life and the public morality of the entire civil society on the basis of fundamental moral values, not simply to protect herself from the application of harmful laws (cf. No. 17).

Homosexual Marriage

The Marginalization of Women and the Family

L.M. Farrell, Ph. D

The long term survival of civilization rests on two fundamental institutions, the nuclear family and the right to private property which is necessary to sustain the nuclear family. As David Frum notes, (Saturday Night, December 1995), the dismal consequences of the Russian experience in eliminating the right to private property are now well known to all. Less commonly acknowledged is the social and economic crisis which has been unleashed as a result of the revolutionary change in thinking about the family. The traditional view is based on the common sense observation that marriage and the family is a public institution, in which all society has a stake in preserving, because families create the next generation of society. More recently, society has fallen into the bad habit of thinking of the family only as a private relationship between two people. This has destabilized family life and contributed to the growth of other social ills including an increase in the number of children who will learn less in school, earn less at work, commit more crimes, suffer more sexual troubles, and adjust less well to society than previous generations.

While the negative effects of family breakup are clear, policies designed to re-engineer the family and re-educate public opinion continue, often supported by taxpayer dollars. Attempts to strengthen the family have been complicated by the complacency of lawmakers, judges, public officials, and other members of society, entrusted to defend the common good, who choose to regard changing attitudes about the primary structure of the family as a mere change in public taste, much like the disappearance of the hat, as Frum observes, to be accommodated and even hurried along. Court decisions which require employers to extend employee benefits, originally provided to married spouses to help sustain the family, to all cohabiting couples have effectively abolished marriage as a distinct legal status. When homosexuals ask why their cohabitational relationships should not be treated like heterosexual relationships the only rational response is to treat all cohabitations as private matters entitled to no special status nor subsidies from third parties such as employers or government.

The rational legalistic trap in which society now finds itself differs sharply from the traditional legal institution of marriage which held that marriage endows husbands and wives with special rights and claims against each other and against the rest of society. Because parents create the next generation of humanity common sense dictates that society has an immense interest in helping them do that job well. The Victorians abolished the ancient custom of common-law marriage to eliminate the practice of people drifting into, and out of, quasi-marital relationships. Victorian law put people on notice that the obligations of marriage could be imposed on a couple only by a deliberate and public act.

Society forces others to underwrite and support marriage, not because marriage is good for the couple, but because it is good for the children they produce. A union that can not produce children is not one that the rest of society should be forced to subsidize. Thus, even if homosexuals can and do form permanent, emotionally serious partnerships, they do not merit the formal recognition of marriage.

Attempts to redefine the institution of marriage to accommodate same-sex or gay marriage diminish marriage and inflict serious harm on the prestige and morale of those who make major economic and personal sacrifices to create and sustain their families. To the rest of society, laws to establish gay marriage will appear as some type of practical joke at their expense, imposed from above by the ruling elite, a campy parody of the central institution which defines their lives and that of the families from which they come.

Traditional Family Marginalized by Artificial Birth Control

Much of the economic and social confusion in society is the logical consequence of the moral unraveling of the family and the reduced status of women due to the artificial suppression of her natural vocation within the home, which is motherhood. Scientific and technological progress has had a leveling effect on society which tends to minimize and marginalize this special vocation of women. While some medical advances have extended life and made it more livable, other technologies, particularly in the area of biological and genetic engineering, have destabilized society and confused the traditional understanding of the difference between right and wrong. The invention of various birth control devices has confused the fundamental relationship between love and sex and challenged the collective wisdom concerning the general and specific ends of human sexuality and human existence.

The widespread, uncritical acceptance of birth control has unleashed a sexual revolution which based on the principle of sex for pleasure which has lead to all and any form of sexual and pseudosexual activity. The order and continuity of the long term rhythm of the female sexual cycle which links past and future generations has been destroyed and with it the sense of meaning in life which is essential for the psychological growth of both men and women. Having abandoned their own true sexuality, women are now encouraged to emulate, the immaturity, insecurity and aggression of male sexuality.

Men have also been induced to abandon meaningful growth enhancing male sexuality in favor of meaningless, dead-end sex. The homosexualization of society is one telling indicator of the flight from femininity in modern society. While many have hailed what they perceive as the sexually liberating effects of the development of birth control technology the real effects have degraded the psychosexual environment and destroy millions of lives. The unwillingness or the inability of society to face the effects of birth control, which include an increase in violence against women, abortion, illegitimacy and poverty, suicide, and a variety of other crimes against humanity, suggests that widespread fear of responsible sex, and a desire to escape from female sexuality, is still the dominant emotion when dealing with human sexuality.

The difficulties faced by women who choose the traditional vocation of wife and mother are compounded by the moral relativism which has accompanied the scientific revolution. In the past, most cultures have recognized the relationship between a common morality based on a solid concept of right and wrong, and long term survival. They knew from bitter experience that morality, religion, stories and myth are bound together in some vital if poorly understood way, and that to destroy or sever these connections would not lead to strong independent ethical principles but weaken and disconnect society, and ultimately lead to its destruction.

Historically, societal recognition and protection of the traditional family, consisting of one father, one mother, and their natural children, was a necessary prerequisite for the development of modern western society. Western culture has always respected and honored married motherhood, and has always frowned on motherhood out of wedlock for practical as well as ethical reasons. It has also held up the ideal that sex is to be reserved for marriage.

Natural Male-Female Balance in the Home is Undermined

A massive exercise in social engineering has been unleashed to undermine and destroy the traditional rights and power which women have long enjoyed in traditional society. Briefly stated the emphasis has been shifted from content to process. As George Gilder observed over 20 years ago in his book Sexual Suicide, most people enjoy their real satisfaction and gratification, not at work, but in the domestic and sexual aspects of life.

In reality, women possess enormous influence over men and most women do not feel subordinate. The conspicuous and calculable power of males is largely illusory, and is counterbalanced by the deep and inexorable capacity of women which is based on the psychological primacy of the role of the female in sexual love, marriage, conception of children, child bearing and breast feeding.

The implications of the new technology of reproduction has been widely accepted as an important weapon in the struggle to liberate women. In fact it separates women from their own femininity and assures the bondage of women to male technocracy and removes men from the civilizing and socialization process of responsible fatherhood. Men are freed to pursue their own sterile and, without woman, meaningless, sexual cycles in uncivilized groups, while technology sustains the community. In the pursuit of a nonexistent and unattainable equality women have been induced to forsake their true nature and to relinquish their natural erotic power over men. In the process women have been deluded into becoming a subordinate class.

In an authentic sexual society, the female physique is dominant. Man becomes dependent on the woman's love for him. He relies on her for sexual identity in a way in which she, who already has a sexual identity, never has to rely on him. She can bear a child whether he stays or not, while he loses his child if she leaves. His tie to the future, and his engagement in civilized society, passes through her womb. As Gilder states, in a sexually suicidal society, the male body becomes the physical ideal, and the male pattern of insecurity, dominance, and group aggression will prevail over domestic, and individual values.

Kinsey, Fraud, & the Flight from Human Sexuality

The rational analysis of human sexuality has been confounded by the scientific fraud first perpetrated by Alfred Kinsey in 1948 in his work on male sexuality. Kinsey, now believed to have been a homosexual pederast, has, until quite recently, gone unchallenged by the scientific community. Fraudulent sexual experiments, performed by homosexual assistants on prison inmates and others, including children and infants who were sexually abused, were used by Kinsey to "prove" that human sexuality followed a seven point scale from heterosexuality to homosexuality with bisexuality in the middle. Kinsey concluded that bisexuality was the normal way of being. This scientific fraud became the basis of the conventional wisdom that homosexuality is normal when Kinsey testified before California legislators that sodomy should be decriminalized because 10 per cent of all Americans were homosexual. Claims by the "gay rights movement" that homosexuality is a genetic trait that homosexuals are born with and cannot change, and that all types of sexual activity are equal and indistinguishable, are based on the fraudulent Kinsey results.

They also form the basis for the new pseudo-science of sexology and sex education courses taught in elementary and secondary schools, colleges and universities and are based on the Kinsey claim that all types of genital activity-regardless of the sex or age of the partner and including violent and perverted actions-was normal.

Popular illusions and self deception have been a part of human history since Adam and Eve. Convinced by the serpent that they were dissatisfied with their place in the order of the universe, Eve and then Adam were, it would seem, quite willing to reject their true nature as creatures of God, in an attempt to become gods themselves. Things do not appear to have changed much over the ages. The rejection of femininity has created a lot of confusion, pain and havoc in the "post sexual revolutionary" society. Not only have women been deluded into trying to suppress their true femininity but men have been cut adrift from the natural expression of their true masculinity and abandoned to dangle and twist in the impotent winds of perpetual emotional turbulence.

The vacuum created by the rejection of true human sexuality has been filled by a growth in the frequency of sexual confusion particularly among the young. As early as 1982, a homosexual author named Dennis Altman reported in his book, The Homosexualization of America, on the increased acceptance of homosexuality in society. Not only was homosexuality more acceptable but it was becoming a fashionable and preferred expression of personal behavior. More and more people, he said were thinking like gays, and more and more people were acting like gays. In one editorial in a gay publication, dated May 1991, the writer wrote that the objective of the gay movement was to promote the homosexual life style. "Our work will only be finished when we can say that the whole world is gay."

In 1993, according to an article in The Washington Post, homosexuality and bisexuality has suddenly become fashionable among high school and junior high school students. Not only are students now wearing pink ribbons, and kissing members of the same sex in the hallways, but many believe that everyone is bisexual. In some U.S. colleges, a substantial number of young women are experimenting with lesbianism as a political act.

According to Dennis Altman, society in general, like the gay community, is forsaking the "traditional canons of sexual and familial morality." Same-sex sex has attained a certain status and acceptability. He suggests that for many young boys, frequently the victims of divorce deprived of the love and example of a father, homosexuality may seem preferable to the old fashioned kind.

A society which discourages the practice of sexual maturity may experience an increase in immature, deviant sexual behavior and sexual addiction. In the moral vacuum created by the sexual revolution a gay movement has evolved which promotes itself with gay magazines and gay films, gay theater and gay literature, gay parades for gay pride that receive endorsements from official bodies.

At the heart of the nation's most prestigious universities the gay myth has taken hold, a destructive ideology which says that not only that gay is good, but that gay is better. In the onslaught against the family, the cornerstone, the most basic institution of society has been under attack while the nation's traditional watchdogs-the press, the academy, the churches, etc.-have been unconcerned or have actively joined in the attack.

Homosexuality is a Psychological Disorder

Not a Genetic Trait

In Homosexuality: A Freedom Too Far, (Adam Margrave Books, Phoenix, Ariz., 800-507-BOOK), psychoanalyst Charles W. Socarides, M.D., disputes Kinsey's claim that homosexuality is a genetic trait and reports on a number of successful attempts to cure homosexual behavior.

Socarides distinguishes between homosexuality and the gay rights movement. He defines homosexuality, or same-sex sex, as a psychological disorder and one of over 40 types of known deviant sexual behavior, paraphilias or "alternate loves" which have been identified. Such sexual deviations are compulsive addictions, which have little to do with love, are harmful to the one who is caught up in the particular psychological disorder, almost always against his own will in response to imperative psychological drives, and sometimes harm those who are victimized by these deviant behaviors.

The author defines the gay rights movement as a political movement which attempts to establish same-sex sex as a basic human freedom and an acceptable alternate lifestyle. According to Dr. Socarides same-sex sex is a kind of substitute, or simulation, for sex between men and women, practiced by two types of homosexuals; obligatory and optional.

Obligatory homosexuals engage in same-sex sex because they are compelled by unconscious forces and early life traumas over which they have no control and little understanding. They don't know that something went wrong in their early years. As a result, they fear women, and feel there's something lacking in their manhood. They go looking for that manhood, compulsively, in other men. Neither sexually aroused by, nor attracted to, women, their activity is not a preference, but a neurotic adaptation to unconscious fears of women.

A maze of rationalizations to justify their avoidance of the opposite sex, including the claim that "homosexuals are born that way" have been created to obscure their intense needs, entirely unconscious, to find their masculinity. They have sex repeatedly out of this inner compulsion to fill the void within by taking in the masculinity of another man.

A normal man approaches a woman with an intact sense of his own identity as a man, seeking to complement his maleness by joining it to a woman's femaleness. Whereas a normal man holds a sense of his own masculinity intact within himself, the homosexual approaches another man with a deficient sense of his own masculinity and tries to fill up the void within himself by narcissistically taking in the masculinity of another man. Whereas the normal man is fulfilled and complemented by the woman's femininity and does not go out immediately to look for another woman, the homosexual is never fulfilled and always wants more and can only be relieved by repeated, and often anonymous and serial, sex with a variety of other men.

"Optional" homosexuals engage in same-sex sex by choice, faut de mieux, for want of something better, out of simple utility and searching for varied experience. Homosexual behavior among prison inmates and so called bisexuality practiced by sex addicted heterosexuals are examples of optional homosexuality.

Language has been an important weapon to promote homosexuality as "an alternate life style." A monolithic public relations campaign, initiated in 1973, when gay rights activists infiltrated the American Psychiatric Association and succeeded in striking homosexuality off the APA's list of psychological disorders, has promoted the use of the word "gay" to refer to social and political issues, and "homosexual" to refer to clinical or psychological issues. Public attention has been diverted away from what homosexuals do to what they are. The shift from behavior to identity has lent credibility to the false analogy which compares gays and lesbians to legitimate minority racial groups in need of full societal approval and civil rights protection.

Gays and lesbians have pre-empted criticism from political leaders, academe, the media, and some religious groups by defining any opposition to the "normalcy" of same-sex sex as a disease called "homophobia" based on individual cultural values. Anyone who questions the gay agenda is portrayed as being afraid to face his own sexual inclinations or/and as attacking the civil rights of homosexual citizens rather than expressing concern about what he sees as destructive antisocial behavior. Legal recognition of "gay rights," encourages optional homosexuals and other practitioners of deviant sex, and disenfranchises obligatory homosexuals who will be discouraged from seeking the medical care they need to change their self destructive behavior.

Unraveling the Prudish Sexual Revolution

As attempts to at first conceal and then deny the causal relationship between sexual irresponsibility and social disintegration become more difficult, society will almost certainly try to reverse the excesses of the sexual revolution which began in the 1960's. The survival of civilized society, depends on how future generations of children are raised. To ensure that, in the future, children rearing practices are improved, current practices and policies derived from the sexual revolution will have to be reversed. Recognition of the natural socializing effects of female sexuality on young males will have to be reinstated along with the preferential status of traditional marriage and the formation of traditional, lasting nuclear families.

This can not be done without widespread opposition from the various interest groups who have carved out special status and privilege in the wake of the social change brought about by the destruction of the traditional sexual order. Like their ideological soul mates in the former Soviet Union, they oppose every type of private property, except their own, because they realized that without the right to private property the independent family can not exist

While homosexuals may number less than three per cent of the population, they have the ear of the media. That their power and influence greatly exceeds their numbers may be due, in part, to fact that the argument over gay rights is really a continuation of the great social upheavals of the 1960's and 1970's to which many of the generation in power still owe emotional allegiance. Some see the restructuring of the family, the weakening of marital ties, the loosening of the standards of sexual morality, as desirable social changes, welcome in themselves. Others may passively accept the destruction of the existing social order as the inevitable price of liberation from what they perceived to be a stultifying morality imposed by a society dominated by sexual prudery and prejudice.

Ironically, the new sexual order embraced by this rapidly aging generation of sex addicts and would be revolutionaries is more fraudulent and stultifying than the traditional value system it seeks to replace. Not only is it prudish in its attempt to ignore the role of sexual activity in the creation of new life but it betrays an undercurrent of serious psychological disease by removing a sense of the long term meaning of life. It dishonestly attempts to conceal the fact that the existence of the individual person is part of the continuous stream of life from one generation to the next which connects the past with the future and gives meaning to the present. In mindlessly refusing to respect the humanity of unborn human life, the current generation of would be revolutionaries reveal a pathetic inability to deal with their own sexual identity and their own existence.

(originally published in Hearth Magazine, Volume IV, No. 2) Taken from the Page of Authentic Femininity)

Click Here to Reach the EWTN web site and other articles like this

HOMOSEUALITY AND HOPE

STATEMENT OF THE CATHOLIC MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

CONTENTS

I CONSIDERATIONS

- Introduction
- 1) Not born that way
- 2) Same sex attraction as a symptom
- 3) Same-sex attraction is preventable
- 4) At-risk, not predestined
- 5) Therapy
- 6) Goal of therapy

II RECOMMENDATIONS

- 1) Ministry to individuals experiencing same-sex attraction
- 2) The role of the priest
- 3) Catholic medical professionals
- 4) Teachers in Catholic institutions
- 5) Catholic families
- 6) The Catholic community
- 7) Bishops
- 8) Hope

PART I CONSIDERATIONS

INTRODUCTION

The Catholic Medical Association is dedicated to upholding the principles of the Catholic Faith as related to the practice of medicine and to promoting Catholic medical ethics to the medical profession, including mental health professionals, the clergy, and the general public.

No issue has raised more concern in the past decade than that of homosexuality and therefore the CMA offers the following summary and review of the status of the question. This summary relies extensively on the conclusions of various studies and points out the consistency of the teachings of the Church with these studies. It is hoped that this review will also serve as an educational and reference tool for Catholic clergy, physicians, mental health professionals, educators, parents and the general public.

CMA supports the teachings of the Catholic Church as laid out in the revised version of the Catechism of the Catholic Church, in particular the teachings on sexuality: "All the baptized are called to chastity." (CCC, n.2348) "Married people are called to live conjugal chastity; others practice chastity in continence." (CCC, n.2349) "... tradition has always declared that homosexual acts are intrinsically disordered... Under no circumstance can they be approved." (CCC, n.2333)

It is possible, with God's grace, for everyone to live a chaste life including persons experiencing same-sex attraction, as Cardinal George, Archbishop of Chicago, so powerfully stated in his address to the National Association of Catholic Diocesan Lesbian & Gay Ministries: "To deny that the power of God's grace enables those with homosexual attractions to live chastely is to deny, effectively, that Jesus has risen from the dead." (George 1999)

There are certainly circumstances such as psychological disorders and traumatic experiences which can, at times, render this chastity more difficult and there are conditions which can seriously diminish an individual's responsibility for lapses in chastity. These circumstances and conditions, however, do not negate free will or eliminate the power of grace. While many men and women who experience same-sex attractions say that their sexual desire for those of their own sex was experienced as a given (Chapman 1987¹) this in no way implies a genetic predetermination or an unchangeable condition. Some surrendered to same-sex attractions because they were told that they were born with this inclination and that it was impossible to change the pattern of one's sexual attraction. Such persons may feel it is futile and hopeless to resist same-sex desires and embrace a gay identity. These same persons may then feel oppressed by the fact that society and religion, in particular the Catholic Church, do not accept the expression of these desires in homosexual acts. (Schreier 1998²)

¹ Chapman and Brannock (1987) found that 63% of the lesbians in their survey stated that they had chosen to be lesbians, 28% felt they had no choice, and 11% did not know why they were lesbians.

² Schreier writes in support of a therapist (Wolpe 1969) who refused to patient's request for therapy directed toward change of sexual orientation from homosexuality to heterosexual: "Perhaps instead of sexual reorientation, individuals could seek religious reorientation to any number of major U.S. religions that are affirming of people with same-sex orientations.... Not all religions are judgmental and condemning. Advocating for sexual reorientation while being critical of religious reorientation again demonstrates nothing more than bias." (p.308)

The research referenced in this report counters the myth that same-sex attraction is genetically predetermined and unchangeable and offers hope for prevention and treatment.

1) NOT BORN THAT WAY

A number of researchers have sought to find a biological cause for same-sexual attraction. The media has promoted the idea that a "gay gene" has already been discovered (Burr 1996³), but in spite of several attempts none of the much publicized studies (Hamer 1993⁴; LeVay 1991⁵) have been scientifically replicated. (Gadd 1998) A number of authors have carefully reviewed these studies and found that they not only do not prove a genetic basis for same-sex attraction, they do not even claim to have scientific evidence for such a claim. (Byrne 1963⁶; Crewdson 1995⁷; Goldberg 1992; Horgan 1995⁸; McGuire 1995⁹; Porter 1996; Rice 1999¹⁰)

If same-sex attraction were genetically determined, then one would expect identical twins to be identical in their sexual attractions. There are, however, numerous reports of identical twins who are not identical in their sexual attractions. (Bailey 1991¹¹; Eckert 1986; Friedman 1976; Green 1974; Heston 1968; McConaghy 1980; Rainer 1960; Zuger 1976) Case histories frequently reveal environmental factors which account for

³ Burr: Cover story of The Weekly Standard, "Suppose there is a Gay Gene...What then?"

⁴ Hamer claimed to have found a marker for homosexuality on the x gene.

⁵ LeVay claimed to have found that a certain part of the brains of homosexual men who died of AIDS differed from that of heterosexual men and women.

⁶ Byrne: "Critical review shows the evidence favoring a biologic theory to be lacking. In an alternative model, temperamental and personality traits interact with familial and social milieu as the individual's sexuality emerges." (p.228) "Research into the heritability of personality variants suggests that some personality dimensions may be heritable, including novelty seeking, harm avoidance, and reward dependence. Applying these dimensions to the above scenario, one might predict that a boy who was high in novelty seeking, but low in harm avoidance and reward dependence, would be likely to disregard his mother's discouragement of baseball. On the other hand, a boy who was low in novelty seeking, but high in harm avoidance and reward dependence, would be more likely to need the rewards of maternal approval, would be less likely to seek and encounter male role models outside the family, and would be more likely to avoid baseball for fear of being hurt. In the absence of encouragement from an accepting father or alternative male role model, such a boy would be likely to feel different from his male peers and as a consequence be subject to nonerotic experiences in childhood that may contribute to the subsequent emergence of homoerotic preferences. Such experiences could include those described by Friedman as being common in prehomosexual boys, including low masculine self-regard, isolation, scapegoating, and rejection by male peers and older males, including the father." (p.237)

⁷ Crewdson: ".... no other laboratory has confirmed Hamer's findings."

⁸ Horgan: "LeVay's finding has yet to be fully replicated by another researcher. As for Hamer, one study has contradicted his results."

⁹ McGuire: "... some people want homosexuality to be biological or genetic because they then believe that because homosexuals are 'born that way' they will somehow be tolerated. Others advocate environmental causes since this justifies their belief that individuals 'chose a gay lifestyle'." (p.141) "Even if we knew absolutely everything about genes and absolutely everything about environment, we still could not predict the final phenotype of any individual." (p.142)

¹⁰ Rice et al. attempted unsuccessfully to replicate the Hamer study.

¹¹ Bailey: A study of the male siblings of homosexually active males found that "52% (29/56) of monozygotic cotwins, 22% (12/54) of dizygotic cotwins, and 11% (6/57) of adoptive brothers were homosexual... rate of homosexuality among nontwin biological siblings, as reported by probands, 9.2% (13/142)." (p.1089)

the development of different sexual attraction patterns in genetically identical children, supporting the theory that same-sex attraction is a product of the interplay of a variety of environmental factors. (Parker 1964¹²)

There are, however, ongoing attempts to convince the public that same-sex attraction is genetically based. (Marmor 1975¹³) Such attempts may be politically motivated because people are more likely to respond positively to demands for changes in laws and religious teaching when they believe sexual attraction to be genetically determined and unchangeable. (Emulf 1989¹⁴; Piskur 1992¹⁵) Others have sought to prove a genetic basis for same-sex attraction so that they could appeal to the courts for rights based on the "immutability". (Green 1988¹⁶)

Catholics believe that sexuality was designed by God as a sign of the love of Christ, the bridegroom, for his Bride, the Church, and therefore sexual activity is appropriate only in marriage. Healthy psycho-sexual development leads naturally to attraction in persons of each sex for the other sex. Trauma, erroneous education, and sin can cause a deviation from this pattern. Persons should not be identified with their emotional or developmental conflicts as though this was the essence of their identity. In the debate between essentialism and social constructionism, the believer in natural law would hold that human beings have an essential nature -- either male or female -- and that sinful inclinations -- such as the desire to engage in homosexual acts -- are constructed and can, therefore, be deconstructed.

It is, therefore, probably wise to avoid wherever possible using the words "homosexual" and "heterosexual" as nouns since such usage implies a fixed state and an equivalence between the natural state of man and woman as created by God and persons

¹²Parker: Case A: "Their mother, then 39 years old, learnt only a few days before the confinement that she was having twins, as she already had a 7-year-old son was anxious that one of them should be a girl. Sensing her obvious disappointment following the normal delivery of two 6 1/2 pound sons, the labour ward Sister consoled her with the suggestion that the first-born, and one subsequently to become a homosexual, was pretty enough to be a girl. Although they were so alike that they could not be distinguished, the mother seized on this idea and put a bracelet around the first twin to ensure there would be no confusion of identity, and from then on he was treated as if he were a girl."(p.490)

¹³ Marmor: "The myth that homosexuality is untreatable still has wide currency among the public at large and among homosexuals themselves. This view is often linked to the assumption that homosexuality is constitutionally or genetically determined. This conviction of untreatability also serves an ego-defensive purpose for many homosexuals. As the understanding of the adaptive nature of most homosexual behavior has become more widespread, however, there has evolved a greater therapeutic optimism about the possibilities for change, and progressively more hopeful results are being reported... There is little doubt that a genuine shift in preferential sex object choice can and does take place in somewhere between 20 and 50 per cent of patients with homosexual behavior who seek psychotherapy with this end in mind." (p.1519)

¹⁴ Emulf found that those who believed that homosexuals are "born that way" held significantly more positive attitudes toward homosexuals than subjects who believed that homosexuals "choose to be that way" and/or "learn to be that way."

¹⁵ Piskur: "The major finding of this study was that exposure to a written summary of research supporting biological determinants of homosexual orientation can affect scores assessing attitudes toward homosexuals when measured immediately after the reading." (p.1223)

¹⁶ Green: "The Supreme Court ruled in Owens v. Ford that there is no fundamental right under a substantive due process analysis to engage in homosexual behavior. Therefore, the remaining constitutional route to protecting homosexuals against discrimination is the equal protection clause of the fourteenth amendment. For the highest level of protection there, a class of persons must be declared 'suspect.' To so qualify, the class should demonstrate, inter alia, that the trait for which it is stigmatized is immutable." (p.537) experiencing same sex attractions or behaviors.

2) SAME-SEX ATTRACTION AS A SYMPTOM

Individuals experience same-sex attractions for different reasons. While there are similarities in the patterns of development, each individual has a unique, personal history. In the histories of persons who experience same-sex attraction, one frequently finds one or more of the following:

Alienation from the father in early childhood, because the father was perceived as hostile or distant, violent or alcoholic, (Apperson 1968¹⁷; Bene 1965¹⁸; Bieber 1962¹⁹; Fisher 1996²⁰; Pillard 1988²¹; Sipova 1983²²)
Mother was overprotective (boys), (Bieber, T. 1971²³; Bieber 1962²⁴; Snortum 1969²⁵)
Mother was needy and demanding (boys), (Fitzgibbons 1999²⁶)

¹⁷ Apperson: "The importance of the relationship -- or lack of it -- with the father is again emphasized, with the homosexual S[ubject]s showing marked difference from the controls in perceiving the father more as critical, impatient, and rejecting, and less as the socializing agent." (p.206)

¹⁸ Bene: "Far fewer homosexual than married men thought that their fathers had been cheerful, helpful, reliable, kind or understanding, while far more felt that their fathers had no time for them, had not loved them, and had made them feel unhappy." (p.805)

¹⁹ Bieber: "Profound interpersonal disturbance is unremitting in the homosexual father-son relationship. Not one of the fathers (of homosexual sons)... could be regarded as reasonably 'normal' parents." (p.114) "We have come to the conclusion that a constructive, supportive, warmly related father precludes the possibility of a homosexual son; he acts as a neutralizing protective agent should the mother make seductive or close-binding attempts." (p.311)

²⁰ Fisher: "Fisher analyzed the 58 studies and reported that a large majority supported the notion that homosexual sons perceive their fathers as negative, distant, unfriendly figures." A review of literature on childhood experiences of male homosexuals found "With only a few exceptions, the male homosexual declares that father has been a negative influence in his life. He refers to him with such adjectives as cold, unfriendly punishing, brutal, distant, detached. There is not a single even moderately well controlled study that we have been able to locate in which male homosexuals refer to father positively or affectionately." (p.136)

²¹ Pillard: "Alcoholism occurs more frequently in fathers of HS[homosexual] men (14 fathers of HS men versus five fathers of HT[Heterosexual] men.)" (p.54)

²² Sipvoca: "It was found that the fathers of homosexuals and transsexuals were more hostile and less dominant than the fathers of the control group and hence less desirable identification models." (p.75)

²³ Bieber: "In about 75 per cent of the cases, the mothers had had an inappropriately close, binding, and intimate bond with their sons. More than half of these mothers were described as seductive. They were possessive, dominating, overprotective, and demasculinizing." (p.524)

²⁴ Bieber: "By the time the H[homosexual]-son has reached the preadolescent period, he has suffered a diffuse personality disorder. Maternal over-anxiety about health and injury, restriction of activities normative for the son's age and potential, interference with assertive behavior, demasculinizing attitudes, and interference with sexuality -- interpenetrating with paternal rejection, hostility, and lack of support -- produce an excessively fearful child, pathologically dependent upon his mother and beset by feelings of inadequacy, impotence, and self-contempt. He is reluctant to participate in boyhood activities thought to be physically injurious -- usually grossly overestimated. His peer group responds with humiliating name-calling and often with physical attack which timidity tends to invite among children... Thus he is deprived of important empathic interaction which peer groups provide." (p.316)

²⁵ Snortum studied 46 males separated from military service because of homosexual behavior and concluded: "It appears that the pathological interplay between a close-binding, controlling mothers and a rejecting and detached father is not unique to the subculture of sophisticated, upper-middle-class families who engage psychoanalysts." (p.769)

Mother emotionally unavailable (girls), (Bradley 1997²⁷; Eisenbud 1982²⁸)
 Parents failed to encourage same-sex identification, (Zucker 1995²⁹)
 Lack of rough and tumble play (boys), (Friedman 1980³⁰; Hadden 1967a³¹)
 Failure to identify with same/sex peers, (Hockenberry 1987³²; Whitman 1977³³)

²⁶ Fitzgibbons: "The second most common cause of SSAD [same sex attraction disorder] among males is mistrust of women's love... Male children in fatherless homes often feel overly responsible for their mothers. As they enter their adolescence, they may come to view female love as draining and exhausting." (p.89)

²⁷ Bradley: "Girls with GID ...have difficulty connecting with their mothers, who are perceived as weak and ineffective. We see this perception as arising from the high levels of psychopathology observed in these mothers, especially severe depression and borderline personality disorder." (p.877)

²⁸ Eisenbud "Broken homes and alcoholic conditions in Lesbian women's early backgrounds as well as inadequate mothering, afford no further chance of warm inclusion. The death of a beloved mother leaves cold isolation. Even when mother is present, the Lesbian girl frequently experiences her withdrawal from her after 18 months."(p.98-99)

²⁹ Zucker: "...we feel that parental tolerance of cross-gender behavior at the time of its emergence is instrumental in allowing the behavior to develop...What is unique in the situation with children who develop a gender identity disorder is the co-occurrence of a multitude of factors at a sensitive period in the child's development -- that is, most typically in the first few years of life, the period of gender identity formation and consolidation. There must be a sufficient numbers of factors to induce a state of inner insecurity in the child, such that he or she requires a defensive solution to deal with anxiety. This must occur in a context in which the child perceives that the opposite-sex role provides a sense of safety or security."(p.259) "... we were unable to identify in any case reports a clinician who felt that the parents unequivocally encouraged a masculine identity in their sons."(p.277)

³⁰ Friedman: "Thirteen of the 17 homosexual subjects (76%) reported chronic, persistent terror of fighting with other boys during the juvenile and early adolescent period. The intensity of this fear approximated a panic reaction. To the best of their recall, these boys never responded to challenge from a male peer with counter-challenge, threat, or attack. the pervasive dread of male-male peer aggression was a powerful organizing force in their minds. Anticipatory anxiety resulted in phobic responses to social activities; the fantasy that fighting might occur led to avoidance of wide variety of social interactions, especially rough-and-tumble activities (defined in our investigation as body-contact sports such as football and soccer).

"These subjects reported that painful loss of self-esteem and loneliness resulted from their extreme aversion to juvenile peer aggressive interactions. All but one (12 of 13) were chronically hungry for closeness with other boys. Unable to overcome their dread of potential aggression in order to win respect and acceptance, these boys were labeled "sissies" by peers. These 12 subjects related that they had the lowest possible peer status during juvenile and early adolescent years. Alternately ostracized and scapegoated, they were the targets of continual humiliation. All of these boys denied effeminacy..." (p.432-433) "No prehomosexual youngster had any degree of experience with fighting or rough-and-tumble during the juvenile years. None engaged in even the modest juvenile sex-typed interactions described by the least aggressive heterosexual youngster." (p.434)

³¹ Hadden: "In analytical examination of the pre-school period of life it is usually revealed that the boy who became homosexual never felt accepted by and never felt comfortable in relationships with his age peers.

uite often because of parental interference he was prevented from participation in the play activities with other children and had little opportunity of running, romping, rolling around, tugging, wrestling, and scrambling with his peers from the toddling stage to the kindergarten or school age."(p.78)

³² Hockenberry: "The conclusion was made that the five item function (playing with boys, preferring boys' games, imagining self as a sport figure, reading adventure and sports stories, considered a "sissy") was the most potent and parsimonious discriminator among adult males for sexual orientation. It was similarly noted that the absence of masculine behaviors and traits appeared to be a more powerful predictor of later homosexual orientation than the traditionally feminine or cross-sexed traits and behaviors." (p.475)

³³ Whitman developed and administered a six item inventory to 206 homosexual and 78 heterosexual male respondents regarding their childhood interests in cross-dressing, playing with dolls preferences for affiliating with girls and older women, being regarded as a "sissy" by peers, and the nature of one's childhood sex play. Virtually all of the homosexuals (97%) reported possessing one or more of these

Dislike of team sports (boys), (Thompson 1973³⁴)
 Lack of hand/eye coordination and resultant teasing by peers (boys), (Bailey 1993³⁵; Fitzgibbons 1999³⁶; Newman 1976³⁷)
 Sexual abuse or rape, (Beitchman 1991³⁸; Bradley 1997³⁹; Engel 1981⁴⁰; Finkelhor 1984; Gundlach 1967⁴¹)
 Social phobia or extreme shyness, (Golwyn 1993⁴²)
 Parental loss through death or divorce, (Zucker 1995)
 Separation from parent during critical developmental stages. (Zucker 1995)

In some cases, same-sex attraction or activity occurs in a patient with other psychological diagnosis, such as:

major depression, (Fergusson 1999⁴³) suicidal ideation, (Herrell 1999), generalized anxiety disorder,
 substance abuse,
 conduct disorder in adolescents,

"childhood indicators," whereas 74% of the heterosexual subjects reported a complete absence of any of the indicators in their childhood. (in Hockenberry, p. 476)

³⁴ Thompson compared 127 male homosexuals with 123 controls: "The seven most discriminating items in order from the highest were: (a) played baseball... with homosexuals concentrating on never or sometimes...; (b) played competitive group games (homosexuals never or sometimes...); (c) child spent time with father (homosexuals, very little...); (d) physical makeup as a child (homosexuals, frail clumsy or coordinated, heterosexuals, athletic); (e) felt accepted by father (homosexuals, mildly or no...); (f) played with boys before adolescence (homosexuals, sometimes...); and (g) mother insisted on being center of child's attention (homosexuals, often or always...)"(p.123)

³⁵ Bailey: "Male homosexuals were remembered by their mothers as less masculine and more nonathletic." (p.44)

³⁶ Fitzgibbons: "Weak masculine identity is easily identified and, in my clinical experience, is a major cause of SSAD in men. Surprisingly, it can be an outgrowth of weak eye-hand coordination which results in an inability to play sports well. This condition is usually accompanied by severe peer rejection. ... The 'sports wound' will negatively affect the boy's image of himself, his relationship with peers, his gender identity, and his body image." (p.88)

³⁷ Newman: "Experiences of being ostracized and ridiculed may play a more important role than has been recognized in the total abandonment of the male role at a later time." (p.687)

³⁸ Beitchman: "Among adolescents, commonly reported sequelae (of child sexual abuse) include sexual dissatisfaction, promiscuity, homosexuality, and an increased risk for revictimization. (p.537)

³⁹ Bradley: "In our female adolescents with GID, a history of sexual abuse or fears of sexual aggression has appeared commonly." (p.878)

⁴⁰ Engel: "Some lesbian patients [victims of sexual abuse] go through a time of confusion, not being sure whether they are with women out of choice or whether it is just because they are afraid, angry, and repulsed by men due to the sexual abuse." (p.193)

⁴¹ Gundlach reported that 39 of 217 lesbians versus 15 of 231 non-lesbians reported they were objects of rape or attempted rape at age 15 or under. (p.62)

⁴² Golwyn: "We conclude that social phobia may be a hidden contributing factor in some instances of homosexual behavior." (p.40)

⁴³ Fergusson et al found that in a birth cohort sample the gay, lesbian, bisexual subjects has significantly higher rates of: Suicidal Ideation (67.9%/29.0%), Suicide Attempt (32.1%/7.1%), and psychiatric disorders age 14 -21 -- Major depression (71.4%/38.2%), Generalized anxiety disorder (28.5%/12.5%), conduct disorder (32.1%/11.0%), Nicotine dependence (64.3%/26.7%), Other substance abuse/dependence (60.7%/44.3%), Multiple disorders (78.6%/38.2%) than the heterosexual sample. (p.879) borderline personality disorder, (Parris 1993⁴⁴; Zubenko 1987⁴⁵) schizophrenia, (Gonsiorek 1982)⁴⁶

pathological narcissism. (Bychowski 1954⁴⁷; Kaplan 1967⁴⁸)

In a few cases, homosexual behavior appears later in life as a response to a trauma such as abortion, (Berger 1994⁴⁹; de Beauvoir 1953) or profound loneliness (Fitzgibbons 1999).

3) SAME-SEX ATTRACTION IS PREVENTABLE

If the emotional and developmental needs of each child are properly met by both family and peers, the development of same-sex attraction is very unlikely. Children need affection, praise and acceptance by each parent, by siblings and by peers. Such social and family situations, however, are not always easily established and the needs of children are not always readily identifiable. Some parents may be struggling with their own trials and be unable to provide the attention and support their children require. Sometimes parents work very hard but the particular personality of the child makes support and nurture more difficult. Some parents saw incipient signs, sought professional assistance and advice and were given inadequate and in some cases erroneous advice.

The Diagnostic and Statistical Manual IV (APA 1994⁵⁰) of the American Psychiatric Association has defined Gender Identity Disorder (GID) in children as a strong, persistent cross gender identification, a discomfort with one's own sex, and a preference for cross sex roles in play or in fantasies. Some researchers (Friedman 1988, Phillips, 1992⁵¹) have identified another less pronounced syndrome in boys -- chronic

⁴⁴ Parris in a study of consecutive admissions found that the rate of homosexuality in the BPD [Borderline Personality Disorder] sample was 16.7%, as compared with 1.7% in the non-BPD comparison group. The homosexual BPD group had a rate of overall Childhood Sexual Abuse rate of 100% as compared to 37.3% for the heterosexual BPD group. "It is interesting that 3 out of 10 homosexual borderline patients also reported father-son incest." (p.59)

⁴⁵ Zubenko: "Homosexuality was 10 times more common among the men and six times more common among the women with borderline personality disorder than in the general population or in a depressed control group." (p.748)

⁴⁶ Gonsiorek discusses the treatment of homosexuals who are also schizophrenic. (p.12)

⁴⁷ Bychowski: "... homosexuals, in whom the ego has remained fixated in the stage of early narcissism, find it impossible to substitute consistent and successful dealings with reality for homosexual acts which they invest heavily with magic. The structure of these individuals is in many respects close to schizophrenia." (p.55)

⁴⁸ Kaplan: "In a sense, the homosexual has much in common with the narcissist, who has a love affair with himself. The homosexual, however, is unable to love himself as he is, since he is too dissatisfied with himself; instead he loves his ego-ideal, as represented by the homosexual partner whom he chooses. Thus for this particular type of individual, homosexuality becomes an extension of narcissism." (p.358)

⁴⁹ Berger: "A possible aetiological factor that has not been mentioned before in the literature, the abortion of a pregnancy conceived by the male patient that may have led to the patient 'coming out' or declaring homosexuality, is discussed." (p.251)

⁵⁰ APA: "Gender Identity Disorder can be distinguished from simple nonconformity to stereotypical sex role behavior by the extent and persuasiveness of cross-gender wishes, interests, and activities." (p. 536)

⁵¹ Phillips: "The 16-item discriminate-function ... yielded correct classification of 94.4% of heterosexual men and 91.8% of the homosexual men. These results indicate that heterosexual and homosexual men are classified with equivalent accuracy on the basis of recalling having had or not having had gender conforming (masculine) experiences in childhood." (p.550)

feelings of unmasculinity. These boys while not engaging in any cross sex play or fantasies, feel profoundly inadequate in their masculinity and have an almost phobic reaction to rough and tumble play in early childhood and a strong dislike of team sports. Several studies have shown that children with Gender Identity Disorder and boys with chronic juvenile unmasculinity are at-risk for same-sex attraction in adolescence.(Newman 1976; Zucker 1995; Harry 1989⁵²)

The early identification (Hadden 1967⁵³) and proper professional intervention, if supported by parents, can often overcome the gender identity disorder (Rekers 1974⁵⁴; Newman 1976). Unfortunately, many parents who report these concerns to their pediatricians are told not to worry about them. In some cases, the symptoms and parental concerns may appear to lessen when the child enters the second or third grade, but unless adequately dealt with the symptoms may reappear at puberty as intense, same-sex attraction. This attraction appears to be the result of a failure to identify positively with one's own sex.

It is important that those involved in child care and education become aware of the signs of gender identity disorder and chronic juvenile unmasculinity and access the resources available to find appropriate help for these children. (Bradley 1998; Brown 1963⁵⁵; Acosta 1975⁵⁶) Once convinced that same-sex attraction is not a genetically determined disorder, one is able to hope for prevention and one is also able to hope for a therapeutic model to greatly mitigate if not eliminate same-sex attractions.

4) AT-RISK, NOT PREDESTINED

While a number of studies have shown that children who have been sexually abused, children exhibiting the symptoms of GID, and boys with chronic juvenile unmasculinity are at risk for same-sex attractions in adolescence and adulthood, it is important to note that a significant percentage of these children do not become

⁵² Harry: "These data suggest that some history of childhood femininity is almost always a precursor of adolescent homosexual behavior." (p.259)

⁵³ Hadden: "In my experience with male homosexuals, they almost universally recognize that they were maladjusted at the time they started school. Many were recognized by their parents as needing psychiatric assistance much earlier." (p.78)

⁵⁴ Rekers: "When we first saw him, the extent of his feminine identification was so profound ... that it suggested irreversible neurological and biochemical determinants. After 26 months follow-up, he looked and acted like any other boy. People who viewed the video taped recordings of him before and after treatment talk of him as 'two different boys.'"

⁵⁵ Brown: "In summary, then it would seem that the family pattern involving a combination of a dominating, overly intimate mother plus a detached, hostile or weak father is beyond doubt related to the development of male homosexuality...It is surprising there has not been greater recognition of this relationship among the various disciplines that are concerned with children. A problem that arises in this connection is how to inform and educate teachers and parents relative to the decisive influence of the family in determining the course and outcome of the child's psychosexual development. There would seem no justification for waiting another 25 or 50 years to bring this information to the attention of those who deal with children. And there is no excuse for professional workers in the behavioral sciences to continue avoiding their responsibility to disseminate this knowledge and understanding as widely as possible." (p.232)

⁵⁶ Acosta: "...better prospects for intervention in homosexuality lie in its prevention through the early identification and treatment of the potential homosexual child." (p.9)

homosexually active as adults. (Green 1985⁵⁷; Bradley 1998)

For some, negative childhood experiences are overcome by later positive interactions. Some make a conscious decision to turn away from temptation. The presence and the power of God's grace, while not always measurable, cannot be discounted as a factor in helping an at-risk individual turn away from same-sex attraction. The labeling of an adolescent, or worse a child, as unchangeably "homosexual" does the individual a grave disservice. Such adolescents or children can, with appropriate, positive intervention, be given proper guidance to deal with early emotional traumas.

5) THERAPY

Those promoting the idea that sexual orientation is immutable frequently quote from a published discussion between Dr. C.C. Tripp and Dr. Lawrence Hatterer in which Dr. Tripp stated: "... there is not a single recorded instance of a change in homosexual orientation which has been validated by outside judges or testing. Kinsey wasn't able to find one. And neither Dr. Pomeroy nor I have been able to find such a patient. We would be happy to have one from Dr. Hatterer." (Tripp & Hatterer 1971) They fail to reference Dr. Hatterer response:

"I have 'cured' many homosexuals, Dr. Tripp. Dr. Pomeroy or any other researcher may examine my work because it is all documented on 10 years of tape recordings. Many of these 'cured' (I prefer to use the word 'changed') patients have married, had families and live happy lives. It is a destructive myth that 'once a homosexual, always a homosexual.' It has made and will make millions more committed homosexuals. What is more, not only have I but many other reputable psychiatrists (Dr. Samuel B. Hadden, Dr. Lionel Ovesey, Dr. Charles Socarides, Dr. Harold Lief, Dr. Irving Bieber, and others) have reported their successful treatments of the treatable homosexual." (Tripp & Hatterer 1971)

A number of therapists have written extensively on the positive results of therapy for same-sex attraction. Tripp chose to ignore the large body of literature on treatment and surveys of therapists. Reviews of treatment for unwanted same-sex attractions shows that it is as successful as treatment for similar psychological problems: about 30% experience a freedom from symptoms and another 30% experience improvement. (Bieber 1962⁵⁸; Clippinger 1974⁵⁹; Fine 1987⁶⁰; Kaye 1967⁶¹; MacIntosh 1994⁶²; Marmor 1965⁶³;

⁵⁷ Green: "This longitudinal study of two groups of boys demonstrates that the association between extensive cross-gender behavior in boyhood and homosexual behavior in adulthood, suggested by previous retrospective reports, can be validated by a prospective study of clinically or family-referred boys with behaviors consistent with the gender identity disorder of childhood. However, not all boys with extensive cross-gender behavior evolved as bisexual or homosexual men. No boys in the comparison group evolved as bisexual or homosexual." (p.340)

⁵⁸ Bieber: "The therapeutic results of our study provide reason for an optimistic outlook. Many homosexuals became exclusively heterosexual in psychoanalytic treatment. Although this change may be more easily accomplished by some than by others, in our judgment a heterosexual shift is a possibility for all homosexuals who are strongly motivated to change." (p.319)

⁵⁹ Clippinger: "Of 785 patients treated, 307 - or approximately 38% -- were cured. Adding the percentage figures of the two other studies, we can say that at least 40% of the homosexuals were cured, and an additional 10 to 30% of the homosexuals were improved, depending on the particular study for which statistics were available." (p.22)

Nicolosi 1998⁶⁴; Rogers 1976⁶⁵; Satinover 1996⁶⁶; Throckmorton⁶⁷; West ⁶⁸)

Reports from individual therapists have been equally positive. (Barnhouse 1977⁶⁹;

⁶⁰ Fine: "Whether with hypnosis ..., psychoanalysis of any variety, educative psychotherapy, behavior therapy, and/or simple educational procedures, a considerable percentage of overt homosexuals became heterosexual... If patients were motivated, whatever procedure is adopted a large percentage will give up their homosexuality... The misinformation that homosexuality is untreatable by psychotherapy does incalculable harm to thousands of men and women... All studies from Schrenk-Notzing on have found positive effects virtually regardless of the kind of treatment used." (p.85-86)

⁶¹ Kaye: "Finally, we have indications for therapeutic optimism in the psychoanalytic treatment of homosexual women. We find, roughly, at least a 50% probability of significant improvement in women with this syndrome who present themselves for treatment and remain in it." (p.634)

⁶² MacIntosh queried psychoanalysts who reported that of 824 male patients of 213 analysts - 197 (23.9%) changed to heterosexuality, 703 received significant therapeutic benefit; and of the 391 female patients of 153 analysts -- 79 (20.2%) changed to heterosexuality, 318 received significant therapeutic benefit. (p.1183)

⁶³ Marmor: "The clinicians represented in this volume present convincing evidence that homosexuality is a potentially reversible condition. There is little doubt that much of the recent success in the treatment of homosexuals stems from the growing recognition among psychoanalysts that homosexuality is a disorder of adaptation." (p. 21)

⁶⁴ Nicolosi surveyed 850 individuals and 200 therapists and counselors -- specifically seeking out individuals who claim to have made a degree of change in sexual orientation. Before counseling or therapy, 68% of respondents perceived themselves as exclusively or almost entirely homosexual, with another 22% stating they were more homosexual than heterosexual. After treatment only 13% perceived themselves as exclusively or almost entirely homosexuality, while 33% described themselves as either exclusively or almost entirely heterosexual. 99% of respondents said they now believe treatment to change homosexuality can be effective and valuable.

⁶⁵ Rogers: "In general, reports on the group treatment of homosexuals are optimistic; in almost all cases the therapists report a favorable outcome of therapy whether the therapeutic goal was one of achieving a change in sexual orientation or whether it was a reduction in concomitant problems." (p.22)

⁶⁶ Satinover reviewed literature in treatment and found that in the eight years between 1966 and 1974 alone, the Medline database -- which excludes many psychotherapy journals -- listed over a thousand articles on the treatment of homosexuality. According to Satinover, these reports contradict claims that change is impossible. Indeed, it would be more accurate to say that all the existing evidence suggests strongly that homosexuality is quite changeable. Most psychotherapists will allow that in the treatment of any condition, a 30% rate may be anticipated. (p.169)

⁶⁷ Throckmorton: "Narrowly, the question to be addressed is: Do conversion therapy techniques work to change unwanted sexual arousal? I submit that the case against conversion therapy requires opponents to demonstrate that no patients have benefited from such procedures or that any benefits are too costly in some objective way to be pursued even if they work. The available evidence supports the observation of many counselors -- that many individuals with same-gender sexual orientation have been able to change through a variety of counseling approaches." (p.287)

⁶⁸ West summarizes the results of studies: behavioral techniques have the best documented success (never less than 30%); psychoanalysis claims a great deal of success (the average rate seemed to be about 25%, but 50% of the bisexuals achieved exclusive heterosexuality.) "Every study ever performed on conversion from homosexual to heterosexual orientation has produced some successes."

⁶⁹ Barnhouse. "These facts and statistics about cure are well known and not difficult to verify. In addition, there are many people to have experienced their homosexuality as a burden either for moral or social reasons who have, without the aid of psychotherapy, managed to give up this symptom; of these, a significant number have been able to make the transition to satisfying heterosexuality. Quite apart from published studies by those who have specialized in the treatment of sexual disorders, many psychiatrists and psychologists with a more general type of practice (and I include myself in this group) have been successful in helping homosexual patients to make a complete and permanent transition to heterosexual."

Bergler 1962⁷⁰; Bieber 1979⁷¹; Cappon 1960⁷²; Caprio 1954⁷³; Ellis 1956⁷⁴; Hadden 1958⁷⁵; Hadden 1967b⁷⁶; Hadfield 1958⁷⁷; Hatterer 1970⁷⁸; Kronmeyer 1989⁷⁹) This is only a representative sampling of the therapists who report successful results in the treating of individuals experiencing same-sex attractions.

There are also numerous autobiographical reports from men and women who once believed themselves to be unchangeably bound by same-sex attractions and behaviors. Many of these men and women (Exodus 1990-2000⁸⁰) now describe themselves as free of same-sex attraction, fantasy, and behavior. Most of these

(p.109)

⁷⁰ Bergler: "In nearly thirty years, I have successfully concluded analyses of one hundred homosexuals... and have seen nearly five hundred cases in consultation. On the basis of the experience thus gathered, I make the positive statement that homosexuality has an excellent prognosis in psychiatric-psychoanalytic treatment of one to two years' duration, with a minimum of three appointments each week -- provided the patient really wishes to change. A considerable number of colleagues have achieved similar success."

(p.176)

⁷¹ Bieber: "We have followed some patients for as long as 20 years who have remained exclusively heterosexual. Reversal estimates now range from 30% to an optimistic 50%" (p.416).

⁷² Cappon reported that of patients with bisexual problems 90% were cured (i.e., no reversions to homosexual behavior, no consciousness of homosexual desire and fantasy) in males who terminated treatment by common consent. Male homosexual patients: 80% showed marked improvement (i.e., occasional relapses, release of aggression, increasingly dominant heterosexuality)... 50% changed."(p.265-268) Of female patients 30% changed.

⁷³ Caprio: "Many patients of mine, who were formerly lesbians, have communicated long after treatment was terminated, informing me that they are happily married and are convinced that they will never return to a homosexual way of life." (p.299)

⁷⁴ Ellis: "... it is felt that there are some grounds for believing that the majority of homosexuals who are seriously concerned about their condition and willing to work to improve it may, in the course of active psychoanalytically-oriented psychotherapy, be distinctly helped to achieve a more satisfactory heterosexual orientation." (p.194)

⁷⁵ Hadden: "From my experience I have concluded that homosexuals can be treated more effectively by group psychotherapy when they are started in groups made up exclusively of homosexuals. In such groups the rationalization that homosexuality is a pattern of life they wish to follow is destroyed by their fellow homosexuals." (p. 814)

⁷⁶ Hadden: "As each patient is brought into the group, we make it clear to him that we do not regard homosexuality as a particular disease, but as a symptom of an overall pattern of maladjustment.... I anticipate that better than one-third of the patients who persist in treatment will experience a reversal of their sexual pattern, but it may be necessary to continue in treatment for two or more years." (p.114)

⁷⁷ Hadfield reported curing 8 homosexuals: "By cure I do not mean... that the homosexual is merely able to control his propensity ... Nor .. do I mean that the patient is rendered capable of having sexual relations and bearing children; for ... he might do this by the help of homosexual fantasies. By 'cure' I mean that he loses his propensity to his own sex has his sexual interests directed towards those of the opposite sex, so that he becomes in all respects a sexually normal person." (p.1323)

⁷⁸ Hatterer reported: 49 patients changed (20 married, of these 10 remained married, 2 divorced, 18 achieved heterosexual adjustments); 18 partially recovered, remained single; 76 remained homosexual (28 palliated - 58 unchanged) "A large undisclosed population has melted into heterosexual society, persons who behaved homosexually in late adolescence and early adulthood, and who, on their own, resolved their conflicts and abandoned such behavior to go on to successful marriages or to bisexual patterns of adaptation." (p.14)

⁷⁹ Kronmeyer: "From my 25 years' experience as a clinical psychologist, I firmly believe that homosexuality is a learned response to early painful experiences and that it can be unlearned. For those homosexuals who are unhappy with their life and find effective therapy it is 'curable'" (p.7) individuals found freedom through participation in religion based support groups, although some also had recourse to therapists. Unfortunately, a number of influential persons and professional groups ignore this evidence (APA 1997⁸¹; Herek 1991⁸²) and there seems to be a concerted effort on the part of homosexual apologists to deny the effectiveness of treatment of same-sex attraction or claim that such treatment is harmful. Barnhouse expressed wonderment at these efforts: "The distortion of reality inherent in the denials by homosexual apologists that the condition is curable is so immense that one wonders what motivates it." (Barnhouse 1977)

⁸⁰ Exodus North America pdate publishes a monthly newsletter containing testimonies of men and women who have left homosexuality. PO Box 77652, Seattle WA 98177, see issues from 1990 - 2000

Robert Spitzer, M.D., the renowned Columbia University psychiatric researcher, who was directly involved in the 1973 decision to remove homosexuality from the American Psychiatric Association's list of mental disorders, has recently become involved with research the possibility of change. Dr. Spitzer stated in an interview: "I am convinced that many people have made substantial changes toward becoming heterosexual...I think that's news... I came to this study skeptical. I now claim that these changes can be sustained." (NARTH 2000).

6) THE GOALS OF THERAPY

Those who claim that change of sexual orientation is impossible, usually define change as total and permanent freedom from all homosexual behavior, fantasy, or attraction in a person who had previously been homosexual in behavior and attraction. (Tripp 1971⁸³) Even when change is defined in this extreme manner the claim is untrue. Numerous studies report cases of total change. (Goetz 1997⁸⁴)

Those who deny the possibility of total change admit that change of behavior is possible (Coleman 1978⁸⁵; Herron 1982⁸⁶) and that persons who have been sexually

⁸¹ "APA "Fact sheet: Homosexuality and Bisexuality: ... There is no published scientific evidence supporting the efficacy of 'reparative therapy' as a treatment to change one's sexual orientation."

⁸² Herek: "As recently as January of 1990, Dr. Bryant Welch, Executive Director for Professional Practice of the American Psychological Association, stated that 'no scientific evidence exists to support the effectiveness of any of the conversion therapies that try to change one's sexual orientation' and that 'research findings suggest that efforts to 'repair' homosexuals are nothing more than social prejudice garbed in psychological accouterments.'" (p.152)

⁸³ Tripp: "From my point of view, there is no indication that fundamental changes in anybody's sex life are ever wrought by therapy, nor would they be particularly desirable anyway. A person's best sexual orientation is the one that helps him get the most out of himself, spontaneously. Killing off his guilt and his childish expectation that conformity is the road to heaven both tend to give him confidence and the energy to make a much smoother social integration... Since homosexuality is an alternate orientation and not a disease, 'cure' is patently impossible. What passes for 'cure' is surface symptom suppression or outright avoidance." (p.48)

⁸⁴ Goetz reviewed 17 studies and found a total of 44 persons who were exclusively or predominantly homosexual experienced a full shift of sexual orientation.

⁸⁵ Coleman: "... to offer a cure to homosexuals who request a change in their sexual orientation is, in my opinion unethical. There is evidence, as reviewed in this paper, that therapists can help individuals change their behavior for a period of time. The question remains whether it is beneficial for patients to change their behavior to something that is inconsistent or incongruent with their sexual orientation." (p.354)

⁸⁶ Herron: "'Changing a person's sexual behavior from homosexual to heterosexual might be accomplished by working with a potential already present, but this would not really change the person's preference. While it may appear that psychoanalysis can change a person's sexual orientation, in truth this is a limited accomplishment that happens only occasionally and even then is of questionable duration.'" (p.179)

involved with both sexes appear more able to change.(Acosta 1975⁸⁷) A careful reading of the articles opposing therapy for change reveals that the authors who see therapy for change as unethical (Davison 1982⁸⁸; Gittings 1973⁸⁹) do so because they view the such therapy as oppressive to those who do not want to change (Begelman 1975⁹⁰; 1977⁹¹; Murphy 1992⁹²; Sleek 1997⁹³; Smith 1988⁹⁴) and view those persons with same-sex attraction who express a desire to change as victims of societal or religious oppression. (Begelman 1977⁹⁵; Silverstein 1972⁹⁶)

It should be noted that almost without exception, those who regard therapy as unethical, also reject abstinence from non-marital sexual activity as a minimal goal

⁸⁷ Acosta: "Most therapeutic success seem to be with bisexuals rather than exclusive homosexuals. The combined use of psychotherapy and specific behavioral techniques is seen to offer some promise for heterosexual adaptation with certain kinds of patients." (p.9)

⁸⁸ Davison: "... even if one were to demonstrate that a particular sexual preference could be modified by a negative learning experience, there remains the question of how relevant these data are to the ethical question of whether one should engage in such behavior changes regimens. The simple truth is that data on efficacy are quite irrelevant. Even if we could effect certain changes, there is still the more important question of whether we should. I believe we should not." (p.96) "Change of orientation therapy programs should be eliminated. Their availability only confirms professional and societal biases against homosexuality, despite seemingly progressive rhetoric about its normality..."(p.97)

⁸⁹ Gittings: "The homosexual community looks upon efforts to change homosexuals to heterosexuality, or to mold younger, supposedly malleable homosexuals into heterosexuality... as an assault upon our people comparable in its way to genocide."

⁹⁰ Begelman: "The efforts of behavior therapists to reorient homosexuals to heterosexuals by their very existence constitute a significant causal element in reinforcing the social doctrine that homosexuality is bad." (p.180)

⁹¹ Begelman: "My recommendation that behavior therapists consider abandoning the administration of sexual reorientation techniques is based on the following considerations. Administering these programs means reinforcing the social belief system about homosexuality. The meaning of the act of providing reorientation services is yet another element in a causal nexus of oppression." (p.217)

⁹² Murphy: "There would be no reorientation techniques where there no interpretation that homoeroticism is an inferior state, an interpretation that in many ways continues to be medically defined, criminally enforced, socially sanctioned, and religiously justified. And it is in this moral interpretation, more than in the reigning medical theory of the day, that all programs of sexual reorientation have their common origins and justifications." (p.520)

⁹³ Sleek quotes Linda Garnet, Chair of APA's Board for Advancement of Psychology in the Public Interest who stated that reorientation therapies "feed upon society's prejudice towards gays and may exacerbate a patient's problems with poor self-esteem, shame, and guilt."

⁹⁴ Smith: "'Naturally, all parents wish their children to be happy and to resemble themselves, and if it were possible to prevent homosexual adjustment (not to mention transsexualism) most parents would welcome the intervention. On the other hand, this raises ethical issues along the lines of other 'Final Solutions' to minority problems.'"(p.67)

⁹⁵ Begelman: "The recommendation is not based on any abstract disagreement with the principle that patients have a right to seek aid in reducing their anxiety or upset. But it does take cognizance of the fact that the homosexual person who seeks treatment does so most of the time because he has been forced into adopting a conventional and prejudicial view of his behavior. On what ethical basis, it may be asked, are we obliged to desert the patient in favor of allegiance to an abstract set of considerations." (p.217)

⁹⁶ Silverstein : "To suggest that a person comes voluntarily to change his sexual orientation is to ignore the powerful environmental stress, oppression if you will, that has been telling him for years that he should change... What brings them into counseling is guilt, shame, and the loneliness that comes from their secret. If you really wish to help them freely choose, I suggest you first desensitize them to their guilt. Allow them to dissolve the shame about their desires and actions and to feel comfortable with their sexuality. After that, let them choose, but not before."(p.4)

(Barrett 1996⁹⁷) and among the therapists who accept homosexual acts as normal many find nothing wrong with infidelity in committed relationships (Nelson 1982⁹⁸), anonymous sexual encounters, general promiscuity, auto-eroticism (Saghir 1973), sado-masochism, and various paraphilias. Some even support a lessening of restrictions on sex between adults and minors (Mirkin 1999⁹⁹) or deny the negative psychological impact of sexual child abuse. (Rind 1998; Smith 1988¹⁰⁰)

Some of those who consider therapy unethical also challenge established theories of child development. (Davison 1982¹⁰¹; Menvielle 1998¹⁰²) These tend to place blame for the undeniable problems suffered by homosexually active adolescents and adults on societal oppression. All research conclusions must be evaluated in light of the biases which the researchers bring to the project. When research is infused with an acknowledged political agenda, its value is seriously diminished.

It should be pointed out that Catholics cannot support forms of therapy which encourage the patients to replace one form of sexual sin with another. (Schwartz 1984) Some therapists, for example, do not consider a patient "cured" until he can comfortably engage in sexual activity with the other sex, even if the patient is not married. (Masters 1979) Others encouraged patients to masturbate using other-sex imagery. (Blitch 1972; Conrad 1976)

For a Catholic with same sex attraction, the goal of therapy should be freedom to live chastely according to one's state in life. Some of those who have struggled with same-sex attractions believe that they are called to a celibate life. They should not be made to feel that they have failed to achieve freedom, because they do not experience desires for the other sex. Others wish to marry and have children. There is every reason to hope that many will be able, in time, to achieve this goal. They should not, however,

⁹⁷ Barrett: "Assisting gays and lesbians to step away from external religious authority may challenge the counselor's own acceptance of religious teachings." (p.8)

⁹⁸ Nelson, a professor of Christian ethics defends homosexual infidelity: "... it is insensitive and unfair to judge gay men and lesbians by a heterosexual ideal of the monogamous relationship... Some such couples (as is true of some heterosexual couples) have explored relationships that admit the possibility of sexual intimacy with secondary partners." (p.173)

⁹⁹ Mirkin: "This article will argue that, like homosexuality, the concept of child molestation is a culture and class specific modern creation. Though Americans consider intergenerational sex to be evil, it has been permissible or obligatory in many cultures and periods of history. Sex with male youths is especially widespread." (p.4)

¹⁰⁰ Smith: "Pedophilia may be a cultural label rather than anything inherently medical or psychiatric; anthropological findings support this view." (p.68)

¹⁰¹ Davison: "Bieber et al. found that what they called a 'close-binding intimate mother' was present much more often in the life history of the analytic homosexual patients than among the heterosexual controls. But what is wrong with such a mother unless you happen to find her in the background of people whose current behavior you judge beforehand to be pathological? Moreover, even when an emotional disorder is identified in a homosexual, it could be argued that the problem is due to the extreme duress under which the person has to live in a society that asserts that homosexuals are 'queer' and that actively oppresses them." (p.92)

¹⁰² Menvielle in letter criticizing an article on GID by Bradley and Zucker (1997): "The ethical implications of whether childhood GID is a psychiatric disorder versus a manifestation of normal homosexual orientation are vital because labeling prehomosexual children as disordered would be incorrect." (p.243) Bradley and Zucker responded: "Dr. Menvielle is naive in his assumption that these children would be happy if they were simply allowed to 'grow up' pursuing their cross-gender behavior and interests, including the desire to change sex. They are unhappy children who are using these behaviors defensively to deal with their distress." (p.244)

be encouraged to rush into marriage, since there is ample evidence that marriage is not a cure for same-sex attractions. With the power of grace, the sacraments, support from the community, and an experienced therapist, a determined individual should be able to achieve the inner freedom promised by Christ.

Experienced therapists can help individuals uncover and understand the root causes of the emotional trauma which gave rise to their same sex attractions and then work in therapy to resolve this pain. Men experiencing same-sex attractions often discover how their masculine identity was negatively effected by feelings of rejection from father or peers or from a poor body image which result in sadness, anger and insecurity. As this emotional pain is healed in therapy, the masculine identity is strengthened and same sex attractions diminish.

Women with same sex attractions can come to see how conflicts with fathers or other significant males led them to mistrust of male love or how lack of maternal affection led to a deep longing for female love. Insight into causes of anger and sadness will hopefully lead to forgiveness and freedom. All this takes time. In this respect individuals suffering from same-sex attraction are no different than the many other men and women who have emotional pain and need to learn how to forgive.

Catholic therapists working with Catholic individuals should feel free to use the wealth of Catholic spirituality in this healing process. Those with father wounds can be encouraged to develop their relationship with God as a loving father. Those who were rejected or ridiculed by peers as youngsters can meditate upon the Jesus as brother, friend, and protector. Those who feel unmothered can turn to Mary for comfort.

There is every reason for hope that with time those who seek freedom will find it, but we must recognize when we encourage hope, there are some who will not achieve their goals. We may find ourselves in the same position as a pediatric oncologist who spoke of how when he first began his practice, there was almost no hope for children stricken with cancer and the physician's duty was to help the parents accept the inevitable and not waste their resources chasing a "cure." Today almost 70% of the children recover, but each death leaves the medical team with terrible feeling of failure. As the prevention and treatment of same-sex attraction improves, the individuals who still struggle will, more than ever, need compassionate and sensitive support.

PART II RECOMMENDATIONS

1) MINISTRY TO INDIVIDUALS EXPERIENCING SAME-SEX ATTRACTIVE

It is very important for every Catholic experiencing same sex attractions to know that there is hope, and that there is help. Unfortunately, this help is not always readily available in all areas. Support groups, therapists, and spiritual counselors who unequivocally support the Church's teaching are essential components of the help that is needed. Since the notions of sexuality in our country are so varied patients seeking help must be cautious that the group or counselor supports Catholic moral imperatives. One of the better known Catholic support agencies is an organization known as Courage (See Appendix) and its affiliated organization Encourage. While any attempt to teach the sinfulness of illicit homosexual behavior may be greeted with accusations of 'homophobia', the reality is that Christ calls all to chastity in keeping with the particular state of life. The desire of the Church to help all live chastely is not a blanket condemnation of any who find chastity difficult but rather the compassionate response of a Church seeking to imitate Christ, the Good Shepherd.

It is essential that every Catholic experiencing same-sex attractions have easy access to support groups, therapists, and spiritual counselors who unequivocally support the Church's teaching and are prepared to offer the highest quality help. In many areas the only support groups available are run by Evangelical Christians or by people who reject the Church's teaching. The failure of the Catholic community to provide for the needs of this population is a serious omission which must not be allowed to continue. It is particularly tragic that Courage, which under the leadership of Fr. John Harvey has developed an excellent and authentically Catholic network of support groups, is not yet available in every diocese and major city.

Anecdotal reports of individuals or organizations, under Catholic auspices or directly associated with the Catholic Church, counseling persons with same-sex attractions to practice fidelity in same-sex relationships rather than chastity according to their state in life are quite distressing. It is most important that Church related counselors or support groups be very clear about the nature and genesis of same-sex attraction. This condition is not genetically or biologically determined. This condition is not unchangeable. It is deceitful to counsel individuals experiencing same-sex attractions that it is acceptable to engage in sexual acts provided these occur within the context of a faithful relationship. The teachings of the Catholic Church on sexual morality are explicitly clear and do not allow exceptions. Catholics have a right to know the truth and those working with or for Catholic institutions have an obligation to clearly enunciate that truth.

Some clerics, perhaps because they erroneously believe that same-sex attraction is genetically determined and unchangeable, have encouraged individuals experiencing same-sex attractions to identify with the gay community, by publicly proclaiming themselves gay or lesbian, but live chastity in their personal life. There are several reasons why this is an misguided course of action: 1) It is based on the mistaken idea that same-sex attraction is an unchangeable aspect of the individual and discourages persons from seeking help; 2) The "gay" community promotes an ethic of sexual behavior which is totally antithetical to the Catholic teaching on sexuality and has made no secret of its desire to eliminate "erotophobia" and "heterosexism." There is simply no way the position articulated by spokespersons for the "gay" movement and the Catholic church can be reconciled; 3) It puts easily tempted persons into places which must be considered the near occasion of sin.; 4) It creates a false hope that the Church will eventually change its teaching on sexual morality.

Catholics must, of course, reach out to individuals experiencing same-sex attraction, to those actively involved in homosexual acts, and particularly to those suffering from sexually transmitted diseases, with love, hope, and the authentic, uncompromised message of freedom from sin through Jesus Christ.

2) THE ROLE OF THE PRIEST

It is of paramount importance that priests, when faced with parishioners troubled by same-sex attraction, have access to solid information and genuinely beneficial resources. The priest, however, must do more than simply refer to other agencies (See Courage and Encourage in the Appendix). He is in a unique position to provide specific spiritual assistance to those experiencing same-sex attraction. He must, of course, be very sensitive to the intense feelings of insecurity, guilt, shame, anger, frustration, sadness, and even fear in these individuals. This does not preclude him from speaking very clearly about the teachings of the Church (See CCC, n.2357-2359), the need for forgiveness and healing in Confession, the need to avoid occasions of sin, and the need for a strong prayer life. A number of therapists believe that religious faith plays a crucial part in the recovery from same-sex attraction and sexual addictions.

When an individual confesses same-sex attractions, fantasies, or homosexual acts, the priest should be aware that these are often manifestations of childhood and adolescent traumas, sexual child abuse, or unmet childhood needs for the love and affirmation from the same-sex parent. Unless these underlying problems are addressed, the individual may find the temptations returning and fall into despair. Those who reject the Church's teachings and encourage persons with same-sex attractions to enter into so called "stable, loving homosexual unions" fail to understand that such arrangements will not resolve these underlying problems. While encouraging therapy and support group membership, the priest should remember that through the sacrament, he can help individual penitents deal not only with the sin, but also with causes of same-sex attraction.

The following list, while not exhaustive, illustrates some of the ways in which a priest may help the individuals with these problems who come to the Sacrament of Reconciliation:

- a) Persons, experiencing same-sex attraction or confessing sins in this area, almost always carry a burden of deep emotional pain, sadness, and resentment toward those who have rejected, neglected or hurt them, including their parents, peers, and sexual molesters. Helping them to forgive can be the first step in healing.(Fitzgibbons 1999¹⁰³)
- b) Individuals experiencing same-sex attractions often report a long history of early sexual experiences and sexual trauma.(Doll 1992¹⁰⁴) Homosexually active persons are more likely to have engaged in sexual activity with another person at a young age.(Stephan 1973¹⁰⁵; Bell 1981¹⁰⁶) Many have never told any one about these experiences (Johnson 1985)¹⁰⁷ and carry tremendous guilt and shame. In some cases, those who were sexually abused feel guilty because they reacted to their trauma by acting out sexually. The priest can delicately inquire about early experiences, assuring these persons that their sins are forgiven, and help them to find freedom through forgiving others.

¹⁰³ Fitzgibbons: "Experience has taught me that healing is a difficult process, but through the mutual efforts of the therapist and the patient, serious emotional wounds can be healed over a period of time." (p.96)

c) Individuals involved in homosexual activity may also suffer from sexual addiction (Saghir 1973¹⁰⁸; Beitchman 1991¹⁰⁹; Goode 1977¹¹⁰) Those who engage in homosexual activity are also more likely to have engaged in extreme forms of sexual behavior or to have exchanged sex for money. (Saghir 1973¹¹¹) Addictions are not easy to overcome, frequent recourse to confession can be a first step to freedom. The priest should remind the penitents that even the most extreme sins in these areas can be forgiven, encouraging them to resist despair and to persevere, while at the same time suggesting that support group designed to deal with addiction.

d) Persons with same-sex attractions are often abuse alcohol, prescription drugs and illegal drugs. (Fifield 1977¹¹²; Saghir 1973¹¹³) Such abuse may weaken resistance to ¹⁰⁴ Doll: 42% of a sample of 1,001 homosexual men reported childhood experiences that meet the criteria for sexual abuse.

¹⁰⁵ Stephan: "... homosexuals reported experiencing their first orgasm at a younger age than the heterosexuals" 24% of homosexuals first orgasms occurred during homosexual contacts versus 2% of heterosexuals .(p.511)

¹⁰⁶ Bell: Homosexuals average age of first homosexual encounter 9.7 years. Heterosexuals first sexual encounter 11.6 years.

¹⁰⁷ Johnson: "The 40 adolescent males reporting sexual victimization ranged in age from 15 to 21 years at the time of their initial clinic visit... No adolescent under 15 years of age reported having been sexually assaulted, and only six of the 40 were under age 17...Only six of the 40 patients reported having revealed the assault to anyone prior to the interview... All six patients identified themselves as currently homosexual." (p.374) "Even though nearly half of our adolescent male clinic population is under 15 years of age, all the adolescents who admitted sexual molestation were over 15 years of age. Since all the reported molestations occurred during the preadolescent years, we can only speculate that our young adolescent males did not report earlier sexual abuse. " Of the 40 reporting sexual abuse 47.5% self-identified as homosexual. (p.375)

¹⁰⁸ Saghir and Robins found that while less than 6% of heterosexual men under 19 and 0% of those over 19 masturbated 4 or more times per week, 46% of homosexual men under 19, 31% of those 20 to 29, and 26% of those over 30 did so. (p.49-50)

¹⁰⁹ Beitchman:"...sexually abused school-age children of both sexes, like their sexually abused pre-school counterparts, appeared more likely to manifest inappropriate sexual behaviors (e.g., excessive masturbation, sexual preoccupation, and sexual aggression) than did both normal and clinical controls." (p.544)

¹¹⁰ Goode: Never masturbated - 28% Homosexually inexperienced women versus 0% homosexually experienced. Masturbated 6 or more times in past month - 13% of HIW v. 50% of HEW.

¹¹¹ Saghir and Robins' study found 40% of homosexual men paid or received money for sex, verses 17% of controls (not homosexual) who paid for sex, none received. (p.81)

¹¹² Fifield:"... an alarming number of gay men and women (31.96%) are trapped in an alcohol-centered lifestyle."

¹¹³ Saghir and Robins found that 30% of the homosexuals in their sample reported excessive drinking or alcohol dependence verses 20% of the heterosexuals. (p.119) sexual temptation. The priest may recommend membership in a support group which addresses these problems.

e) Despair and suicidal thoughts are also frequently a part of the life of an individual troubled by same-sex attraction. (Beitchman 1991¹¹⁴; Herrell 1999; Fergusson 1999) The priest can assure the penitent that there is every reason to hope that the situation will change and that God loves them and wants them to live a full and happy life. Again, forgiving others can be extremely helpful.

f) Persons experiencing same-sex attraction may suffer from spiritual problems such as envy (Hurst 1980) or self pity. (Van den Aardweg 1969) It is important that the individual experiencing same-sex attractions not be treated as though sexual temptations were their only problem.

g) The overwhelming majority of men and women experiencing same-sex attraction and women report a poor relationship with their fathers (see footnotes 17 to 23). The priest, as a loving and accepting father figure, can through the sacrament begin the work of repairing that damage and facilitating a healing relationship with God the Father. The priest can also encourage devotion to St. Joseph.

The priest needs to be aware of the depth of healing needed by these seriously conflicted persons. He needs to be a source of hope for the despairing, forgiveness for the erring, strength for the weak, encouragement for the faint of heart, sometimes a loving father figure for the wounded. In brief, he must be Jesus for these beloved children of God who find themselves in most difficult situations. He must be pastorally sensitive but he must also be pastorally firm, imitating, as always, the compassionate Jesus who healed and forgave seventy times seven times but always reminded, Go and do not commit this sin again .

3) CATHOLIC MEDICAL PROFESSIONALS

Pediatricians need to know the symptoms of Gender Identity Disorder (GID) and chronic juvenile unmasculinity. With early identification and intervention, there is every reason to hope that the problem can be successfully resolved. (Zucker 1995¹¹⁵; Newman 1976¹¹⁶) While the primary reason for treating children is to alleviate their present unhappiness (Newman 1976¹¹⁷; Bradley 1998¹¹⁸; Bates 1974¹¹⁹), treatment of GID and

¹¹⁴ Beitchman: "A review of studies reporting symptomology among sexually abused adolescents revealed evidence for the presence of depression, low self-esteem, and suicidal ideation." (p.544)

¹¹⁵ Zucker: "...In general we concur with those (e.g. Green 1972; Newman 1976; Stoller, 1978) who believe that the earlier treatment begins, the better." (p.281) "It has been our experience that a sizable number of children and their families can achieve a great deal of change. In these cases, the gender identity disorder resolves fully, and nothing in the children's behavior or fantasy suggest that gender identity issues remain problematic.... All things considered, however, we take the position that in such cases a clinician should be optimistic, not nihilistic, about the possibility of helping the children to become more secure in their gender identity." (p.282)

¹¹⁶ Newman: "Feminine boys, unlike men with postpubertal gender identity disorders seem remarkably responsive to treatment." (p.684)

¹¹⁷ Newman: "Teasing and social rejection by male peers decreases and is replaced by acceptance. During chronic juvenile unmasculinity can prevent the development of same-sex attraction and the problems associated with homosexual activity in adolescence and adult life.

Most parents do not want their child to become involved in homosexual behavior, but parents of children at-risk are often resistant to treatment. (Zucker 1995; Newman 1976¹²⁰) Informing them of estimates that 75% of children exhibiting the symptoms of GID and CHRONIC JUVENILE UNMASCULINITY will without intervention experience same-sex attraction (Bradley 1998) and letting them know the risks associated with homosexual activity (Garafalo 1998¹²¹; Osmond 1994¹²²; Stall 1988b¹²³; Rotello 1997; Signorille 1997¹²⁴) may help to overcome their opposition to therapy. Parental cooperation is extremely important if early intervention is to succeed.

Pediatricians should familiarize themselves with the literature on treatment. George Rekers has written a number of books on the subject. (Rekers 1988¹²⁵) Zucker and Bradley provide a comprehensive review of the literature in their book Gender Identity Disorder and Psychosocial Problems in Children and Adolescents, (1995) as well as numerous cases histories and treatment recommendations.

Physicians encountering patients with sexually transmitted diseases acquired through homosexual activity can inform the patients that psychological therapy and support groups are available, and that approximately 30% of motivated patients can achieve a change in orientation. In terms of disease prevention, an additional 30% are able to remain celibate or eliminate high risk behavior. They should also question these patients about drug and alcohol abuse, and recommend treatment when appropriate, since the initial 12 - 24 months of treatment, these patients begin to enjoy being accepted as boys, and their acceptance is a strong, continuing reinforcer." (p.684)

¹¹⁸ Bradley: "Our experience is that such suffering diminishes radically, and self esteem improves when the parent are able to value the child and to support and to encourage same-sex behavior." (p.245)

¹¹⁹ Bates: "It seems likely that it is the combination of effeminacy, fearfulness, social aversiveness; and immaturity that together constitute sufficient conditions for parents, schools, and others to seek clinical intervention for effeminacy." (p.14)

¹²⁰ Newman: "Mothers generally fear losing the son's companionship as he becomes more masculine and therefore reluctant to begin a treatment program." (p.684)

¹²¹ Garafalo: "Gay and bisexual teenagers may take more risks, and engage in risky behavior earlier in life, than teenagers who describe themselves as heterosexual. GLB [gay, lesbian, bisexual] teenagers were more likely to consider or attempt suicide, abuse alcohol or drugs, participate in risky sexual activity, or be victimized, and to initiate these behaviors earlier."

¹²² Osmond et al. conducted a household survey of unmarried men 18 through 29 years of age found that of 328 homosexual men 20.1% tested positive tested for HIV.

¹²³ Stall: "... the prevalence of use of particular drugs within this sample of an urban gay community is quite high and significant differences exist between the number of drugs used by the homosexual and heterosexual respondents. The finding that a sizable proportion of gay men use many different types of drugs raises the possibility that concurrent drug use is relatively common among gay men." (p.71)

¹²⁴ Signorille, quoting Steve Troy: "It's the age of AIDS and I think people's attitude is, 'I don't know how long I'm going to live... The majority of people who go to the circuit parties are HIV-positive, I really think so. Their attitude is, 'I'm going to live for the moment.' The circuit parties are the one outlet we have for total escapism. The unfortunate part of it is that when we do the drugs, we become much less inhibited. Things that we might normally not do when we have our wits about us, we actually do... And, to be honest, I can't say I'm... I can't say that I haven't done that myself. When people are on drugs, the chances of unsafe sex are greater -- like ten times higher." (p. 116)

¹²⁵ Rekers: "With major research grants from the National Institute of Mental Health, I have experimentally demonstrated an affective treatment for "gender identity disorder of childhood" which appears to hold potential for preventing homosexual orientation in males, if applied extensively in the population."

a number of studies have linked infection with STDs to substance abuse. (Mulry 1994¹²⁶)

Even before the AIDS epidemic a study of men who have sex with men found that 63% had contracted a sexually transmitted disease through homosexual activity. (Bell 1978¹²⁷) In spite of all the AIDS education, epidemiologists predict that for the foreseeable future 50% of men who have sex with men will become HIV positive. (Hoover 1991; Morris 1994; Rotello 1997¹²⁸) They are also at risk for syphilis, gonorrhea, hepatitis A, B, C, HPV, and a number of other illness.

Mental health professionals should familiarize themselves with the works of therapists who have successfully treated persons experiencing same-sex attraction. Because same-sex attraction does not arise from a single cause, different individuals may require different types of treatment. Combining therapy with support group membership and spiritual healing is also an option that should be considered.

4) TEACHERS IN CATHOLIC INSTITUTIONS

Teachers in Catholic institutions have a duty to defend the teachings of the Church on sexual morality, to counter false information on same-sex attraction, and to inform at-risk or homosexually involved adolescents that help is available. They should continue to resist pressure to include condom education in the curriculum to accommodate homosexually active adolescents. Numerous studies have found that such education is ineffective at preventing disease transmission in the at-risk population. (Stall 1988a¹²⁹; Calabrese 1987¹³⁰; Hoover 1991¹³¹)

"Gay" rights activists have insisted that at-risk adolescents be turned over to support groups which will help them "come out." There is no evidence that participation in such groups prevents the long-term negative consequences associated with homosexual activity. Such groups will definitely not encourage the adolescent to refrain from sin and live chastely according to his state in life. Symptoms of GID and chronic juvenile ¹²⁶ Mulry: "...men who never drank prior to sex were very unlikely to have engaged in unprotected anal intercourse, whereas 90% of men who had at least one occasion of unprotected anal intercourse also drank at least some of the time prior to sexual intercourse." The report found: "a virtual absence of individuals who did not drink but did engage unprotected anal intercourse." (p.181)

¹²⁷ Bell: 62% of 575 homosexual men in a study published in 1978 had contracted a sexually transmitted disease from homosexual contacts.

¹²⁸ Rotello: "Who wants to encourage their kids to engage in a life that exposes them to a 50 percent chance of HIV infection? Who even wants to be neutral about such a possibility? If the rationale behind social tolerance of homosexuality is that it allows gay kids an equal shot at the pursuit of happiness, that rationale is hopelessly undermined by an endless epidemic that negates happiness." (p.286)

¹²⁹ Stall: "Even using cross-sectional designs, the efficacy of health education interventions in reducing sexual risk for HIV infection has not been consistently demonstrated... More education, over long period time, cannot be assumed to be effective in inducing behavior changes among chronically high-risk men." (p.883)

¹³⁰ Calabrese, Harris, and Easley studying a sample of gay men living outside of the large coastal gay communities, found that neither attendance at a safe sex lecture, reading a safe sex brochure, receiving advice from a physician about AIDS, testing for HIV antibodies, nor counseling at an alternative test site was associated with participation in safe sex.

¹³¹ Hoover: "The overall probability of seroconversion [from HIV - to HIV +] prior to age 55 years is about 50%, with seroconversion still continuing at and after age 55. Given that this cohort consists of volunteers receiving extensive anti-HIV-1 transmission education, the future seroconversion rates of the general homosexual population may be even higher than those observed here." (p.1190) unmasculinity in boys should be taken seriously. At-risk children do, however, need special help, particularly those who have been victims of sexual child abuse.

Educators also have a duty to stop teasing and ridicule of children who do not conform to gender norms. Resources to educate teachers, lesson plans, and strategies for dealing with teasing need to be created and provided to teachers in Catholic schools, CCD programs, and other institutions.

5) CATHOLIC FAMILIES

When Catholic parents discover that their son or daughter is experiencing same-sex attractions or engaged in homosexual activity, they are often devastated. Afraid for the child's health, happiness, and salvation, parents are usually relieved when informed that same-sex attraction is treatable and preventable. They can find support from other parents in Encourage. They also need to be able to share their burden with loving friends and families.

Parents should be informed about the symptoms of Gender Identity Disorder and the prevention of gender identity problems, encouraged to take such symptoms seriously and to refer children with gender identity problems to qualified and morally appropriate mental health professionals.

6) THE CATHOLIC COMMUNITY

There was a time in the not too distant past when pregnancy outside of marriage and abortion were taboo topics and attitudes toward the women involved were judgmental and harsh. The legalization of abortion forced the Church to confront this issue and provide an active ministry to women facing an "unwanted" pregnancy and to women experiencing post-abortion trauma. In a few short years the approach of dioceses, individual parishes, and the Catholic faithful has been transformed and today true Christian charity is the norm rather than the exception. In the same way the attitudes toward same-sex attraction can be transformed, provided each Catholic institution does its part.

Those experiencing same-sex attractions, those who are engaging in homosexual behavior, and their families often feel that they are excluded from the loving concern of the Catholic community. Prayer for persons experiencing same-sex attractions and their families offered as part of the intentions during mass is one way to let them know that the community cares for them.

The members of Catholic media need to be informed about same-sex attraction, the teachings of the Church, and resources for prevention and treatment. Pamphlets and other materials, which clearly articulate the Church's teaching and provide information on resources for those with immediate needs in this area, should be developed and distributed from racks already present in many churches.

When a member of the Catholic media, a teacher in a Catholic institution, or a pastor, misstates the Church's teaching or gives the impression that same-sex attraction is genetically determined and unchangeable, the laity can offer information designed to correct these misunderstandings.

7) BISHOPS

The Catholic Medical Association recognizes the responsibility which a Diocesan Bishop has to oversee the orthodoxy of teaching within his Diocese. This certainly includes clear instruction in the nature and purpose of intimate sexual relations between persons and the sinfulness of inappropriate relations. The CMA looks forward to working with Bishops and priests in assisting in the establishment of appropriate support groups and therapeutic models for those struggling with same-sex attractions. While we see the Courage and Encourage programs as very useful and valuable and actively promote them, we are certain that there are other modes of support and are willing to work with any psychologically, spiritually and morally appropriate program.

8) HOPE

Jeffrey Satinover, MD and Ph.D., has written of his extensive experience with patients experiencing same-sex attraction:

"I have been extraordinarily fortunate to have met many people who have emerged from the gay life. When I see the personal difficulties they have squarely faced, the sheer courage they have displayed not only in facing these difficulties but also in confronting a culture that uses every possible means to deny the validity of their values, goals, and experiences, I truly stand back in wonder... It is these people -- former homosexuals and those who are still struggling, all across America and abroad -- who stand for me as a model of everything good and possible in a world that takes the human heart, and the God of that heart, seriously. In my various explorations within the worlds of psychoanalysis, psychotherapy, and psychiatry, I have simply never before seen such profound healing."(Satinover 1996)

Those who wish to be free from same-sex attractions frequently turn first to the Church. CMA wants to be sure that they find the help and hope they are seeking. There is every reason to hope that every person experiencing same-sex attraction who seeks help from the Church can find freedom from homosexual behavior and many will find much more, but they will come only if they see love in our words and deeds.

If Catholic medical professionals have in the past failed to meet the needs of this patient population, failed to work diligently to develop effective prevention and treatment therapies, or failed to treat patients experiencing these problems with the respect due every person, we ask forgiveness.

The Catholic Medical Association recognizes that health care professionals have a special duty in this area and hopes that this statement will help them to caring out that duty according to the principles of the Catholic Faith.

=====

The research referenced in this report is drawn from a wide variety of sources. In most cases, numerous other sources could have been cited. For those desiring to make an in-depth study of the issues raised, a comprehensive bibliography can be obtained (74747.2241 compuserve.com) along with reviews of the relevant literature.

It should also be pointed out that many of the authors cited do not accept the Church's teaching on the intrinsically disordered nature of homosexual acts. No effort has been made to distinguish between those who do and those who don't, since those who favor prevention and treatment and those who support gay-affirming therapy present essentially consistent statistical evidence and case material, differing on the interpretation and relevance of the evidence.

BIBLIOGRAPH FOR CMA STATEMENT ON HOMOSEXUALITY

- Acosta, F. (1975) Etiology and treatment of homosexuality: A review. Archives of Sexual Behavior. 4: 9 - 29.
- American Psychiatric Association (1997) Fact Sheet: Homosexuality and Bisexuality. Washington DC:APA. Sept.
- American Psychiatric Association (1994) Diagnostic and Statistical Manual. Washington DC: APA.
- Apperson, L., McAdoo, W. (1968) Parental factors in the childhood of homosexuals. Journal of Abnormal Psychology. 73, 3: 201 - 206.
- Bailey, J., Miller, J., Willerman, L. (1993) Maternally rated childhood gender nonconformity in homosexuals and heterosexuals. Archives of Sexual Behavior. 22, 5: 461 - 469.
- Bailey, J., Pillard, R. (1991) A genetic study of male sexual orientation. Archives of General Psychiatry. 48: 1089 - 1096.
- Barnhouse, R. (1977) Homosexuality: A Symbolic Confusion. NY: Seabury Press.
- Barrett, R., Barzan, R. (1996) Spiritual experiences of gay men and lesbians. Counseling and Values. 41: 4 - 15.
- Bates, J., Skilbeck, W., Smith, K., Bentley, P. (1974) Gender role abnormalities in boys: An analysis of clinical rates. Journal of Abnormal Child Psychology. 2, 1: 1 - 17.
- Begelman, D. (1977) Homosexuality and the ethics of behavioral intervention. Journal of Homosexuality. 2, 3: 213 - 218.
- Begelman, D. (1975) Ethical and legal issues of behavior modification (in Hersen, M., Eisler, R., Miller, P. Progress in Behavior Modification. NY: Academic).
- Beitchman, J., Zucker, K., Hood, J., DaCosta, G., Akman, D. (1991) A review of the short-term effects of child sexual abuse. Child Abuse and Neglect. 15: 537 - 556.
- Bell, A., Weinberg, M., Hammersmith, S. (1981) Sexual Reference: Its Development in Men and Women. Bloomington IN: Indiana U.P.
- Bell, A., Weinberg, M. (1978) Homosexualities: A Study of Diversity Among Men and Women. NY: Simon and Schuster.
- Bene, E. (1965) On the genesis of male homosexuality: An attempt at clarifying the role of the parents. British Journal of Psychiatry. 111: 803 - 813.
- Berger, J. (1994) The psychotherapeutic treatment of male homosexuality. American Journal of Psychotherapy. 48, 2: 251 - 261.
- Bergler, E. (1962) Homosexuality: Disease or Way of Life. NY: Collier Books.
- Bieber, I., Bieber, T. (1979) Male homosexuality. Canadian Journal of Psychiatry. 24, 5: 409 - 421.
- Bieber, I. (1976) A discussion of "Homosexuality: The ethical challenge." Journal of Consulting and Clinical Psychology. 44, 2: 163 - 166.
- Bieber, I. et al. (1962) Homosexuality: A Psychoanalytic Study of Male Homosexuals. NY: Basic Books.
- Bieber, T. (1971) Group therapy with homosexuals. (In Kaplan, H., Sadock, B. Comprehensive Group Psychotherapy Williams & Wilkins: Baltimore MD).
- Blitch, J., Haynes, S. (1972) Multiple behavioral techniques in a case of female homosexuality. Journal of Behavior Therapy and Experimental Psychiatry. 3: 319 - 322.
- Bradley, S., Zucker, K. (1998) Drs. Bradley and Zucker reply. Journal of the American Academy of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry. 37, 3: 244 - 245.

- Bradley, S., Zucker, K. (1997) Gender identity disorder: A review of the past 10 Years. Journal of the American Academy of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry. 34, 7: 872 - 880.
- Brown, D. (1963). Homosexuality and family dynamics. Bulletin of the Menninger Clinic. 27: 227 - 232.
- Burr, C. (1996) Suppose there is a gay gene...What then?: Why conservatives should embrace the gay gene. The Weekly Standard. Dec. 16.
- Bychowski, G. (1954) The structure of homosexual acting out. Psychoanalytic Quarterly. 23: 48 - 61.
- Byne, W., Parsons, B. (1993) Human sexual orientation: The biologic theories reappraisal. Archives of General Psychiatry. 50: 229 - 239.
- Calabrese, L., Harris, B., Easley, K. (1987) Analysis of variables impacting on safe sexual behavior among homosexual men in the area of low incidence for AIDS. Paper presented at the Third International Conference for AIDS. Washington DC. (in Stall 1988)
- Cappon D. (1965) Toward and understanding of homosexuality. Englewood Cliffs NJ: Prentice-Hall.
- Caprio, F. (1954) Female homosexuality A psychodynamic study of lesbianism. NY: Citadel.
- Catechism of the Catholic Church (CCC)
- Chapman, B., Brannock, J. (1987) Proposed model of lesbian identity development: An empirical examination. Journal of Homosexuality. 14: 69 - 80.
- Clippinger, J. (1974) Homosexuality can be cured. Corrective and Social Psychiatry and Journal of Behavior Technology Methods and Therapy. 21, 2: 15 - 28
- Coleman, E. (1978) Toward a new model of treatment of homosexuality: A review. Journal of Homosexuality. 3, 4: 345 - 357.
- Conrad, S., Wincze, J. (1976) Orgasmic reconditioning: A controlled study of its effects upon the sexual arousal and behavior of adult male homosexuals. Behavior Therapy. 7: 155 -166.
- Crowdson, J. (1995) Study on 'gay gene' challenged. Chicago Tribune. June 25.
- Davison, G. (1982) Politics, ethics and therapy for homosexuality. (in Paul, W., Weinrich, J., Gonsiorek, J., Hotredt, M., Homosexuality Social Psychological and Biological Issues. Beverly Hills CA: Sage) 89 - 96.
- Doll, L., Joy, D., Batholow, B., Harrison, J., Bolan, G., Douglas, J., Saltzman, L., Moss, P., Delgado, W. (1992) Self-reported childhood and adolescent sexual abuse among adult homosexual and bisexual men. Child Abuse Neglect. 18: 825 - 864.
- de Beauvoir, S. (1953) The Second Sex. NY: Knopf.
- Eckert, E., Bouchard, T., Bohlen, J., Heston, L. (1986) Homosexuality in monozygotic twins reared apart. British Journal of Psychiatry. 148: 421 - 425.
- Eisenbud, R. (1982) Early and later determinants of lesbian choice. Psychoanalytic Review. 69, 1: 85 - 109
- Ellis, A. (1956) The effectiveness of psychotherapy with individuals who have severe homosexual problems. Journal of Consulting Psychology. 20, 3: 191 - 195.
- Engel, B. (1982) The Right to Innocence. Los Angeles: Jeremy Tarcher.
- Ernulf, K., Innala, S., Whitam, F. (1989) Biological explanation, psychological explanation, and tolerance of homosexual: A cross-national analysis of beliefs and attitudes. Psychological Reports. 65: 1003 - 1010.
- Exodus North America (1990-2000) Update. Exodus: Seattle WA.
- Fergusson, D., Horwood, L., Beautrais, A. (1999) Is sexual orientation related to mental health problems and suicidality in young people?" Archives of General Psychiatry. 56, 10: 876 -888.
- Fifield, L., Latham, J., Phillips, C. (1977) Alcoholism in the Gay Community The Price of Alienation Isolation and Oppression A Project of the Gay Community Service Center, Los Angeles, CA.
- Fine, R. (1987) Psychoanalytic theory. (in Diamant L. Male and Female Homosexuality Psychological Approaches. Washington: Hemisphere Publishing.) 81 - 95.
- Finkelhor, D. et al. (1986) A Sourcebook on Child Sexual Abuse. Newbury Park CA: Sage.
- Finkelhor, D (1984) Child Sexual Abuse New theory and research. NY: The Free Press.
- Fisher, S., Greenberg, R. (1996) Revised Scientifically Reappraisal. NY: Wiley & Sons.
- Fitzgibbons, R. (1999) The origins and therapy of same-sex attraction disorder. (in Wolfe, C. Homosexuality and American Public Life. Spence) 85 - 97.
- Friedman, R. Stern, L. (1980) Juvenile aggressivity and sissiness in homosexual and heterosexual males. Journal of the American Academy of Psychoanalysis. 8, 3: 427 - 440.
- Friedman, R., Wollesen, F., Tendler, R. (1976) Psychological development and blood levels of sex steroids in male identical twins of divergent sexual orientation. The Journal of Nervous and Mental Disease. 163, 4: 282 - 288.

- Friedman, R. (1988) Male homosexuality: A contemporary psychoanalytic perspective. New Haven: Yale U. Press.
- Gadd, J. (1998) New study fails to find so-called 'gay gene'. Toronto Globe and Mail. June 2.
- Garofalo, R., Wolf, R., Kessel, S., Palfrey, J., DuRant, R., (1998) The association between health risk behaviors and sexual orientation among a school-based sample of adolescents: Youth risk behavior survey. Pediatrics. 101, 5: 895 - 903.
- George, Cardinal (1999) Address to National Association of Catholic Diocesan Lesbian & Gay Ministries, Chicago, IL Life 16 July: October 26.
- Gittings, B. (1973) Gayroud healthy. Philadelphia PA: Gay Activists Alliance.
- Goetze, R. (1997) Homosexuality and the possibility of change: A review of published studies. Toronto Canada: New Directions for Life.
- Goldberg, S. (1992) What is normal?: If something is heritable, can it be called abnormal? But is homosexuality heritable. National Review. Feb. 3. 36 - 38.
- Golwyn, D., Sevlie, C. (1993) Adventitious change in homosexual behavior during treatment of social phobia with phenelzine. Journal of Clinical Psychiatry. 54, 1: 39 - 40.
- Gonsiorek, J. (1982) The use of diagnostic concepts in working with gay and lesbian populations. (in Homosexuality and psychotherapy. NY: Haworth) 9 - 20.
- Goode, E., Haber, L. (1977) Sexual correlates of homosexual experience: An exploratory study of college women. Journal of Research. 13, 1: 12 - 21
- Green, R. Newman, L., Stoller, R. (1972) Treatment of boyhood "transsexualism," Archives of General Psychiatry. 26: 213 - 217 (in Zucker 1975)
- Green, R. (1974) Gender identity conflict in children and adults. Baltimore: Penguin.
- Green, R. (1985) Gender identity in childhood and later sexual orientation: Follow-up of 78 males. American Journal of Psychiatry. 142, 3: 339 - 441.
- Green, R. (1988) The immutability of (homo) sexual orientation: Behavioral science implications for a constitutional analysis. Journal of Psychiatry and Law. 16, 4: 537 - 575.
- Gundlach, R., Riess, B. (1967) Birth order and sex of siblings in a sample of lesbians and non-lesbians. Psychological Reports. 20:61 - 62.
- Hadden, S. (1967a) Male homosexuality. Pennsylvania Medicine. Feb.: 78 - 80
- Hadden, S. (1967b) A way out for homosexuals. Parpers Magazine. March: 107 - 120.
- Hadden, S. (1958) Treatment of homosexuality by individual and group psychotherapy. American Journal of Psychiatry. March. 810 - 815.
- Hadfield, J. (1958) The cure of homosexuality. British Medical Journal. 1: 1323 - 1326.
- Hamer, D., Hu, S., Magnuson, V., Hu, A., Pattatucci, A. (1993) A linkage between DNA markers on the chromosome and male sexual orientation. Science. 261: 321 - 327.
- Harry, J. (1989) Parental physical abuse and sexual orientation in males. Archives of Sexual Behavior. 18, 3: 251 - 261.
- Hatterer, L. (1970) Changing homosexuality in the male. NY: McGraw-Hill.
- Herek, G. (1991) Myths about sexual orientation: A lawyer's guide to social science research. Law & Sexuality. 1: 133 - 172.
- Herrell, R., Goldberg, J., True, W., Ramakrishnan, V., Lyons, M., Eisen, S., Tsuang, M. (1999) A co-twin control study in adult Men: Sexual orientation and suicidality. Archives of General Psychiatry. 56, 10: 867 - 874.
- Herron, W., Kinter, T., Sollinger, I., Trubowitz, J. (1982) Psychoanalytic psychotherapy for homosexual clients: New concepts. (in Gonsiorek, J. Homosexuality and psychotherapy. NY: Haworth)
- Heston, L., Shield, J. (1968) Homosexuality in twins. Archives of General Psychiatry. 18: 149 - 160.
- Hockenberry, S., Billingham, R. (1987) Sexual orientation and boyhood gender conformity: Development of the boyhood gender conformity scales (BGCS) Archives of Sexual Behavior. 16, 6: 475 - 492.
- Hoover, D., Munoz, A., Carey, V., Chmiel, J., Taylor, J., Margolick, J., Kingsley, L., Vermund, S. (1991) Estimating the 1978 - 1990 and future spread of human immunodeficiency virus type 1 in subgroups of homosexual men. American Journal of Epidemiology. 134, 10: 1190 - 1205.
- Horgan, J. (1995) Gay genes, revisited: Doubts arise over research on the biology of homosexuality. Scientific American. Nov. : 28.
- Hurst, E. (1980) Homosexuality: A key to the roots. Minneapolis MN: Outpost.
- Isay, R., Friedman, R. (1989) Toward a further understanding of Homosexual Men. Journal of the American Psychoanalytic Association: Scientific Proceedings. 193 - 206.

- Johnson, R., Shrier, D. (1985) Sexual victimization of boys: Experience at an adolescent medicine clinic. Journal of Adolescent Health Care. 6: 372 - 376.
- Kaplan, E. (1967) Homosexuality: A search for the ego-ideal. Archives of General Psychology. 16: 355 - 358.
- Kaye, H., Beri, S., Clare, J., Eleston, M., Gershwin, B., Gershwin, P., Kogan, L., Torda, C., Wilber, C. (1967) Homosexuality in Women. Archives of General Psychiatry. 17: 626 - 634.
- Kronmeyer, R. (1980) Overcoming Homosexuality. NY: Macmillan
- LeVay, S. (1991) A difference in hypothalamic structure between heterosexual and homosexual men. Science. 258: 1034 - 1037.
- MacIntosh, H. (1994) Attitudes and experiences of psychoanalysts. Journal of the American Psychoanalytic Association. 42, 4: 1183 - 1207.
- Mallen, C. (1983) Sex role stereotypes, gender identity and parental relationships in male homosexuals and heterosexuals. Homosexuality and Social Issues. 7: 55 - 73.
- Marmor, J. (1965) Sexual Inversion The Multiple Roots of Homosexuality. NY: Basic
- Marmor, J. (1975) Homosexuality and Sexual Orientation Disturbances. (In Freedman, A., Kaplan, H., Sadock, B. Comprehensive Textbook of Psychiatry Second Edition. Baltimore MD: Williams & Wilkins)
- Master, W., Johnson, V. (1979) Homosexuality in Perspective. Boston: Little Brown, Co.
- McConaghy, (1980) A pair of monozygotic twins discordant for homosexuality: Sex-dimorphic behavior and penile volume responses. Archives of Sexual Behavior. 9: 123 - 131.
- McGuire, T. (1995) Is homosexuality genetic? A critical review and some suggestions. Journal of Homosexuality. 28, 1/2: 115 - 145.
- Menvielle, E. (1998) Gender identity disorder (Letter to the editor in response to Bradley and Zucker article). Journal of the American Academy of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry. 37, 3: 243 - 244
- Mirkin, H. (1999) The pattern of sexual politics: Feminism, homosexuality, and pedophilia. Journal of Homosexuality. 37, 2: 1 - 24.
- Morris, M., Dean, L. (1994) Effects of sexual behavior change on long-term human immunodeficiency virus prevalence among homosexual men. American Journal of Epidemiology. 140, 3: 217 - 232.
- Mulry, G., Kalichman, S., Kelly, J. (1994) "Substance use and unsafe sex among gay men: Global versus situational use of substances. Journal of Educators and Therapy. 20, 3: 175 - 184.
- Murphy, T. (1992) Redirecting sexual orientation: Techniques and justifications. Journal of Research. 29: 501- 523.
- NARTH (2000) "Dr. Laura" Interview Psychiatric Association's Robert Spitzer. Newsletter. 8,1:26-27.
- Nelson, J. (1982) Religious and moral issues in working with homosexual clients. (in Gonsiorek, J. Homosexuality and Psychotherapy. NY: Haworth) 163 - 175.
- Newman, L. (1976) Treatment for the parents of feminine boys. American Journal of Psychiatry. 133, 6: 683 - 687.
- Nicolosi, J., Byrd, A., Potts, R. (1998) Towards the Ethical and Effective Treatment of Homosexuality. Encino CA: NARTH.
- Osmond, D., Page, K., Wiley, J., Garrett, K., Sheppard, H., Moss, A., Schrager, K., Winkelstein, W. (1994) HIV infection in homosexual and bisexual men 18 to 29 years of age: The San Francisco young men's health study. American Journal of Public Health. 84, 12: 1933 - 1937.
- Parker, N. (1964) Homosexuality in twins: A report on three discordant pairs. British Journal of Psychiatry. 110: 489 - 492.
- Parris, J., Zweig-Frank, H., Guzder, J. (1995) Psychological factors associated with homosexuality in males with borderline personality disorders. Journal of Personality Disorders. 9, 11: 56 - 61
- Phillips, G., Over, R. (1992) Adult sexual orientation in relation to memories of childhood gender conforming and gender nonconforming behaviors. Archives of Sexual Behavior. 21, 6: 543 - 558.
- Pillard, R. (1988) Sexual orientation and mental disorder. Psychiatric Annals. 18, 1: 52 - 56.
- Piskur, J., Degelman, D. (1992) Effect of reading a summary of research about biological bases of homosexual orientation on attitudes toward homosexuals. Psychological Reports. 71: 1219 - 1225.
- Porter, R. (1996) Born that Way: A review of Gender Science The Sex and Abuse of Research into Homosexuality by Simon LeVay and A Separate Reason by Chandler Burr. New York Times Book Review. August 11.
- Rainer, J. et al. (1960) Homosexuality and heterosexuality in identical twins. Psychosomatic Medicine.

- 22: 251 - 259.
- Rekers, G., Lovaas, O., Low, B. (1974) Behavioral treatment of deviant sex role behaviors in a male child. Journal of Applied Behavioral Analysis. 7: 134 - 151 (in Newman 1976).
- Rekers, G. (1988) The formation of homosexual orientation. (In Fagan, P. Open for Homosexuality. Washington DC: Free Congress Foundation.)
- Rice, G., Anderson, C., Risch, N., Ebers, G. (1999) Male homosexuality: Absence of linkage to microsatellite markers at q28. Science. April.
- Rind, B., Bauserman, R., Tromovitch, P. (1998) A meta-analytic examination of assumed properties of child sexual abuse using college samples. Psychological Bulletin. 124, 1: 22 -53
- Rogers, C., Roback, H., McKee, E., Calhoun, D. (1976) Group psychotherapy with homosexuals: A review. International Journal of Group Psychotherapy. 31, 3: 3 - 27
- Rotello, G. (1997). Sexual Ecology and the Destiny of Gay Men. NY: Dutton.
- Saghir, M., Robins, E. (1973) Male and Female Homosexuality: A Comprehensive Investigation. Baltimore MD: Williams & Wilkins.
- Satinover, J. (1996) Homosexuality and the Politics of Truth. Grand Rapids MI: Baker.
- Schreier, B. (1998) Of shoes, and ships, and sealing wax: The faulty and specious assumptions of sexual reorientation therapies. Journal of Mental Health Counseling. 20, 4: 305 - 314.
- Schwartz, M., Masters, W. (1984) The Masters and Johnson treatment program for dissatisfied homosexual men. American Journal of Psychiatry. 141: 173 - 181.
- Signorile, M. (1997) Life Outside The Ignorile Report on Gay Men and Lesbians and the Passages of Life. NY: Harper Collins.
- Silverstein, C. (1972) Behavior Modification and the Gay Community. Paper presented at the annual convention of the Association for Advancement of Behavior Therapy. NY. Oct. (quoted by Davison 1982)
- Sipova, I., Brzek, A. (1983) Parental and interpersonal relationships of transsexual and masculine and feminine homosexual men. (in Homosexuals and Social Roles. NY: Haworth . 75 - 85.
- Sleek, S. (1997) Concerns about conversion therapy. AA Monitor. October. 28:16
- Smith, J. (1988) Psychopathology, homosexuality, and homophobia. Journal of Homosexuality. 15, 1/2: 59 - 74:
- Snortum, J., Gillespie, J., Marshall, J., McLaughlin, J., Mosberg, L. (1969) Family dynamics and homosexuality. Psychological Reports. 24: 763 - 770.
- Stall, R., Coates, T., Hoff, C. (1988a) Behavioral risk reduction for HIV infection among gay and bisexual men. American Psychologist. 43, 11: 878 - 885.
- Stall, R., Wiley, J. (1988b) A comparison of alcohol and drug use patterns of homosexual and heterosexual men: The San Francisco Men's Health Study. Drug and Alcohol Dependence. 22: 63 - 73.
- Stephan, W. (1973) Parental relationships and early social experiences of activist male homosexuals and male heterosexuals. Journal of Abnormal Psychology. 82, 3: 506 - 513.
- Stoller, R. (1978) Boyhood gender aberrations: Treatment issues. Journal of the American Psychoanalytic Association. 26: 541 - 558 (in Zucker 1995)..
- Thompson, N. Schwartz, D., McCandles, B., Edwards, D. (1973) Parent-child relationships and sexual identity in male and female homosexuals and heterosexuals. Journal of Consulting and Clinical Psychology. 41, 1: 120 - 127.
- Throckmorton, W. (1996) Efforts to modify sexual orientation: A review of outcome literature and ethical issues. Journal of Mental Health and Counseling. 20, 4: 283 - 305.
- Tripp, C. Hatterer, L. (1971) Can homosexuals change with Psychotherapy? Sexual Behavior. 1, 4: 42 - 49.
- van den Aardweg, G. (1967) Homophilia, Neurosis and the Impulsion to Complain. Amsterdam: Polak, van Gennep.
- West, D. (1977) Homosexuality Reexamined. London: Duckworth
- Whitam, F. (1977) Childhood indicators of male homosexuality. Archives of Sexual Behavior. 6, 2: 89 - 96.
- Wolpe, J. (1969) The Practice of Behavior Therapy. Elmsford, NY: Pergamon
- Zubenko, G., George, A., Soloff, P., Schulz, P. (1987) Sexual practices among patients with borderline personality disorder. American Journal of Psychiatry. 144, 6: 748 - 752.
- Zucker, K., Bradley, S. (1995) Gender Identity Disorder and Psychosocial Problems in Children and Adolescents. NY: Guilford.
- Zuger, B. (1976) Monozygotic twins discordant for homosexuality: Report of a pair and significance of the phenomenon. Comprehensive Psychiatry. 17: 661 - 669.

APPENDI

Courage and Encourage
St. John the Baptist Church and Friary
210 West 31st Street
New York, NY 10001
212-268-1010
212-268-7150 (fax)
email: NYCourage@aol.com
<http://world.std.com/~courage>

AUTHORS, CONTIBUTORS EDITORS

Eugene Diamond, M.D.
Professor of Pediatrics
Loyola Stritch School of Medicine
Chicago, IL

Richard Delaney, M.D.
Family Medicine
Washington, DC

Sheila Diamond, RN, MSN
Nursing Consultant
John Paul II Institute
Rome, Italy

Richard Fitzgibbons, M.D.
Psychiatrist
Comprehensive Counseling Service
Philadelphia, PA

Rev. James Gould
Vocations Director
Diocese of Arlington
Arlington, VA

Rev. John Harvey
Director, Courage Ministry
New York, NY

Ned Masbaum, M.D.
Forensic Psychiatrist
Indianapolis, IN

Kevin Murrell, M.D.
Dept. of Psychiatry
Univ. of Georgia Medical School
Augusta, GA

Peter Rudegeair, Ph.D.
Clinical Psychologist
Philadelphia, PA

Edward Sheridan, M.D.
Dept. of Psychiatry
Georgetown Univ. School of Medicine
Washington, DC

Back to 'Learning About Homosexuality'

main page

Real Love for Homosexuals By DAVID MORRISON

ABSTRACT: As a Catholic and a homosexually-oriented man, I am deeply grateful to the Catholic Church for her position on homosexuality and homosexual acts. Catholicism, almost alone among Christendom's churches, refuses to patronize homosexuals with a watered-down gospel or brutalize them with a message of irredeemable hostility.

As a Catholic and a homosexually-oriented man, I am deeply grateful to the Catholic Church for her position on homosexuality and homosexual acts. Catholicism, almost alone among Christendom's churches, refuses to patronize homosexuals with a watered-down gospel or brutalize them with a message of irredeemable hostility. The Catholic Church loves me and all the men and women like me who live as homosexuals. She looks at us as the adults we are and says that we, too, can cooperate with the Holy Spirit to sanctify our lives and "approach Christian perfection" (CCC 2359). She confidently calls us to sainthood and to the narrow road that will bring us there.

I did not recognize the value of this teaching easily. From the ages of 21 to 28, I lived life as a gay activist, accepting and preaching the message the gay community offers today: Active homosexuality, as long as it is practiced "safely" and in "commitment," is no worse than heterosexual activity under the same guidelines. Scriptural or other moral teachings that argue otherwise are simply out-of-date and were probably authored by "homophobes." No one, least of all a church, had any right to tell me how to live my life, and I speedily went about accumulating the things that made up a "successful" gay life. I took a lover for a long-term relationship, bought a condo, got on the fast-track at work, and vacationed at gay resorts. My friends were gay, my relationship was gay, my workplace was gay-friendly, and my life seemed filled with youth and pleasure. But I was not happy.

My heart tossed restlessly, as Augustine's had also, and every new pleasure sought brought only sharper pangs. After having so much of what the gay world took for granted, I found it wasn't enough. In the early spring of my twenty-eighth year I turned my life over to Jesus Christ and began to explore what taking up my cross meant. That exploration led me, with fits and starts, to the Catholic faith, where I have lived, gratefully, ever since.

The Church's teaching on the homosexual orientation and chastity have been two great liberators on my journey, and it's appropriate to amplify upon them. Much of the uniqueness of the teaching on homosexual orientation stems from the absence of the determinism that characterizes so many other positions. Men and women with a homosexual orientation are not automatically candidates for either praise (on the grounds of their being "oppressed") or damnation (on account of inherent sinfulness). Like everyone else, they can choose good or evil. This is a teaching filled with respect; it recognizes us as children of God and not mere beasts subject to instinct alone.

The Church's corollary position, that homosexuals are called to chastity, contributes to this teaching's unique expression of grace because of what it teaches about love. Contemporary culture is filled with counterfeits to love. We say we "love" food, "love" our pets, "love" the outdoors, "love" our parents and children, and "love" our spouses. But so much of the time we do not love them as much as what they can do for us. We love food for its taste, pets for their companionship, the outdoors for its beauty. And we often bind up our love for parents, children, and spouses with conditions and tinge it with self-interest - particularly if a couple has brought artificial contraceptives into their marital life.

This is clear to me in the contrast between life before committing to chastity and life afterward. When I was homosexually active with my partner, we sometimes would call our sexual acts "making love," but it was not so much love as utility. Each made the other, with his consent, a means to an end. But that is not love, and it contrasts sharply in my experience after committing to chastity.

All of us want, and deserve, to be accepted at a deep emotional level for who we are, not for whether we can fill another's needs. Paradoxically, this kind of emotional commitment suffers most when sex becomes part of a friendship. Chaste love can be difficult at times, but so can all living in truth. I give thanks to God that the Catholic Church understands this well enough to teach it, and I am grateful for an organization called Courage, which exists to help homosexuals live out this teaching. Over the course of my years in Courage I have made more and deeper friendships than I ever did in all my time actively gay, and I am convinced that the Courage witness will help our culture come to a deeper understanding of the true nature of love.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

David C. Morrison. "Real Love for Homosexuals." This Rock (July/August 2000). This Rock, the magazine of Catholic apologetics and evangelization, is published eleven times a year by Catholic Answers Inc., Subscription rates are $29.95 for one year. Subscription requests should be sent to This Rock, P.O. Box 17490, San Diego, CA 92177

THE AUTHOR

David Morrison, a writer and editor, lives in Arlington, Virginia. He is a member of the Courage chapter that meets in College Park, Maryland. He can be reached via the Internet at DCMorrison@aol.com.

Copyright © 2000 This Rock

RECOVERY, CHANGE & HOMOSEXUALITY WHAT THE EXPERTS HAVE TO SAY

by Yvette Cantu

Family Research Council

Click Here to Reach the FRC web site

People leaving the homosexual lifestyle to recover their heterosexual identities have received considerable media attention in the past several months. Although extensive public discussion regarding this issue is a relatively new phenomenon, psychiatrists and psychologists have been helping people overcome same-sex attractions for decades. Medical doctors and mental health professionals agree that men and women struggling with homosexuality can, and do, change.

The 1973 decision by the American Psychiatric Association to delete homosexuality from the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual (the APA's official list of disorders) was "not a conclusion based on an approximation of the scientific truth as dictated by reason, but was instead an action demanded by the ideological temper of the times," according to Dr. Ronald Bayer in Homosexuality and American Psychiatry: The Politics of Diagnosis (New York: Basic Books, 1981, pp. 3-4). A 1977 survey conducted by the journal Medical Aspects of Human Sexuality reported that 69 percent of the 10,000 psychiatrists polled considered homosexuality a pathological adaptation.

For over 70 years, prominent medical and mental health professionals have been helping people who struggle with homosexuality to lose their same-sex attractions and recover heterosexual identities. Here are statements from just a few of them:

 "There is at present sufficient evidence that in a majority of cases homosexuality can be successfully treated by psychoanalysis."*

Charles W. Socarides, M.D., Homosexuality (New York: Jason Aronson, 1978), p. 3.

Positions held include clinical professor of psychiatry at Albert Einstein College of Medicine. In 1995, he received the Distinguished Professor Award from the Association of Psychoanalytic Psychologists, British Health Service. He is the current president of National Association of Research and Therapy of Homosexuality (N.A.R.T.H.).

* Masters and Johnson reported a 71.6 percent success rate for patients leaving homosexuality after a follow-up of six years.

William H. Masters and Virginia E. Johnson, Homosexuality in Perspective (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1979), pp. 402 and 408. William H. Masters obtained his M.D. from the University of Rochester. Positions held: professor of clinical obstetrics and gynecology for the School of Medicine of Washington University; director of the Reproductive Biological Research Foundation; and co-director and chairman of the board of the Masters and Johnson Institute. Virginia E. Johnson obtained her M.D. from the University of Missouri. Positions held: research director of the Reproductive Biological Research Foundation and co-director of the Masters and Johnson Institute.

* "The rate of recovery among the homosexuals treated in these groups is 49 percent."

Dr. Toby Bieber, "Group Therapy with Homosexuals," Comprehensive Group Psychotherapy, Harold I. Kaplan and Benjamin J. Saddock, eds. (Baltimore: The Williams and Wilkins Company, 1971), p. 532. Formerly a faculty member of New York Medical College, she is now on the group-therapy faculty of the Contemporary Center for Advanced Psychoanalytic Studies in New Jersey.

* "In nearly thirty years, I have successfully concluded analyses of one hundred homosexuals ... and have seen nearly five hundred cases in consultation. ... On the basis of the experience thus gathered, I make the positive statement that homosexuality has an excellent prognosis in psychiatric-psychoanalytic treatment of one to two years' duration, with a minimum of three appointments each week provided the patient really wishes to change."

* "And cure denotes not bisexuality, but real and unfaked heterosexuality."

* "The color of a person's eyes cannot be changed therapeutically, but homosexuality can be changed by psychotherapy."

Dr. Edmund Bergler, Homosexuality: Disease or Way of Life (New York: Collier Books, 1962), pp. 176, 79, 166. Graduated Vienna's Medical School and served on staff at the Freud Clinic from 1927 to 1937.

* In 1950, Dr. Anna Freud "lectured in New York on the recent advances in treatment of homosexuals, stating that many of her patients lost their inversion as a result of analysis. This occurred even in those who had proclaimed their wish to remain homosexual when entering treatment, having started only to obtain relief from their homosexual symptoms."

Dr. Charles Socarides, "Homosexuality," American Handbook of Psychiatry, 2nd edition, Vol. 3 (New York: Basic Books, Inc., 1974), p. 308. Dr. Anna Freud studied with her father, Sigmund Freud.

* "I do not believe that there is a basic genetic homosexual tendency in man. If this were true, the cured patient would still have his homosexual needs, which he does not."

Dr. Arthur Janov, The Primal Scream (New York: Dell Publishing Company, 1970), p. 328. Positions held: psychologist and psychiatric social worker at Los Angeles Children's Hospital and consultant to California Narcotic Outpatient Program. Developed the Primal Scream program.

* "The myth that homosexuality is untreatable still has wide currency among the public at large and among homosexuals themselves. ... Although some gay liberationists argue that it would be preferable to help these persons accept their homosexuality, this writer is of the opinion that, if they wish to change, they deserve the opportunity to try, with all the help that psychiatry can give them. ..."

Dr. Judd Marmor, "Homosexuality and Sexual Orientation Disturbances," Comprehensive Textbook of Psychiatry II, 2nd edition, (Baltimore: The Williams & Wilkins Company, 1975), p. 1519. Grad. Columbia University. Positions held: resident neurologist at Montefiore Hospital; president of the American Psychiatric Association; and president of American Academy of Psychoanalysis.

* "There is, nevertheless, continuing conviction among most, although not all, dynamically oriented psychiatrists in general and psychoanalysts in particular that homosexuality can and should be changed to heterosexuality."

Dr. Richard A. Isay, "Homosexuality and Psychiatry," Psychiatric News (February 7, 1992), p.3. Positions held: Clinical professor of psychiatry at Cornell Medical College and chair of the American Psychiatric Association Committee on Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Issues.

Click Here to Reach the FRC web site

©Copyright #Catholic Family Association of America# 2002. All rights reserved. Contact Us at info@cathfam.org
[Home | We need your help! | 3D Ultrasound Movies of Babies in the Womb]

HELP FOR HOMOSEXUALS GETTING ASSISTANCE

COURAGE

The ONLY APPROVED Catholic apostolate designated to assist homosexuals. The Dignity organisation is in direct conflict with Catholic teaching and should be avoided at all times.

PFLAG is anti-Catholic and ferociously pro-homosexual. .

Massachusetts Chapters:

Boston Courage: bcourage@yahoo.com.

Lawrence, Fr. Albert Sylvia, 978-681-9080 (Encourage group)
New Bedford, Msgr. Harrington 508-992-3184 Holy Name Church
Springfield, Fr. Zachary Grant at (413) 733-3101

Worcester, Br. Daniel-Francis Charpentier

CTC Courage

P.O. Box 3505

Worcester, MA 01613

worcestercourage@netscape.net ,

<http://sites.netscape.net/worcourage/worc>

New York, Mid-Hudson Region,

Fr. Donald Timone, (914) 562-7664

Sacred Heart Rectory

301 Ann St., Newburgh, NY 12550

National Association for Research and Therapy of Homosexuality

16633 Ventura Boulevard, Suite 1340

Encino, CA 91436-1801

(818) 789-4440

www.narth.com

NARTH, founded in 1992, is composed of psychoanalysts, psychoanalytically-informed psychologists, certified social workers, and other behavioral scientists, as well as laymen in fields such as law, religion, and education. Excellent website & source of undistorted scientific information.

NARTH is a major source for understanding homosexuality and the distortions of those advocating the homosexual lifestyle.

NARTH'S PURPOSE

NARTH's function is to provide psychological understanding of the cause, treatment and behavior patterns associated with homosexuality, within the boundaries of a civil public dialogue.

The Right to Self-Determination, etc.

Catholic Medical Association

The Catholic Medical Association (CMA) has released a document entitled "HOMOSEXUALITY AND HOPE", the result of a two-year study by a specially appointed task force. The report, based on current scientific facts and practice experience of the task force members, addresses a positive program of providing help, support and hope for those homosexual persons who wish to live in union with the Catholic Church.

This task force was composed of psychiatrists and other physicians, psychologists, nurse specialists and members of the Catholic Clergy who were engaged in the management and care of homosexual persons. It was headed by Dr. Eugene Diamond, Associate Professor of Loyola University School Of Medicine, and Richard

American Family Association

The American Family Association (AFA) is on the front lines of the battle against those who are trying to persuade our culture that homosexuality is normal and natural. That's why some have labeled them "homophobic."

However, they want you to know that while they fight against the gay political movement, they have great compassion for the thousands of homosexuals who want to change. That's why they have promoted the ministry of ex-gay Michael Johnston and why we try to take every opportunity to commend them and the work of groups like Homosexuals Anonymous, Exodus International, Courage, .

Fitzgibbons, M.D., a Philadelphia psychiatrist. More... or download " Homosexuality & Hope " a "MUST READ"
Homosexuals Anonymous P. O. Box 7881 , Reading, PA 19603 215-376-1146 http://members.aol.com/hawebpage/ Uses a modified 12-step program.	Exodus International of North America P. O. Box 2121, San Rafael, CA 94912 415-454-1017 www.exodusintl.org A Christian organization which seeks to equip and unify agencies and individuals to effectively communicate the message of liberation from homosexuality through repentance and faith in Jesus Christ.

Other Help

On Wings Like Eagles A video that chronicles the life of exgay Michael Johnston. It's a story of the human desire for acceptance, a story of forgiveness and grace and ultimately a prophetic warning. Available from American Family Association for $24.95 including s/h. Call 601-8445036, extension 4.

BOOKS

Homosexuality in America: Exposing the Myths

A 24-page booklet from AFA. Packed with useful information. Single copy, $2. Quantity discounts. 601-844-5036, ext.4.

A Freedom too Far by Charles Socarides,M.D.

Homosexuality and the Politics of Truth by Jeffrey Satinover

Regeneration Books 410-661-4337

main page

AN ANSWER FOR ANDREW

By Dr. Dale Leary

Yesterday I heard a debate between Bill Kristol, conservative writer, and Andrew Sullivan, an advocate for homosexual marriage. Sullivan mentioned on a number of occasions that he was a Catholic and that all he wanted was to marry the person he loved. How, he asked, can conservatives object to such a conservative desire.

This morning, as I was rereading John Paul II's defense of the moral order "The Splendor of Truth: Veritatis Splendor", I found the answer for Mr. Sullivan:

"Intrinsic evil": it is not licit to do evil that good may come of it."(cf. Rom. 3:8)

"81. In teaching the existence of intrinsically evil acts, the Church accepts the teaching of Sacred Scripture. The Apostle Paul emphatically states: 'Do not be deceived: neither the immoral, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor sexual perverts, nor thieves, nor the greedy, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor robbers will inherit the Kingdom of God' (I Cor. 6: 9-10).

"If acts are intrinsically evil, a good intention or particular circumstances can diminish their evil, but they cannot remove it. They remain 'irremediably' evil acts; per se and in themselves they are not capable of being ordered to God and to the good of the person. 'As for acts which are themselves sins (cum iam opera ipsa peccata sunt).' Saint Augustine writes 'like theft, fornication, blasphemy, who would dare affirm that, by doing them for good motives (causis bonis), they would no longer be sins or, what is even more absurd, that they would be sins that are justified.'

"Consequently, circumstances or intentions can never transform an act intrinsically evil by virtue of its object into an act 'subjectively' good or defensible as a choice.

"82. Furthermore, an intention is good when it has its aim the true good of the person in view of his ultimate end. But acts whose object is 'not capable of being ordered' to God and 'unworthy of the human person' are always and in every case in conflict with that good. Consequently, respect for norms which prohibit such acts and oblige semper and et pro semper, that is, without any exception, not only does not inhibit a good intention, but actually represents its basic expression."

The sins referred to by St. Paul include homosexual acts. The Greek original makes this perfectly clear. The words "sexual perverts" in the text are used to translate the phrase in Greek μαλακοι ουτε αρσενικοιται, which is more accurately translated as "effeminate nor abusers of self with men", referring to the two aspects of homosexual practices with which the Greeks of Corinth were unfortunately too familiar. Lest the believers lose hope, Paul reminds them: "Such were some of you, but you are washed, but you are sanctified, but you are justified..." (I Cor. 6:11) This verse is a great comfort to those in recovery, a promise for all of us.

In the debate over homosexual marriage we frequently confront those who claim that Christianity demands tolerance and acceptance. A little knowledge of the Greek can be very useful, but hope is essential.

© Copyright #Catholic Family Association of America# 2002. All rights reserved. Contact Us at info@cathfam.org

[Home | We need your help! | 3D Ultrasound Movies of Babies in the Womb]

Matthew Shepherd
by Dr. Dale Leary

How should those who have been promoting prevention and healing of homosexuality react to the brutal murder of Matthew Shepherd?

I believe we need to repent. Not for speaking about prevention and healing, not for offer help and hope, but for not speaking soon sooner. In 1963 therapists knew the causes of the homosexual condition and they knew how to treat it. More than that they knew how to prevent it. They knew what children need to develop healthy sexual identities and they knew how to recognize the symptoms of gender identity problems. They knew that early intervention could help.

And nothing was done. Today the young men and women who became homosexually active because their parents were not told how to encourage proper gender identification are angry. They were teased in school. They felt lonely and isolated, different and rejected and no one did anything to help them. They

What Crime Of Hate and Anger?
by David Morrison
(author, editor and former gay activist)
NY Post, Nov. 6, 1998

The recent tragic death of Matthew Shepard, a 21-year-old University of Wyoming student, has brought to light one of contemporary America's little acknowledged realities: Some men seek sexual release with other men in public or semi-public venues and sometimes get hurt or arrested for their trouble.

Newsweek magazine reported that Shepard, who may (or may not) have left that bar with the expectation of having sex with one or both of his assailants in a public venue, had tried to do something similar on at least one other occasion.

According to Newsweek, Shepard had been very forward last summer with a bartender at a lakeside in Cody, Wyoming. Shepard persisted in asking the man "walk around the lake with him" until, according to the report, the man "lost patience" and slugged him, knocking him temporarily unconscious.

Shepard later claimed the incident included a rape, which allegedly took place with two other

The Death of Jesse Dirkhising
By Michelle Malkin
(March 18, 2001

In New York and Los Angeles, the national press hounds were more interested in covering the trial of rap star Sean "Puffy" Combs than in reporting on the tragic death of Jesse Dirkhising. # "Jesse slowly suffocated and died."

A jury heard those chilling words this week in the opening statement of a little-noticed Arkansas trial. A mother heard those heartbreaking words spoken about her 13-year-old son, Jesse Dirkhising, whom prosecutors say died at the hands of two men who raped and murdered the boy during a marathon torture session. The trial raises grave questions about society's increasing tolerance of gay pedophilia. But in New York and Los Angeles, the national press hounds were more interested in covering the trial of rap star Sean "Puffy" Combs than in reporting on the tragic death of Jesse Dirkhising.

The details are

What About Mary Stachowicz?
by Barbara Kralis
(New Oxford Review,
May, 2003

How many of us are ready and willing, spiritually and catechically, "to fearlessly proclaim the complete and authentic truth on Christ, the Church and the world, without reductionism or ambiguities" (JP II, 9/01).

Mary Stachowicz was willing and she did catechize the Word of God and she was brutally murdered for her beliefs. The hate crime was committed on November 13, 2002, the feast day of St. Frances Cabrini, virgin, the first U. S. Saint to be canonized.

Mary, the gentle, devout 51 year old Catholic mother of four asked a Chicago homosexual man, Nicholas Gutierrez, 19, "Why do you want to have sex with boys instead of girls?" Gutierrez said she began to counsel him about his lack of good direction in life.

The disordered Gutierrez confessed to the crime during a videotaped interrogation and explained he became furious when Stachowicz blame us for the wrong reason, but they are right, we are to blame. The parents who went for help when they saw a problem were told don't worry about it, when help was available. Many of the young men who died of AIDS didn't want to be homosexual, many reached out for help to the Church and no help was given. Or the help was desultory or inadequate.

They came to us and we failed. Until we the Church repent of our failure to care and to act, we cannot stand up on this issue.

Why didn't we speak out sooner? Because we didn't care. We knew there were homosexuals and many times we knew who they were. Their closets were made of glass. We avoided the issue. Out of love or delicacy? No. Because we didn't want to get involved with such an unpleasant issue. We should have been moving heaven and earth to help these men and women and their families, but we did nothing. They were ashamed to admit their problem and their families often ashamed even to ask for prayer.

The homosexuals are angry. They found an answer for themselves. The people at least nearby if not immediately on the scene, but medical tests proved negative and the authorities filed no charges.

Many Americans would probably be shocked to discover how many men have sex with other men in public or semi-public places and how often they have it. Across urban, suburban and rural areas of the United States, some public toilets, parks, wilderness areas, truck stops, rest stops, adult bookstores and other places serve as venues for masturbation, oral and sometimes anal sex.

"That a significant number of men desire and pursue public sex under dangerous circumstances should influence the conversation about including sexual orientation in hate crime laws."

Not surprisingly, in our technological age, someone has even set up a site sickening: On Sept. 26, 1999, Jesse was at the Rogers, Ark., home of a family friend, 39-year-old Davis Carpenter, and Carpenter's roommate and alleged gay lover, 23-year-old Joshua Brown. According to a local Associated Press account, prosecutor Bob Balfe told jurors Wednesday that "the boy had been given a strong sedative, then restrained while his own underwear was stuffed into his mouth and held in place with duct tape. Brown then folded Jesse into position atop a bed while supporting the boy's body with pillows."

"While Jesse was bound and helpless and naked in this position ... he was repeatedly raped ... over a period of hours," Balfe said. "Jesse slowly suffocated and died." The prosecution says Brown raped and sodomized Jesse with various objects, including food, while Carpenter stood in the bedroom doorway watching and masturbating. According to a police affidavit, Brown took a break from the assault to eat a sandwich. When he returned, prosecutors say, he discovered that Jesse was not breathing. Carpenter then called police, who found the boy naked and near death on a bedroom floor.

Police gathered evidence from the men's apartment that included asked him the question. He then brutally punched and kicked Mary until he was exhausted; next, he mutilated her body with multiple stab wounds. While Mary was still alive, he shoved a garbage bag over her head, strangled her, and jammed her body into the crawl space under the floor of his Chicago apartment, which was above at the Sikorski Funeral Home where they both worked. The Funeral Home is right across the street from Mary's parish, where moments before she had received Holy Communion.

Her mutilated body was discovered three days after she was slaughtered.

Mrs. Mary Stachowicz, a Polish translator, was witnessing her well-formed Catholic conscience and was murdered for it. She performed the appropriate Spiritual Work of Mercy...instruct the ignorant, admonish the sinner.

The secular news media refuse to touch this story because it's about homosexuality.

And perhaps because legislation has been passed in the U.S. (New York State is one) to make it a punishable criminal offense to speak out against homosexuality. In New York City,

(Shepherd, Page 2)

(What crime, Page 2)

(Jesse, Page 2)

(Stachowicz, Page 2)

(Shepherd, continued)

Page 2

answer is bondage not freedom, but for them it was better than nothing. Better than the loneliness they were living in.

What must we do? Not just speak the truth now, but repent for 35 years of failing to speak. Religious leaders to lead on this issue. We can publicly offer our apologies and beg forgiveness. Those in ex-gay ministries I am sure would be willing to accept our repentance. Many of them tried to find help in the Church before they surrendered to the temptation of homosexuality. And many of the ex-gay ministries have struggled for support. Many in these ministries have been rejected by religious leaders when they asked for help in spreading the message that there is hope for homosexually tempted persons.

Until we the people of God repent for our failures, how can we be a witness to those struggling with this terrible temptation. They have an excuse; they are suffering from a developmental disorder. We have none.*

(What crime, continued)

toughs, sometimes moonlighting as hustlers." Daniel Harris, a longtime observer of the gay social scene, has also documented the phenomenon. Writing in "Me Rise and Fall of Gay Culture," Harris details the now-defunct Physique magazine's long history of running pictures of thugs, and writing of their criminal careers to vouch "for the boys' heterosexual authenticity as blue-collar rough trade." Some men's willingness to risk beating or arrest while seeking sex is not, after all, particularly new - even if it is left unremarked by most Americans most of the time.

Of course the existence of a public sex subculture and Shepard's possible participation in it cannot excuse what happened to him in that Wyoming field. No one deserves to have his life taken in a torturous way. Yet the fact that a significant number of men strongly desire and pursue public sex under occasionally dangerous circumstances should influence the ongoing conversation, spurred by Shepard's death, about the necessity or wisdom of including sexual orientation in hate-

There is an old saying that hard cases make bad law. It seems to me that the 1990s have provided a corollary: Tragic cases can make bad law more quickly. Americans should examine the calls for additional hate crime legislation with extreme care. There is more at stake than any simple claim of human rights.*

An author, editor and former gay activist, David Morrison writes from, Arlington, drawings showing a bound person, written descriptions of a homosexual assault, pieces of paper describing objects with which Jesse was sodomized, and a printed grocery receipt listing duct tape and other items found near Jesse's body. The defense will argue that Jesse -- outnumbered, overpowered, overdosed, and strapped helplessly to a mattress -- was a willing and consenting participant in this sexual torment.

(Jesse, continued)

This was a child. A 13-year-old child. A boy who should be riding a scooter and wrestling with his friends and advocates normalizing and decriminalizing sex between adult males and boys) receives praise and sympathy from liberal magazine writers and literary critics.

NAMBLA is the subject of late-night comedy monologues and the beneficiary of pro bono legal aid from the American Civil Liberties Union. Opponents of the group are smeared as right-wing homophobes; they and others who have criticized the media for ignoring Jesse Dirkhising's death are tarred as anti-gay propagandists.

Political correctness is slowly suffocating our sense of public outrage over behavior that is perverse, coercive, and wrong. This is why the brutal death of Jesse Dirkhising has been met with deaf ears and a cruel collective shrug.T

COPYRIGHT 2001
CREATORS SYNDICATE, INC.

(Stachowicz, continued)

'tolerant' Democrats have made it a crime to condemn homosexuality using bible verses or opinions on billboards (intolerance).

on the World Wide Web (www.cruisingforsex.com) dedicated to men seeking to meet other men in a public or semi-public venue for sex, either there or elsewhere. The site relies on reports and "reviews" from supporters who contribute fairly detailed accounts of the relative worth of each location as a sexual venue.

These accounts include directions to the place, whether police in the area are "cracking down" on men having sex there and the relative merits or demerits of the other men who use the location. Reports come from all over the United States as well as from overseas and the owner of cruisingforsex.com highlights one from among each month's incoming report" as the "obscure site of the month.

Most Americans would also be shocked to discover how strong, some have said obsessive, is the drive of some men to use such places as sexual sites and how alluring some find the dangers associated with them. Camille Paglia wrote recently in her Salon column Of the type of male-male sex that "used to be called 1; rough trade" - the dangerous, centuries-old practice of gay men picking up grimy, testosterone-packed straight or semi-straight crimes laws.

Gay and lesbian activists have firmly demanded that sexual orientation be included in such laws. The matter, they insist, is purely a question of civil rights. Everyone has the right to walk down the street unmolested, an assertion with which every decent American agrees.

Writing in The Nation, playwright Tony Kushner blames political and religious leaders from Trent Lott to Pope John Paul II and orthodox rabbis for Shepard's death, then calls for the passage of hate-crimes legislation that includes sexual orientation as a category.

Kushner says he's worried about what might happen if "visiting the wrong town with my boyfriend we forget ourselves so much as to betray, at the wrong moment in front of the wrong people, that we love one another." Yet that does not appear to be what happened to Shepard, either last summer in Cody, or perhaps most recently in Laramie.

Newsweek called what happened in Cody last summer a "miscalculation" on Shepard's part and it may turn out that he similarly miscalculated in Laramie. But whether he did or did not "miscalculate," Americans should think watching cartoons and doing his algebra homework. That the defense could even dare make a public case for consensual sex between a 13-year-old boy and two adult men shows how far this country has sunk into the cesspool of moral apathy and cowardice. Public leaders are so worried about not offending gay political interest groups that they remain silent about the mainstreaming of homosexual predation.

The defense of gay pedophilia has metastasized deep and far into the national conscience. As Mary Eberstadt wrote in The Weekly Standard recently, "Today's pressures to normalize pedophilia are not the result of some omnipotent and unstoppable taboo-devouring social and moral juggernaut; they are occurring one bookstore, one magazine, one publisher and advertiser, one author and editor and consumer at a time."

One of the nation's leading gay magazines, "XY," is targeted to readers as young as 12. It features photo spreads of half-naked men and publishes profanity-laced articles supporting lowering the age of consent. Instead of universal condemnation, the North American Man-Boy Love Association (which Va.

In Canada, it's illegal to speak one's convictions concerning the practice of homosexuality without penalty. TV, radio and print media in Canada cannot use bible passages that condemn homosexuality. Some Canadians have already been jailed for their opinions against the effects of sodomy in their society. No, this is not Nazi Germany in the 1940's.

This is the United States and our closest neighbor, Canada!

The allegedly Catholic Senators Tom Daschle and Ted Kennedy are co-sponsoring a bill that would increase the federal government's ability to prosecute "hate crimes," that would give homosexuals more protection under federal law than heterosexuals. In other words, a heterosexual person isn't as worthy as a homosexual person.

Most Americans are already timid about teaching God's Truth on the mortal sin of sodomy, the great scourge dividing our nation in deep misery and confusion, without the added fear of being imprisoned for doing so. Mary wasn't intimidated.

That Mary cared enough to intervene didn't surprise her pastor.

"She was a very intense long and hard about the making the feeling of repugnance at an unwanted sexual advance subject to additional penalties under the law.

person concerned about the good of the parish always seeking things for the poor as well as the spiritual welfare of people," said Rev. Francis Rog of St. Hyacinth Catholic Church.
(Stachowicz, Page 3)

(Stachowicz, continued)

Alas, Mary's practically forgotten, even though her murder was less than 3 months ago. Where's the outrage from Christians? No one wants to talk about it.

Only several of the total U.S. secular news pieces written about Mary's murder made it into the two Chicago news dailies, the scene of this chilling crime.

Of Mary's murder, the Chicago Sun-Times, on November 18, carefully headlined, "Arrest in funeral home death." The day before it said, "Body found in funeral home was stabbed." The Chicago Tribune said, "Body identified as missing woman." The final piece published in the Tribune subtly headlined, "Quarrel preceded slaying, officials say." The subhead, small print,

"If a gay man had been murdered for trying to convince someone to be gay, it would be a national news story and deemed a hate crime. But when a gay man murders a woman who tried to convince him to change, the media spike the story," said Peter LaBarbera, senior policy analyst for the Culture and Family Institute for Concerned Women for America. "If Matthew Shepard's murder deserved national media attention, then why not Mary Stachowicz's?...It's going to be hard for people to say this is not an anti-Christian hate crime committed by a homosexual activist," he says. "But I fully expect the media to not pay a lot of attention to this case."

Mary Coleman, Stachowicz's friend, told the Chicago Tribune, "Those of us who knew her immediately hear her soft voice saying something like, 'God wouldn't approve of the way you're living your life.' "

Mary Stachowicz's death parallels that of St. Maria Goretti, her namesake. St. Maria was also brutally stabbed to death as she resisted Alessandro Serenelli's sinful, lustful advances.

Will we someday see Mary Stachowicz recognized by the Church for her courage? Will we ever witness Nicholas Gutierrez's repentance and gave the only hint in Chicago about what really took place: "Suspect's lifestyle allegedly at issue."

Page 3

Could their silence be signaling that the homosexual already have preferential treatment when it comes to 'hate crimes' murders? Within a 30 day period, in 1998, over 3,000 articles were written about Matthew Shepard, the homosexual college student who was killed by three men in Wyoming. Is this a double standard in how hate crimes statutes are applied, as well as how the media cover the crimes?

Stupendous reactions among homosexual websites and chat lines have been reported to range from "she deserved what she got," "Where do I send a check for Gutierrez's defense," to "Maybe this will send a message to the religious zealots to mind their own business."

return to God, as we witnessed the dramatic conversion of Alessandro Serenelli, Maria's murderer? Alessandro spent the rest of his life traveling the world to witness of God's mercy and forgiveness until his death in 1970 at the Capuchin convent of Macerata, where he lived out his life in reparation. Above all, we we ever see Mary Stachowicz recognized by the American bishops for her courage?

Let's keep this case alive before America's conscience. Let's start by sending emails to the Illinois State's Attorney office: stateattorney@cookcountygov.com They are prosecuting the case on Mary's behalf. Let's ask them to charge Mary's murder as a hate crimes against Christians.

Hate crimes are criminal actions intended to harm or intimidate people because of their race, ethnicity, sexual orientation, religion or other minority group status. Steve Crampton, chief counsel with the Center for Law & Policy, says it is more than likely that Chicago prosecutors have grounds for a hate crimes prosecution. So far, Chicago prosecutors say they don't.

It's clear and simple: Mr. Gutierrez killed Mrs. Stachowicz after she shared her religious beliefs with him. Now, that's hate. ❄

Back to 'Learning About

Homosexuality' main page

Protected Class Status for Homosexuals: Unwarranted Under All Three Traditional Criteria

The first question we must consider is this: Do homosexuals, as a group linked solely by shared sexual behavior, warrant protected class status by any criteria which have given that status to legitimate ethnic groups? Historically, courts and civil rights authorities have employed three "touchstones" in awarding protected class status to groups of people.

The group must:

New: Pedophilia Protected Class in Las Vegas

1. As an entire class, have suffered a history of discrimination evidenced by lack of ability to obtain economic mean income, adequate education, or cultural opportunity.

(Any homosexual claims to that effect are clearly bogus in light of marketing studies that show homosexuals to be enormously advantaged relative to the general population- and astronomically advantaged when compared to truly disadvantaged minorities:

- Homosexuals have an average household income of $63,100 versus a general population income of $36,500. By contrast, the average income of a disadvantaged African-American household is somewhere between $12 - 13,000.)

2. As an entire class, exhibit obvious, immutable, or distinguishing characteristics, like race, color, gender or national origin, that define them as a discrete group.

There is no credible scientific evidence to support homosexual claims that "gayness" is either genetically determined or immutable. In fact the weight of scientific evidence is to the contrary.

3. As an entire class, clearly demonstrate political powerlessness.

Far from being politically powerless, homosexual activists have in recent years demonstrated enormous political "clout" relative to their numbers. Combining economic and educational advantage with high-pressure lobbying tactics, homosexual activists have ridden waves of tolerance emanating from the sexual revolution to a position of almost irresistible influence in today's America. ★

From Tolerance to Affirmation: Assault by the Project 10 - "Safe Schools" Program

One School's Experience with a Gay-Affirmative Program. A concerned teacher, who wishes to remain anonymous, describes the quiet beginnings of his school's Project 10
program

* * * *

The high school where I teach is an upper-middle-class suburban school near a major metropolitan area, with parents who are deeply involved in the education of their children. The school hires top-notch teachers, and has been recognized many times for excellence in education.
Although the majority faith among the families is Christian, many other faiths are represented, and the children are trained to appreciate religious differences. Previously, the school had never been known for gay and lesbian activity, and most teachers seemed to be either indifferent to, or hostile to, a gay agenda.

The Beginning: "Safe Schools"

Gay agitation began during the 1992-93 school year. A group of teachers, led by a dedicated gay and lesbian promoter, banded together to discuss a problem. The teachers were told that gay students were being discriminated against—harassed, beaten up, and called names within the confines of the school. Although these incidents, whether real or created, would normally be handled by the dean's office, it was resolved that because the target of these incidents was gay students, more intense efforts needed to be made.

The group was officially formed, taking a generic name that would not display its function—even though it resolved specifically to work to fight gay harassment and discrimination.

Note the following pattern:

1. The existence of a dedicated activist on school grounds. The leader of the group was gay, and extremely dedicated to bringing the gay agenda to the school.
2. The group charter was created to be as non-threatening as and general possible. No students would be involved. Teachers were simply to be informed about it, and not coerced into joining
3. The goals of the charter were to focus on "safety" and "sexual harassment" issues, not the affirmation of homosexuality. After all, no teacher, administrator, or parent can argue with the idea that schools should be as safe as possible for all children.
4. No record of the group's initial activities was made available, because the group was not officially recognized.

Early Development:

The group's scope soon began to expand. Sexually confused students were quietly made aware of the group's presence. More teachers were urged to join, and soon over 50 had officially become members.

Meeting agendas were usually set by a core group of 10 to 15 teachers. The goals of the group—which had originally focused on "making schools safe for all children," soon shifted to "tolerance." Teachers were made aware that tolerance was an important quality to model; one did not have to agree with gay-activist philosophy, just tolerate the existence of gay persons.

Opposition to this group was not organized; rather, individual teachers who made their concerns known were reassured that the group's goals were very limited. The group became more and more public; mailings were sent out to the teachers—and teachers who were not receptive to gay issues were informed that students felt "threatened" by their behavior.

Next, a "home page" was created for the group. Some teachers actively taught "tolerance" from the pulpit of the classroom, and began to incorporate gay and lesbian themes into their lessons. Rainbow signs—the symbol of diversity—appeared in classrooms to let students know that those classrooms were "safe" places to be.

In summary:

1. Once the gay and lesbian agenda establishes itself in a district, that agenda starts to expand. It is typically first introduced under the philosophy of "making schools safe."

2. Gay and lesbian activists choose words and phrases which make their agenda sound innocuous. Teachers are taught to respect diversity, but this respect is used by the activists to further a larger agenda. Teachers who oppose the group are labeled intolerant and warned of the fear and bigotry they are spreading among their students.

3. There is covert spreading of rainbow symbols throughout the school. The symbols are said to stand for the broader issue of respect for diversity. 4.

Information about the group is quietly passed to students; soon the whole school is aware that a "pro-gay" group exists among the teachers. 5. Since the group is not recognized by the school, it is impossible for parents to influence it, or ask for its closure.

6. Although not official, the group gains credibility through each successive mailing, meeting, and forum.

Soon, students

confused about their sexual identity begin to come out publicly, becoming activists themselves. Gay pride symbols appear on the student TV station. One boy enters the school talent show dressed in drag as Madonna; two young boys, and two girls, make public the fact that they are going to the prom "as a foursome." The idea soon grows that it is "cool," "different," and "chic" to be gay. Because the students are perceived as the initiators of these actions, there is no administrative censure.

Activist teachers become more public in their attempts to pass on the tenets of gay activism. Students are by now required to read books that have explicit gay and lesbian stories, and they are humiliated in class if they express any reservations about homosexuality.

The administration, sensing that this has become an issue, now decides to include the gay group among the school's official organizations—listing it along with other support groups for issues of divorce, alcoholism and pregnancy. A gay-activist teacher is made the head, actually gay pride signs. (Every counselor, by that time, already had one in his office.)

* "Tolerance" was not the goal, after all, because "tolerance" implies that there is something wrong with being gay, and of course there is not.

* Gay rights are said to be in the same category as civil rights for ethnic minorities; therefore in the future, the school will offer gay-affirmative curricula.

* The name of the support group is now "Project 10," referring to the [lie] "fact" that 10% of the population is gay.

As of this writing, there still is no organized opposition to Project 10 among staff members, and no group has formed among parents to oppose this agenda. From its quiet beginnings as a non-sanctioned gathering concerned with "safety," the group has now become a fully sanctioned, gay-pride organization.

Gay is now officially okay, according to the administration. These same activists are now moving on to other area schools, working to initiate similar programs.

Copyright ©
NARTH. All Rights Reserved.
Updated: 8/5/
1999 ♀

© Copyright #Catholic Family Association of America# 2002. All rights reserved. Contact Us at info@cathfam.org
[Home | We need your help! | 3D Ultrasound Movies of Babies in the Womb]

The Pink Swastika

a "courageous and timely" book by Scott Lively and Kevin Abrams

Click here for full web version

We hear unending propaganda about Nazi persecution of homosexuals. The intent is to legitimize homosexuality by gaining sympathy with those who suffered during the genocides of WWII.

Innocence by association, if you will.

The importance of homosexuals in the Nazi party and StormTroopers was universally recognized when Hitler took power in 1933: "Hitler, so monumentally intolerant, was strangely tolerant of one human condition - a man's morals. No other party in Germany came near to attracting so many shady characters. A conglomeration of pimps, murderers, homosexuals, alcoholics, and blackmailers flocked to the party as if to a natural haven. Hitler did not care as long as they were useful to him. [When other party leaders demanded in 1925] that the criminals and especially the perverts be expelled from the movement, this Hitler frankly refused to do." (William Shirer, The Rise and Fall of the Third Reich, pp. 121-122)

Homosexual activists often attempt to gain sympathy by recalling the extermination of thousands of homosexuals under the tyranny of Hitler's Third Reich. But Reisman points out the paradox: "The World War II notion of Hitler's persecution of homosexuals is based on his assault of 'fems' not homosexual Nazi supermen. Many of Hitler's 'Inner Circle,' and the key men who recruited for the party, and who led the party, including the most brutal military brigades, the Storm Troopers (SA), and the Infantry School - were homosexual: Ernest Roehm [head of the SA], Rudolf Hess and Gerhard Rossbach, while the infamous Goering was said to be a type of transvestite Walter Langer, writing in The Mind of Adolf Hitler (1972), noted that Rudolf Hess was generally known as Fraulein Anna.' There were many other [homosexuals close to Hitler] and it was supposed, for this reason, that Hitler too belonged in this category" Ibid, pp. 57 - 58).

Reisman adds in a footnote: "See Berthold Hinz, Art in the Third Reich (Pantheon Books: New York, 1979) about the display of brazenly homosexual Nazi male imagery and concepts, and see especially S. William Halperin, writing in Germany Tried Democracy - A Political History of the Reich from 1918 - 1933 (Norton Books: New York, 1946). Here, Halperin describes the role of public homosexual activists within Hitler's Nazi party, even in "major posts of import" (Ibid., p. 65).

Reviewers Praise The Pink Swastika

The Pink Swastika: Homosexuality in the Nazi Party is a thoroughly researched, eminently readable, demolition of the "gay" myth, symbolized by the pink triangle, that the Nazis were anti-homosexual. The deep roots of homosexuality in the Nazi party are brilliantly exposed . . .

Dr. Howard Hurwitz, Family Defense Council

As a Jewish scholar who lost hundreds of her family in the Holocaust, I welcome The Pink Swastika as courageous and timely . . . Lively and Abrams reveal the reigning gay history as revisionist and expose the supermale German homosexuals for what they were - Nazi brutes, not Nazi victims.

Dr. Judith Reisman, Institute for Media Education

The Pink Swastika is a tremendously valuable book, replete with impressive documentation presented in a compelling fashion.

William Grigg, The New American

...exposes numerous lies, and tears away many myths. Essential reading, it is a formidable boulder cast into the path of the onrushing homosexual express...

Stan Goodenough, Middle East Intelligence Digest

...a...superb book...

Dr. Nathaniel Lehrman, Clinical Director, Retired, Kingsboro Psychiatric Center

The Pink Swastika is a powerful exposure of pre-World War II Germany and its quest for reviving and imitating a Hellenistic-paganistic idea of homo-eroticism and militarism.

Dr. Mordechai Nisan, Hebrew University of Jerusalem

Lively and Abrams call attention to what Hitlerism really stood for, abortion, euthenasia, hatred of Jews, and, very emphatically, homosexuality. This many of us knew in the 1930's; it was common knowledge, but now it is denied...

R. J. Rushdoony, The Chalcedon Report

...a treasury of knowledge for anyone who wants to know what really happened during the Jewish Holocaust...

Norman Saville, News of All Israel

...Scott Lively and Kevin Abrams have done America a great service...

Col. Ronald Ray, Former U.S. Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense

A landmark book for those who have trouble understanding Hitler, the Holocaust...Previous books and movies, however high their quality, have left me mystified as to how the Nazi leaders could have done the things they did. This short book gets closer to the truth than anything I know of.

John Hully, Former Senior Economist, the World Bank

...unusually informative and thought provoking...

Langdon Mustell, Attorney

A well researched book. The central theme that the Nazi movement was riddled with homosexuals is certainly true.

Hillmar von Campe, Historian, Halle, Germany

This is one for your personal library. No doubt you will, at some time, be confronted with the myth of the persecution of homosexuals by the Nazis. Be ready with the facts.
Paul De Parrie, Life Advocate

© Copyright #Catholic Family Association of America# 2002. All rights reserved. Contact Us at info@cathfam.org
[Home | We need your help! | 3D Ultrasound Movies of Babies in the Womb]

Back to 'Learning About Homosexuality' main page

HOMOSEXUAL 'RIGHTS' STRATEGIES MANIPULATE PUBLIC OPINION

When homosexual author James Spada, in The Spada Report, a survey of homosexual attitudes and behavior (New American library, 1979), asked homosexual subjects, "Have you ever had your rights denied you because you are homosexual?" 72.1% of his respondents answered, "No," and an additional 10% gave no answer or said they "didn't know."

Nevertheless homosexual marketing professionals (and activists) Marshall Kirk and Erastes Pill, recommending political strategies designed to lead to, as they put it, "The Overhauling of Straight America" (Guide Magazine, November, 1987), suggests:

Portray gays as victims, not as aggressive challengers. In any campaign to win over the public, gays must be cast as victims in need of protection so that straights will be inclined by reflex action to assume the role of protector ... Straight viewers must be able to identify with gays as victims. Mr. and Mrs. Public must be given no extra excuses to say "they are not like us" ... Our campaign should not demand direct support for homosexual practices, but should instead take anti - discrimination as its theme (emphasis the authors)

At the same time, Kirk and Pill recommend:

"Make the victimizers look bad. . . The public should be shown images of ranting homophobes whose secondary traits and beliefs disgust middle America. These images might include: the Ku Klux Klan demonstrating that homosexuals be burned alive or castrated; bigoted southern ministers drooling with hysterical hatred to a degree that looks both comical and deranged; menacing pugs, thugs, and convicts speaking coolly about the "fags" they have killed or would like to kill; a tour of Nazi concentration camps where gays were tortured and gassed."

This attitude shows striking resemblance to, of all things, a Communist Party directive, quoted in the 1956 Report of the House of Representatives Committee of Un - American Activities (Volume 1, p. 347):

Members and front organizations must continually embarrass, discredit and degrade our critics ... When obstructionists become too irritating, label them as fascist or Nazi or anti-Semitic... Constantly associate those who oppose us with those names that already have a bad smell. The association will, after enough repetition, become "fact!" in the public mind.

Despite concerted attempts by pro - family groups to prevent possible violence to homosexuals and a total absence of "gay - bashing" during controversial hearings on the homosexual advantage issue, homosexual activists continue to brand all their opposition as "hate mongers," "KKKers, "neo - Nazis" and "bigots."

ACT UP Modeled On Nazi Organisation

Perhaps the supreme irony underlying this name calling by homosexual extremists was revealed in a recent Washington Blade (D.C.'s homosexual tabloid) "First Person" article January 31, 1991), in which ACT UP/D.C. founder Eric M. Pollard made the following startling admissions:

* "I have helped to create a truly fascist organization. . . "

* "The decision to create ACT UP/D.C. was conceived when I and another early member attended an OUT! rally. I had taken copious amounts of LSD. We were impressed with the energy, and with the self - righteous anger of the crowd."

*"We conspired to bring into existence an activist group that ... could effectively exploit the media for its own ends, and that would work covertly and break the law with impunity ... Under the influence of powerful, illicit drugs, it really seemed like a good idea" (emphasis added).

* That the group subscribed to consciously "subversive modes, drawn largely from the voluminous Mein Kampf [by Adolf Hitler], which some of us studied as a working model. As ACT UP/D.C. grew, we struck intently and surgically into whatever institution we believed to stand in our way... " .

* "I have left ACT UP, more correctly, they have thrown me out for insisting on the viability of individual dissent".

These are strange admissions indeed, coming as they do from the ex - leader of a group given to stridently accusing its opposition of employing "neo - Nazi" tactics (one of which happens to be accusing your opposition of acts and attitudes of which you are, in fact guilty). Evidently, this kind of homosexual extremist view readily coincides with Adolph Hitler's opinion in Mein Kampf. "The victor will never be asked if he told the truth."

Homosexual activists often attempt to gain sympathy by recalling the extermination of thousands of homosexuals under they tyranny of Hitler's Third Reich. But Dr. Judith Reisman points out the paradox: "The World War II notion of Hitler's persecution of homosexuals is based on his assault of 'fems' not homosexual Nazi supermen. Many of Hitler's 'Inner Circle,' and the key men who recruited for the party, and who led the party, including the most brutal military brigades, the Storm Troopers (SA), and the Infantry School - were homosexual: Ernest Roehm [head of the SA], Rudolf Hess and Gerhard Rossbach, while the infamous Goering was said to be a type of transvestite ...". Walter Langer, writing in The Mind of Adolf Hitler (1972), noted that Rudolf Hess was generally known as Fraulein Anna.' There were many other [homosexuals close to Hitler] and it was supposed, for this reason, that Hitler too belonged in this category" Ibid, pp. 57 - 58).

Reisman adds in a footnote: "See Berthold Hinz, Art in the Third Reich (Pantheon Books: New York, 1979) about the display of brazenly homosexual Nazi male imagery and concepts, and see especially S. William Halperin, writing in Germany Tried Democracy - A Political History of the Reich from 1918 - 1933 (Norton Books: New York, 1946). Here, Halperin describes the role of public homosexual activists within Hitler's Nazi party, even in "major posts of import" (Ibid., p. 65).C

© Copyright #Catholic Family Association of America# 2002.
All rights reserved. Contact Us at info@cathfam.org
[Home | We need your help! | 3D Ultrasound Movies of Babies in the Womb]

The Homosexual Agenda: Suppress Dissent and "Reeducate" Our Children

The "politically correct" would have you accept three major myths.

Myth #1

Homosexuality is normal and biologically determined.

The truth...

There is no scientific research indicating a physiological cause for homosexuality. Biological factors may play a role in the predisposition to homosexuality. However, this is true of many other psychological conditions.

Research suggests that social and psychological factors are strongly influential. Examples include problems in early family relationships, sexual seduction, and sense of inadequacy with same-sex peers, with resulting disturbance in gender identity. Society can also influence a sexually questioning youth when it encourages gay self-labeling.

Myth #2

Homosexuals cannot change, and if they try, they will suffer great emotional distress and become suicidal. Therefore, treatment to change homosexuality must be stopped.

and unconscious conflicts from which the condition originated. As with any psychological disorder, a therapist cannot force someone to change -- the client must want to do so. Just as important, the client must realize that change comes slowly, usually over several years. The damage that has been done cannot be undone overnight.

If some homosexuals do not wish to change, that is their choice, yet it is profoundly sad that gay-rights activists struggle against the right-to-treatment for other homosexuals who yearn for freedom from their attractions.

Myth # 3

We must teach our children that homosexuality is a lifestyle alternative equal to heterosexuality. We also must help teenagers who have same-sex attractions accept their homosexuality as normal.

The truth...

Scientific research supports age-old cultural norms that homosexuality is not a healthy natural alternative to heterosexuality. It does far more harm than good to tell a teenager that his attractions toward members of the

The truth...

Psychotherapists around the world who treat homosexuals report that significant numbers of their clients have experienced substantial healing. Change has come through psychological therapy, spirituality, and ex-gay support groups. Whether leading married or committed celibate lives, many report that their homosexual feelings have diminished greatly, and do not trouble them as much as they had in the past.

The keys to change are desire, persistence, and a willingness to investigate the conscious same sex are normal and desirable. Homosexual attractions are rather a sign that deep emotional wounding has occurred. Teens in this position need love and counseling, not a push in the direction of the gay lifestyle, which may establish a sexual pattern which is medically risky and psychologically habit-forming. A 1992 study in Pediatrics found that 25.9% of 12-year-olds are uncertain if they are gay or straight. The teen years are critical to the question of self-labeling, so the facts must be presented in our schools in a fair and balanced manner.

NARTH Click to Reach the NARTH at www.narth.com

Back to 'Learning About

Homosexuality' main page

Homosexuality & Genetics

+ "There is no evidence that shows that homosexuality is genetic--and none of the research itself claims there is. Only the press and certain researchers do, when speaking in sound bites to the public." --Jeffrey Satinover, M.D., The Journal of Human Sexuality, 1996, p.8

+ The national organization P-FLAG ("Parents and Friends of Lesbians and Gays") offers a booklet prepared with the assistance of Dr. Clinton Anderson of the American Psychological Association. Entitled, "Why Ask Why? Addressing the Research on Homosexuality and Biology," the pamphlet says:

"To date, no researcher has claimed that genes can determine sexual orientation. At best, researchers believe that there may be a genetic component. No human behavior, let alone sexual behavior, has been connected to genetic markers to date...sexuality, like every other behavior, is undoubtedly influenced by both biological and societal factors."

© Copyright #Catholic Family Association of America# 2002. All rights reserved. Contact Us at info@cathfam.org

[Home | We need your help! | 3D Ultrasound Movies of Babies in the Womb]

Back to 'Learning About

Homosexuality' main page

The "10 Percent are Homosexuals" Lie

The public is constantly told that 10 percent of all men are homosexual. This appeal to the Big Number is a major, and very successful, propaganda ploy by homosexual extremists. It is used to justify untold erosion in our perceptions of "normalcy" and arouse a misguided sense of compassion.

The Kinsey Institute's statistic that 10% of the American population are homosexual is false. It was based on dishonest research. The most recent scientific studies have consistently shown that less than 1 up to just under 2 percent of the male population are exclusively homosexual.

For example, according to USA Today of April 15, 1993:

- The notion that 10% of men are gay—born in the studies of Alfred Kinsey and popularized by activists—is dying under the weight of new studies.
- In the latest, only 2.3% of U.S. men ages 20 to 39 say they've had a same-sex experience in the past decade. Only 1.1% say they have been exclusively gay.
- The survey of 3,321 men is published today in the Alan Guttmacher Institute journal... the findings are similar to other recent studies:
- A 1989 U.S. survey estimated no claimed homosexual activity in the preceding year. Only 0.5% to 0.7% had exclusively homosexual partners.

• United States: A stratified cluster sample from the Minnesota Adolescent Health Survey (1986-87) of 36,741 public school students (grades 7-12) showed that only 0.6% of the boys and 0.2% of the girls identified themselves as "mostly or 100% homosexual"; 0.7% of the boys and 0.8% of the girls identified themselves as "bisexual"; and 10.1% of males and 11.3% of females were "unsure."

• Canada: 5,514 first-year college students under age 25 were part of nationwide cluster random sample. This revealed 98% were more than 6% of adults had any same-sex experiences and less than 1% were exclusively homosexual.

- A 1992 French study found 4% of men and 3% of women reported same-sex contacts; 1.4% of men and 0.4% of women said any occurred in the previous five years. (Emphasis added)

The Wall Street Journal for March 31, 1993 revealed:

...the one-in-ten figure is routinely cited in academic works, sex education materials, government reports and the media.... But there long has been much evidence that the 10% estimate is far too high. Surveys with large samples from the U.S., Canada, Britain, France, Norway, Denmark and other nations give a picture of homosexuality experience rates of 6% or less, with an exclusive homosexuality prevalence of 1% or less.

The most comprehensive example is the continuing survey conducted by the U.S. Census Bureau since 1988 for the National Center for Health Statistics of the Centers for Disease Control.... the data strongly suggest that the prevalence of even incidental homosexual behavior is less than 2% for men.... a general population estimate for homosexuality would fall below 1.5%....

The Wall Street Journal points out that Paul and Kirk Cameron have written a new study, "The Prevalence of Homosexuality," (Psychological Reports, in heterosexual, 1% bisexual, 1% homosexual.

- Norway: A nationwide random mail sample of 6,155 adults age 18-60 (1987) found that 0.9% of males and 0.9% of females had homosexual experiences within three years of the survey.

Given the 31 percent homosexual assault rate, a federal crime statistic (see next col.) , and using the 1.4% figure, which includes many who may have had only a single homosexual encounter in the 5 year period, it means that a man randomly selected from the homosexual population is 26 times more likely to assault a child than a randomly selected heterosexual.

Using the average exclusive lifetime homosexual rates shown in these two studies, 0.8 percent, yields an assault rate 39 times (3,900 percent) that of a randomly selected heterosexual male.

Activist Bruce Voeller said in a recent book, "I campaigned with Gay groups and in the media across the country for the Kinsey - based [10%] finding that "We are everywhere." This slogan became a National Gay Task Force leitmotif. And the issues derived from the implications of the Kinsey data became key parts of the national political, educational and legislative programs during my years at New York's Gay Activist Alliance and the National Gay Task Force.

And after years of our educating those who inform the public and make its laws, the concept that 10 percent of the population is gay has become generally accepted "fact." While some reminding always seems necessary, the 10 percent figure is regularly utilized by scholars, by the press, and in government statistics.

press). It summarizes over 30 surveys around the world with large, plausibly unbiased samples.

- France: A government survey of 20,055 adults (1991-92) revealed 1.4% of men and 0.4% of women had homosexual intercourse in the five years preceding the survey. Exclusive lifetime homosexual rates were 0.7% for men and 0.6% for women while lifetime homosexuality experience was 4.1% for men and 2.6% for women.

- Britain: only 1.4% of men had homosexual contact in the previous five years....

- United States: A nationwide household sample of 1,537 adults conducted by the National Opinion Research Center at the University of Chicago (1989) indicated that of sexually active adults 19 years of age and older, 1.2% of males and 1.2% of females

As with so many pieces of knowledge and myth, repeated telling made it so - incredible as the notion was to the world when the Kinsey group first put forth its data or decades later when the Gay Movement pressed that data into public consciousness. ("Some Uses and Abuses of the Kinsey Scale," Bruce Voeller, Homosexuality, Heterosexuality Concepts of Sexual Orientation, The Kinsey Institute Series, June Machover Reinisch, ed., Oxford University Press, 1990, p. 35).☺

main page

Content Analysis of The Advocate

(a national homosexual magazine)

Dr. Judith Reisman, President of The Institute for Media Education, has released a not - yet - published study titled "A Content Analysis of The Advocate [a national homosexual magazine] 1972,1991" speaking to the issue of the gay rights" movement, which "seeks to sanitize the image of homosexuality to facilitate its entrance into the social mainstream.

The Advocate is generally recognized as a "mainstream" publication in the homosexual subculture. Reisman argues persuasively that The Advocate closely reflects national "gay culture" and homosexual "community values." A recent Advocate poll reported the average annual income of its readers as about $62,000 (see Part II of this analysis for more on homosexual income).

Among Reisman's findings: "'Boys,' 'chicken' [a common homosexual term for underage young sexual partners] and 'teens' are solicited and displayed sexually in The Advocate. Man - boy sex is encouraged by prevailing 'gay' cultural values. Finding: 10 - 20% of Advocate ads sexually solicit boys/teens within a larger pool of 58% prostitution ads. Up to 23% of sex customers wanted 'hairless' or smooth bodies while 38% used youth cues ('boys,' 'youth,' 'son') to recruit boy lovers" (p. 18, used by special permission).

Reisman continues: "Claims of asexual interest in boys for adoption and youth counseling (Big Brothers, Scouts, school sex counselor) are not supported by The Advocate data. On the contrary, the evidence reveals a repeated pattern from 1972 to 1991 of man - boy sex and 'boy lovers' as a prevailing cultural homosexual/Advocate value. Roughly 10 - 20% of ads since 1972 both blatantly and (post - 1988) subtly, have solicited child/teen boy entrapment ... [Thus] for fully 19 years (July 1972 - July 1991) The Advocate has incited its readers into sex with 'boy lovers' using American youths when legally possible and foreign youths when necessary. Ads for Third World trips often are accompanied by images of what could be seen as 'boy lovers.' Some argue that these repeated ads confirm the need to aggressively recruit boys into homosexual life" (ibid., p. 18). It should come as no surprise, then, that homosexual extremist manifestos, such as "The 1972 Gay Rights Platform", have consistently called upon governments to:

- (1) "Repeal all state laws prohibiting private sexual acts involving consenting persons [i.e., not consenting adults]"
- (2) "Repeal of all laws governing the age of sexual consent."

(In 1991, under considerable lobbying pressure by, among others, homosexual activists and their liberal supporters, the state of New Jersey significantly lowered the age of consent in laws relating to sexual behavior within its sovereignty.)

Supporters of protected class status for homosexuals infer that homosexuals are less of a threat to the innocence of the young than heterosexuals, because "heterosexuals commit a majority of child molestations." However, since heterosexuals make up nearly 98% of society, it would be extraordinarily surprising if they did not commit a majority of child molestations. What is extraordinary is the amount of child molestation committed by homosexuals relative to their tiny presence in the general population. Homosexual extremists bristle at references to information like the above. Sometimes they infer that they have changed their ways. However, we are aware of, and homosexual activists offer, no persuasive evidence that this is the case. ☛

Short & Lethal Life-span

Consider:

From the British Columbia Centre for Excellence in HIV/AIDS, St Paul's Hospital, Vancouver, Canada:

"CONCLUSION: In a major Canadian centre, life expectancy at age 20 years for gay and bisexual men is 8 to 20 years less than for all men. If the same pattern of mortality were to continue, we estimate that nearly half of gay and bisexual men currently aged 20 years will not reach their 65th birthday. Under even the most liberal assumptions, gay and bisexual men in this urban centre are now experiencing a life expectancy similar to that experienced by all men in Canada in the year 1871. (emphasis added)" [\[International Journal of Epidemiology, Vol 26, 657-661\]](#)

Consider:

The Center for Disease Control (CDC) on the cumulative number of cases of AIDS through 2002 in the U.S.:

AIDS CASES in US (www.cdc.gov/hiv/stats.htm)	NUMBER	PERCENTAGE
Male to male sexual contact	420,790	48%
Injection drug use (172,351 men, 67,917 women)	240,268	27%
Male to male sexual contact and injection drug use	59,719	7%
Heterosexual contact (50,793 men, 84,835 women)	135,628	15%
Other	20,869	2%
Total cumulative-adults and adolescents	877,275	100%

Also see Kissing Tied to Kaposi's sarcoma Virus

Consider:

Excerpts from a report by the D.C. Family Research Council, citing dozens of experts and studies, including a study of some 5,200 obituaries, over five years, in 16 homosexual newspapers:

- Average age of men dying w/ AIDS is 39.
- The average age of homosexuals dying of all other causes, 41 (Average mafioso dies at 44).
- Only 1% lived to be 65 or older, as opposed to 80% for heterosexual men.
- Other studies have found only 3% of all homosexuals are over the age of 55.

While obituaries in the gay press focus on those out of the closet, they suggest that a homosexual "life-style" may cut two or three decades off one's life expectancy.

According the FRC report, homosexual men are 3 times as likely to have abuse problems, 14 times more likely to have syphilis, 23 times more likely to contract any venereal disease, 5500 times (550,000%) more likely to contact AIDS.

Nor is the phenomenon restricted to males: "A compilation of recent studies shows that lesbians are 19 times more likely than heterosexual women to have had syphilis, twice as likely to suffer from genital warts, and four times as likely to have scabies".

TWO MAJOR STUDIES SHOW HOMOSEXUALITY / SUICIDE LINK

NEW YORK, Oct 19,99 (CWNews.com/LSN.ca) - Two extensive studies in this month's issue of the AMA's Archives of General Psychiatry confirmed a strong link between homosexual sex and suicide as well as a relationship between homosexuality and abnormal mental problems.

A study using 103 pairs of twins, one a practicing homosexual and the other not, found that homosexual behavior significantly increased the likelihood of suicide even after adjustments were made for substance abuse and depression. The practicing homosexual twin was over 5 times more likely to experience the suicidal symptoms. The study measured suicide risk in terms of the categories: "wanted to die," "suicidal ideation," "attempted suicide," and "thoughts about death." The study was unique for its thorough co-twin control design and its use of the most widely used instrument in psychiatric epidemiology, the Diagnostic Interview Schedule. The study report can found at (<http://archpsyc.ama-assn.org/issues/v56n10/full/yoa8085.html#a2>)

A second study in the journal by David M. Ferguson and his team found that "gay, lesbian, and bisexual young people are at increased risk of psychiatric disorder and suicidal behaviors." Youths suffering from these disorders were four times as likely as their peers to suffer major depression, almost three times as likely to suffer generalized anxiety disorder, nearly four times as likely to experience conduct disorder, five times as likely to have nicotine dependence, six times as likely to suffer multiple disorders, and over six times as likely to have attempted suicide.

The study was based on a 21-year study of 1265 children born in Christchurch, New Zealand. Of 1007 subjects questioned only twenty-eight (2.8 percent) were classified as being gay, lesbian, or bisexual.

Click Here to Reach the cwnews.com web site

Monogamy For Homosexuals

Studies in Sexual Preference (Bloomington, Indiana University Press, 1981) indicated that only 3% of homosexuals had fewer than 10 lifetime sexual partners. Only about 2% could be classified as either monogamous or semi - monogamous.

'This does not mean to imply that "monogamy" can be said to have traditional meaning in homosexual circles. Studies indicate that "monogamy" for homosexuals lasts from between 9 to 60 months' (op. cit.; "The Psychology of Homosexuality," Institute for the Scientific Investigation of Sexuality, 1984).

Weinberg and Williams reported two thirds of 1,117 homosexuals they surveyed answered "no" when asked whether they or their present sexual partner were currently "limiting your sexual relationships primarily to each other." Only a third of homosexuals surveyed claimed they had "ever" been involved in such a mutually exclusive relationship. (Hunter and Madsen, in After the Ball, op. cit., pg. 330, note: "the cheating ratio of 'married' gay males, given enough time, approaches 100% ... Many gay lovers, bowing to the inevitable, agree to an 'open relationship,' for which there are as many sets of ground rules as there are couples.")

main page

The Homosexual Lifestyle & Practices

- A study by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control revealed that 50% of male homosexuals have had over 500 different sexual partners. For AIDS victims the average is 1,100 different sexual partners.
- In one study, two homosexual researchers found that 73% of adult male homosexuals had had sex with boys age 19 or younger.
- 93% report anal sexual relations.
- 92% report oral/anal sexual activity.
- 17% report eating and/or rubbing themselves with the feces of their partners.
- 29% report urinating on or in their partners.
- 37% report sadomasochism.
- 42% report "handballing" or "fisting" where the hand or arm is inserted into the rectum of their partner.
- 32% report bondage.
- 12% report giving or receiving of enemas for sexual pleasure.
- 15% report sex with animals.

Published by The Berean League

2875 Snelling Ave. N., St. Paul, MN 55113.

main page

The Advocate Survey — 1994

This information on homosexual activity is taken from The Advocate, a national magazine for homosexuals. The study included 2500 homosexual men. Results were published in the August 23, 1994, issue.

Sex acts men say they love

Insertive oral intercourse 72%
Receptive oral intercourse 71%
Insertive anal intercourse 46%
Receptive anal intercourse 43%
Receptive anilingus (tongue in the anus) 45%
Insertive anilingus 29%

Sex acts (last five years)

Three-way sex 48%
Group sex (four or more) 24%
Bondage & discipline sex 20%
Use of nipple clamps 19%
Sadomasochism 10%

Where partners met (last five years)

Bar/disco 65%
Bathhouse, sex club 29%
Adult bookstore 27%
Park, bathroom 26%
Roadside rest area 15%

n Most (57%) report having had more than 30 partners over their lifetime, and about a third (35%) report more than 100 partners.

n About one quarter (26%) of HIV-positive men who have had insertive oral intercourse have ejaculated in another man's mouth, most typically with someone they have just met.

n Among men who have had insertive anal intercourse in the past year, 44% ejaculated in a partner without a condom. Among those who had receptive anal intercourse in the past year, 58% had a partner ejaculate without a condom.

n Among HIV-infected men who have had insertive anal intercourse in the past year, 19% ejaculated without wearing a condom.

They most typically did this with long-term partners or with men with whom they had a purely sexual encounter rather than within the context of a relationship.

n Anilingus (tongue on or in the anus) is fairly common: 41% have performed it in the past year, and 47% have received it.

When engaging in insertive and receptive anilingus, only 4% to 5%, respectively, have used dental dams to prevent the spread of sexually transmitted diseases.

n Among men who had had a positive result from an HIV antibody test, 11% have said or implied that they were HIV-negative in order to have sex.

© Copyright #Catholic Family Association of America# 2002. All rights reserved. Contact Us at info@cathfam.org

[Home | We need your help! | 3D Ultrasound Movies of Babies in the Womb]

Back to 'Learning About Homosexuality'

main page

HOMOPHOBIA MODULE WILL PUT BOYS AT RISK AND MAKE STATE LIABLE FOR DEATHS

STATE LEGISLATORS ARE WARNED THAT THE DEPT. OF ED. HAS CREATED A MASSIVE LIABILITY FOR THE STATE OF RHODE ISLAND BY DISSEMINATING FALSE, MISLEADING, AND INACCURATE INFORMATION

The continuing education module on homophobia currently being used, and for which the Dept. of Ed. now seeks legal cover through house resolution 98 H 8072, will result in the infection and eventually death of boys who receive false and misleading information and the State of RI will be liable.

Teachers will be taught that 10% of children are born homosexual and that nothing can change that orientation. They will communicate this information to students and parents.

Boys who exhibit symptoms of Gender Identity Disorder or Juvenile Unmasculinity and are teased by other children will be labeled by teachers and students as homosexual and encouraged to join homosexual support groups in the schools. Parents will be told to "accept" their son's homosexuality.

The truth is that Gender Identity Disorder and Juvenile Unmasculinity are treatable and preventable conditions. With treatment the teasing will stop and there is an excellent possibility that the boy will not engage in high risk behaviors in adolescence.

Without treatment 75% of the boys will become involved in high risk behavior. Those who begin this behavior in high school are most at risk. According to a report by Dr. Linda Valleroy of the CDC 9% of sexually active gay males will be HIV positive before they are 22.

There is now substantial evidence that AIDS education has failed with the most at-risk population. Without intervention 50% of the boys labeled as homosexual by teachers will eventually die of diseases related to homosexuality.

How will their parents feel when they learn this could have been prevented? How will they feel when they understand that being labeled by the school led to their son's death? How will RI pay the bill if they decide to sue? C

Back to 'Learning About Homosexuality'

main page

Charles Lwanga and Ugandan Martyrs

Slain by Pederast King

Died at Namugongo, Uganda, 1885-1887

King Mwanga detested the faith that would accuse him of debauchery.

King Mwanga of Uganda took as chief steward a young Christian named Joseph Msaka Balikuddembe. Joseph detested the king's debauched ways, especially his attempts to corrupt other young men of Uganda, whom the steward tried to protect. Mwanga distrusted foreign visitors, fearing they might report his evil ways to the British government, which had given him his power.

In October 1885, Mwanga ordered his followers to kill an Anglican missionary, Bishop James Hannington. The Catholic steward Joseph protested at the murder of a fellow Christian and Mwanga had him beheaded.

Six months later Mwanga discovered that a 14-year-old page, Mwafu, had been receiving instruction in the Catholic faith. He killed Denis Sebuggwago, who had been teaching the page by thrusting a butcher's cleaver through his throat. That night Charles Lwanga, the new master of the pages, baptized five of them including Kizito, who he had repeatedly rescued from Mwanga's pederasty.

The next day the baptisms were discovered. Enraged, Mwanga assembled all the pages and ordered the Christians to separate themselves from the others. Fifteen, all under the age of 25, did so at once and were later joined by two others who were already under arrest and by two soldiers. They were asked if they wished to remain Christian and each replied, "Until death." The king then ordered every Protestant and Catholic living in the royal enclosure to be put to death. They were burned.

Violence, to self and others, is intertwined with homosexuality .

[Home | We need your help! | 3D Ultrasound Movies of Babies in the Womb]

Back to 'Learning About

Homosexuality' main page Fight Back : Boycott the Media the 1st Weekend Each Month

Fighting Back: Resisting Propaganda

by T. Athanasius

The essence of education is discrimination and intolerance. The epitome of the educated is one who has been taught to discriminate and be intolerant - one who can discriminate between what is good and what is evil, what is healthy and what is not, what is natural and what is abnormal, what is true and what is false. The educated are those who are intolerant of evil and of those who insist that evil has rights. In effect, someone who is charitably judgemental.

We judge things every day. We judge the actions of people every day. While we may not judge a person's soul, we certainly are required to judge his actions. We catch the cheat cheating and soon we don't trust him. We learn of the gossip and soon learn to keep our business to ourselves. Failure to properly judge the actions of others usually results in pain and suffering. Sometimes death.

The primary definition of tolerance is endurance of an evil. We tolerate pain. We tolerate the boastful. We tolerate the foulmouthed. We tolerate many things (such as lying mass media) because we must. Because either we have to, or because in justice, the price will bring a greater evil. But we should never promote an evil that we tolerate.

Homosexuals don't want tolerance; they want a total destruction of traditional Judeo-Christian sexual morality. Their literature and actions say so. The addition of "sexual orientation" to the Massachusetts Dept. of Ed. standards says, by definition, that Judeo-Christian moral values are hateful and wrong, that expression of these values will be actively countered and suppressed by school authorities and will eventually be punishable under law.

Homosexual McCarthyites use "Tolerance" to demonize you. The mass media in the U.S., with few exceptions, fully cooperates and participates.

Fight back by getting involved. Promote the truth. Realize that "dialogue" and "can't we just all get along" themes are exactly the same tactics used in communist dialectics and are designed to obfuscate, delay and wear down opponents.

>One major way of fighting is by promoting truth and working to strategically deny the "liars who refuse...news" their financial backing. You've noticed that between the Internet, TV and the papers, you hear the same stuff a dozen times over. You won't miss it at all. So, for starters:

Each 1st weekend of the month sacrifice for your children and country, and don't buy their newspapers Friday, Saturday or Sunday.

Also, turn off the TV news... it's mostly habitual viewing anyway.

These tend to be the biggest revenue days of the week. Unlike other boycotts, they will not be able to hide the results from their advertisers! They will get the message.

They will also try to pretend nothing is happening, then wail about their "balanced" innocence and civic duty, while seeking to smear anyone remotely associated with such a "right-wing" concept as "absolute truth". When they wail, extend your boycott to two weekends. When they smear, extend your boycott to three weekends. Also start calling the local advertisers and complain to them. Do the same for the boob tube. Shut it off and call the local advertisers. ABC (Disney Co.) is the worst, closely followed by CNN, CBS, and NBC

If your paper is propagandizing the homosexual agenda, the anti-family anti-woman pro-abortion-at-any-cost racist Planned Parenthood line, join the boycott. If they are attacking the Boy Scouts for standing against homosexual buggery, then boycott. If they are attacking your child's protective innocence by incessantly promoting homosexual sex-ed, then boycott.

Let us know what your efforts are and how you're doing! Our contact is at the bottom Remember, articles written as "news" which portray homosexuality as normal or a positive activity are merely propaganda.

Remember, most propaganda is the insertion of favorable mentions and stories into mass media, not just the editorials and promotion of certain letters to the editor. Count the "column inches" per week to keep a gage of the propaganda level. For a single article with a mention of the gay life-style as either normal, neutral or positive, count the length of the whole, e.g. 10 inches times 2 columns = 20 col-in,

The vast majority of papers and TV stations are adamantly anti-family and pro-homosexual. By definition, to be for homosexual special rights and homosexual marriage is to be anti-family. Nature is against it. Nature's Creator is against it.

You know it's wrong. Your political representative knows it. And when he votes anti-family, vote him out of office. If he can't defend the family, then pound on him at every opportunity.

Remember, not everyone who smiles has your best interests at heart. It is important to distinguish between persons and convictions. We respect everyone, but this does not mean that we should not ferociously defend truth. It may be that the need to defend truth results in the humiliation of pro- homosexuals promoting falsehood. Keep in mind that those so ferociously attacking marriage and normal sexuality can be shown to consistently lie by omission or deliberate deception.

As with communists, they seek compromise only to gain ground. From there they launch new attacks. They have NO qualms about what they are doing. Homosexual rights trivialize marriage and threaten women and children. The homosexual life-style is a proven source of moral, health, social and economic injury. A pro-homosexual politician may be the most gracious and congenial individual, but he is destroying your children's future. There is no benefit he can promote for you that can replace the innocence of your children. Don't think for a second that "it's just tolerance".

Fight back. Vote him out.

Never give an inch.

Never compromise.

Never give up.

Institutionalized Degeneracy has no place in a free society.

Parents have rights; Error has no rights.

Single Issue Voting

by Jeffrey Mirus, Ph.D.

Most people find it very hard to look terrible evil in the face and confront it directly. There are many reasons for this, among which are cultural conditioning, concern about what it might mean to one's own lifestyle, and fear of sticking out like the proverbial sore thumb.

Abortion is just such a mind-boggling evil. Homosexual advocacy is another. Rampant divorce is a third. The list goes on. In each case, we have an evil which is endemic in our society, which the predominant culture tells us is not evil but good, which is tied in some way to the peculiar moral weaknesses of our time (which most of us share in some degree), and which therefore requires a radical commitment and transformation of the personality to confront and reject.

When you have this sort of situation, most people are psychologically unable (that is, subconsciously unwilling) to come to grips with it. As a result, they grasp at any plausible platitude which helps them to feel good about not coming to grips with it. In some cases, to be sure, this is consciously understood and calculated, but most of us are a strange mixture of motivations, we tend to be very badly formed, we don't want to believe that all our friends, our families, and indeed ourselves are frequently involved in horrendous evils, and so we latch onto high-sounding phrases in order to avoid taking a stand.

One of the results of this, in my opinion, is the condemnation of one-issue voting. At the bottom of this condemnation, in most cases, is the simple fact that if people took the "one issue" seriously, it would turn their whole world upside down.

After all, at heart most people are single issue voters, or very nearly so. We all have something we want "fixed" by politics. For most people, it's the economy. For many, it's the preservation of a particular status or lifestyle. For still others, it's a favorite social vision. For a few, it is a true moral issue. And note that for the most part, people are true to type. If someone expresses your view of your "key issue", you aren't really likely to have many significant disagreements with him on other issues. Rather, the issues on which you disagree are likely to be (in your view) relatively minor. Prolifers don't really care if they give something up on immigration policy, for example, to get a pro-life president. That is a significant, but at least temporarily minor point. And pro-homosexual voters can live without highway appropriations if it is necessary to advance their agenda. But an anti-abortion candidate is not going to turn around and favor assisted suicide or pornography. Nor is a pro-homosexual candidate likely to insist on strong parental notification laws or a buildup in defense spending.

This works in the middle as well as at the poles, too. Frankly, a candidate who favors the dominant cultural position on key issues is not going to rock the boat much elsewhere. We can be sure he'll not upset our dream-world with any harsh realities. That may be the key issue for more people than we like to admit.

So it usually isn't (honestly speaking) a question of multi-issue versus single-issue. Usually, it's a question of what you believe is important, what you believe is right. And in this context, the profile voter is a tremendous sign of contradiction. Again, people can't accept the rightness of that single issue without admitting they've been living a lie for a long time.

One can make the arguments, of course. One can argue that abortion is a unique issue, or at least bound up with a set of unique issues, that strike at the heart of how we view the human person and the fundamental right to life itself. The Pope, Mother Teresa, and other authorities of considerable moral weight have made it clear that this is pivotal issue. One can also argue, as I have above, that the "single issue" argument really doesn't wash, that it is fundamentally a smokescreen to hide a different agenda, a different set of priorities all across the board – even if only a subconscious smokescreen to hide a sort of lukewarm complacency which can busy itself with comparing the candidates on a host of minor issues while the entire country burns to the ground.

One should make the arguments, of course. And one should not be swayed, or confused, or cast into doubt by the attacks and arguments of others. But we also need to pray for those with whom we discuss these matters, because ultimately a real inner conversion is required to bring people around, a conversion that makes them realize that their culture is dead, and that they have to step outside it and oppose it if they want to live.

As Chesterton said, only a dead dog floats down stream.

But how many people can, without grace, admit they are dead dogs?

Copyright (c) 1996 EWTN EWTN.COM

Also click to Reach Petersnet.net for other articles

main page

Our Likely Future...

Porn is hot course on campus

Teaching your kid to be a slut:

Boston Globe
8/20/2001

Professors seek meaning behind flourishing market

By David Abel, Globe Staff

Richard Burt, an English professor at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst and host of a provocative Web site, teaches his students about the modern adaptations of Shakespeare, often focusing on a growing number of porn flicks invoking the Bard.

Click to continue...

Expect justice from a system that even considers animals equivalent to you?

Duh?

Weld & Cellucci's Liberal Legacy

Massachusetts: Another "First" in Depravity

Public Sex OK'd For Massachusetts

New rules alter line drawn on public sex

By Andrea Estes, Globe Staff, 3/2/2001

Massachusetts State Police will not automatically roust people meeting at roadside rest areas - even people believed to be engaging in sexual activity, according to new guidelines disclosed yesterday

Click to continue...

Virginia Homosexuals Demand Legalization of Sex With Strangers in Public Parks

By Jim Duke, AFR Newsand & Jim Brown, Agape Press
September 13, 2000

Copulation "Dance" Kids Train for Brave New World

by Michelle Malkin
2/21/01

Freedom and 'the freak'

...Teen-age and pre-teen girls on their hands and knees, sandwiched between gyrating boys positioned at their backs and faces. Boys behind girls, girls on top of girls.

We're not just talking Elvis-type bumping or Lambada-style grinding. We're talking hard-core, pelvis-to-pelvis contact and X-rated, front-to-back thrusting. The freak is simply simulated intercourse without even the pretense of dance.

Click to continue...

U.K. Gay Groups Seek To Legalise Sex In Public Lavatories, Elsewhere

Condemns Christianity

By Philip Johnston, Home Affairs Editor
London Telegraph ISS.
1722 11 Feb. 2000

Is a dog a pet or property? Supreme Court hears debate

By DENNIS CHAPTMAN

of the Journal Sentinel
staff Feb. 28, 2001

Madison - Wisconsin's highest court grappled Wednesday with the question of whether pet pooches are simply property, or whether they should be treated like relatives in the eyes of the law. Click to continue...

Cop Pedophilia OK in Nevada

Where's justice for predator?

WorldNetDaily 2/16/2001 between the lines Joseph Farah

It has been a month since I wrote a column about Vinten Hartung, a Las Vegas police detective who chased a teen-age boy around, lured him with alcohol and then turned him into his personal sex toy.

Click to continue...

Sex In Public: Ban May Go

by Michael Clarke, Home Affairs Correspondent,

(AgapePress) - A three-judge panel of the Virginia Court of Appeals heard arguments from attorneys on behalf of ten men who were arrested for violating the state law against sodomy. According to the Family Policy Network, the ten plaintiffs each attempted to solicit sex from undercover police officers in a Roanoke local park. Click to continue...

What Crime Of Hate and Anger?

by David Morrison
(author, editor and former gay activist)
NY Post, November 6,
1998

The recent tragic death of Matthew Shepard, a 21-year-old University of Wyoming student, has brought to light one of contemporary America's little acknowledged realities: Some men seek sexual release with other men in public or semi-public venues and sometimes get hurt or arrested for their trouble.

Newsweek magazine reported that Shepard, who may (or may not) have left that bar with the expectation of having sex with one or both of his assailants in a public venue, had tried to do something similar on at least one other occasion.

MPs cut homosexual age of consent to 16.

CAMPAIGNERS pressing for the age of consent for homosexuals to be reduced to 16 have set out an agenda for future reforms that would legalise gay sex in saunas, public lavatories and "cruising" areas.

They have made clear that yesterday's Bill to equalise the ages of consent for homosexual and heterosexual acts is only the start of a concerted effort to remove all legislative restrictions upon homosexual activity and relationships. A submission to the Home Office by the organisation OutRage, led by Peter Tatchell, says: "We do not believe that consensual actions between adults, no matter how bizarre they might Click to continue...

	Daily Mail (U.K.) Couples, both heterosexual and homosexual, will be allowed to have sex in public places under controversial proposals to be unveiled by the Home Office this week. Click to continue...	According to Newsweek, Shepard had been very forward last summer with a bartender at a lakeside in Cody, Wyoming. Shepard persisted in asking the man "walk around the lake with him" until, according to the report, the man "lost patience" and slugged him, knocking him temporarily unconscious. Click to continue...
--	--	---	--

Embedded Secure Document

The file <http://www.cathfam.org/CreatingGayChildren.pdf> is a secure document that has been embedded in this document. Double click the pushpin to view.

Chapter Ten

CLOSING THOUGHTSThe Danger of “Gay Rights”

Scott Lively

I am writing this conclusion to the third edition on the same day that President Bill Clinton has called for “hate crimes” legislation based on “sexual orientation” (code words for homosexuality). A few days ago, in an act unprecedented in the history of the presidency, Mr. Clinton aligned himself with the homosexual cause at a fund-raiser for the Human Rights Campaign Fund, the “gay” movement’s largest political action committee. Knowing what it cost this president in 1993 to endorse “gays in the military,” I am wondering what “gay” leaders might have promised the president in exchange for this new endorsement. Or can it be that public perception of the “gay” movement has changed so much that the Clinton administration (notorious for its reliance on polls and “focus groups”) has decided that it is now safe for the president to identify himself and his office with the “gay” political agenda.

This question has personal significance for me, since I was one of the few people to publicly challenge then-candidate Clinton on his support for “gay” is sued during his first run for presidential office. In response to my questions during a live Town Hall television program (simulcast from Seattle, Washington and Portland, Oregon), Mr. Clinton said he was against promoting homosexuality as a valid, alternative lifestyle to young people. At that time he also affirmed the right of the Boy Scouts to exclude “gay” scout leaders.

I raise this issue to contrast the benign public image of “gays” with the face of the “gay” movement that we have seen in these pages. Those whose perceptions of the “gay” movement have been shaped primarily by the popular media may find President Clinton’s pro-“gay” political actions appropriate, even laudable. Such people have been persuaded that “gays” are society’s victims in need of protection. But the “gay” movement I have seen and investigated is neither benign, nor are its members “victims.” It is vicious, deceptive and enormously powerful. Its philosophy is Machiavellian and its tactics are (literally) Hitlerian.

What explains the dichotomy of perspectives on the “gay” movement? If any of the facts in this book are true, then the image of the “gay” movement Bill Clinton and other pro-“gay” opinion makers would like you to accept cannot be true. Are typical heterosexual supporters of “gay rights” simply unconcerned about the association of homosexuality with personal and societal dysfunction and violence? Or have these presumably well-intentioned people been denied complete information?

I have always been cautious of the word conspiracy, yet this is the word which best describes how the “gate keepers” of American popular culture have helped to shape public opinion on this issue. The truth about homosexuality and the Nazi Party (indeed most information that might reflect negatively on the “gay” movement) appears to have been deliberately suppressed. We know that so-called “gay rights” has become a virtual cause celebre among the self-styled cultural elites in government, academia and the news and entertainment media. Over fifty years ago Samuel Igra also observed that homosexuality “had become a veritable cult among the ruling classes” in Germany prior to the rise of Hitler. I have come to believe that America's cultural elitists, perceiving themselves to be the moral arbiters of our society and the protectors of “gays,” have used their power and their positions to protect and shield the “gay” movement from all unfavorable publicity. More than this, they have colluded to promote an image of “gays” as sterling citizens.

When I initially learned the truths set forth in this book, I was first astonished and then angered. Why had this information never surfaced during the many months in which the Oregon campaign to stop the “gay” agenda was continually being compared (in the local and national media) to the Nazi regime? The information is certainly not hidden. Any one with the most basic research skills could easily find many of the two hundred-odd sources we have cited in this book. Are we to believe that the hundreds of trained journalists, college professors and politicians who helped guide the debate on that campaign (and many similar events) failed to discover any of these sources? We must assume that at least some of these professionals knew of these facts but decided not to inform the public. At best this represents an appalling level of arrogance (allowing that they might have disregarded these facts as not credible — denying “common” people the right to make up their own minds). The more plausible (and more frightening) conclusion is that the facts were withheld because of their likely negative impact on the “gay” movement.

“Gay” political power derives in large part from the public perception that homosexuals are victims. As Kirk and Pill so baldly admitted in The Overhauling of Straight America, “gays must be cast as victims in need of protection so that straights will be inclined by reflex to assume the role of protector.” What would happen to the protective instinct of Americans if they knew that many of the worst villains of the Third Reich were “gay”? How closely would America scrutinize the “gay” agenda if “homosexualism” were revealed as the very foundation of Nazism? (And I believe the movement would not survive such scrutiny). The evidence points to a conspiracy of silence — a nearly universal self-censorship by the same opinion-makers who mock conspiracy theories and decry any form of censorship.

If the facts in this book are true, and if it is also true that the “gatekeepers” of our public information are deliberately keeping these facts from us, can we hope to educate our fellow citizens before the “gay agenda” plunges this nation into social chaos? The outcome is uncertain. Surely, however, there have been times in the past when the inevitable repetitions of history were derailed by a few warning voices. It is our hope that the facts we have presented here will penetrate the fog of media-sponsored misinformation and “political correctness.”

Have we exaggerated the urgency of our task? I think not. The future of America, indeed of civilization itself, depends upon the preservation of the natural family — God’s model for effective human society and the training ground for healthy human relationships. Yet the goal of the “gay” movement is the devaluation of the Judeo-Christian sexual ethic (monogamous heterosexual family-centered marriage) and its replacement with a “gay” affirming pagan alternative.

The “gay” movement in America (as contrasted with the German version) is different in style but not in substance. It remains characteristically selfish and hedonistic, but more importantly it continues to be defined by what it is against: Judeo-Christian family-based society. This “gay” vision for America is best defined in a widely circulated satirical essay written by a homosexualist under the pseudonym “Michael Swift” (probably to remind us of the political satire of Jonathan Swift. Although the writer intends to discredit this view of the homosexual agenda, its very eloquence (in the context of our study) belies this attempt. Echoing from the ancient Spartan culture, from the Teutons, from the Knights Templar, from the SA under Ernst Röhm, and now from the American “gay rights” movement comes this, our final glimpse into the fascist heart of homosexuality:

This essay is outrage, madness, a tragic, cruel fantasy, an eruption of inner rage, on how the oppressed dream of being the oppressor.

We shall sodomize your sons, emblems of your feeble masculinity, of your shallow dreams and vulgar lies. We shall seduce them in your schools [Project 10], in your dormitories [forced homosexual roommates], in your gymnasiums, in your locker rooms, in your sports arenas, in your seminaries, in your youth groups [Wandervoegel, Boy Scouts], in your movie theater bathrooms, in your army bunk houses [“gays in the military”], in your truck stops, in your all-male clubs, in your houses of Congress, wherever men are with men together. Your sons will become our minions and do our bidding. They will be recast in our image. They will come to crave and adore us.

Women, you cry for your freedom. You say you are no longer satisfied with men; they make you unhappy [radical feminism, lesbian separatist movement]. We, connoisseurs of the masculine face, the masculine physique, shall take your men from you then. We will amuse them; we will embrace them when they weep. Women, you say you wish to live with each other instead of men. Then go ahead and be with each other. We shall give your men pleasures they have never known because we are foremost men too and only one man knows how to truly please another man; only one man can understand with depth and feeling the mind and body of another man.

All laws banning homosexuality will be revoked

[anti-discrimination ordinances, minority status based on homosexuality]. Instead, legislation shall be passed which engenders love between men [graphic “pro-gay” sex and AIDS education, mandatory “sensitivity training,”].

All homosexuals must stand together as brothers; we must be united artistically, philosophically, socially, politically and financially [the multi-faceted and powerful “gay rights” movement]. We will triumph only when we present a common face to the vicious heterosexual enemy [suppression of internecine conflicts and other negative information about homosexuals by the homosexualist dominated media].

If you dare to cry fag got, fairy, queer, at us, we will stab you in your cowardly hearts and defile your dead puny bodies [“hate crimes,” speech codes, fines].

We shall write poems of the love between men; we shall stage plays in which man openly caresses man [the play Bent and a multitude of others; the lesbian counterpart in the television show, Ellen]; we will make films about the love between heroic men which will replace the cheap, superficial, sentimental, insipid, juvenile, heterosexual infatuations presently dominating your cinema screens [Hollywood promotion of homosexual “love-making” and of the “gay rights” agenda in movies and television]. We shall sculpt statues of beautiful young men, of bold athletes which will be placed in your parks, your squares, your plazas [public funding of homosexual pornography by the National Endowment for the Arts, National Public Broadcasting Service]. The museums of the world will be filled only with the paintings of graceful, naked lads.

Our writers will make love between men fashionable and de rigeur, and we will succeed because we are adept at setting styles [invention of “gay-speak” — “gay,” “homophobia,” “diversity,” “sexual orientation”]. We will eliminate heterosexual liaisons through usage of the devices of wit and ridicule which we are skilled in employing.

We will unmask the powerful homosexuals who masquerade as heterosexuals [outing]. You will be shocked and frightened when you learn that your presidents and their sons, your industrialists, your senators, your mayors, your generals, your athletes, your film stars, your television personalities, your civic leaders, your priests are not the safe, familiar bourgeois, heterosexual figures you assumed them to be. We are everywhere [a commonly used bumper-sticker]; we have infiltrated your ranks [strategic “surprise” announcements by “conservative” homosexuals, e.g. Mel White, former ghostwriter for Christian leaders]. Be careful when you speak of homosexuals because we are always among you; we may be sitting across the desk from you; we may be sleeping in the same bed with you.

There will be no compromises. We are not middle class weaklings. Highly intelligent, we are the natural aristocrats of the human race, and steely-minded aristocrats never settle for less [Brand/Friedlander, Fuehrer principle]. Those who oppose us will be exiled [the “Fems”].

We shall raise vast, private armies, as Mishima did, to defeat you [Rossbach and Roehm, Frederick the Great]. We shall conquer the world because warriors inspired by and banded together by homosexual love and honor are invincible as were the ancient Greek soldiers [Plato's Banquet].

The family unit — spawning ground of lies, betrayals, mediocrity, hypocrisy and violence — will be abolished [homosexual “marriage” and adoption]. The family unit, which only dampens imagination and curbs free will, must be eliminated [Plato's Republic]. Perfect boys will be conceived and grown in the genetic laboratory. They will be bonded together in communal setting, under the control and instruction of homosexual savants [Sparta].

All churches who condemn us will be closed [attacks on the McIlhennys, St. Patrick's Cathedral]. Our only gods are handsome young men. We adhere to a cult of beauty, moral and aesthetic. All that is ugly and vulgar and banal will be annihilated [Kummerlings]. Since we are alienated from middle-class heterosexual conventions, we are free to live our lives according to the dictates of the pure imagination [Nietzsche, Hitler]. For us too much is not enough.

The exquisite society to emerge will be governed by an elite comprised of gay poets [Adolf Brand, Stefan George, Plato's "philosopher-kings"]. One of the major requirements for a position of power in the new society will be indulgence in the Greek passion [pederasty]. Any man contaminated with heterosexual lust will be automatically barred from a position of influence [SA leadership]. All males who insist on remaining stupidly heterosexual will be tried in homosexual courts of justice and will become invisible men.

We shall rewrite history [Holocaust revisionism, extravagant claims that historical figures (like Lincoln) were homosexual], history filled and debased with your heterosexual lies and distortions. We shall portray the homosexuality of great leaders and thinkers who have shaped the world. We will demonstrate that homosexuality and intelligence and imagination are inextricably linked, and that homosexuality is a requirement for true nobility, true beauty in a man [Hans Blueher].

We shall be victorious because we are filled with the ferocious bitterness of the oppressed who have been forced to play seemingly bit parts in your dumb, heterosexual shows throughout the ages [victim-plunder strategy]. We too are capable of firing guns and manning the barricades of the ultimate revolution [ACT-UP, Queer Nation, blood terrorism].

Tremble, hetero swine, when we appear before you without our masks.

(By Michael Swift, "Gay Revolutionary." Reprinted from The Congressional Record. First printed in Gay Community News, February 15-21, 1987).

B" H

The Final Word

Kevin E. Abrams

“The foundation of any ‘human’ civilization is a moral and healthy sexual constitution, everything else is window-dressing.”

The Jerusalem Post, May 21, 1996

After we learn of the role “gays” played in the National Socialist movement, the Nazi attitude towards homosexuality may still seem contradictory and confusing, a riddle only partially solved. We may still wonder, if so many of the leading Nazis were “gay,” why they would target homosexuals for incarceration or extermination as today’s “gay” activists claim. How can today’s “gays,” who express so little regard for Biblical ethics, now portray themselves as joint victims with the very Jews who suffered persecution and virtual extermination at the hands of the largely “gay” Nazis? How do the official Nazi invectives against homosexuality reconcile with the fact that “gays” held key positions in the Nazi government throughout its despotic reign, inclusive of the Holocaust. Were the Nazis then victims of their own persecution?

And why are we so compellingly urged by the Left to sanction “gay rights,” when, as the wide spectrum of “gay” and non-“gay” sources listed in this book’s bibliography incontrovertibly show, Germany’s militant “gays” were largely responsible for propelling Hitler into the Chancellor’s office? And now, knowing the extent to which German “gays” contributed to the success of the Nazi movement, how should we interpret a looming “gay” swastika over America?

Spiritual Truth

Jewish scholar Rabbi Samson Raphael Hirsch who lived in the last century, is remembered for his most profound and extensive treatise on Torah philosophy. HOREB, meaning Sinai (the mountain where the original Torah was given by God and received by Moses), was written and published as a refutation to the Jewish pretensions of the German Reform Religion, which, today, is at the forefront of the movement to promote “gay rights” in America’s Jewish community and within Israel. In opposition to both natural and Divine law, Reform has ordained lesbians as “rabbis” and sanctioned “gay” unions. “Gay” Jews have also imposed themselves on the Holocaust, cynically and pragmatically exploiting the deaths of six million Jewish men, women and children as a dramatic metaphor to portray themselves as victims, as if Hitler had targeted Jewish homosexuals primarily because they were “gay.” But what of the truth in his story?

From an ethical monotheistic perspective, Rabbi Hirsch points out in the following excerpt from HOREB, how it is the primary concern and duty of each of us to guard the dignity of our fellow man:

God, who created man to be just, that is to say, to leave and give to all entities in all their relations that which is their due, has also endowed his mind with the faculty of mirroring the reality of things in their various relations so that man may be able to perceive the entities and their relations, and, on the strength of this knowledge, give to them what the teachings of justice lay down as their right.

This reproduction of reality in the mind is truth. Truth therefore, is a precondition of justice; for only according to the image of the things and their relations which appears in man’s mind can man be have towards them; if this image be false, his behavior will be different from what is due to them: he becomes unjust. And thus, if nothing else, justice itself - which is our Divine calling - will guarantee that, as far as that calling of our demands, we shall be able to perceive the reality of external things from their reflection within ourselves.

God has knitted together the community of man with the vital thread of love, and has ordained that man should rely on his brother for the spiritual good - namely, truth. But he who, instead of truthfully expressing in words what he has experienced to be real, communicates a false image of it to his brother, who accepts it and bases his behavior on it - either being unjust to his fellow-creatures or, having a wrong conception of their intentions towards him, being destroyed by them - that man turns into a curse that supreme blessing of the Creator; for he who denies truth to his brother, thus violating the highest duty towards him which God has imposed, calls down a curse - he who lies calls down a curse. And as material property is valuable only as a means for a life devoted to justice, and the liar steals the first condition of that justice - namely, truth, and gives falsehood in exchange, thus giving birth to injustice, the liar is even more dangerous than the thief.

The thief takes only the means of life as such, while the liar takes those of a just life, producing, in turn, injustice - and misery. For just as God links the supreme good, justice, to truth, so does He do the same with regard to the minor good, happiness. For to appreciate the nature of things you rely on your knowledge of them; and if somebody deceives you about their true nature, he robs you of a support or causes you to lean on a support that is insecure. And by stealing from another directly something precious - truth - and so indirectly the most precious thing - justice - the liar also kills himself spiritually; for he extinguishes in himself that Divine spark which alone makes of him a human being created for the benefit of his fellow-men (Hirsch:248ff). [And what of "gay rights?" Never have so few taken so much from so many.]

Who were the Nazis?

We must recognize who the Nazis were. Ideologically, the Nazis were pragmatic, technocratic, tribal pagan utilitarians. They viewed human life with a detached and cynical pragmatism. They exploited whomever and whatever they could to achieve their political and military goals. Typically, the Nazis approached such issues as euthanasia, homosexuality and abortion with a ruthless expedience. Sterilization and abortion were preferred for anyone classified as inferior or defective (but never for healthy Aryans).

To the technocratic Nazi mind truth was dictated by the necessity of the moment (dealing thus in lies they brought a curse upon themselves and all they touched). “Defectives” were euthanized and inferiors sterilized, while it was a crime for Aryan maidens to have abortions. While privately tolerating and even promoting homosexuality, the Nazis denounced it frequently in public using trumped-up charges of homosexuality to arrest and remove those who disagreed with Hitler’s military and political goals. Former neo-Nazi Ingo Hasselbach, in his revealing 1996 book, Fuhrer-Ex, confirms how the utilitarian Nazi double standard was applied in other areas: “Opposition to abortion had been one of the consistent planks in the Nazi platform since the Movement’s beginnings in the 1920s, and for a simple reason: abortion was race murder. While permissible, even desirable, among the colored women and Jews of the world, among Aryans it was the ultimate sin” (Hasselbach: 111).

The Nazi version of racial eugenics evolved into the key political and military platform of the Nazi Party, which enabled the Nazis to portray the Jewish people as a defective and inferior class, along with the physically deformed and other non-productive members of German society. In effect, however, the Nazis simply projected their own depravities upon the Jewish people, demonized and dehumanized them, and then used them as scapegoats as they them selves pro ceed ed to plun der the world. Nazi ra cial the o ries served as a pre text to jus tify the elim i na tion of a peo ple whose deeper “offense” was its com mitment to an un yield ing moral stan dard.

As Pro fes sor Giora Shoham ex plains in his book, Val-halla, Cal vary & Auschwitz, the Na zis, like to day’s “gays,” “longed to shed the normative constraints of Judaeo-Christian law and mor als and to re turn to the amoral irresponsibility of their pa gan ism. They re sented the Jews, who symbolized to them the imposition of restraints on their he do nis tic pa gan ism.... When this sense of law and jus tice is rejected, the tribal chieftain, [and homoerotic war rior] reigns supreme. Thus, the se parant power of Odin knew no limits; consequently, the omnipotence of Adolf Hitler, der Fuehrer, rec og nized no bound aries of law, moral ity or mercy” (Shoham:27).

Increasingly, as they emerge from the closet, today’s “gays” do bear a strik ing re sem blance to yes ter day’s Na zis.

Left-R ight Polarities

To un der stand the pa gan mind in this con text we must rec og nize the truth about left-right po lar i ties in the po lit i cal sphere. With minor discrepancies, all left-wing ide ology can be iden ti fied as “re gres sive,” and right-wing ide ology as “pro gres sive.” Left-wing regressive in cite mu tual plun der, en cour age de pend ency and prag mat i cally as pire to the lowest com mon de nom i na tor. Gen uine right-wing pro gres sive con serv a tives en cour age cre ativ ity, in spire mu tual af firmation, trust and human productivity. By nature, all so cial ism falls on the re gres sive side, in that “so cial ism,” is simply a po lit i cal ide ology which of ten lacks a true sense of so cial jus tice. Evil dis guises it self as vir tue (e.g., the goal of ra cial pu rity) be cause it has no life of its own (which is why sad bond age wishes to be known as “gay lib er a tion.”)

Gen er ally, ad her ents of the Left fail to do what is necessary to guard the dignity of their fellow man. A left-leaning historian, for instance, would fatalistically argue that “history” repeats itself, while a conservative like Voltaire could observe correctly how it is instead “man who always repeats himself.” No wonder left-regressives can not learn from history. If history just “happens” then little can be learned from it or done to prevent it from happening again. Basing one’s decisions on a revised, corrupted or inverted version of history, however, is another matter. Some of man’s worst follies are committed because of erroneous or falsified information.

In trying to understand the Nazi phenomenon we often ask ourselves how a gang of murdering thugs could have seized power in such a civilized nation? The truth is that Germany during the Weimar period was one of the most uncivilized nations in the world. Hitler himself referred to Berlin as the whore of Babylon. We consistently err in judging the advancement of human civilizations on the basis of art and technology. The Nazis loved classical music, and they were astute in the use of science and technology. The question we must ask about every society is, to what end is human culture employed? For left-wing regressives, culture serves destruction and death. For right-wing progressives, culture focuses upon life.

A positive and utilitarian attitude toward homosexuality, euthanasia and abortion would therefore (then as now) be a left-wing regressive orientation, and a typical Nazi profile (with very specific contradictions and qualifications). It bears repeating that the Nazis were first and foremost technocratic, utilitarian pragmatists who believed in the survival of the fittest and the societal goals of physical beauty and racial perfection, Aryans being the “fit test” and most perfected, and Jews the least “fit” and least perfect. In truth, racial characteristics are irrelevant. Only the morality of individuals and nations can determine whether they are civilized or barbarians -- builders or plunderers.

How do homosexuals fit into this picture? Although Nazi rhetoric listed homosexuals among the unfit, the Nazis never targeted homosexuals for destruction. To the contrary, unless the homosexual in question was Jewish, or a political enemy, the Nazi organization was often protective of homosexuals. Originally, the SS was founded for precisely the purpose of protecting Viennese homosexuals. The Nazis actually attempted to cure homosexuals at the Goering Institute, albeit in many ways which proved futile. (forcing a gender-weak frightened male to sleep with a female prostitute proved ineffective). “Gay” rights activists often take Nazi propaganda against homosexuals and regurgitate it as historical truth. Nazi and “gay” historical revisionism, with their inversion of history and civilized values, are one. In today’s “gay” victim strategy, the perpetrator is posing as the victim.

Fifth Columns

In their quest for power, Nazi homosexuals were no different from today’s “gays.” Then, as now, the strategy was one of deception, infiltration and subversion. Our study of “gay” history reveals how Nazi “gays,” both historically and to day, act as subversive fifth columns in their host communities, preparing the way for “gay” Nazi power while overtly and covertly spreading anti-“gay” propaganda in an attempt to veil their own goals. The Pink Swastika documents how top French and British Nazis were “gays” and that American Nazi Frank Collin, who led the 1977 march on Skokie Illinois, was a “gay” pederast. So what of so-called ‘liberty?’”

The idea of liberty held by modern liberals is quite new. According to them, liberty connotes a radical individualism that rejects all social norms and institutions which the individual has not agreed to. Subscribers to this idea defend the right of Nazis (who themselves despise the idea of rights) to march through Skokie, Illinois, but not the right of Skokians and their elected leaders to maintain order and defend the dignity of the principles and customs they hold most dear. Likewise, they support the right of homosexuals and atheists to invade and destroy the Boy Scouts.

In Nazi history, failed fifth column sedition activities in target nations are recorded in the October 12, 1937 The New York Times in bold headlines reading, "Czech Nazi Official Is Seized by Police." The Prague dispatch quoted in the Times reports "a major political sensation caused by the arrest, under the criminal code 'dealing with homosexuality,' of Hans Rutha, a high official in the country's camouflaged Nazi Party." And from October 17, 1937, further headlines read, "14 members of Czech Nazi Party Held for Morals Offences," identifying Rutha, as the "'right hand man' of the Nazi Party Chief," i.e., as "gay" Ernst Roehm was to Hitler. On December 3, headlines report, "Members of Youth Organization Face Homosexual Charges." And on December 10, 1937, a Times story from Prague announces that "fourteen Czechs, all the accused, had received 'suspended sentences' after trial on homosexual charges" (J. Katz:553f).

Despite such random clues, the world of that day was duped. Left-regressive, self-identified lesbian, Gertrude Stein, felt that Hitler should have received the Nobel Peace prize in 1937. Apparently, Britain's Prime Minister, Neville Chamberlain, also thought Hitler could be bribed to honor peace with the September 30, 1938 Munich agreement. His payment was Czechoslovakia, but "peace in our time" only cleared the way for Hitler's invasion of Poland on September 1, 1939. History shows that militant "gay" efforts of ten produce a result that is any thing but peaceful. Further, while individual "gays" may "come out of the closet" for various reasons, their agenda and the truth about the depth of their infiltration of powerful institutions, remains hidden. We can also learn from the Nazis' vic tims that bribery never satisfies extortionists. They always come back for more, which is why (in our day) demands for “rights” have no end. Each capitulation of American society to “gay” demands draws increasing demands, which will continue until they destroy the institutions which support society, including the homosexuals themselves.

The age of AIDS has launched “gay” activism into full gear. As the liberal dogma would have it, no one is responsible for AIDS; it just happens. Taking its cue from no-fault divorce and no-fault insurance, the Left has also created the concept of no-fault utilitarian sex. British occultist and Satanist, Aleister Crowley sums it up: “do what thou wilt, shall be the whole of the law.” But “do what thou wilt” is no law at all! Crowley’s maxim is in reality a negation of all natural and spiritual law; it only promotes chaos and a left-wing regressive descent into oblivion and non-existence. His maxim reflects a complete lack of concern and respect for the dignity of his fellow man and a contempt for life.

“Gay” Sedition

“Gay” strategists choose to employ the biological model of homosexuality for the dual purpose of denying choice and escaping responsibility. In calling for research into a so-called “gay” gene, their purpose was never to cure or rectify, but to justify homosexual conduct and the homosexual identity. “Gays” correctly reason that if sexual behavior is a choice, it carries with it both responsibility and accountability. Their insistence that homosexuality is “not a choice” functions to bring ever more recruits into the “gay” fold and keep them there by discouraging them from seeking change. For many of today’s young men, their ability to choose has been hijacked by a sophisticated program of psychosexual sedition and manipulation, largely sustained by the social weaknesses of our time.

To limit the animating source for human behavior to the brain and animal instinct (as many of today's behavioral scientists do) is both reductionist and left-wing regressive. Human motives and actions are, to a significant extent, determined by the vastly greater non-physical aspects of human existence. Inclinations are non-physical, and behavior causes physical change. (Planting the seed of human life in the passage designed for the expulsion of waste not only causes disease, but also exerts a destructive force upon the individual soul and on the value of all human life).

"Gays" have forgotten that responsibility for personal conduct goes hand-in-hand with our personal dignity and authority. Realistically, we can never dignify something which is profoundly undignified, no matter how hard we strive to. This brings us to another seditious element of "gay" culture, pornography. Dr. Judith Reisman, co-author of Kinsey Sex & Fraud and Founder of the Washington based Institute for Media Education, is an expert on the impact of pornography on society. During a lengthy private conversation, Dr. Reisman asserted that "all pornography promotes homosexuality." I have pondered her comment many times since then, and have come to see its correctness. In her 1994 analysis, Kinsey, Hefner & Hay, The Indoctri nation of Heterophobia in American Men & Women, Dr. Reisman explains;

Pragmatically, Playboy (that is, all pornography) manifests a blatant homosexual ethos. Its heterophobia is sustained by an utilitarian analysis of Playboy images and philosophy. It is not too much to say, that just as the imagery of stained glass windows and holy cards once initiated, instructed and indoctrinated potential adherents in a religious faith, the didactic images in "soft" and "hard" pornography similarly initiate, instruct and indoctrinate potential believers in the tenets of its religion, its homosexual morality. Hugh Hefner took great pains to write his own bible; he called it the "Playboy Philosophy." And on this note, it is well accepted that “Alfred Kinsey...gave Hefner the research base for the “Playboy Philosophy.”...In fact Kinsey can properly be identified along with his supporters and co-workers, as the one most responsible for justifying the kind of behavior which led to AIDS, and more than Harry Hay, the real father of American’s homoerotic revolution (Reisman, 1994:7f). [In reality, pornography expresses a vicious hatred and contempt for the dignity of all men in that it treats men as nothing more than an appendage to be manipulated by the twisting and exploitation of female sexuality.]

Sons of Oedipus

Clinical research concludes that the target of human sexual affections is not predetermined at birth, but conditioned by a combination of environmental and sociological factors. It would be helpful to turn back to the “Oedipus complex,” to present a psychosexual model for the roots of homoerotic attraction. [Oedipus was the legendary figure who killed his father and married his mother.]

Although “gay” research mocks and rejects the validity of this Freudian construct, the idea offers helpful insight into the complex structure and development of the homosexualities. The classic Oedipus complex may be defined as a lust-hate demeanor towards the mother and an irreconcilable combination of longing and contempt for the father. In the words of Dr. Joseph Nicolosi, Homosexuality is a developmental problem that is almost always the result of problems in family relations, particularly between father and son. As a result of failure with father, the boy does not fully internalize male gender-identity, and develops homosexuality. This is the most commonly seen clinical model (Nicolosi, 1991:25).

Analyst Peter Loewenberg in The Nazi Revolution, Hitler's Dictatorship and the German Nation, writes, "Boys who become homosexuals are often those who were left alone with their mothers and formed an intimate attachment to them that was unmediated by the father's presence and protection."

The regressive promotion of an androgynous culture advances an equality in which gender distinctions, roles and identity are blurred and inverted. This leads to a loss of healthy self-identity. Paradoxically, the freedom of choice being offered by liberal left-regressive social theorists to today's youth destroys a child's ability to choose. In a similar vein, radical feminism actually destroys femininity while emasculating males, and socialism destroys social justice. By robbing our children of their ability to conduct themselves morally, today's left-wing regressives are grooming a new generation of potential Nazis.

Today, while chronic homoerotic behavior is limited to a small percentage of the population, its roots (either deficiencies in psychic gender patterning, or deviance initiated by adult-child sexual abuse) may be more widespread. Clinical studies reveal that the sexualization of a search for masculinity is the genesis of homoerotic attraction. It follows that the current generation of fatherless youth may be prime candidates for homosexual recruitment. And the same amoral thinking which allows them to consider homosexuality as a "normal" option may also make them dangerously susceptible to the next Hitler. It is no accident that Hitler and his cronies came to power on the backs of emasculated German male youth.

Akhtar's Metaphor -- A New Beginning

A primary goal of any people striving to maintain a civilized human society must be to prepare our children to become reliable and loyal husbands and wives and competent fathers and mothers. There is nothing in the world a young man wishes to do more than to be able to love, admire and respect his father. This vision can only be fully realized in the context of a healthy natural family.

There are two primary obligations which the parent has toward his children: to instill in them a moral and healthy sexual constitution and to ensure they are equipped with an honest and productive way of providing for themselves and their families. These two personal assets enable any person to live life as a dignified human being. The parents' obligation, therefore, is to guard the dignity of their children. Conversely, the Biblical injunction contained within the principle of the family is for the children to guard the dignity of their parents. If we kept this in mind, many families could be reunited and divisions resolved. Our challenge is to repair America's soul before the body perishes.

Dr. Salman Akhtar's book, Broken Structures, offers a metaphor for healing the broken person which is also applicable to the mending of a nation. Teaching a course on character pathology to a class of clinical psychology interns, Dr. Akhtar was asked if a severely disturbed client could ever be so completely healed by psychotherapy that he would be indistinguishable from a person who had always been well-adjusted. From the book Broken Structures in which Dr. Akhtar tells "The Parable of Two Flower Vases," I will conclude with his words:

I thought for a moment. Then, prompted by an inner voice, I spontaneously came up with the following answer. Well, let us suppose that there are two flower vases made of fine china. Both are intricately carved and of comparable value, elegance, and beauty. Then a wind blows and one of them falls from its stand, and is broken into pieces. An expert from a distant land is called. Painstakingly, step by step, the expert glues the pieces back together. Soon the broken vase is intact again, can hold water without leaking, is unblemished to all who see it.

Yet this vase is now different from the other one. The lines along which it had broken, a subtle reminder of yesterday, will always remain discernible to an experienced eye. However, it will have a certain wisdom since it knows something that the vase that has never been broken does not: it knows what it is to break and what it is to come together .

Kevin E. Abrams
November 14, 1997

Re viewers Praise The Pink Swas tika

“The Pink Swastika: Homosexuality in the Nazi Party is a thoroughly researched, eminently readable, demolition of the “gay” myth, symbolized by the pink triangle, that the Nazis were anti-homosexual. The deep roots of homosexuality in the Nazi party are brilliantly exposed . . .”

Dr. Howard Hurwitz, Family Defense Council

“As a Jewish scholar who lost hundreds of her family in the Holocaust, I welcome The Pink Swas tika as courageous and timely . . . Lively and Abrams reveal the reigning “gay history” as revisionist and expose the supermale German homosexuals for what they were - Nazi brutes, not Nazi victims.”

Dr. Judith Reisman, Institute for Media Education

“The Pink Swastika is a tremendously valuable book, replete with impressive documentation presented in a compelling fashion.”

William Grigg, The New American

“...exposes numerous lies, and tears away many myths. Essential reading, it is a formidable boulder cast into the path of the onrushing homosexual express...”

Stan Goodenough, Middle East Intelligence Digest

“The Pink Swastika is a powerful exposure of pre-World War II Germany and its quest for reviving and imitating a Hellenistic-paganistic idea of homo-eroticism and militarism.”

Dr. Mordechai Nisan, Hebrew University of Jerusalem

“Lively and Abrams call attention to what Hitlerism really stood for, abortion, euthanasia, hatred of Jews, and, very emphatically, homosexuality. This many of us knew in the 1930's; it was common knowledge, but now it is denied...”

R. J. Rushdoony, The Chalcedon Report

“...a treasury of knowledge for anyone who wants to know what really happened during the Jewish Holocaust...”

Norman Saville, News of All Israel

“...Scott Lively and Kevin Abrams have done America a great service...”

Col. Ronald Ray, Former U.S. Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense

“A landmark book for those who have trouble understanding Hitler, the Holocaust...Previous books and movies, however high their quality, have left me mystified as to how the Nazi leaders could have done the things they did. This short book gets closer to the truth than anything I know of.”

John Hully, Former Senior Economist, the World Bank

“...unusually informative and thought provoking...”

Langdon Mustell, Attorney

“A well researched book. The central theme that the Nazi movement was riddled with homosexuality is certainly true.”

Hillmar von Campe, Historian, Halle, Germany

“This is one for your personal library. No doubt you will, at some time, be confronted with the myth of the persecution of homosexuals by the Nazis. Be ready with the facts.”

Paul De Parrie, Life Advocate

“Excellent book! This book gives ample evidence that the sexual perversion of homosexuality easily lends itself to authoritarian impulses....The underlying theme is that when a society accepts a moral relativistic philosophy (leading to acceptance of homosexuality) it could very well lead to the eventual destruction of...constitutional rights..”

Steve Baldwin, Executive Director, Council for National Policy

The Pink Swastika

Ho mo sexu al ity in the Nazi Party

Scott Lively and Kevin Abrams

Published by Veritas Aeterna Press
PO Box 3691, Sacramento, California.
Ordering inquiries call 1-800-834-1508 or visit www.abidingtruth.com

First Edition Published July, 1995
Fourth Edition Published January, 2002

Copyright 2002 by Scott Lively and Kevin E. Abrams. All rights reserved.

Cover design by Noah Lively

Fourth Edition 0123456789

ISBN 0-9647609-7-5

Table of Contents

PRELIMINARIES ... 3

- Pref ace to the Fourth Edi tion 3
- Fore word 9
- In tro duc tion 17
- A Word to the Reader 26
- Ac knowl edg ments 27

THE HOMOSEXUAL ROOTS OF THE NAZI PARTY ... 31

- The Di vided Move ment 38
- Karl Hein rich Ulrichs 44
- Magnus Hirschfeld and the SHC 48
- The New Hel lenes 51
- The Clash of Cul tures 57
- Adolf Brand and the “Com mu nity of the Elite” 60
- The Rift Widens 67
- Hans Blueher and the Wandervoegel 70
- From Boy Scouts to Brownshirts 75
- Gerhard Rossbach and the Freikorps Move ment 82
- Ernst Roehm and the De vel op ment of the SA 87

HOMO-OCULTISM ... 95

- Ma dame Blavatsky and the Theo soph i cal So ci ety 104
- Guido von List and the Armanen Or der 108
- Jorg Lanz von Liebenfels and Ariosophy 111
- The Thule So ci ety 119

THE HOMOSEXUAL ROOTS OF FASCISM ... 129

- Friedrich Nietz sche 133
- The Cul tural Elites 135

THE FOUNDING AND EARLY YEARS
OF THE NAZI PARTY ... 143

- Hit ler’s Clique of Ped er asts 145
- Was Adolf Hit ler a Ho mo sex ual? 151
- Adolf, the Boy Pros ti tute 156
- The Bay reuth Con nec tion 159
- The Nazi Rise to Power 162
- Power and Abuse 170

THE PERSECUTION OF HOMOSEXUALS ... 177

- The Path of the Para noid 182
- The Sacking of the Sex Re search In sti tute 185
- Anti-Homosexual Pol i cies 189
- The Roehm Purge 195
- Af ter the Purge 205

- Heinrich Himmler and the SS 210
- Was Himmler a Homosexual? 214
- Reinhard Heydrich: "The Blonde Beast" 219
- The Grynspan Affair — Kristallnacht 222

HOMOSEXUALITY IN THE CONCENTRATION CAMPS ... 229

- The Guards and Kapos 233
- The Prisoners 242

THE NAZI HATRED OF JUDEO-CHRISTIAN MORALITY ... 249

- The Biblical Condemnation of Homosexuality 253
- Towards the Final Solution 255
- Homosexuality and Islamist Terrorism 269

HOMO-FASCISM AFTER HITLER ... 275

- The Fascist Roots of the American "Gay" Movement 275
- American Nazis 277
- "Gay" Nazi Skin heads 281
- Nazi Themes in "Gay" Culture 287
- Nazi Tactics in "Gay" Politics 290

THE HOMOSEXUALIZATION OF AMERICA ... 299

- Harry Hay and the Mattachine Society 301
- Alfred Kinsey and the Kinsey Institute 304
- The Sexual Revolution 307
- The Stonewall Riot and "Gay" Militancy 309
- Weimar in America 314
- Consequences 318
- Pederasty in the "Gay" Movement 320
- Scouts Under Siege 327
- Atrocities 332

CLOSING THOUGHTS ... 341

- The Danger of "Gay Rights" 341
- The Final Word 349
- Spiritual Truth 350
- Who were the Nazis? 352
- Left-Right Polarities 353
- Fifth Columns 355
- "Gay" Sedition 357
- Sons of Oedipus 359
- Akhtar's Metaphor -- A New Beginning 360

BIBLIOGRAPHY ... 363

INDEX ... 379

PRELIMINARIES

Pref ace to the Fourth E dition

When Kevin Abrams and I published the first edition of this book in 1995, we knew that it would cause controversy, contradicting as it does the common portrayal of homosexuals as exclusively victims of the Nazi regime. For this reason we were scrupulous in our documentation of homosexuals as the true inventors of Nazism and the guiding force behind many Nazi atrocities. We purposefully drew heavily upon homosexual writers and historians for our source material and used direct quotations from their writings whenever possible. The remainder of our sources are primarily mainstream historians of the Nazi era. We chose to place our citations in the text rather than in endnotes to emphasize the reliability of our sources.

Few contemporary historians, however, have weighed in, either pro or con, on the claims of this book. With some notable exceptions, the voices have instead come from ideologues on either side of the “gay rights” issue. Homosexuals and their allies (including some academics) denounce The Pink Swastika as baseless and hateful. Pro-family advocates praise it as authoritative and enlightened. We dare say that a majority of leaders on both sides of the “culture war” are familiar with this book. Yet we believe that the issues we have raised deserve broader public scrutiny and debate, especially in academia.

This fourth edition represents a renewed effort to put these issues up for debate before the American public. This edition is a dramatically expanded and strengthened volume. We have invested hundreds of additional hours in research and writing that is reflected in two new chapters and hundreds of additional citations that have been woven throughout the existing text. We have also added many helpful photographs and graphics. Our critics will note that we have considered their arguments and refined our own where appropriate.

What remains is the struggle to persuade academics and cultural leaders to address this subject, which begs the question of why have they not yet done so.

One reason, perhaps, is that The Pink Swastika addresses an aspect of Nazi history unfamiliar to most people, historians included. In deed, no one could have written The Pink Swastika who was not a student of both history and of the so-called “gay” movement. The compilation of references to homosexuality from mainstream sources, while extensive, does not in and of itself provide a complete picture of the homosexuals’ role in the rise and rule of Nazism. Only when that picture is overlaid with the work of “gay” scholars does the essential relationship between Nazism and the German “gay” movement become clear.

Ironically, a better explanation for why The Pink Swastika has been neglected is the dominance of “political correctness” in the academic realm; ironic because today’s “PC” code suppresses intellectual dissent to a degree not seen since the Third Reich. Only today, the verboten subject-matter is anything that reflects negatively on the “gay” movement.

This trend is not new. In fact, one of the most remarkable facts we uncovered in our research is the near complete dearth of references to homosexuality in the Nazi Party in books published in the United States since the end of the 1960s. Nearly all of our mainstream U.S. sources (by American writers) pre-date the 1970s, when the “gay” movement became a powerful political force in this country. However, other resources, mostly German works translated into English, have continued to enlarge our knowledge of the homosexual/Nazi connection. One important contributor is, of course, German academic Lothar Machtan, whose Hidden Hitler (2001), argues persuasively that Hitler’s secret “gay” life defined his career.

In the 1960s, Nazi homosexuality was so widely acknowledged in America (at least among the “social elites”) that the portrayal of Nazi thugs as homosexual was a frequent occurrence in Hollywood movies. One of the best examples is in Exodus (United Artists, 1960), the film adaptation of the Leon Uris novel about the creation of the State of Israel after World War II. In the film, actor Sal Mineo, playing a young man attempting to join the Irgun (the Jewish underground movement), fails to convince Irgun leaders that he is a genuine Nazi concentration camp survivor. Finally they are convinced — only when he breaks down and confesses that the Nazi guards “used me as a woman.” To the Irgun, this was definitive proof that he had been a Nazi prisoner.

Allen Ginsberg, the homosexual “beat” poet was asked by a Justice of the Supreme Court in 1966 (during an obscenity trial related to the book Naked Lunch, by William Burroughs) whether at “some time in the future there will be a political party, for instance, made up of homosexuals.” Ginsberg replied, saying “this has already happened in a sense -- or of sex perverts -- and we can point to Hitler, Germany under Hitler” (The New York Times, August 10, 1997).

These are but two examples which reveal the extent to which homosexuality was openly associated with Nazism in the past. There are many other examples in this book. Yet to day, the record has been almost entirely purged regarding the homosexual/Nazi connection. This would be alarming enough if it were simply a trend in the popular culture and academia, but a similar white washing is also taking place in institutions responsible for keeping the record of the Holocaust.

Dr. Nathaniel Lehrman is a retired psychiatrist who read The Pink Swastika and was inspired to recommend it as a resource to the U.S. Holocaust Museum in Washington, D.C.. No political conservative, Dr. Lehrman has for many years contributed articles and editorials to liberal and humanist publications. After a great deal of effort, including an exchange of correspondence in which he challenged the museum to at least research the claims of this book, he was rebuffed. In a May 5th, 2000 editorial in the Intermountain Jewish News, Dr. Lehrman took issue with one of the frequent pro-homosexual events at the museum

[F]or the conference to present a complete picture of gays in the Holocaust, it should also have included the key roles of Nazi homosexuals among its perpetrators. By failing to do so, the Museum fostered the myth of a "Gay Holocaust" Why is the Holocaust Memorial Museum distorting the history of the Holocaust?

Another reader, Mr. Zane Overall, donated a copy of The Pink Swastika to the Museum of Tolerance in Los Angeles, the leading Holocaust museum on the West Coast. He was later told by a staff member that the book had not been placed in the regular collection but in a "special collection" available only upon request by a patron. He writes Wondering how a library patron might become aware of the existence of The Pink Swastika, ensconced in "the special collection," I asked if it were listed in the computer along with other books on the same general subject.... She read off quite a number of titles listed there... and reported The Pink Swastika is not listed there (Overall: private letter).

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the bookstore, www.abidingtruth.com/pdfrc/showproducts.php.
Mes sage on a Ho lo caust mu seum fund-raising let ter (left) and a full sec tion of books in the mu seum book store pro mote the "Gay Ho lo caust" myth, while the Nazi/ho mo sex ual con nec tion doc u mented in this book is en tirely ig nored.

Knowing how thoroughly these institutions have been infiltrated by "gay" political activists, we were not surprised that they have suppressed the evidence linking Nazism to homosexuality (see my article "How American 'Gays' are Stealing the Holocaust," in The Poisoned Stream, Founders Publishing Corporation, 1997). We are concerned that the same white wash may be taking place at the Shoah Foun da tion as it col lects the video his to ries of the last remaining Holocaust survivors. Its founder Steven Spielberg is the busi ness part ner of bil lion aire ho mo sex ual activist David Geffin. Unfortunately, the public perceives these in sti tu tions as the fi nal au thor ity on any thing hav ing to do with the Nazi era.

As we pre pare to pub lish this fourth edi tion of The Pink Swastika, therefore, we are especially mindful that our small work rep re sents per haps the only sig nif i cant at tempt to coun ter a highly suc cessful "gay"-spon sored re vi sion ist cam paign. We have thus endeavored to produce the most thorough and accurate document of which we are capable.

		Ironically, Christians are blamed for the Holocaust in a 14-minute orientation video for visitors to the U.S. Holocaust Museum (above) and in this book offered in its book store, yet open homosexuals such as Dr. Klaus Mueller are given prominent positions on the museum staff.

This document is by no means the first, but is by far the most complete, resource ever prepared on the thesis that homosexuals invented and ran the Nazi Party. This is a thesis that has been frequently restated since the 1930s. It is a thesis with profound implications for our society, given the growing power of the “gay” movement. Yet most people in this country have probably never even heard it mentioned.

Our goal is not to replace one form of political correctness with another. We do not want our view to be imposed on any one, nor the homosexualist view to be silenced. Our goal is to put these questions before the public and let the evidence speak for itself.

Scott Lively, December 14, 2001

B" H

Foreword

Kevin Abrams

I call heaven and earth to witness against you this day, that I have set before you life and death, the blessing and the curse; therefore choose life, that you may live, you and your children.

Deuteronomy\Devarim:30:19

The Pink Swastika is not a work of fiction. Ironically, the authors have discovered that truth is often stranger than fiction. The Pink Swastika is a response to the “gay political agenda” and its strategy of portraying homosexuals as victims of societal and Nazi persecution. Although some homosexuals, and many of those who were framed with trumped-up charges of homosexuality suffered and died at the hands of the Nazis, for gay apologists to portray themselves as historical victims of Nazi persecution, on par with the Jewish people, is a gross distortion of history, perhaps equal to denying the Holocaust itself. The Pink Swastika will show that there was far more brutality, rape, torture and murder committed against innocent people by Nazi deviants and homosexuals than there ever was against homosexuals.

Today in the West, a new and aggressive homosexuality is making its bid for power. The media, psychiatry, science and academia have all been corrupted and pressed into the service of establishing homosexuality as a normal and acceptable variant of human sexuality. Those who are unwilling to bend to the new dispensation are bludgeoned into submission with slanderous accusations of intolerance and “homophobia.” Our efforts will certainly fail to corroborate the politically correct propaganda offered by much of today’s media, academia, psychi-attempts, various federal agencies, the courts and human rights organizations which are now driven by the new sexual ideology rather than by honest debate and inquiry. Coming in the wake of a successful public campaign conducted over decades, our book will also fly in the face of much of today's popular opinion. This having been said, we believe that The Pink Swastika will show clearly how the world the Nazis attempted to create is a world, not of the past, but of the possible future. It will show that, given its present course and left unchallenged, America could easily become the Nazi Germany of 50 years ago.

It is often said that the lessons of history leave us with a guide for the future. If this be so, then the lessons of the collapse of the democratic Weimar Republic and the social ideologies that preceded its defeat by the Nazis should provide us with insights into America's future. As a practicing member of the Jewish faith, I remain wholly unconvinced that by solely remembering the Holocaust we will prevent another. The ominous parallels between the Weimar Republic of pre-Nazi Germany and today's American republic are simply too pronounced to overlook.

This year, 1995, is the 50th anniversary of the end of World War II. It is also the 50th anniversary of Samuel Igra's book, Germany's National Vice, which we quote extensively. Largely purged from public view, Igra's book documents the homoerotic foundations of German militarism. Other books, like Dusty Sklar's 1977 The Nazis and the Occult, document the black occult roots of Nazi ideology. What The Pink Swastika does is to synthesize both the homoerotic and occult foundations of the Nazi regime.

It must be clarified — the Nazis were not Right-Wing Conservative Creationists; they were Left-Wing Darwinian Evolutionary Socialists. As a principle, an increase in pederasty and homosexuality parallels a militaristic Hellenic revival. History discloses that the most warlike nations are those whose male leaders were the most addicted to sexual re la tions with young boys.

The po lit i cal agenda which has as its fo cus a plan to le galize and coerce a bewildered and unsuspecting public into ac cepting or re gard ing sod omy as nor mal or dig ni fied, is based on false hood, self-deception and skewed sci en tific re search. In light of the med i cal re cord, his tory and the fact that sodomy represents a corruption of the natural and moral or ders of cre ation, any pos i tive af firm a tion of ho mo sex u al ity is to tally with out merit. Human sex u al ity is never merely a phys i cal con cern, nor is it a purely pri vate mat ter. It always has social implications. What goes on between part ners in flu ences so ci ety as a whole. In sex u al mat ters, the is sue is “what is ad vo cated and what is prac ticed pub licly” far more than what hap pens pri vately.

In a let ter to the ed i tor of the To ronto Globe and Mail newspaper, February 26, 1992, Dr. Joseph Berger, Assistant Professor of Psychiatry, University of Toronto, writes, “in my 20 years of psy chi a try I have never come across anyone with innate homosexuality. That no tion has been a long pro claimed gay-activist po lit i cal po si tion, in tended to pro mote the ac ceptance of ho mo sex u al ity as a healthy, fully equal alternative expression of human sex u al ity. It has zero sci en tific foun da tion, though its pro mot ers latch on to even the flim si est shreds of atro cious re search in their at tempts to jus tify the no tion.”

As they were during the Weimar period, 1918-1933, psychiatry and academia have been hijacked and pressed into the ser vice of es tab lish ing homosexualism as the ba sis of a new Kultur. Pro fes sor Hans Blueher, a prac tic ing phy si cian whose specialty was psy chi a try, was ac cepted by the Na zis as the apos tle and higher au thor ity of a new so cial or der. Blueher’s school held that male ho mo sex u al love mak ing is in itself a good thing and spiritually energizing. Blueher’s teaching became popular in Nazi circles during the pe riod be tween the two World Wars and pro moted the idea that a well-regulated ritual of homosexualism was a unique force capable of creating the State and assuring its leadership. The resulting creed relegated women to a purely biological function and eliminated the family as a constituent cell in the community.

In 1973, the American Psychiatric Association was also hijacked by American “gay” activists. Basing its decision largely on the skewed evidence of the 1948 Kinsey report Sexual Behavior in the Human Male, the APA removed homosexuality from its Diagnostic and Statistics Manual and declared it a normal variant of human sexuality. Homosexuals, sensing that the burden of change had been lifted from them and shifted onto society, were able to present themselves as innocent victims of what they referred to as society’s bigoted and “homophobic” attitude towards them as persons.

Columnist Charles Krauthammer, in “Defining Deviancy Up,” an essay published in the November 22, 1993 edition of The New Republic (pages 20ff), in describing the real effect of the APA decision, stated that a majority of society was made deviant while homosexuality was elevated to the status of normal. Krauthammer writes, “as part of the vast social project of moral leveling, it is not enough for the deviant to be normalized. The normal must be found to be deviant.” In fact, the greatest single victory of the “gay” agenda over the past decade has been to shift the debate from behavior to identity, thus forcing opponents into a position where they are seen as attacking the civil rights of homosexual citizens rather than attacking specific antisocial behavior.

In an interesting and informative study, a critical analysis titled “Sexual Politics and Scientific Logic: the Issue of Homosexuality,” by Dr. Charles Socarides (published in the Winter 1992 edition of The Journal of Psychohistory, Vol. 10, No. 3:317), Socarides quotes the warning of Abram Kardiner, psychoanalyst, former Professor of Psychiatry at Columbia University, 1966 recipient of the Humanities Prize of The New York Times:

There is an epidemic form of homosexuality, which is more than the usual incidence, which generally occurs in social crises or in declining cultures when license and boundless permissiveness dulls the pain of ceaseless anxiety, universal hostility and divisiveness.... Supporting the claims of homosexuals and regarding homosexuality as a normal variant of sexual activity is to deny the social significance of homosexuality... Above all it militates against the family and destroys the function of the latter as the last place in our society where affectivity can be cultivated... Homosexuality operates against the cohesive elements in society in the name of fictitious freedom. It drives the opposite sex in a similar direction. And no society can long endure when either the child is neglected or when the sexes war upon each other.

Victim-plunder ideology is at the core of “gay” political strategy. Homosexualists exploit the public status of homosexuals to impose their new definition of human sexuality upon society. “Victim ideology” and “reductionist” thinking is destroying America from within. Today’s new victims see no reason to modify their own behavior. Victim psychology and philosophies undermine the legitimate workings of government and the justice, health and social systems. Like their Nazi predecessors, today’s homosexualists lack any scruples. Homosexuality is primarily a predatory addiction striving to take the weak and unsuspecting down with it. The “gay” agenda is a colossal fraud; a gigantic robbery of the mind. Homosexuals of the type described in this book have no true idea of how to act in the best interests of their country and fellow man. Their intention is to serve none but themselves.

The Pink Swastika documents a hidden aspect of German history. The authors contend that homosexualism, elevated to a popular ideology and combined with black occult forces, not only gave birth to Nazi imperialism but also led to the Holocaust itself. The militarists in Germany were happy with Hitler. His teachings on “total war” and of a secret Jewish conspiracy against Germany provided a good screen for their own veiled preparations. From its very inception, it was the goal of the Nazi Party, working as a front for the German military industrial complex, to overthrow the Weimar Republic by whatever means necessary. The Pink Swastika documents how, from their beginning, the National Socialist revolution and the Nazi Party were animated and dominated by militaristic homosexuals, pederasts, pornographers and sado-masochists.

As Igra explains in Germany’s National Vice, “the criminals who wreaked such astounding horrors on innocent civilian populations were not acting as soldiers drunk with the fury of battle, nor as patriotic fanatics, but as chosen instruments of a satanic religion to the service of which they had been dedicated by the systematic teaching and practice of unnatural vice” (Igra:94).

The Pink Swastika documents how the Society for Human Rights, founded by members of the Nazi Party, became the largest homosexual rights organization in Germany and, further, how this movement gave birth to the American homosexual rights movement. Its influence has grown. The President of the United States now receives official homosexual delegations at the White House who expect the President to repay them for helping him into office. They expected him to “normalize” homosexuality in the American military. As for the comparison made between homoeroticism and skin color, General Colin Powell, former Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, had this to say in a letter to Rep. Patricia Schroeder (D-Colorado), “Skin color is a benign, non-behavioral characteristic. Sexual orientation is perhaps the most profound of all human behavioral characteristics. Comparison of the two is a convenient but invalid argument" (Salem, Ore.) Statesman Journal, June 6, 1992).

American civilization rests on the basic principles of Christian morality, which have their origin in the Hebrew Scriptures. The reason why the Nazis first attacked the Jewish people and swore to exterminate them physically and spiritually is because the teachings of the Bible, both the Torah and the New Testament, represent the foundations on which the whole system of Christian ethics rests. Remove the Bible as the constellation that guides the American Ship of State and the whole edifice of American civilization collapses. For my Jewish brethren searching for a Biblical basis for the legitimization of homosexuality, I refer to the words of Rabbis Marc Angel, Hillel Goldberg and Pinchas Stopler and their joint article in the Winter, 1992-93 edition of Jewish Action Magazine:

There is not a single source in all of the disciplines of Jewish sacred literature — halachah, aggadah, philosophy, music, mysticism — that tolerates homosexual acts or a homosexual 'orientation.' Jews who sanction homosexuality must do so wholly without reference to Jewish sacred literature, in which case their justification has no Jewish standing; or without reference to Jewish sources, in which case they act with ignorance or intellectual dishonesty. The idea, set forth by some of the non-Orthodox leadership, that the Torah prohibited only coercive and non-loving same-sex relationships, thus allowing for a contemporary, voluntary and loving same-sex relationship, is wholly without basis in a single piece of Jewish sacred literature written in the last 3,000 years.

Den nis Prager, a respected Jewish radio talk show host, commented, "There were two kinds of Jews in Auschwitz -- those who knew why they were there and those who thought it was just bad luck." Today Jews have assimilated ideas foreign to the Jewish perspective and many liberal, secular American Jews, in adopting a tolerance for everything, stand for nothing. As the living, we owe a moral debt to that generation of Jews who were subjected to such inhumane and sadistic torture and extermination. The underlying causes of Nazi militarism are documented in The Pink Swastika. The Holocaust must be remembered for what it was, a war against the Jewish people and Western civilization.

MAY GOD BLESS AMERICA

Kevin E. Abrams, Jerusalem, Israel

June 5, 1995

Introduction

Scott Lively

I came to be interested in this compelling and sobering topic by a route familiar to many in our society today — that of the “victim.” I did not seek this status, nor did I exploit or claim it, yet for many months I and others experienced what it was like to be on the receiving end of a full-scale, no-holds-barred “seek-and-destroy” campaign, orchestrated by “gay” political activists in the State of Oregon. The occasion of the uproar was a series of initiative campaigns aimed at preventing local and state-level legislation granting “minority status” based on homosexuality. The details of the initiatives and about the Oregon Citizens Alliance, the grassroots organization which sponsored them, would fill at least one book by themselves. But the long and the short of what led me to this book and its topic was the astounding tone of the rhetoric which is routinely leveled by the defenders of “gay rights” at people who publicly oppose homosexuality. Amidst this rhetoric, the favorite names and metaphors were nearly all drawn from Hitler’s Germany. Leaders and even petition-carriers on our campaign were characterized as every kind of Nazi, fascist, racist, hate-monger and Aryan supremacist. Bricks wrapped in swastika-emblazoned paper were hurled through the windows of businesses who had contributed to our campaign. Always, the Nazi rhetoric was loudest and most extreme among the homosexual activists and their closest political allies (Governor Barbara Roberts, a long-time homosexualist, characterized the ballot measure as “almost like Nazi Germany” (The Oregonian, August 26, 1992:A14)).

Some of the worst abuse came from homosexuals in the media. During the 1992 election cycle, I was contacted by an assistant producer for the CBS news-magazine show “48 Hours,” who wanted permission to feature OCA in a segment about “how main stream Americans were responding to extremism in the gay-rights movement.” Being familiar with media bias on the issue of homosexuality, I was very suspicious and insisted on personal assurances from the producer that this was indeed the focus of the program. Due to the tone of rhetoric in the local media I specifically demanded and received a promise that OCA would not be characterized as a hate group. Only after repeated assurances over a two or three week period of telephone negotiations did I seek and obtain permission for this project from OCA’s chair man, Lon Mabon. I then devoted nearly two weeks of my time as assisting the “48 Hours” film crew, facilitating dozens of hours of interviews and arranging camera locations for filming campaign activities.

The program aired on February 26, 1992. In the late afternoon I received a call from a friend in Massachusetts, where the program had just aired three hours ahead of our West Coast television programming schedule. “Watch out,” she said, “they stabbed you in the back.” Sure enough, the program was called “48 Hours on Hate Street” and featured a rogue’s gallery of hate groups, including neo-Nazis and violent white supremacists. The segment on OCA was sandwiched between two such groups. In the local news program following “48 Hours,” KOIN, the CBS affiliate in Portland, juxtaposed a report about OCA and a piece which included classic Nazi file footage and anti-Nazi polemics. Approximately two weeks later another television station in Eugene, KEZI-TV, included Nazi file footage in a news story about OCA (they later apologized). Newspapers across the state frequently editorialized against OCA, using the terms “Nazi,” “KKK,” “bigot,” and “hate” liberally.

I had known for a long time that it is axiomatic that when name-calling (as opposed to reasonable debate) happens, the names one calls others usually reflect the things one dislikes about oneself. I think it occurred to me that there was something awfully overstated about the Nazi-labeling campaign, even before I received a set of carefully-documented notes on prominent homosexuals in the Nazi Party, sent by a person who had followed the firestorm of rhetoric brought on by our campaign.

In the years since I began augmenting and refining this first set of data, the nation has seen the trivialization of such extreme rhetoric. It is commonplace days to hear someone being called, directly or by inference, a "Nazi." Some people have attributed this to the impoverishment of our national discourse, the depletion of our language and powers of intellect, and I would agree. We are certainly losing our literacy, and much of our dignity along with it. Yet there remains the old and valid notion that those who repeatedly, loudly and unreasonably call others a name are of ten, consciously or not, describing themselves.

Though this book is limited to the examination of connections between the Nazi movement and the homosexual and occultist movements, I think that a larger and more chilling theme can be read in its pages. Can it be that the fascination with calling people Nazis is, for the modern "gay" movement and others in our society, an outgrowth of a deeper fascination with what the Nazis got away with in their own state? What are the attitudes that underlie the phenomena of the "nanny state," "political correctness," the cynical political promotion of racial and class strife, "dumbing down" the public, the attenuation of parental rights, sterilizing the public environment of Judeo-Christian religious references, and the increasing homogeneity of opinion and of news "slant" in the press? In a way, I think that American homosexual activists present an almost refreshingly honest view into the nature of these attitudes, compared to the sanctimonious presentations we hear daily from the press and certain special interest groups and political leaders.

Let us look for a moment at one of the more bald-faced revelations of the homosexualist's view of, and goals for, American society. In a point-by-point public relations strategy called "The Overhauling of Straight America," (Guide Magazine, November, 1987) homosexuals Marshall Kirk and Erastes Pill explain their modern makeover of Hitler's "Big Lie." This remarkable piece is a control freak's fantasy, a veritable binge of manipulative, coercive and deceptive words and tactics. It begins:

The first order of business is desensitization of the American public concerning gays... To desensitize the public is to help it view homosexuality with indifference instead of with keen emotion. Ideally, we would have straights register differences in sexual preference the way they register different tastes for ice cream... (Kirk and Pill:7).

This behavior-modification mentality, combined with isolation of "straights" and others as groups or classes who assume the status of de-humanized targets of one sort or another, continues:

the masses [emphasis ours] should not be shocked and repelled by premature exposure to homosexual behavior itself... the imagery of sex should be downplayed... (ibid.:8).

...open up a gateway into the private world of straights, through which a Trojan horse might be passed (ibid.:8).

...gays must be cast as victims in need of protection so that straights will be inclined by reflex to assume the role of protector (ibid.:8).

...make use of symbols which reduce the mainstream's sense of threat, which lower its guard... (ibid.:8).

...replace the mainstream's self-righteous pride about its homophobia with shame and guilt (ibid.:10).

Not so many years ago, all of these statements would have been unbelievably offensive to most Americans, even if they contained no reference to homosexuality, precisely because they all advocate coercive tampering with people's most private domain, their thoughts, opinions and beliefs (Kirk and Pill call it "transforming the social values of straight America" — ibid.: 14). Such attempts were thought to be the province of diabolical master minds in sci-fi novels, or of Maoists or the dictators of banana republics. But we have arrived at a time in America in which Kirk and Pill simply add their voices (and the tone of their voices) to the many advocating the forcible or manipulative control of people's ideas (for example, "speech codes" on college campuses and in newspaper classified advertising policy).

The more of Nazi thinking I have researched, the more I have been reminded that our nation represents the first and greatest successful experiment in the opposite direction. At our founding we were the only nation, among many autocratically-governed states, which truly offered and guaranteed freedom of thought and expression. Our founding fathers attempted to write our inestimably precious freedoms in stone because they foresaw (in deed, it was going on even then) that there would be an incessant drift back to the power-in-the-hands-of-a-few school of thought. How far have we drifted to day, and what does this mean for the behavioral fringe groups of our society (just as the Nazis were a behavioral fringe group of theirs), who feel compelled to re-shape American hearts and minds to resemble their own?

Let us return to Kirk and Pill to look at the mechanics of their strategy for "transforming" the society into what they feel would be a more acceptable form. Here are some of their suggestions:

Talk about gays and gay ness as loudly and as of ten as possible...almost any behavior begins to look normal if you are ex posed to enough of it...(Kirk and Pill:7).

Con stant talk builds the im pres sion that pub lic opin ion is at least di vided on the sub ject (ibid.:8).

...the cam paign should paint gays as superior pil lars of so ciety. Yes, yes, we know - this trick is so old it creaks (ibid.:9).

...it will be time to get tough with remaining opponents. To be blunt, they must be vil i fied (ibid.:10).

...we in tend to make the anti-gays look so nasty that av er age Americans will want to dissociate themselves from such types (ibid.:10).

Each sign will tap pa tri otic sen ti ment, each mes sage will drill a seemingly agreeable proposition into mainstream heads (ibid.:11).

The public should be shown images of ranting homo phobes whose sec ond ary traits and be liefs dis gust mid dle America...the Ku Klux Klan demanding that gays be burned alive or cas trated; big oted south ern [sic] min is ters drool ing with hys ter i cal ha tred to a de gree that looks both comical and deranged; men ac ing punks, thugs and con victs...Nazi con cen tra tion camps...(ibid.:10).

These im ages should be com bined with those of their gay victims by a method propagandists [em pha sis ours] call the "bracket tech nique." For ex am ple, for a few sec onds an unctuous beady-eyed Southern preacher is seen, pound ing the pul pit in rage about "those sick, abom i na ble creatures." While his tirade continues over the sound track, the picture switches to pathetic photos of badly beaten persons, or to photos of gays who look decent, harm less, and lik able; and then we cut back to the poi son-ous face of the preacher, and so forth...The effect is devastating (ibid.:13-14).

A group called Parents and Friends of Lesbians and Gays (PFLAG) used this technique in an advertising campaign in the fall of 1995 against Pat Robertson, Jesse Helms and Jerry Falwell. As reported in the San Francisco Examiner, Sunday, November 12, 1995, "...a new television ad campaign [portrays scenes of] a teenage girl contemplating suicide with a handgun, [and] a young man being beaten by a gang as his attackers shout slurs...interspersed with actual clips of the Rev. Pat Robertson and other conservatives deploring homosexuality." Most stations turned down the ads, but they ran in Tulsa and Washington D.C. A print version of the ad (much less emotionally effective) was run in USA Today, November 21, 1995.

Interestingly, Pat Robertson's comments quoted in the ad were directly related to the subject of this book: "Homosexuality is an abomination. Many of those people involved with Adolf Hitler were Satanists, many of them were homosexuals. The two things seem to go together."

Without belaboring the point, these soi-disant propagandistic tactics, and even the verbiage in which they are couched, represent a twisted approach to the winning of American public opinion. Again, I was struck by the similarity (in deceptive tactics and puppeteer-like attitude) to the creators of the Nazi propaganda machine. Not only is there the classic Big Lie technique (say it "loudly and as often as possible"), but the homosexuals have elevated the old Nazi technique of vilification, used on the Jews by such adepts as pornographer Julius Streicher, to an art form. And the familiar Hitlerian emotional component of hatred is certainly there, as Kirk and Pill salivate over the imagined discomfiture of their "most fervid enemies" (apparently, pastors who have the misfortune to live in the South!):

The shoe fits, and we should make them try it on for size, with all of America watching (ibid.:10).

Two of the first and major commitments of the Nazis in their rise to power were the effective control of the information sources in Germany, and the careful building of a propaganda machine. This was the key to their power, and except for a strong military force, it is the most important enhancement to any autocratic power. Over the last two decades we have witnessed an appalling willingness among the American news and entertainment media to align themselves with one element of political thought, to allow themselves to be channels for the dissemination of one side of an issue over another. As new and contradictory voices (talk radio) have appeared on the media scene, they have actually been opposed by the existing media commentators. And in much of the entertainment media's program fare we find a not-so-subtle enactment of Kirk's and Pill's strategy (albeit on a number of issues, not just homosexuality). Indeed, Kirk and Pill assert that "gay Hollywood has provided our best covert weapon in the battle to desensitize the mainstream" (Kirk and Pill:8).

These are some of the issues to be broached in a study of the relationship of homosexuals and their political movements to the Nazi Party. The larger context of the study must be our own country, and the numerous groups who are now struggling to capture its soul and "transform" its society. How are we similar, and dissimilar, to the Germans of the 1920s and 30s? What lessons should we learn?

As a final note, the other inspiration of this book has been the recent claim of homosexuals that homosexuals were major victims of the Holocaust (this seems to be part of the "victim" strategy in Kirk's and Pill's design). The play Bent has been the springboard for a campaign, complete with homosexual add-ons to an Anne Frank exhibit which toured the U.S., to get the public to accept the idea that homosexuals were the most downtrodden and persecuted group in Nazi Germany. In this play, a homosexual prisoner “trades up” his pink badge for a yellow Jewish star to improve his status in the camp (S. Katz:145). This turn of events in the homosexualist propaganda campaign has been a sore affront to traditionalist Jews like my friend and co-author Kevin Abrams, who desires to protect the truth of his story from the “Holocaust revisionists.” It is to that truth, a signpost on the path of every free society, that we have dedicated this book.

A Word to the Reader

Two terms used frequently in this book, “homosexualist” and “pederast,” will be unfamiliar to many readers. We use the term homosexualist to refer to any person, homosexual or not, who actively promotes homosexuality as morally and socially equivalent to heterosexuality as a basis for social policy. In our view Harry Hay, founder of the American “gay-rights” movement, and President Bill Clinton, who attempted to force the U.S. military to accept open homosexuals, are both homosexualists. Each has worked in his own way to legitimize homosexual behavior in America. Many heterosexual people are homosexualists. Many self-described homosexual people are not homosexualists. A homosexualist is defined by his actions in a sociopolitical context. This differs from Samuel Igra’s use of the term in Germany’s National Vice, which we have quoted extensively. Igra uses “homosexualist” to define sexual conduct only.

A pederast is defined as a physically mature man who engages in or desires to engage in sex with boys around the age of puberty, as opposed to a pedophile, who targets both male and female prepubescent children and/or prepubertal girls. (Pederast derives from the Greek paed, meaning boy, and erastis, meaning lover). Self-defined “boy-lovers” who have formed “children’s rights” organizations such as the North American Man/Boy Love Association (NAMBLA) in this country, and who formed the Gemeinschaft der Eigenen in Germany, generally seem to focus their sexual attention on boys roughly between the ages of 8 and 18 years, with an apparent preference for boys about 12 years old. Some sources quoted in this study use the terms “pederast” and “pedophile” interchangeably. We hope to establish the distinction between these terms (dubious as it may be) to facilitate a deeper understanding of homosexual ideology and the varieties of its expression.

English translation of German words using the um laut (two dots above the vowel) result in different spellings of words like Fuehrer and Roehm (Fuehrer and Rohm). In this book we have chosen the form of spelling in which the vowel is followed by an “e.” Spelling of German words varies among the authors we quote but we have taken the liberty of harmonizing the spelling in this book.

Acknowledgments

The process of creating a book involves, directly or indirectly, a great number of people who lend their inspiration. It is with deep respect that we express our gratitude to the many great historians, men like Konrad Heiden, who wrote A History of National Socialism and Der Fuehrer; William Shirer, whose book, The Rise and Fall of the Third Reich, became one of the most respected and classic texts on Nazi history; and, of course, Samuel Igra, whose obscure but important 1945 work, Germany's National Vice, reveals a hidden side of history seldom seen or acknowledged. To these who were there and who honestly reported what they saw and experienced, we are indebted. They are our guides to the future.

We would especially like to thank Dr. Charles Socarides, President of NARTH, The National Association for Research and Therapy of Homosexuality, for his support and encouragement. Dr. Socarides is a Clinical Professor of Psychiatry at Albert Einstein College of Medicine in New York. We would also like to express our gratitude to Dr. Joseph Nicolosi, Founder and Clinical Director of the Thomas Aquinas Psychological Clinic in California. Dr. Nicolosi has published in sightful works on reparative therapy and homosexuality which offer hope and the option of positive change for the homosexual.

Other individuals with whom one or both of us have had the honor of working are Mr. Peter LaBarbera, editor and publisher of the Lambda Report on Homosexuality, a Washington, D.C.-based publication that monitors the homosexual agenda in American politics and culture; Steve Lequire and Terry O'Neil of The British Columbia Report Magazine; Rosebianca Starr, Vancouver, British Columbia; Lon Mabon, Chairman of Oregon Citizens Alliance (OCA) and Pat Smith of the OCA Research Department; Trevor Lautens, columnist for the Vancouver Sun; Paul Schratz, editor of The Province Newspaper, Vancouver, British Columbia; David, Avraham and Israel Feld, Maccabi Mossad, Israel; David Bedien, Director of Beit Agron Press Center, Jerusalem; Len Butcher, editor of the Canadian B'nai B'rith Covenant; Mrs. Irene Klass, Women's Editor of The Jewish Press, Brooklyn New York; Professor William Woodruff, Campbell University, North Carolina; David Bar Illan, editor of the Jerusalem Post; Kevin Tebedo, Former Executive Director of Colorado for Family Values; Pastor Mary Rogers; Reverend Bernice Gerard of Sunday Line Radio and Television Ministries, Vancouver, British Columbia; Jan Willem van der Hoeven, Director for the International Christian Embassy, Jerusalem, and his wife Irene; Stan Goodenough, editor of the Middle East Intelligence Report; Rabbi Avraham Ravitz and Rabbi Schlomo Beneziri, Members of Knesset; Phil Chernovsky, Israel Centre; Rena Cohen, Sefat, Israel; Toby Klein Greenwald, columnist for Washington Jewish Week; Gershom Gale, editor of the International Edition of the Jerusalem Post; Aryeh Stav, editor of Nativ Journal of Politics and the Arts; Professor Mordechai Nisan; Ramon Bennet; Avi Asdauba, Yair Davidy, author of The Tribes; Shmuel Golding, publisher of Biblical Polemics; Aryeh Gallin, Director, Root and Branch Association; Christopher Barder, UK; John Hully, author of Comets, Jews and Christians; Rabbi Marvin Antelman, Chief Justice of the Supreme Rabbinic Court of America; Gemma Blech; Dr. David Lewis; Dr. Mikha'el Snidecor; Maurits van Zuiden; Dr. Judith Reisman, author of Kinsey: Crimes and Consequences; Avi Lipkin; Gary Cooperberg; Paul deParrie and Andrew Burnett of Life Advocate magazine; Herman Bauer; Robert Orr; Libby Durea; Dr. Nathaniel Lehrman, Clinical Director, retired, Kingsboro Psychiatric Center; Gary Butterfield; Joseph D'Alelio; Josiah (Doc) Goldberg; Landon G. Mustell and Pastor Larry Dill, Sheridan Assembly of God Church.

Special thanks to Bill and Irene Bennett, Anne L., Kathy Bates and Charles Lowers for their editorial assistance, to D.E. and to Alan Abe for digging out countless familiar and obscure sources that document the truth of Nazi history, to Pat Gunnip for his generosity in underwriting research and other costs, and to Carol P. at OCA's research department who got us started on this endeavor by introducing us. Tim Duskin of the National Archives was especially helpful in directing us to important resources. There are several other people who helped in various ways but who wish to remain anonymous. We are grateful for each one.

I (Kevin) wish to acknowledge my teachers, Rabbis Mendle Altien, Lippa Dubrawsky, David Bassous, Mordecai Feuerstein, Avraham Feiglestock, Yitchak Wineberg — to you I owe the most.

Both of us extend a special thank you to our wives, Sharon Abrams and Anne Lively, who have struggled with us through this long and difficult process, offering their wholehearted support and many insightful suggestions. This book is for our children: Miriam, Aaron and Odette Abrams and Noah and Samuel Lively.

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics,
at the bookstore,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/show products.php.

If it were possible to form a state or an army exclusively of homosexuals, these men would direct all their emulations toward honors, and going into battle with such a spirit would, even if their numbers were small, conquer the world.

Plato, from Banquet (In Konrad Heiden's Der Fuehrer, 1944:741)

It remains characteristic of the Germans, that they, outwardly the most brutally masculine of all European peoples, are the most homosexual nation on earth.

H.R. Knickerbocker, Is Tomorrow Hitler's?, 1941:34

Chapter One:

THE HOMOSEXUAL ROOTS OF THE NAZI PARTY

It was a quiet night in Munich. The people moving along the streets in the heart of the city were grim. They walked heads down, hands deep in the pockets of their frayed coats. All around, the spirit of defeat hung like a pall in the evening air; it was etched on the faces of the out-of-work soldiers on every street corner and in every café. Germany had been defeated in the war, but it had been crushed by the terms of the Versailles Treaty. Everywhere the people were still mired in depression and despair, several years after the humiliating surrender of Kaiser Wilhelm.

In this atmosphere the purposeful stride of Captain Ernst Roehm seemed out of place. But Roehm was accustomed to being different. A homosexual with a taste for boys, Roehm was part of a growing subculture in Germany which fancied itself a superior form of German manhood. A large, heavy man, Roehm had been a professional soldier since 1906, and, after the war, had temporarily lent his talents to a socialist terror organization called the Iron Fist. On this night Roehm was on his way to meet some associates who had formed a much more powerful socialist organization.

At the door of the Bratwurstgloeckl, a tavern frequented by homosexual rough necks and bully-boys, Roehm turned in and joined the handful of sexual deviants and occultists who were celebrating the success of a new campaign of terror. Their organization, once known as the German Worker's Party, was now called the Nationalsozialistische Deutsche Arbeiterpartei, The National Socialist German Worker's Party — the Nazis.

Yes, the Nazis met in a “gay” bar.

It was no coincidence that homosexuals were among those who founded the Nazi Party. In fact, the party grew out of a number of groups in Germany which were centers of homosexual activity and activism. Many of the characteristics, rituals, symbols, activities and philosophies we associate with Nazism came from these organizations or from contemporary homosexuals. The extended-arm “Sieg Heil” salute, for example, was a ritual of the Wandervoegel (“Wandering Birds” or “Rovers”), a male youth society which became the German equivalent of the Boy Scouts. The Wandervoegel was started in the late 1800s by a group of homosexual teenagers. Its first adult leader, Karl Fischer, called himself “der Fuehrer” (“the Leader”) (Koch:25f). Hans Blueher, a homosexual Nazi philosopher and important early member of the Wandervoegel, incited a sensation in 1912 with publication of The German Wandervoegel Movement as an Erotic Phenomenon, which told how the movement had become one in which young boys could be introduced into the homosexual lifestyle (Rector:39f). The Wandervoegel and other youth organizations were later merged into the Hitler Youth (which itself became known among the populace as the “Homo Youth” because of rampant homosexuality. - Rector:52).

Many of the Nazi emblems, such as the swastika, the double lightning bolt “SS” symbol, and even the inverted triangle symbol used to identify classes of prisoners in the concentration camps, originated among homosexual occultists in Germany (some, such as the swastika, are actually quite ancient symbols which were merely revived by these homosexual groups).

In 1907, Jorg Lanz Von Liebenfels, a former Cistercian monk whom the church excommunicated because of his homosexual activities (Sklar:19), flew the swastika flag above his castle in Austria (Goodrick-Clarke:109).

After his expulsion from the church Lanz founded the Ordo Novi Templi ("Order of the New Temple") which merged occultism with violent anti-Semitism. A 1958 study of Lanz, Der Mann der Hitler die Ideen gab ("The Man Who Gave Hitler His Ideas"), by Austrian psychologist Wilhelm Daim, called Lanz the true "father" of National Socialism.

List, a close associate of Lanz, formed the Guido von List Society in Vienna in 1904. The Guido von List Society was accused of practicing a form of Hindu Tantrism which featured sexual perversion in its rituals. This form of sexual perversion was popularized in occult circles by a man named Aleister Crowley who, according to Hitler biographer J. Sydney Jones, enjoyed "playing with black magic

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store, www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Ernst Roehm, Supreme Commander of the dreaded SA Brownshirts.
Yad Vashem

Cover of Guido von List's book, The Secret of the Runes, 1908. The Nazis adopted many of these symbols.

and little boys” (J. S. Jones:123). List was “accused of being the Aleister Crowley of Vienna” (ibid.:123). Like Lanz, List was an occultist; he wrote several books on the magic principles of rune letters (from which he chose the “SS” symbol). In 1908, List “was unmasked as the leader of a blood brotherhood which went in for sexual perversion and substituted the swastika for the cross” (Sklar:23). The Nazis borrowed heavily from List’s occult theories and research. List also formed an elitist occult priest hood called the Armanen Order, to which Hitler himself may have belonged (Waite, 1977:91).

The Nazi dream of an Aryan super-race was adopted from an occult group called the Thule Society, founded in 1917 by followers of Lanz and List. The occult doctrine of the Thule Society held that the survivors of an ancient and highly developed lost civilization could endow Thule initiates with esoteric powers and wisdom. The initiates would use these powers to create a new race of Aryan supermen who would eliminate all “inferior” races. Hitler dedicated his book, Mein Kampf, to Dietrich Eckart, one of the Thule Society inner circle and a former leading figure in the German Worker’s Party. (Schwarzwalder:67). The various occult groups mentioned above were outgrowths of the Theosophical Society, whose founder, Helena Petrovna Blavatsky, is thought by some to have been a lesbian (Webb:94), and whose “bishop” was a notorious pederast named Charles Leadbeater.

The SA Brownshirts or Sturmabteilung (“Storm Troopers”) were largely the creation of an other homosexual, Gerhard Rossbach (Waite, 1969:209). Rossbach formed the Rossbachbund (“Rossbach Brotherhood”), a homosexual unit of the Freikorps (“Free Corps”). The Freikorps were independent inactive military reserve units which became home to the hundreds of thousands of unemployed World War I veterans in Germany. Rossbach also formed a youth organization under the Rossbachbund, calling it the Schilljugend (“Schill Youth”) (ibid.:210). Rossbach’s staff assistant, Lieutenant Edmund Heines, a pederast and murderer, was put in charge of the Schilljugend. The Rossbachbund later changed its name to Storm Troopers (in honor of Wotan, the ancient German god of storms. - Graber:33). Rossbach seduced Hitler’s mentor, Ernst Roehm, into homosexuality. It was under Roehm’s leadership that the Brownshirts became notorious for brutality.

Famous events in Nazi history are also linked to homosexuality; events such as the burning of the German Reichstag in 1932, the 1938 pogrom called Kristallnacht, and the 1944 attempt on Hitler’s life. Even the enduring image of Nazi book-burning, familiar to us from news reels of the 1930s, was directly related to the homosexuality of Nazi leaders. The first such incident occurred four days after Hitler’s Brownshirts broke into Magnus Hirschfeld’s Institute for Sexual Research in Berlin on May 6, 1933. On May 10 the Nazis burned thousands of books and files taken in that raid. The Institute had extensive records on the sexual perversions of numerous Nazi leaders, many of whom had been under treatment there prior to the beginning of the Nazi regime. Treatment at the Sex Research Institute was required by the German courts for persons convicted of sex crimes. Ludwig L. Lenz, who worked at the Institute at the time of the raid but managed to escape with his life, later wrote of the incident:

Why was it then, since we were completely non-party, that our purely scientific Institute was the first victim which fell to the new regime? The answer to this is simple...We knew too much. It would be against medical principles to provide a list of the Nazi leaders and their perversions [but]...not ten percent of the men who, in 1933, took the fate of Germany into their hands, were sexually normal...Our knowledge of such intimate secrets regarding members of the Nazi Party and other documentary ma-

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos
and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Among the burning literary works deemed unacceptable by the Nazis were hidden thousands of files documenting the perversions of Nazi leaders.

rial — we possessed about forty thousand confessions and biographical letters — was the cause of the complete and utter destruction of the Institute of Sexology. (Haberle:369).

The attack on the Sex Research Institute is often cited as an example of Nazi oppression of homosexuals. This is partly true, but as we shall see, the “oppression” fits into a larger context of internecine rivalry between two major homosexual groups. Magnus Hirschfeld, who headed the Institute, was a prominent Jewish homosexual. Hirschfeld also headed a “gay rights” organization called the Scientific-Humanitarian Committee (SHC), formed in 1897 to work for the repeal of Paragraph 175 of the German legal code, which criminalized homosexuality (Kennedy:230). The organization was also opposed to sadomasochism and pederasty, two of the favorite practices of the militaristic, Roehm-style homosexuals who figured so prominently in the early Nazi Party. Hirschfeld had formed the SHC to carry on the work of the pioneer “gay rights” activist, Karl Heinrich Ulrichs (1825-1895). Ulrichs had written against the concept of “Greek love” (pederasty) advocated by a number of other homosexuals in Germany.

One such advocate was Adolf Brand, who formed the Gemeinschaft der Eigenen (“Community of the Elite”) in 1902. The Gemeinschaft der Eigenen inspired the formation in 1920 of the German Friendship League, which changed its name in 1923 to the Society for Human Rights. The leaders of this group were instrumental in the formation and the rise of the Nazi Party. Adolf Brand published the world’s first homosexual periodical, Der Eigene (“The Elite” - Oosterhuis and Kennedy:cover). Brand was a pederast, child pornographer and anti-Semite, and, along with many homosexuals who shared his philosophies, developed a burning hatred of Magnus Hirschfeld and the SHC. When Hirschfeld’s Sex Research Institute was destroyed, the SA troops were under the general command of Ernst Roehm, a member of Brand’s spinoff group, the Society for Human Rights.

The Divided Movement

This was not the last time homosexual leadership of the Nazis would attack other ideologically dissimilar homosexuals. Later in this discussion we will examine the so-called “pink triangle” homosexuals who were interned in concentration camps. The pink triangle, part of a scheme of variously-colored triangles used by the Nazis to identify specific classes of prisoners, was applied to those convicted under Paragraph 175 of the German Penal Code. Homosexuals were one of these classes, but according to Johanson, [M]any of those convicted under Paragraph 175 were not homosexual: some were opponents of the regime such as Catholic priests or leaders of youth groups who were prosecuted on the basis of perjured testimony, while others were street hustlers from Berlin or Hamburg who had been caught up in a police dragnet (Johansson in Dynes:997).

As many as 6,000 of the approximately 10,000 “pink triangles” died in the work camps, but few, if any, were gassed in the death camps. Some of those who died met their deaths at the hands of homosexual Kapos (“trustees”) and guards of the SS. At first glance it is difficult to understand why the homosexual leaders of the Nazis would persecute other homosexuals on the basis of their sexual behavior. We alluded, in the matter of the Sex Research Institute, to the fact that the homosexual movement in Germany was divided into two diametrically opposed camps which some have called the ‘Fems’ and the ‘Butches.’ These terms are common among homosexuals today, as is the disdain “Butches” feel for “Fems.”

A researcher of the homosexual movement Gordon Westwood writes that masculine homosexuals “deplore [effeminate] behavior,” many considering effeminate homosexuals “repulsive” (Westwood:87). Another researcher, H. Kimball Jones, reports that reaction to “Fems” is often violent in the general homosexual community. “[They label them] ‘flaming faggot’ or ‘degenerate fag,’” with one homosexual exclaiming, “You know, I loathe these screaming fairies” (H.K.Jones:29). Jay and Young’s 1979 examination of the American homosexual movement, The Gay Report, contains numerous personal statements by masculine homosexuals critical of effeminacy. “Fem behavior can be vicious and destructive, demeaning to women and gay men,” says one. Another asserts, “To me someone who is ‘femme’ is a self-indulgent...petty, scheming, gos-sippy gay being whose self-image has been warped and shaped by unfortunate family situations” (Jay:294ff).

Adolf Brand mocks the effeminacy of Magnus Hirschfeld and the "Fems" of the Scientific Humanitarian Committee in this issue of Der Eigenet titled "The Auntie."

The most hostile to “Femmes” are precisely those homosexuals who deem themselves the most “masculine.” In The Homosexual Matrix, C.A. Tripp writes that “[f]ar to the other extreme, there are a number of utterly masculine, sometimes supermasculine homosexuals.... They are obsessed with everything male and eschew anything weak or effeminate.... Unquestionably they represent the epitome of what can happen when an eroticized maleness gains the full backing of a value system that supports it” (Tripp:92). Cory and Le Roy, in their detailed discussion of homosexual culture, describe the scene in a typical American “leather bar”:

Here, sturdy swaggering males dressed in tight dungarees, leather jackets or heavy shoes, dark hued woolen shirts, and sometimes motorcycle helmets, aspire toward a super-masculine ideal... Behind the facade of robust exploits, the uniform of pretentious male prowess, the mask of toughness, there sometimes lies a dangerous personality that can express itself physically by substituting violence for erotic pleasure; capable of receiving sexual pleasure only by inflicting pain (or receiving it). The general atmosphere in such places is restless and brooding, and one can never be sure when the dynamite of violence will erupt (Cory and Le Roy:109).

Reading this description, one can imagine oneself looking into Munich’s Bratwurstgloeckl tavern, where the Brownshirts congregated, and finding the same cast of characters -- only wearing different costumes.

This contrast of homosexual types is not simply a phenomenon of modern society. Greenberg writes about homosexuality among the Germans of the first centuries A.D.:

As war became more important to the Germans, the male warriors and their culture became dominant, and the status of women declined. Effeminacy and receptive homosexuality were increasingly scorned and repressed....The effeminate homosexual...was depicted as a foul monster....this stigmatization did not extend to active male homosexuality. [Later, acceptability of masculine oriented homosexuality declined under Christianity, which] was officially opposed to all forms of homosexuality (Greenberg:249f).

The authors do not wish to imply that all homosexuals fall into one or the other of these two simplistic stereotypes. The terms "Butch" and "Fem" in this study are used loosely to differentiate between two ideological extremes relating to the nature of homosexual identity. Generally in this work the German "Fems" are defined as homosexual men who acted like women. They were pacifists and accommodationists. Their goals were equality with heterosexuals and the "right to privacy," and generally they opposed sex with young children. Their leaders were Karl Heinrich Ulrichs and Magnus Hirschfeld.

The "Butches," on the other hand, were masculine homosexuals. They were militarists and chauvinists in the Hellenic mold. Their goal was to revive the pederastic military cults of pre-Christian pagan cultures, specifically the Greek warrior cult. They were often vicious misogynists and sadists. Their leaders included Adolf Brand and Ernst Roehm. The "Butches" reviled all things feminine. Their ideal society was the Maennerbund, an all-male "comradeship-in-arms" comprised of rugged men and boys (Oosterhuis and Kennedy:255). In their view, heterosexuals might be tolerated for the purpose of continuing the species, but effeminate homosexuals were considered to be subhuman, and thus intolerable.

Most of the estimated 1.2 to 2 million homosexuals in Germany at the time of the Third Reich undoubtedly fit somewhere between the two extremes of the movement. This may explain the fact that less than 2% of this population were prosecuted under anti-sodomy laws by the Nazis (Cory and LeRoy estimate that “Fems” make up 5-15% of male homosexuals. Cory and LeRoy:73). Most of those who were prosecuted can be shown to fit the profile of the “Fems.” Kurt Hiller, a ranking member of the SHC who later succeeded Hirschfeld, “estimated that 75 percent of the male homosexuals sympathized with the parties of the Right” (Johnson in Friedlander:233).

In his introduction to The Men with the Pink Triangle, the supposed testimony of a former pink triangle prisoner at the Flossenburg concentration camp, translator David Fernbach confirms that the “Butch/Fem” conflict was at the heart of the Nazi hatred of the “pink triangles.” He writes, Naturally, in the paramilitary organization of the SA, Hitler Youth, etc., even the elite SS, the forms of homosexuality that are characteristic of such all-male bodies were as common as they always are...it was quite fundamental to Nazi ideology that men were to be properly “masculine”...when male homosexuality disguises itself as a cult of “manliness” and virility, it is less obnoxious from the fascist standpoint than is the softening of the gender division that homosexuality invariably involves when it is allowed to express itself freely (Heger:10f).

This, then, is the explanation for the paradox of the Nazi persecution of homosexuals. It is found in the history of two irreconcilable philosophies linked by a common sexual dysfunction. The roots of this conflict extend back into the eighteenth century and span a 70-year period which saw the rise of homosexual militancy in the movement that gave Nazism to the world.

One final item before we move to the next section. It should by this time be apparent to the reader that lesbians did not have a major part to play in Nazism, but they were not completely absent from the Party. Herzer writes that “Claudia Schoppmann has recently shown that prior to 1933, there were Nazi adherents among the leading lesbians in the homosexual emancipation movement. As an example she names the case of Elsbeth Killmer, a leading editor of the most important lesbian periodical of that time, Die Freundin, who was active in the Nazi organization NS-Frauenschaft early on” (Herzer:221f).

Karl Heinrich Ulrichs

The “grand father” of the world “gay rights” movement was a homosexual German lawyer named Karl Heinrich Ulrichs (1825-1895). At the age of 14, Ulrichs was seduced by his riding instructor, a homosexual man about 30 years old (Kennedy in Pascal:15). Observers familiar with the apparently high correlation between childhood sexual molestation and adult homosexuality might conclude that this youthful experience caused Ulrichs to become a homosexual. Ulrichs himself, however, arrived at a hereditary rather than an environmental explanation for his condition. In the 1860s Ulrichs began advancing a theory that defined homosexuals as a third sex. He proposed that male homosexuality could be attributed to a psycho-spiritual mix-up in which a man’s body came to be inhabited by a woman’s soul (and vice-versa for females). He called members of this third sex “Urnings” (male) and “Dailings” (female). Since homosexuality was an inborn condition, he reasoned, it should not be criminalized.

Although Ulrichs was to be unsuccessful in changing the laws against homosexuality, his efforts did encourage widespread political activism. One early follower, a German-Hungarian writer named Benkert (under the pseudonym, Karoly Maria Kert beny), coined the term “homosexual” in an anonymous open letter to the Prussian Minister of Justice in 1869 (Lauritsen and Thorstad:6). Steakley writes that prior to this, homosexuals were known as sodomites, pederasts, or “‘Knabe-schaender’ (literally, ‘boy-ravishers’)” (Steakley:13). The first psychiatric study of homosexuality in Germany was published in 1869 as the result of Ulrichs’ efforts. It advocated the decriminalization of homosexuality in favor of medical treatment (Oosterhuis and Kennedy:13).

Ulrichs’ greatest intellectual impact on his own generation came from his invention of the term “Uranians,” which he introduced in 1862 as a new designation for homosexuals (both Urnings and Dailings). He took the term from Plato’s Symposium, in which homosexual activity was said to fall under the protection of the ninth muse, Urania. In the late 1800s German homosexuals frequently called themselves Uranians, and a militant homosexual slogan, “Uranians of the world, unite!” became popular internationally (Rutledge:41). In the following quote Ulrichs uses the term in his explanation of the “third sex” theory, and graphically illustrates the mentality of the “Fems”:

Apart from the womanly direction of our sexual desire, we Uranians bear another womanly element within us which, it appears to me, offers proof positive that nature developed the male germ within us physically but the female spiritually. We bear this other womanly element from our earliest childhood on. Our character, the way we feel, our entire temperament is not manly, it is decidedly womanly. This inner womanly element is outwardly recognizable by our outwardly apparent womanly nature (Fee:37).

Ulrichs was publicly opposed to sadomasochism and pedophilia (perhaps because of his own molestation as an adolescent). He wrote against the concept of “Greek love” and considered “sexual attraction to the prepubertal to be a sickness.” In his attempts to repeal Paragraph 175 of the German Penal Code, Ulrichs advocated more stringent laws against pedophilia. Ulrichs’ condemnation of man/boy sex, however, extended only to prepubescent boys. As the following quote from his publication Forschungen Ueber das Raetsel der mannmannlichen Liebe (“Investigation of the Enigma of Homosexual Love”) reveals, Ulrichs was not opposed to sex between men and boys who were “sexually mature.”

The Urning is not by a hair’s breadth any more dangerous to immature boys than the genuine man is to immature girls. For the rest, I gladly leave the child molester to his deserved punishment by the law. Let the integrity of a will-less minor be sacred to every Urning. I have no defense for whoever touches it. Therefore, let the seduction of immature boys, I grant it completely, be a punishable indecent act (Ulrichs:16).

This distinction between mature and immature boys was lost on many who followed the rise of the homosexual movement in Germany. For example, Friedrich Engels, in a letter to Karl Marx about a book Ulrichs had written, said, "The pederasts start counting their numbers and discover they are a powerful group in our state. The only thing missing is an organization, but it seems to exist already, though it is hidden" (Plant:38). Engels considered Ulrichs a pederast despite his arbitrary age restriction for sex with boys.

Ulrichs' political activities paved the way for a large and powerful homosexual movement which grew both in numbers and in political and social influence in pre-Nazi Germany. Barely a quarter of a century after his death in 1895, homosexuality would become openly widespread in the Germany of the Weimar Republic era. Cities such as Munich and Berlin would become international Meccas for the practitioners of all forms of sexual perversion. As William Manchester observed in The Arms of Krupp "Wilhelmine Culture's emphasis on masculinity had produced a generation of perverts. Abroad, sodomy was delicately known as 'the German vice'" (Manchester, 1968:232).

Samuel Igra, a German Jew who published Germany's National Vice in 1945 (a study of homosexual influences in Germany), commented on the rise of homosexuality after the turn of the century:

In Germany these unnatural vices became a veritable cult among the ruling classes. In 1891 the well-known German psychiatrist, Krafft-Ebbing, one of the great pioneers in that branch of psycho-pathology, published a book entitled Psychologia Sexualis in which he declared that sex perversion in Germany was alarmingly on the increase. Commissioner Hans von Tresckow, who was head of a special branch of the Criminal Police Department in Berlin from 1905 to 1919, has published the following in his memoirs:

I can confirm the statement (made by Krafft-Ebbing) that homosexual groups have been steadily on the increase in recent decades, especially in the big cities. At the present time in Berlin there are for certain more than one hundred thousand persons who are addicts of this practice. They are closely banded together and even have their own paper, Die Freundschaft, which appears regularly and defends their interests" (Von Fuersten und An deren Sterblichen, by Hans von Tresckow, p. 110. F. Fontane & Co. Berlin. 1922) [Igra:27f].

Magnus Hirschfeld and the SHC

Ulrichs' successor Magnus Hirschfeld was a prominent Jewish physician and homosexual. Dr. Hirschfeld, along with two other homosexuals, Max Spohr and Erich Oberg, joined together to form the Wissenschaftlich-Humanitaeres Komitee ("Scientific-Humanitarian Committee"). As we have noted, the SHC was dedicated to two goals: 1) to carry on Ulrichs' philosophy and works and 2) to work for the legitimization of homosexuality by the German public via the repeal of Paragraph 175, the German law which criminalized homosexual conduct (Steakley:23f). Homosexualist historian Richard Plant writes,

Magnus Hirschfeld

It would be hard to overestimate Hirschfeld's importance...He became the leader of several psychological and medical organizations, the founder of a unique institute for sexual research...He also founded the 'Yearbook for Intersexual Variants,' which he edited until 1923 (Plant: 28-29).

Hirschfeld was originally committed to Ulrichs' "third sex" theory but he later abandoned this idea. Still, Hirschfeld remained true to many of the rest of Ulrichs' theories, building upon them through the work of the Scientific-Humanitarian Committee, whose efforts he directed toward the political goal of decriminalizing homosexuality. Hirschfeld coined the term "transvestite," which has become the accepted label for both men and women who compulsively costume themselves as members of the opposite sex (J. Katz:210).

The SHC circulated petitions among German intellectuals and politicians calling for the abolition of Paragraph 175. Due to Hirschfeld's ground work in creating a positive public image, these petitioning efforts met with increasing success. But for all the appearance of dignity and scientific impartiality which it displayed to German society, the SHC offered a far different perspective to those who saw it from within. Hans Blueher, whose contribution to the German homosexual movement is chronicled later in this study, once visited Hirschfeld at the SHC. The meeting was precipitated by Hirschfeld's offer to write the foreword to Blueher's book describing homosexuality in the Wandervoegel. Blueher writes,

I was led into the study of the "Wise Man of Berlin" (as he was called)...Sitting on a silk-covered fauteuil, legs under him like a Turk, was an individual with bloated lips and cunning, dimly coveting eyes who offered me a fleshy hand and introduced himself as Dr. Hirschfeld...[Later in a meeting of the SHC] the first to greet me was a corporal with a deep bass voice; he was, however, wearing women's clothes... "A so-called transvestite!" commented Dr. Hirschfeld, whose nick name was "Aunt Magnesia," and introduced us...Then a most beautiful youth appeared..."A hermaphrodite!" said Hirschfeld. "Why don't you come to me during my office hours tomorrow, you can see him naked then"...An older gentleman man in his sixties...recited a poem...to a sixteen year old youth, full of yearning...I turned to Laurent, who was the only kindred spirit in this pack of lemurs, "Tell me, haven't you noticed that we're in a downright brothel here?" (Blueher in Mills:160f).

Blueher's disgust with Hirschfeld and the SHC was representative of the attitude of the masculine homosexual camp. But at this stage of the conflict, the "Fems" were fully in control and enjoyed what support there was in German society for the homosexual political cause. The SHC's "scientific" focus lent an air of legitimacy to its political goals that the masculine group could not achieve. Yet it was a strategy that would ultimately backfire on the "Fems." Sociologist David Greenberg writes that Ulrichs' third-sex theory "was a controversial strategy among German homosexual activists; those in the anti-feminist wing of the movement viewed male homosexuality as an expression of male superiority and considered the Ulrichs-Hirschfeld position insulting" (Greenberg: 410).

Hoping to use the argument that homosexuality is congenital to justify its decriminalization, Hirschfeld tried desperately to legitimize his "third-sex" theory and homosexuality generally (ibid.:410). He formed the Sex Research Institute of Berlin, which opened its doors on July 1, 1919. Its purpose was in part to provide legal services for men arrested for violating Paragraph 175 but also to legitimize the view of homosexuality as a medical condition (Bianco:64). In that same year, Hirschfeld produced the first pro-homosexual film "Anders als die Andern" (Different from the Others) in which he appeared briefly (ibid.).

The Sex Research Institute, housed in a Berlin mansion purchased by Hirschfeld, assimilated the SHC's massive collection of books, photographs and medical documents and began a campaign to make it self "respectable" in German society. According to Plant, "attending physicians offerred various kinds of sexual counseling...treated people for venereal diseases...[and gave] advice on abortion procedures.” The fact that many Nazi leaders were treated at the Sex Research Institute led the Institute’s Assistant Director, Ludwig L. Lenz, to conclude that its destruction by the Nazis in 1933 was for the purpose of destroying evidence of Nazi perversions (see above).

For many years the Scientific-Humanitarian Committee was the largest and most influential homosexual organization in the German “gay rights” movement. In 1914, it had one thousand members (Steakley:60). But homosexuality in Germany was much more prevalent than the size of the membership of the SHC would suggest. Not surprisingly, one of the early goals of the SHC was to find out how many homosexuals there were in the German population. In what may have been the world’s first survey of its kind, the SHC distributed 6611 questionnaires to Berlin students and factory workers in 1903. The results were published the following year in the Jahrbuch (“Yearbook”) and showed that 2.2% of the German male population admitted to being homosexual (ibid.:33).

The New Hellenes

At the same time that Ulrichs and Hirschfeld were promulgating their theories of male homosexuality as an expression of femininity, a rival group of homosexuals was reaching into antiquity for its own “masculine” philosophy. As homosexual scholar Hubert Kennedy writes in Man/Boy Love in the Writings of Karl Heinrich Ulrichs:

Happily, some boy-lovers were already speaking out in opposition to Hirschfeld in Berlin at the beginning of this century...[Der Gemeinschaft] Der Eigene, mostly bisexual and/or boy-lovers, opposed the “third sex” view of homosexuality. Seeing the “love of friends” as a mas-

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos
and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Hel lenism-inspired statue in the House of Ger man Art is part of a tour of Berlin given to Mus so lini by Adolf Hit ler in 1937.

line virtue, they urged a re birth of the Greek ideal (Kennedy:17f).

This “Greek ideal” was a cul ture of pederastic male supremacy. Male homosexuality, especially between men and boys, was con sid ered a vir tue in Hel lenic (Greek) so ci ety. In sev eral of his Dialogues, Plato serves as an apol o gist for ped er asty, and ap par ently con sid ered man/boy sex to be su pe rior to heterosexual relations. As author Eva Cantarella notes in Bisexuality in the Ancient World, “Plato makes clear in the Symposium that it was perfectly ac cept able to court a lad, and ad mi ra ble to win him...Ped er asty did not lurk in the shad ows of Greek life, it was out in the open” (Greenberg:148, 151). Cantarella re views the lit er a ture of the pe riod, in clud ing Plato’s writ ings. She writes that Plato developed a theory “of the ex is tence of two dif fer ent types of love: the love in spired by the heav enly Aph ro dite, and the love in spired by the com mon Aph ro dite.” Only “pederastic court ship,” notes Cantarella, re flected the “heavenly” form of love (Cantarella:59). In his Sym po sium, Plato ex pounds this the ory:

[Ho mo sex ual] boys and lads are the best of their gen era tion, be cause they are the most manly. Some peo ple say they are shame less, but they are wrong. It is not shame less ness which in spires their be hav ior, but high spirit and man li ness and vi ril ity, which leads them to wel come the so ci ety of their own kind. A strik ing proof of this is that such boys alone, when they reach maturity engage in pub li c life. When they grow to be men, they be come lov ers of boys, and it re quires the com pul sion of con ven tion to over come their natu ral dis in cli na tion to mar riage and procreation; they are quite content to live with one an other un wed (ibid.:60).

Cantarella writes that “[t]he gen der which at tracted and tempted Soc ra tes was the male sex” as well. She cites another of Plato's dialogues in which Socrates falls in love with Cydias, a school boy, proclaiming "[I] caught fire, and could possess my self no longer" (ibid.:56ff).

Voltaire may have had both of these men in mind when he once remarked of the propensity of classical philosophers, "Once, a philosopher, twice, a sodomite!" (Grant, 1993:28). To be fair, however, the characterizations of Plato and Socrates as pederasts is hotly contested by many historians.

In the defense of the philosophers it must be noted that Plato, whose writings provide our only evidence for speculating on the life of either man, wrote mostly in dialogue. It is thus difficult to know to what extent he agreed with the ideas expressed by his characters. It should also be noted here that in his last work, the Laws, Plato asserted the value of the family and the moral wrongness of homosexuality (Laws: 841A-841D). Still, based on the fact that homosexual pederasty was widely practiced and accepted in Greece and that Plato based The Republic (his vision of "utopian" society -- addressed later in this book) upon the Spartan homosexual military cult, the authors believe that in his earlier life Plato was at least an apologist for pederasty and may in deed have practiced this perversion himself.

What remains most relevant to this study (and is confirmed by Plato) is that the Greek military establishment enthusiastically embraced homosexuality. Here we find the model for the new Hellenes -- an ultramasculine, male supremacist, homoerotic warrior cult. The armies of Thebes, Sparta and Crete were each examples of this phenomenon (as are the modern Islamist terror groups). Cantarella notes that the ancient historian, Plutarch of Chaeronea (50-120 A.D.) wrote of "the sacred battalion" of Thebans made up of 150 male homosexual pairs (Cantarella:72), and of the legendary Spartan army, which inducted all twelve-year-old boys into military service where they were "entrusted to lovers chosen among the best men of adult age.” Plutarch also reports of a Cretan military induction ritual in which boys were abducted and sexually enslaved for a period of two months by adult pederasts before receiving their “military kit” (ibid.:7). This last perversion undoubtedly inspired or was inspired by the Greek myth of Ganymede. Author Jason Berry sheds some light on this apparent derivation:

Rembrandt's Rape of Ganymede depicts the pederasty of Zeus (in the form of an eagle).

Certain gods practiced man-boy love as did the bisexual male aristocracy; the armies of Thebes and Sparta were charged with homosexuality as a fire of the male power drive. Pagans in the late [Roman] Empire adulated gods like Zeus, who abducted and raped Ganymede — a living myth that one philosopher denounced for influencing those men who ran “marketplaces of immorality and...infamous resorts for the young for every kind of corrupt pleasure” (Berry:200f).

It is possible that the term “gay” is derived from this mythical Greek figure, Ganymede, cup-bearer of the gods, who exemplified the concept of man/boy sex to the masculine homosexuals. The British term “catamite,” meaning the submissive partner in a male homosexual relationship, is derived from the Roman version of Ganymede, Catamitus. The terms “gay” and “lesbian” (the latter derived from the name of the Isle of Lesbos in Greece) eventually re-

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Nazi parade features Greek theme.

placed the terms Urning and Dailing as the names of choice for homosexuals.

In ancient Greece, as in the masculine homosexual faction in Germany, only the masculine form of homosexuality was esteemed and all things feminine were despised. The form of homosexuality which dominated Greek culture was ultramasculine and militaristic. It can be assumed that women, as well as men who identified with womanly traits and thinking, were considered naturally inferior to the elite pederasts. Cantarella writes that Plato, in Timaeus, went so far as to theorize that women were the reincarnations of men who had “lived badly” in a previous life (Cantarella:58).

As we will see, the revival of Hellenic paganism became a fundamental aspect of the Nazi identity. In Nationalism and Sexuality, historian George L. Mosse notes its significance: “The Greek youth, an important national symbol in the past, reigned supreme during the Third Reich. Hitler's own taste was influenced by the neo-classical revival...[which often included] pictures of nude youth...not unlike those of boys bathing" (Mosse:172). But the Nazis adopted more than just symbolism from the "boy-lovers" who reasserted the Greek ideal; their ideas and philosophies are indelibly stamped on the Nazi regime.

The influence of the Greek homosexuals on Nazi culture is perhaps explained best by contemporary German psychoanalyst, Wilhelm Reich in his 1933 classic, The Mass Psychology of Fascism:

Among the ancient Greeks, whose written history does not begin until patriarchy has reached a state of full development, we find the following sexual organization: male supremacy...and along with this the wives leading an enslaved and wretched existence and figuring solely as birth machines. The male supremacy of the Platonic era is entirely homosexual...The same principle governs the fascist ideology of the male strata of Nazi leaders (Blüher, Roehm, etc.). For the fascists, therefore, the return of natural sexuality is viewed as a sign of decadence, lawlessness, lechery, and sexual filth...the fascists...affirm the most severe form of patriarchy and actually reactivate the sexual life of the Platonic era in their familial form of living...Rosenberg and Blüher [the leading Nazi ideologists] recognize the state solely as a male state organized on a homosexual basis (Reich:91ff).

The Clash of Cultures

A key to understanding the cause of the German social collapse, which culminated in the atrocities of the Third Reich, is found in the conflict of Hellenic and Hebrew (Judeo-Christian) value systems. This war of philosophies, as old as Western civilization itself, pits the homoeroticism of the Greeks against the marriage-and-family-centered het-erosexuality of the Jews. Johansson and Percy write of this conflict from the homosexualist perspective:

While the Greeks cultivated paiderasteia as a fundamental institution of male society and attribute of gods and heroes, in two centuries, under Persian rule (538-332 B.C.), Biblical Judaism came to reject and penalize male homosexuality in all forms. Jewish religious consciousness deeply internalized this taboo, which became a distinctive feature of Judaic sexual morality, setting the worshippers of the god of Israel apart from the gentiles whose idols they despised. This divergence set the stage for the confrontation between Judaism and Hellenism (Johansson and Percy:34).

In implying that the rejection of homosexuality by the Jews began in this time period, Johansson and Percy ignore the Biblical record, but they are correct that the Jews' opposition to homosexuality was a central factor in their hostility to the Greeks. They continue (some what bitterly), describing the context in which the first clash of these value systems occurred:

At the heart of the "sodomization" lies the Judaic rejection of Hellenism and paiderasteia, one of the distinctive features of the culture brought by the Greek conquerors of Asia Minor. It is a fundamental, ineluctable clash of values within what was destined to become Western civilization. Only in the Maccabean era did the opposition to Hellenization and everything Hellenic lead to the intense, virtually paranoid hatred and condemnation of male homosexuality, a hatred that Judaism bequeathed to the nascent Christian church (ibid.:36).

In his article "Homosexuality and the Maccabean Revolt," Catholic scholar Patrick G. D. Riley also identifies homosexuality as the focal point of conflict between the Jews and the Greeks. The Greek King, Antiochus, had ordered that all the na tions of his em pire be “welded... into a single people” (Riley:14). This created a crisis for the Jews, forc ing them to choose be tween faith ful ness to Bib li cal com mand ments (at the risk of mar tyr dom) and par tic i pa tion in a range of desecra tions from “the sacrific ing of pigs and the worship ing of idols, to ‘leaving their sons uncircum sized, and prostitu ting them selves to all kinds of im pu rity and abom i na tion’ (1 Macc. 1:49-51)” (ibid.:14).

The Greeks also built one of their gymnasia in Je ru sa lem, which “at tracted the no blest young men of Is rael...sub du ing them un der the petaso” (emphasis ours -- 2 Macc. 4:12). In the tra di tional Latin trans la tion the above phrase is ren dered “to put in broth els” (Riley:15). The gymnasia were no to ri ous through out the an cient world for their as so ci a tion with ho mo sex ual prac tices. In fact, Flaceliere con cludes from Plu tarch’s writ ings that from the be gin ning of its ac cep tance in Greece, “the de vel op ment of ho mo sex u al ity was con nected to the rise of gym na sia...[which usu ally con tained] not only a statue or Hermes, but also one of Eros” (Flaceliere:65).

The ten sions which led to the Jew ish re volt were ex ac er bated when the Jew ish high priest, a Hel le nist him self, of fered a sac ri fice to Heracles (Her cu les), who was a Greek sym bol of ho mo sex ual ity. Riley adds, “The Jew ish tem ple it self be came the scene of pa gan sac ri fi cial meals and sex ual orgies [includ ing ho mo sex ual ity].” The fi nal insult (for which Antiochus is iden ti fied in the Bi ble as the arch e type of the antichrist) “was the in stal la tion in the tem ple of a pa gan sym bol, pos si bly a rep resen ta tion of Zeus [Baal], called by a sar donic pun ‘the abom ination of desolation’” (Riley.:16).

In the ensu ing re li gious re volt, the Mac ca bees “pre served what would be come the moral char ter of Chris ten dom, just as in de fend ing mar riage they saved what would be the very ma te rial of its con struc tion, namely, the fam ily” (ibid.:17). Yet, though they pre served the Judeo-Christian sexual ethic, the Maccabees did not vanquish Greek philosophy as a rival social force. Of the two irreconcilable belief systems, the Judeo-Christian one would prevail, allowing the development of what we know to day as Western culture; yet Hellenism survived.

Adolf Brand and the "Community of the Elite"

One of the earliest leaders of the masculine homosexual counter-movement in Germany, himself a Hellenist, was Adolf Brand. In 1896, one year before Magnus Hirschfeld formed the Scientific-Humanitarian Committee, young Adolf Brand began publishing the world's first homosexual serial publication, Der Eigene ("The Elite"). [The word Eigene, eye'-gen-eh, can be roughly translated "queer," which may shed some light on the derivation of this term in English, but we have chosen the translation used most often by his torians because it emphasizes the elitist philosophy of Der Eigene's authors.]

Besides being militantly pro-homosexual, Der Eigene was racist, nationalistic and anti-Semitic. Mosse writes,

Cover of Der Eigene magazine.

The use of racism to gain respectability was a constant theme of the first homosexual journal in Germany, Der Eigene...Even before the paper published a supplement called Rasse und Schönheit (Race and Beauty) in 1926, Germanic themes had informed much of its fiction, as well as images of naked boys and young men photographed against a background of Germanic nature. One poem, written by Brand himself and entitled, "The Superman," praised manliness, condemned femininity, and toyed with anti-Semitism, apparently because of the poet's quarrel with Magnus Hirschfeld, a rival for leadership of the homosexual rights movement (Mosse:42).

Brand's stated market for Der Eigene was men who "thirst for a revival of Greek times and Hellenic standards of beauty after centuries of Christian barbarism" (Brand in Oosterhuis and Kennedy:3).

In 1903 Brand was briefly jailed as a child pornographer for publishing pictures of nude boys in the magazine, but nevertheless Der Eigene remained in publication until 1931, peaking at over 150,000 subscriptions during the years of the Weimar Republic [1919-1933] (Mosse:42). In addition to Der Eigene, Brand published a satirical journal Die Tante ("The Fairy" or "The Auntie") which often ridiculed Hirschfeld and his assistants (Oosterhuis and Kennedy:6).

On May 1, 1902, Brand and two pederasts, Wilhelm Jansen and Benedict Friedlander, formed the Gemeinschaft der Eigenen ("Community of the Elite"). Its leading theorist was Friedlander (1866-1908), author of Renaissance des Eros Uranios ("Renaissance of Uranian Erotica"), a 1904 publication which featured a picture of a Greek youth on the cover. Friedlander wrote that the Community wanted to carry out the goals of the lesbian and radical feminist Dr. Helene Stocker who wanted German society to revert to pagan values. Friedlander writes,

Title page and cover picture from Benedict Friedlander's Renaissance of Uranian Erotica, 1904. The sub-title reads: "Physiological friendship, a normal fundamental drive of men, and a question of male freedom of association in natural science, natural rights, cultural-history and moral criticism."

The positive goal...is the revival of Hellenic chivalry and its recognition by society. By chivalric love we mean in particular close friendships between youths and even more particularly the bonds between men of unequal ages (B. Friedlander:259).

According to James Steakley in The Homosexual Emancipation Movement in Germany:

The Community looked to ancient Greece and Renaissance Italy as model civilizations and argued that Christian asceticism was responsible for the demise of homosexual relations. Friedlander, who was married, advocated pedophile relations combined with family life, and Brand contrasted his journal with Hirschfeld's Jahrbuch by saying he wanted to show "more of the Hellenic side of things" (Steakley:43).

Steakley goes on to show how the Community supported the work of Elisar von Kupffer, a "Butch" homosexual and an advocate of "Greek love," who strongly attacked the Scientific-Humanitarian Committee as pseudo-scientific (Steakley:46).

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the bookstore,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfr/c/showproducts.php.

In Homosexuality and Male Bonding in Pre-Nazi Germany, Oosterhuis and Kennedy write that "Kupffer stated in a letter of 25 December 1925 to Brand that the word 'homosexual' was repugnant to him, because it reminded him of the 'fairies' in Hirschfeld's Committee, and he requested Brand never to mention his name in such a context" (Oosterhuis and Kennedy:34).

Friedlander described heterosexuals and effeminate homosexuals as Kummerlings (puny beings). The Ulrichs-Hirschfeld school believed that both homosexuality and heterosexuality were equal and legitimate forms of sexual love. However, the Brand-Friedlander school believed that eros (sexual love) had a rising scale of worth, with heterosexuality at the bottom and pederasty at the top. Steakley writes, "For the Community, however, heterosexual relations were relegated to purely procreative ends and the esthetic superiority of pedophile relations was asserted" (Steakley:46). In other words, heterosexuals were valued only as "breeders."

Friedlander also quoted from Gustav Jager who argued that, in contrast to the "Fems," masculine homosexuals were Uebermaenner (supermen), superior to heterosexuals because they were even more masculine (Oosterhuis and Kennedy:87). Some of the pederasts of the Community of the Elite did not consider themselves homosexuals at all, declaring the "love of friends" and homosexuality two different phenomena (ibid.:86).

Friedlander for a time was a member of both the Community of the Elite and the SHC. A review of his articles written for the SHC reveal that he endeavored to convince the members of the group that they were not going far enough: the SHC simply wanted the "right to privacy," but the Community of the Elite wanted a complete transformation of Germany from a Judeo-Christian society to a Greco-Uranian one. But the leadership of the SHC was never convinced. The two philosophies were just too different. In 1906 Friedlander left the SHC and, hoping to discredit Hirschfeld, strongly hinted that Hirschfeld and other leaders of the SHC had mismanaged the Committee's funds. But this was not the real reason for his departure. Steakley writes,

The membership of the Community realized that the Committee's petition, which called for the legalization of same-sex relations only between those over the age of sixteen, neglected their interests. They were also affronted by Hirschfeld's personal effeminacy and his sweeping classification of all homosexuals in one category [as "Fems"] (Steakley:47f).

After his falling-out with Hirschfeld and the leaders of the SHC, Friedlander continued to try to sway its members regarding pederasty as well as to attract its financial supporters to the Community of the Elite. In 1907, Friedlander published an article in Der Eigene with a long but revealing title: "Memoirs for the Friends and Contributors of the Scientific-Humanitarian Committee in the Name of the Succession of the Scientific-Humanitarian Committee." In the article, Friedlander said that the Greek "love of youth" (pederasty) was the cause of Paragraph 175. He said that the law was not enacted because of men, but rather because of their jealous wives and mistresses who viewed young boys "as a kind of unfair competition" (Journal of Homosexuality, Jan.-Feb. 1991). In the same article Friedlander writes,

Let us just understand that no one can be a good educator who does not love his pupils! And let us not lie to ourselves that in love the so-called "spiritual" element can ever be completely detached from its physiological foundation. It is an eternal verity: only a good pederast can be a complete pedagogue (Friedlander in Oosterhuis and Kennedy:77ff).

Benedict Friedlander died in 1908 at the age of 42, but his influence on the German homosexual movement endured. In 1934, just one year after Adolf Hitler came to power, a man named Kurt Hildebrandt echoed Friedlander's views in a book titled Norm Entartung Verfall ("Ideal - Degeneration - Ruin"). In 1934 Hildebrandt was a leader in the Society for Human Rights (SHR), a spinoff of the Community of the Elite. He referred to Friedlander as his "master" and asserted that Greek pederasty had led to "an enhancement of masculinity" (Steakley:49). In Norm Entartung Verfall, Hildebrandt presents the Brand-Friedlander theory that masculine homosexuals are the ideal; a master race of beings, and that effeminate homosexuals are, in fact, degenerations of the ideal. Hildebrandt declares that the masculine type is the one that "Nature" intended to rule the world, but that the effeminate types were freaks of nature who would bring any Hellenic society to destruction. Hildebrandt writes,

It is incomprehensible that these forms should be confused with that type of homosexuality about which such a ruckus is made to day. The latter arises contrarily in groups of effeminate men; it counteracts military and intellectual manliness...and is certain of ruin (Hildebrandt :207).

In many ways it is Friedlander's theory of homosexuality that we see implemented in the policies of the Nazis. Although there were obvious exceptions made for political reasons, there is evidence to suggest that only the effeminate homosexuals were mistreated under the Nazi regime -- and usually at the hands of masculine homosexuals. (We will consider the internment of "Roehm's Avengers" -- "Butch" homosexuals of the SA interned in the wake of the Roehm purge -- in a later section). Some historians, such as James Steakley, see Friedlander's influence in Adolf Hitler's own philosophy of homosexuality as well. Steakley writes, Hitler, on the other hand, was the Nazi visionary...and there is a truly striking affinity between his views on homo sexual ity and those of Friedlander and [Hans] Blüher. These male supremacists wanted to create a new Hellas peopled by strong, naked, but chaste men, inspired by heroism and capable of leadership (Steakley:119).

The Rift Widens

It is clear that Adolf Brand's Community of the Elite wanted nothing to do with Ulrichs' theory of anima muliebris in corpore virili inclusa ("a female soul confined in a male body"). They perceived themselves as fully masculine and despised everything female and effeminate. For many years, Ulrichs' "Fem" faction had dominated the German homosexual movement. But during this time, the rift between the "Butches" and the "Fems" grew increasingly wider as the revival of Hellenic pagan values began to transform German society.

As early as 1908, Hirschfeld wrote that the scandals and division of opinion between the "Butches" and "Fems" was damaging the homosexual cause in Germany. He criticized the Community of the Elite for being anti-feminist. In 1914, reflecting the increase of tensions, Hirschfeld characterized the Community of the Elite as "exaggerated side-currents" and "fanatics" (Oosterhuis and Kennedy:24f). At this point Hirschfeld still controlled the movement, but somewhere between 1914 and 1920 the "Butches" became a serious political force themselves. In 1920, they formed the Society for Human Rights. The title seems to lay claim to what had become the Scientific-Humanitarian Committee's trademark: political activism under the banner of "gay rights." Two years later the new SHR published the following, now militant, call to arms:

We no longer want only a few scientists [i.e., Hirschfeld et al.] struggling for our cause, we want to demonstrate our strength ourselves. Here we stand, demanding that which is our right — and who would dare challenge us?

For this rea son we must work stead ily and eve ry one must take their part in our work. No ho mo sex ual should be ab sent -- rich or poor, worker or scholar, dip lo mat or busi nessman. We cannot deprive ourselves of any support. There fore join us, swell our ranks bef ore it is too late. At Easter we must show whether we have developed into a fighting organization or just a social club. He who does not march with us is against us (Steak ley:76f).

Here we can see the mili ta ris tic tone of the “Butch” fac tion and sense its eagerness to wrest control of the move ment from the SHC. Jonathan Katz records, in Gay American History, that “[the SHR became] the largest of the Gay groups in Germany during the 1920s, one that aimed at being a ‘mass’ organization, and it criticized Hirschfeld’s scientific approach” (J. Katz:632). Bear in mind that these were also the early years of the Nazi Party, an or gani za tion which shared some found ing mem bers with the SHR. Increasingly, the Nazi Party became the vehicle with which the “Butches” opposed Hirschfeld. In July of 1927, after a Nazi Party member made a speech attacking the SHC, Hirschfeld wrote in the SHC news let ter, “We further feel obliged to ur gently re quest of our nu mer ous mem bers in the Na tional So cial ist Ger man Work ers Party...that they vig or ously call their dele gates [to the Reichstag] to or der” (Steakley:91). The rather desperate tone of Hirschfeld’s complaint reflects the reality that his faction had by this time lost con trol.

To some ex tent, the ho mo sex u als of the SHC may have brought on themselves the later wrath of the Nazis. In the 1920s and 30s the political enemies of the Nazis used the Na zis’ ho mo sex ual scan dals against them, hurt ing the party’s effort to gain legitimacy. Stories were printed in the newspapers containing “inside” information about ho mo sexual activities among the Nazi leaders. The most note worthy ex am ple of this tac tic was when docu men ta tion of Ernst Roehm’s pro cliv ity for boys, in the form of hand writ-

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

The Nazi Party was repeatedly damaged by disclosures to the newspapers about homosexuality in its ranks. The leaks came from its enemies in the effeminate faction of the German "gay" movement.
 Yad Vashem

ten letters from Roehm himself, was leaked to the Social Democrat newspapers (Oosterhuis and Kennedy:239n).

The Social Democrat Party, of course, was the home of many of the effeminate homosexuals, which the Nazis well knew. It is likely that they suspected some of the inside information against them had come from Hirschfeld's camp. This was probably an accurate surmise. Steakley writes that "Hirschfeld was later sorely discredited within the homosexual community of Germany when it was revealed that he at least occasionally 'leaked' information on homosexuals to the press" (Steakley:64).

This may help to explain why the Nazis bore such enmity against the "Fems," and why they targeted certain of these homosexuals for persecution. However, the Nazis needed no special justification for revenge. The fact that the SHC had made opposition to pederasty an essential tenet of their political strategy was enough. Though not a Nazi, the "Butch" homosexual poet, Stefan George, summed up the attitude of the anti-Hirschfeld camp, saying, "It should be apparent that we have nothing to do with those far from charming people who whimper for the repeal of certain laws, for the most revolting attacks against us [pederasts] have issued from precisely these circles" (George in Steakley:49).

As we can see, understanding the "gay rights" movement in Germany is essential to a complete understanding of the formation of the Nazi Party and the policies of the Third Reich. In turn, understanding the German "gay rights" movement requires an appreciation of the rivalry between the two distinct homosexual factions: the Ulrichs/Hirschfeld "Fems" and the Brand /Friedlander/ Roehm "Butches." Their contest for domination of the "gay rights" movement ended when the "Butches" of the Nazi Party came to power in 1933 and began to construct the Third Reich. They had realized their dream of a revived Hellenic culture of ultramasculine militarism, a dream that was to prove a night mare for all those who fell short of the Nazi ideal.

Hans Blueher and the Wandervoegel

"In Germany," writes Mosse, "ideas of homosexuality as the basis of a better society can be found at the turn of the century within the German Youth Movement" (Mosse:87). In deed, at the same time that Brand and Friedlander were beginning to articulate their dream of a neo-Hellenic Germany to the masses, a youthful subculture of boys and young men was already beginning to act out its basic themes under the leadership of men like Karl Fischer, Wilhelm Jan sen and youth leader Hans Blue her. In Sexual Experience Between Men and Boys, homosexualist historian Parker Ross man writes,

In Central Europe...there was another effort to revive the Greek ideal of pederasty, in the movement of Wandering Youth [Wandervoegel]. Modern gay-homosexuality also can trace some of its roots to that movement of men and boys who wandered around the countryside, hiking and singing hand-in-hand, enjoying nature, life together, and their sexuality. Ultimately Hitler used and transformed the movement — much as the Romans had abused the paidierastia of the ancient Greeks — expanding and building upon its romanticism as a basis for the Nazi Party (Rossman:103).

Another homosexualist, Richard Mills, explains in Gay Roots: Twenty Years of Gay Sunshine how the Wandervoegel movement traces its roots to an informal hiking and camping society of young men started in 1890 by a fifteen-year-old student named Hermann Hoffman. For several years the open-air life style of these boys grew increasingly popular. They developed their own form of greeting, the “Heil” salute, and “much of the vocabulary...[which] was later appropriated by the Nazis” (Mills:168). Early in its development, the movement attracted the attention of homosexual men, including the pederasts who belonged to the Community of the Elite. In 1901 a teacher by the name of Karl Fischer (who, as we have mentioned, called himself der Fuehrer) formalized the movement under the name Wandervoegel (Koch:25, Mills:153).

Hans Blueher, then just seventeen years old, organized the most ambitious Wandervoegel excursion to that date in 1905. It was on this trip that Blueher met Wilhelm Jansen, one of the original founders of the Community of the Elite. At this time the Wandervoegel numbered fewer than one hundred young men, but eventually the number of youths involved in Wandervoegel-type groups in Europe reached 60,000.

Wilhelm Jansen became an influential leader in the Wandervoegel, but rumors of his homosexuality disturbed German society. In 1911, Jansen addressed the issue in a circular to Wandervoegel parents. Jansen told them, "As long as they conduct themselves properly with your sons, you will have to accustom yourselves to the presence of so-called homosexuals in your ranks" (Mills:167). Hans Blueher further substantiated the fact that the movement had become a vehicle for homosexual recruitment of boys with his publication of The German Wandervoegel Movement as an Erotic Phenomenon in 1914 (Rec tor:39f). Mills writes, [T]he Wandervoegel offered youth the chance to escape bourgeois German society by retreating back to nature...But how was this accomplished? What made it possible for the lifestyle created within the Wandervoegel to differ significantly from its bourgeois parent? The answer is simple: the Wandervoegel was founded upon homosexual, as opposed to heterosexual sentiments ...In order to understand the success of the movement, one must acknowledge the homosexual component of its leaders...Just as the leaders were attracted to the boys, so were the boys attracted to their leaders. In both cases the attraction was sexually based (Mills 152-53).

Blueher's The German Wandervoegel Movement as an Erotic Phenomenon advocated pederasty.

Like many of the “Butch” homosexuals Blueher had married but only for the purpose of procreation. “Woe to the man who has placed his fate in the hands of a woman,” he wrote. “Woe to the civilization that is subjected to womens’ influence” (Blueher in Igra:95).

Foreshadowing the Nazi regime, Blueher “saw male bonding as crucial to the formation of male elites,” writes homosexualist historian Warren Johansson. “The discipline, the comradeship, the willingness of the individual to sacrifice himself for the nation -- all these are determined by the homoerotic infrastructure of the male society” (Johansson:816). Mills adds that Blueher “believed that male homosexuality was the foundation upon which all forms of nation-states are built” (Mills:152). Blueher called his hypothetical political figures “heroic males,” meaning self-accepting masculine homosexuals. It is precisely this concept of the “heroic male” that prompts Steakley to compare Adolf Hitler’s views to those of Blueher and Friedlander.

But this is not the only instance in which the views of Blueher and Friedlander coincide. Like Friedlander, Blueher believed that homosexuals were the best teachers of children. “There are five sexual types of men, ranging from the exclusively heterosexual to the exclusively homosexual,” writes Blueher. “The exclusive heterosexual is the one least suited to teach young people...[but exclusive homosexuals] are the focal point of all youth organizations” (ibid.:154).

Blueher was also anti-Semitic. In writing about his visit with Magnus Hirschfeld and the SHC, Blueher denigrated Hirschfeld’s egalitarian views, complaining that “concepts like rank, race, physiology... things of importance to me -- were simply not applicable in this circle.” Igra adds that “[a]ccording to Blueher, Germany was defeated [in W.W.I] because the homosexualist way of life (die maennerbuendische Weltanschauung) had been considerably neglected and war like virtues had degenerated under the advance of democratic ideas, the increasing prestige of family life...the growing influence of women “and, above all, the Jews” (emphasis ours -- Igra:97).

Importantly, Blueher's hostility towards the Jews was not primarily based on a racial theory but on their rejection of homosexuality. Igra writes, Soon after the defeat [of Germany in W.W.I] Blueher delivered a lecture to a group of Wandervoegel, which he himself had founded. The lecture was entitled “The German Reich, Jewry and Socialism.” He said: ‘There is no people whose destiny...so closely resembles ours as that of the Jews.’ The Jews were conquered by the Romans, lost their State and became only a race whose existence is maintained through the family. The primary cause of this collapse, he says, was that the Jews had failed to base their State on the homoerotic male community and had staked all on the family life, with its necessary concomitant of women's encouragement of the civic and social and spiritual virtues in their men folk rather than the war like qualities (ibid.:97).

Though largely neglected by historians, Blueher was enormously important to Nazi culture. Igra writes that in the Third Reich “Blueher...[was] adopted by the Nazis as an apostle of social reform. And one of his disciples, Professor Alfred Bauemler...[became] Director of the Political Institute at the University of Berlin” (ibid.:75). Writing before the collapse of the Third Reich, he adds that “[Blueher's teaching] has been systematically inculcated by the Nazi Press, especially Himmler's official organ, Das Schwarze Korps, and has been adopted in practice as the basis of German social organization. The Nazi élite are being brought up in segregated male communities called Ordensburgen. These are to replace the family as the ground work on which the state is to rest” (Igra:87). The all-male societies of these Ordensburgen (Order Castles) were fashioned after the Wandervoegel.

Through his influence in the Wandervoegel and later as a fascist theoretician, Hans Blueher must be recognized as a major force in the reshaping of Germany. This (and the homosexuality of other Wandervoegel leaders) is acknowledged by homosexualist author Frank Rector:

Blueher's case further explains why many Nazi Gays were attracted to Hitler and his shrill anti-Semitism, for many gentle homosexuals were rabidly anti-Semitic...Gays in the youth movement who espoused anti-Semitism, chauvinism, and the Fuehrer Prinzip (Leader Principle) were not-so-incipient Fascists. They helped create a fertile ground for Hitler's movement and, later, became one of its main sources of adherents....A substantial number of those Wandervoegel leaders were known homosexuals, and many others were allegedly gay (or bisexual) (Rector:40).

From Boy Scouts to Brownshirts

In the introduction to his book The Pink Triangle, homosexual author Richard Plant writes of his own experience in a Wandervoegel-type group called "Rovers." "In such brotherhoods," writes Plant, "a few adolescents had little affairs, misty and romantic sessions around a blazing fire...Other boys...talked openly about 'going with friends' and enjoying it. The leaders of these groups tended to disregard the relationships blossoming around them -- unless they participated" (Plant:3).

Blueher himself described the homosexual quality of the group as follows:

The Wandervoegel movement inspired the youth all around during the first six years of its existence, without awaking the slightest suspicion...towards its own members...Only very seldom might one notice one of the leaders raising questions of why he and his comrades didn't want any girls....[later] the name Wandervoegel was mentioned in the same breath as the words "pederasty club" (Blueher:23f).

Richard Plant's reminiscences also substantiate that the Wandervoegel groups served as a training ground for Nazis. He recalls his friend in the Rovers, "Ferdi, who explained and demonstrated the mysteries of sex to me and my friends." Plant was later shocked, he says, upon returning to Germany from abroad "to see Ferdi wearing a brown shirt with a red, white and black swastika armband" (ibid.:4).

E. Y. Hartshorne, in German Youth and the Nazi Dream of Victory records the recollections of a former Wandervoegel member who confirms that the organization was the source of important elements of Nazi culture. Our knowledge of the influence of the Community of the Elite on the Wandervoegel may provide us insight into the cryptic comment at the end of the testimony:

We little suspected then what power we had in our hands. We played with the fire that had set a world in flames, and it made our hearts hot. Mysticism and everything mystical had dominion over us. It was in our ranks that the word Fuehrer originated, with its meaning of blind obedience and devotion. The word Bund arose with us too, with its mysterious undertone of conspiracy. And I shall never forget how in those early days we pronounced the word Gemeinschaft ["community"] with a trembling throaty note of excitement, as though it hid a deep secret (Hartshorne:12).

In deed, not only did the grown-up former members of the Wandervoegel become one of Hitler's main sources of supporters in his rise to power, but the movement itself be-

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Hitler Youth meeting, January, 1934 in Munich.

came the core of a Nazi institution: the Hitler-Jugend (Hitler Youth). So rampant had homosexuality become in the movement by this time that The Rheinische Zeitung, a prominent German newspaper, warned, “Parents, protect your sons from ‘physical preparations’ in the Hitler Youth,” a sarcastic reference to problems of homosexuality in the organization (Burleigh and Wipperman: 188). Sadly, the boys themselves had by this time been completely indoctrinated by their homosexual masters. Waite writes,

With the exception of Ehrhardt, Gerhard Rossbach, sadist, murderer, and homosexual was the most admired hero of nationalistic German youth. “In Ehrhardt, but also in Rossbach,” says a popular book on the youth movement, “we see the Führer of our youth. These men have become the Ideal Man, idolized...and honored as can only happen when the personality of an individual counts for more than anything else”...the most important single contributor of the pre-Hitler youth movement [was] Gerhard Rossbach (Waite, 1969:210f).

Hans Peter Bleuel, in Sex and Society in Nazi Germany, points out that most of the adult supervisors of the Hitler Youth were also SA officers (who were almost exclusively homosexual). Rector states that Baldur von Schirach, leader of the Hitler Youth organization, was reportedly bisexual (Rector:56). In Germany's National Vice, Jewish historian Samuel Igra confirms this, saying Schirach was arrested by the police for perverse sexual practices and liberated on the intervention of Hitler, who soon afterward made him leader of the Hitler Youth (Igra:72). Igra further states that Schirach was known as "the baby" among the inner perverted clique around Hitler (ibid.:74). Rempel reports that Schirach always surrounded himself with a guard of handsome young men (Rempel:88). Psychiatrist Walter Langer in his 1943 secret wartime report, The Mind of Adolf Hitler, also writes of Schirach's reputed homosexuality (Langer:99).

Baldur von Schirach was the head of the Hitler Youth.

In 1934, the Gestapo reported forty cases of pederasty in just one troop of the Hitler Youth. Bleuel writes of the case of one supervisor, a 20-year-old man who was dismissed from the Hitler Youth in 1938. Yet he was transferred to the National Socialist Flying Corps (Civil Air Patrol) “and was assigned to supervise work by members of the Hitler Youth Gliding Association and eventually detained to help with physical check-ups — a grievous temptation. The man was once again caught sodomizing young men, but was not dismissed from the NSFK” (the National Socialist Flying Corps) - Bleuel:119).

Conditions were essentially the same in 1941. Bleuel reports of another homosexual flying instructor involved in “at least ten cases of homosexuality with student pilots of the Hitler Youth” and “a student teacher and student ...[who] had committed twenty-eight proven acts of indecency with twenty boys at Hitler Youth and Young Folk camps” (ibid.:119). He adds that “[t]hese cases were only the tip of the iceberg, for few misdemeanors within the Party became public in later years and even fewer came to trial” (ibid.:119).

The prevalence of homosexuality in the Hitler Youth is also confirmed by historian Gerhard Rempel in his book Hitler's Children: Hitler Youth and the SS:

Homosexuality, meanwhile, continued on into the war years when Hitler Jugend boys frequently became victims of molestations at the hands of their SS tutors; Himmler consistently took a hard line against it publicly but was quite willing to mitigate his penalties privately and keep every incident as secret as possible (Rempel:51f).

This last quote from Rempel raises two important points which will be addressed at greater length later in the book, but deserve at least some mention here. The first point is that Heinrich Himmler, who is often cited as being representative of the Nazi regime's alleged hatred of homosexuals, was obviously not overly concerned about homosexual occurrences in the ranks of his own organization. The second point is that this homosexual activity continued long after Hitler had supposedly purged homosexuals from the Nazi regime (in 1934) and promoted strict policies against homosexuality (from 1935 on). As we shall see later, these policies were primarily for public relations and were largely unenforced.

An interesting side line to the story of the Hitler Youth illustrates both the control of the youth movement by pederasts and the fundamental relationship between homosexuality and Nazism. In Great Britain, the pro-Nazis formed the Anglo-German Fellowship (AGF). The AGF was headed by British homosexuals Guy Francis de Moncy Burgess and Captain John Robert Macnamara. British Historian John Rempel relates how Burgess, Macnamara and J.H. Sharp, the Church of England's Arch-deacon for Southern Europe, took a trip to Germany to attend a Hitler Youth camp. Costello writes,

In the spring of 1936, the trio set off for the Rhineland, accompanied by Macnamara's friend Tom Wylie, a young official in the War Office. Ostensibly they were escorting a group of pro-fascist school boys to a Hitler Youth camp. But from Burgess' uproariously bawdy account of how his companions discovered that the Hitler Jugend satisfied their sexual and political passions, the trip would have shocked their sponsors -- the Foreign Relations Council of the Church of England (Costello: 300).

In pre-World War II France, the pro-Nazi faction was represented by the Radical-Socialist Party (RSP) and the Popular Party (PP). The Secretary-General of the RSP was Edouard Pfeiffer. Costello writes of Guy Burgess' visit to Pfeiffer in Paris shortly before the war:

As a connoisseur of homosexual decadence, Pfeiffer had few equals, even in Paris. As an officer of the French Boy-Scout movement, his private life was devoted to the seduction of youth. Burgess discovered all this when he visited Pfeiffer's apartment in Paris and found...[him] with a naked young man...he explained to Burgess that the young man was a professional cyclist, who just happened to be a member of Jacques Doriot's Popular Party (ibid.:315).

Once again we see flagrant sexual perversion in the heart of the Nazi movement -- long after the Roehm Purge. It appears also that the correlation between Nazism and homosexuality disregarded national boundaries. As we have seen, both Hans Blueher and Benedict Friedlander observed that youth organizations are often (in their view, appropriately) led by pederasts. Events in Europe during the first part of the twentieth century, particularly those involving the National Socialists, strongly support this theory.

The revival of Hellenic culture in the German homosexual movement, then, was an integral factor in the rise of Nazism. Right under the nose of traditional German society, the pederasts laid the groundwork for the ultramasculine military society of the Third Reich. The Wandervoegel was certainly not a "homosexual organization" per se, but its homosexual leaders molded the youth movement into an expression of their own Hellenic ideology and, in the process, recruited countless young men into the homosexual lifestyle. The first members of the Wandervoegel grew to manhood just in time to provide the Nazi movement with its support base in the German culture. As Steakley put it, "[the] Free German Youth jubilantly marched off to war, singing the old Wandervoegel songs to which new, chauvinistic verses were added" (Steakley:58).

Gerhard Rossbach and the Freikorps Movement

The Freikorps movement began during the years immediately following the close of World War I. After the war and the subsequent socialist revolution in Germany in 1918, tens of thousands of former soldiers of the German army volunteered for quasi-military service in a number of independent reserve units called Freikorps (Free Corps), under the command of former junior officers of the German army. These units were highly nationalistic and became increasingly violent as the social chaos of the Weimar Republic worsened. Rossbach's organization, originally called the Rossbachbund ("Rossbach Brotherhood") exemplified the German Freikorps. As Waite records in Vanguard of Nazism, "the lieutenants and the captains — Roehm...Ehrhardt, Rossbach, Schultz and the rest — formed the backbone of the Free Corps movement. And...it was they who were the link between the Volunteers [anti-communists] and National Socialism" (Waite, 1969:45). Once again we see the essential relationship between homosexuality and Nazism, since many of these “lieutenants and captains” were known or probable homosexuals, some of whom eventually served in the SA. German historian and Hitler contemporary Konrad Heiden writes that “[m]any sections of this secret army of mercenaries and murderers were breeding places of perversion” (Heiden:30). Historian G. S. Graber agrees:

Many...[Freikorps] leaders were homosexual; indeed homosexuality appears to have been widespread in several volunteer units. Gerhard Rossbach... was an open homosexual. On his staff was Lieutenant Edmund Heines who was later to become the lover of Ernst Roehm (Graber:33).

Waite’s analysis shows that the Freikorps movement was one intervening phase between the Wandervoegel movement and the Nazi Sturmabteilung — the SA. “The generation to which the Freikorpskämpfer [‘Free Corps warriors’] belonged,” writes Waite, “the generation born in the 1890s — participated in two experiences which were to have tremendous effect on his subsequent career as a Volunteer [in the Freikorps]. The first of these was the pre-war Youth Movement; the second, World War I” (Waite, 1969:17). The young men who had been molded by the Hellenic philosophies of the youth movement had come of age just in time to fight in the first World War. There, they were further shaped and seasoned by the hardships and horrors of trench warfare.

It was in the trenches of World War I that the concept of Sturmabteilung (Storm Troops) was developed — elite, hard-hitting units whose task it was to “storm” the enemy lines. The tactics of the Storm Troopers proved to be so effective that they were quickly adopted throughout the German army. The Storm Troop system created a tremendous increase in the number of young commanders of a certain breed. Waite writes,

Only a very special type of officer could be used. He must be unmarried, under twenty-five years of age, in excellent physical health...and above all he must possess in abundance that quality which German military writers call ruthlessness. The result was that at the time of the Armistice Germany was flooded with hundreds of capable, arrogant young commanders who found an excellent outlet for their talents in the Free Corps movement (ibid.:27).

It is not difficult to recognize that the description of the preferred Storm Trooper is a model of the Wandervoegel hero: ultramasculine, militaristic, physically conditioned, largely unrestrained by Judeo-Christian morality, and guided by the "Fuehrer Principle" (ibid.:28). It is no wonder, then, that many of these men became youth leaders in their turn (ibid.:210). In the preceding chapter, we learned that homosexual sadist and murderer Gerhard Rossbach was "the most important single contributor to the pre-Hitler youth movement" and a "hero to nationalistic German youth." In the days before Baldur von Schirach developed the Hitler Youth, Rossbach organized Germany's largest youth organization, named the Schilljugend ("Schill Youth") in honor of a famous Prussian soldier executed by Napoleon (ibid.:210n).

But Rossbach's contribution to the Nazis was far greater than the mere shaping of young men into Nazi loyalists. It was Rossbach who formed the original terrorist organization which eventually became the Nazi Storm Troopers, also known as "Brown Shirts." Both the Rossbach Storm Troopers and the Schilljugend were notorious for wearing brown shirts which had been prepared for German colonial troops, acquired from the old Imperial army stores (Koehl:19). It is reasonable to suppose that without Rossbach's Storm Troopers, Adolf Hitler and the Nazis would never have gained power in Germany. Heiden describes them:

Rossbach's troop, roaring, brawling, carousing, smashing windows, shedding blood...was es pe cially proud to be dif fer ent from the oth ers. Heines had be longed to it before joining Hitler; then Rossbach and Heines had formed a cen ter with Roehm; it led the SA while Hit ler was under arrest [for leading the Beer Hall Putsch] (Heiden, 1944:295).

Rossbach's Freikorps was formed almost exclusively of homosexuals. As fascist novelist, Edwin Dwinger, would later de clare through one of his char ac ters, Cap tain Werner, "Freikorps men aren't almost all bachelors for noth ing. Be lieve me, if there wer en't so many of their kind, our ranks would be pretty damn thin" (Theweleit, Vol 1:33). Rossbach's adjutant, Edmund Heines, was another ped er ast and a con victed mur derer who later be came Ernst Roehm's ad ju tant in the SA (he was also the sex ual part ner of Rossbach, Roehm and possibly Hitler as well). During the incident known as “The Night of the Long Knives” in which Hitler killed Roehm and a number of other SA leaders, Heines was surprised in bed with a young SA recruit (Gallo:236). His tortorian Frank Reichter describes Heines:

Distinguished by a girlish face on the body of a truck driver, Heines was an elegant, suave, and impeccably groomed killer. He liked to shoot his victims in the face with his 7.65 Walther automatic or beat them to death with a club...In addition to Heines’ value as a first rate adjutant, gifted administrative executive, and aggressive and adroit SA leader, Heines had a marked talent as a procurer [of boys]...garnishing the fairest lads in the Fatherland for...sexual amusement (Reichter:89).

Perhaps because of Edmund Heines' special talent, Rossbach assigned him to develop the Schilljugend. Igra tells how he profited thereby:

Edmund Heines, the group-leader of the storm troops at Breslau, was a repulsive brute who turned the Nazi headquarters of the city into a homosexual brothel. Having 300,000 storm troopers under his command he was in a position to terrorize the neighborhood... One of his favorite ruses was to have members of the youth organization indulge in unnatural practices with one another and then threaten their parents that he would denounce these youths to the police... unless he received... hush money. Thus Heines not only indulged in homosexual orgies himself—he was often Roehm's consort in this—but he promoted the vice as a lucrative business (Igra:73).

Ernst Roehm and the Development of the SA

Next to Adolf Hitler, Ernst Roehm was the man in Germany most responsible for the rise of Nazism, indeed of Hitler himself. Rec tor writes that "Hitler was, to a substantial extent, Roehm's protégé" (Rec tor:80). A driving force behind the National Socialist movement, Roehm was one of the early founders of the Nazi Party. Both Roehm and Hitler had been members of the socialist terrorist group called the Iron Fist (Heiden, 1944:89).

It was at a meeting of the Iron Fist that Roehm reportedly met him and "saw in Hitler the demagogue he required to mobilize mass support for his secret army" (Hohne:20). With Roehm's backing, Hitler became the first president of the Nazi Party in 1921 (ibid.:21). Shortly thereafter, Rossbach's Freikorps, integrated into the Party first under Herman Goering's and then Roehm's authority, was transformed into the dreaded Nazi SA.

In his classic Nazi history, The Rise and Fall of the Third Reich, author William Shirer describes Ernst Roehm

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Hitler and Roehm share a laugh in the early days of the party.

as “a stocky, bull-necked, piggish-eyed, scar-faced professional soldier...[and] like so many of the early Nazis, a homosexual” (Shirer:64). Roehm was recruited into homosexuality by Gerhard Rossbach (Flood:196). Rector elaborates,

Was not the most outstanding, most notorious, of all homosexuals the celebrated Nazi leader Ernst Roehm, the virile and manly chief of the SA, the du buddy of Adolf Hitler from the beginning of his political career? [Hitler allowed Roehm the rare privilege of addressing him with the familiar form “thou,” indicating intimate friendship]. Hitler’s rise had in fact depended upon Roehm and everyone knew it. Roehm’s gay fun and games were certainly no secret; his amorous forays to gay bars and gay Turkish baths were riotous. Whatever anti-homosexual sentiments may have been expressed by straight Nazis were more than offset by the reality of highly visible, spectacular, gay-loving Roehm. If there were occasional ominous rumblings and grumblings about “all those queers” in the SA and Movement, and some anti-gay flare-ups, homosexual Nazis felt more-or-less secure in the lap of the Party. After all, the National Socialist Party member who wielded the greatest power aside from Hitler was Roehm (Rector:50f).

Consistent with the elitist philosophies of Benedict Friedlander, Adolf Brand, and Hans Blueher, Roehm viewed homosexuality as the basis for a new society. Louis Snyder, prominent historian of the Nazi era, writes, [Roehm] projected a social order in which homosexuality would be regarded as a human behavior pattern of high repute...he flaunted his homosexuality in public and insisted that his cronies do the same. What was needed, Roehm believed, was a proud and arrogant lot who could brawl, castrate, smash windows, kill and slaughter for the hell of it. Straights, in his eyes, were not as adept in such behavior as practicing homosexuals (Snyder:55).

Under Roehm, the SA became the instrument of Nazi terrorism in German society. It was officially founded on August 3, 1921, ostensibly as a “Special section for gymnastics and sport,” but in his first directive to the group, Hitler defined the SA’s purpose as “a means of defense for the movement, but above all a training school for the coming struggle for liberty” (Heiden, 1935:82f).

Historian Thomas Fuchs reports that “The principle function of this army-like organization was beating up anyone who opposed the Nazis, and Hitler believed this was a job best undertaken by homosexuals” (Fuchs:48f). At first serving simply to protect the Nazis’ own meetings from disruptions by rivals and troublemakers, the SA soon expanded its strong-arm tactics to advance Nazi policies and philosophies. In a 1921 speech in Munich, Hitler set the stage for this activity: “[the] National Socialist movement will in future ruthlessly prevent if necessary by force all meetings or lectures that are likely to distract the minds of our fellow citizens..." In Mein Kampf, Hitler describes an incident (when his men were attacked by Communists adversaries) which he considered the baptismal act of the SA:

When I entered the lobby of the Hofbrauhaus at quarter to eight, I no longer had any doubts as to the question of sabotage...The hall was very crowded...The small assault section was waiting for me in the lobby...I had the doors to the hall shut, and ordered my men — some forty-five or -six — to stand at attention...my men from the Assault Section — from that day known as the SA — launched their attack. Like wolves in packs of eight or ten, they threw themselves on their adversaries again and again, overwhelming them with blows...In five minutes everyone was covered with blood. These were real men, whom I learned to appreciate on that occasion. They were led by my courageous Maurice Hess, my private secretary, and many others who were badly hurt pressed the attack as long as they were able to stay on their feet (Hitler:504f).

In all actions the SA bore Roehm's trademark of unabashed sadism. Max Gallo describes the organization:

Whatever the SA engage in — whether they are torturing a prisoner, cutting the throat of an adversary or pillaging an apartment — they behave as if they are within their rights, as artists of the Nazi victory...They are the SA, beyond criticism. As Roehm himself said many times: "The battalions of Brown Shirts were the training school of National Socialism" (Gallo:38).

The favorite meeting place of the SA was a "gay" bar in Munich called the Bratwurstgloeckl where Roehm kept a reserved table (Hohne:82). This was the same tavern where some of the early meetings of the Nazi Party had been held (Rector:69). At the Bratwurstgloeckl, Roehm and associates — Edmund Heines, Karl Ernst, Ernst's partner Captain [Paul] Rohrbein, Captain Petersdorf, Count Ernst Helldorf — would meet to plan and strategize. These were the men who orchestrated the Nazi campaign of intimidation and terror. All of them were homosexual (Heiden, 1944:371).

Indeed, homosexuality was all that qualified many of these men for their positions in the SA. Heinrich Himmler would later complain of this: "Does it not constitute a danger to the Nazi movement if it can be said that Nazi leaders are chosen for sexual reasons?" (Gallo:68). Himmler was not so much opposed to homosexuality itself as to the fact that non-qualified people were given high rank based on their homosexual relations with Roehm and others. For example, SA Obergruppenfuehrer (Lieutenant General) Karl Ernst, a militant homosexual, had been a hotel door man and a waiter before joining the SA. "Karl Ernst is not yet thirty-five, writes Gallo, he commands 250,000 men...he is simply a sadist, a common thug, transformed into a responsible official" (ibid.:50f). Later, Ernst became a member of the German Parliament (Machtan:185). Gallo writes, Roehm, as the head of 2,500,000 Storm Troops had surrounded himself with a staff of perverts. His chiefs, men of rank of Gruppenfuehrer or Obergruppenfuehrer, commanding units of several hundred thousand Storm Troopers, were almost without exception homosexuals. Indeed, unless a Storm Troop officer were homosexual he had no chance of advancement" (Knickerbocker:55).

Otto Friedrich's analysis in Before the Deluge is similar:

Under Rohm, the SA leadership acquired a rather special quality, however, for the crude and blustering Oberster SA Fuehrer was also a fervent homosexual, and he liked to surround himself, in all the positions of command, with men of similar persuasions (Friedrich:327).

In the SA, the Hellenic ideal of masculine homosexual supremacy and militarism had finally been realized. "Theirs was a very masculine brand of homosexuality," writes homosexualist historian Alfred Rowse, "they lived in a male world, without women, a world of camps and marching, rallies and sports. They had their own relaxations, and the Munich SA became notorious on account of them" (Rowse:214). The similarity of the SA to Friedlander's and Brand's dream of Hellenic revival is not coincidental. In addition to being a founder of the Nazi Party, Ernst Roehm was a leading member of the Society for Human Rights, an offshoot of the Community of the Elite (J. Katz:632).

The relaxations to which Rowse refers in the above quote were, of course, the homosexual activities (many of them pederastic) for which the SA and the CE were both famous. Hohne writes, [Roehm] used the SA for ends other than the purely political. SA contact men kept their Chief of Staff supplied with suitable partners, and at the first sign of infidelity on the part of a Roehm favorite, he would be bludgeoned down by one of the SA mobile squads. The head pimp was a

Karl Ernst

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Emile Maurice, Peter Granninger and Storm Trooper Schiedermeier at a reunion of the Old Guard, March 11, 1934. Maurice was Hitler's homosexual chauffeur. Granninger was a pederast who recruited boys from the local high school.

shop assistant named Peter Granninger, who had been one of Roehm's partners...and was now given cover in the SA Intelligence Section. For a monthly salary of 200 marks he kept Roehm supplied with new friends, his main hunting ground being Geisela High School Munich; from this school he recruited no fewer than eleven boys, whom he first tried out and then took to Roehm (Hohne:82).

Although the original SA chapter in Munich was the most notorious, other SA chapters were also centers of homosexual activity. In Political Violence and the Rise of Nazism, Richard Bessel notes that the Silesian division of the SA was a hotbed of perversion from 1931 onward (Bessel:61).

Roehm and his closest SA associates were among the minority of Nazi homosexuals who did not take wives. Whether for convention, for procreation, or simply for covering up their sexual proclivities, most of the Nazi homosexuals had married. Some, like Reinhard Heydrich and Baldur von Schirach, married only after being involved in homosexual scandals, but often these men, who so hated femininity, maintained a facade of heterosexual respectability throughout their lives. As Machtan notes, "That Hitler...encouraged many of them to marry should not be surprising: every conspiracy requires camouflage" (Machtan:24). These were empty marriages, however, epitomized by one wife's comment: "The only part of my husband I'm familiar with is his back" (Theweleit:3).

As we have seen, then, the SA was in many respects a creation of Germany's homosexual movement, just as the Nazi Party was in many ways a creation of the SA. Before we take a closer look at the formation and early years of the Nazi Party, we must examine two other very important movements which contributed to Nazism. These are the occult Theosophical-Ariosophical movement, and the intellectual movement which created the National Socialist philosophy. Both of these movements, which are integral to our understanding of the Nazi Party and its actions, were also heavily influenced by homosexuals.

Chapter Two

HOMO-OCULTISM

The story of the occult in world history is also a story of homosexuality. By occult, we mean the formalized religious expression of pagan culture as opposed, for example, to the philosophical ideas of Hellenic paganism discussed in the previous chapter. In The Occult Roots of Nazism, historian Nicholas Goodrick-Clarke identifies the roots of occultism in western history:

Occultism has its basis in a religious way of thinking, the roots of which stretch back into antiquity....Its principal ingredients have been identified as Gnosticism, the Hermetic treatises on alchemy and magic [rooted in Gnosticism], Neo-Platonism, and the Cabbala....Gnosticism properly refers to the beliefs of certain heretical sects among the early Christians that claimed to possess gnosis, or special esoteric knowledge of spiritual matters....The Gnostic sects disappeared in the fourth century, but their ideas inspired the dualistic Manichaean religion of the second century (Goodrick-Clarke:17)

Since occultism is associated primarily with Gnosticism, the association of the Gnostics with homosexuality is of primary relevance to this study. Thus we found an obscure reference to Hitler as a Manichaeon in Steven Katz's The Holocaust in Historical Context, Volume 1, of interest. Arthur Evans' Witchcraft and the Gay Counterculture provides some illumination here. Mani, for

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

whom Manichaeism is named, was a third century Prince of Babylon who devised his own form of Gnosticism. Gnostics blended pagan sex rituals and Mother Goddess worship with elements of New Testament Christianity and "rejected Jehovah God as an evil demon."

Manichaeism imposed on Gnosticism a caste system of leaders (elect) and followers (hearers).

A Manichaean sect called the Bogomils (later called the Cathars) arose in Bulgaria and spread across Europe. Homosexuality became so closely associated with these Bulgarian heretics that the practice became known as "buggery." In deed, "the word for Cathar in most European languages came to be the word for homosexual: in German, Ketzer, in Italian, Gazarro, and in French, Herite....Heresy and homosexuality became so interchangeable that those accused of heresy attempted to prove their innocence by claiming heterosexuality" (Evans:51ff).

We probably all take for granted the fact that today our modern world culture is dominated by the religions based on the Mosaic law (i.e. Judaism, Christianity and Islam). In their orthodox forms each of these religions regards homosexuality as an abomination. But pagan cultures have no such prohibition. (By definition, pagans are people who are not Jews, Christians or Moslems). In pagan cultures, homosexuals as a group of ten hold an elevated position in religion and society. When pagan civilizations ruled the world, homosexuality and pederasty were widely practiced and accepted. Homosexualist author Judy Grahn writes,

Many aspects of shamanism had homosexual content, and many of the gods, spirits, and divinities of the world have been associated with Gayness. In Tahiti there were special divinities for homosexual worship. The ancient Shinto temples of Japan display scenes of sexual ritual orgies similar to those of the Bacchanalia of the Romans...the Great Mother Goddess of ancient China, Kwan-Yin, was worshiped with sexual rites that included homosexuality. When the Spanish conquistadores reached Central America and the Yucatan, they found a prevalence of Gay priests and sacred statues and stone sculpture depicting the homosexual union as a sacred act. In the Yucatan the god Chin is said to have established sacred homosexuality and a Gay priesthood serving in the temples just as was true of the temples of ancient Babylon and Sumeria (Grahn:129).

Christian writer George Grant concurs. He writes that “Rome was a perpetual satyricon. Egypt, Persia, Carthage, Babylon, and Assyria were all steeped in pederastic tradition. And the ancient empires of the Mongols, Tartars, Huns, Teutons, Celts, Incas, Aztecs, Mayans, Nubians, Mings, Canaanites, and Zulus likewise celebrated depravity, degradation and debauchery” (Grant, 1993:24). In Sexuality and Homosexuality, historian Arno Karlen writes of homosexual cults throughout the ancient world: “‘male temple prostitutes’—existed among the devotees of Ishtar and Astarte in Syria, the Albanians and Babylonians, the Canaanite neighbors of the ancient Hebrews, and in Cos, Crete and Ephesus in the Greek world” (Kar len:6).

The ancient religion of Baal, familiar to students of the Bible as the set of beliefs and practices which so often corrupted Hebrew society in his story, was one such cult. Worshipers of Baal “built for themselves high places and pillars, and Asherim (phallic poles used to honor the goddess of fertility) on every high hill and under every green tree; and there were also male cult prostitutes in the land” (quotation from 1 Kings 14 in Kar len:9). Reference to these practices is found in several places in the Bible, notably Deuteronomy 23:17-18: “There shall be no ritual harlot of the daughters of Israel, or a perverted one of the sons of Israel. You shall not bring the wages of a harlot or the price of a dog [male prostitute] to the house of the LORD your God for any vowed offering, for both of these are an abomination to the LORD your God” (NKJ).

The Baal cult survived into Roman times and figured prominently in the infamous debaucheries of the Roman emperors in the first centuries after Christ. Kar len writes,

It was in association with such cults that emperors’ deviance became most flagrant. Commodus, who took the throne in 180, appeared in public dressed as a woman and was strangled by a catamitic [homosexual] favorite; Hadrian defied his homosexual lover Antinous. But neither matched Elagabalus, who began his rule at the age of fourteen in 218, after having been raised in Syria as a priest of Baal. He entered Rome amid Syrian priests and eunuchs, dressed in silks, his cheeks painted scarlet and his eyes made up. Various Roman historians say that he assembled the homosexuals of Rome and addressed them garbed as a boy prostitute; put on a wig and solicited at the door of a brothel; tried to get doctors to turn him into a woman; offered himself for buggery while playing the role of Venus in a court mime; kissed his male favorites’ genitals in public and, like Nero, formally married one of them...Ele ga balus erected in Rome the great phal lic ash-erim which the He brew kings had kept try ing to purge from their land (Kar len:62).

It is rel e vant to point out that this time pe riod in the Roman empire can be considered the Chris tians' Holocaust.
In 64 A.D. Chris tians were blamed by Nero for the burn ing of Rome and were tar geted for ex ter mi na tion. Many Christians suffered unimaginable tortures as entertainment for the sadis tic ho mo sex ual em per ors of Rome. Though Rome was less homo sexually-oriented than Greece, Roman society was nevertheless heavily influenced by homosexual practices. In Homosexuality, the Torah and Grace, Dwight Pryor reports that 14 of the first 15 Roman emperors were homosexual (tape one). In The Construction of Homosexuality, historian David F. Greenberg writes that “Roman homosexual tastes were so taken for granted that when Antony asked Herod to send his younger brother-in-law Aristobulus to the Roman court, Herod refused because ‘he did not think it safe to send him...to the principal man of the Romans, that would abuse him in his amours’” (Greenberg:154f). While there are many differences between the treatment of Christians in Pagan Rome and Jews in Nazi Germany, the prominence of homosexuality among the chief perpetrators of both atrocities cannot be ignored.

As we seek to understand Nazism, it is important to remember that Judaism and its Christian and Islamic offshoots are fundamentally opposed to homosexuality. As we begin to grasp the relationship between homosexuality and occultism on one hand, and between homosexuals and Nazism on the other, the hatred of the Nazis for Jews and Christians may be more easily explained. The Jews were the people responsible for the demise of pagan world domination. Their theology (especially in its Christian form) banished pagan practices, including homosexuality, to a hidden and often reviled subculture. This is not to say that anti-Semitism is strictly a result of occult or homosexual influences. But at its very root there is a spiritual element to the Holocaust that suggests that it was, in some respects, vengeance against the people whose moral laws had relegated pagan sex-religions to obscurity and ignominy.

Yet, while Christianity made great strides in limiting pagan practices, they were not eliminated. Under Judeo-Christian cultural pressure, surviving pagan beliefs and practices, including sexual perversion, were forced from public life, reemerging in secretive and mystical occultic societies.

It is important to our study that we recognize that the Nazis were strongly influenced by pagan occult beliefs and, additionally, that homosexuality is fundamental to many pagan belief systems. As noted by Greenberg this is especially true in relation to “aristocratic warrior societies” (ibid.:111). In deed, this was true even of the Greeks, whose homosexuality was forced upon them by the Dorian invaders of the twelfth century B.C. “Plutarch (Erotikus, 761 D) states: ‘it was chiefly warlike peoples like the Boeotians, Lacedaemonians and Cretans, who were addicted to homosexuality’” (Flaceliere:64ff). Author Brian Pronger notes that even the ancient Egyptians exhibited this tendency; their warriors raped enemy soldiers after defeating them in battle (Pronger:138).

It is also important to recognize that homo-occultism has remained a part of pagan cultures throughout the centuries to the present, even though the global predominance of the Judeo-Christian sexual ethic has limited its acceptance in most modern pagan societies such as China and Japan. When Jesuit missionaries arrived in sixteenth century China, for example, they found widespread pederasty (Spence:220) which they quickly moved to erase. And Rossman compares “the institutionalized pederasty of the privileged warrior class of medieval Japan’s pederastic military structure” to “Nazi society” (Rossman:23).

Greenberg reports on dozens of mostly primitive modern pagan societies which practice ritual homosexuality, usually pederasty. These societies are found throughout the world, in countries such as Brazil, New Guinea, Morocco, sub-Saharan Africa and Malaysia. Greenberg writes,

In many societies, male homosexual relations are structured by age or generation: the older partner takes a role defined as active or masculine; the younger, a role de-defined as passive or female...[In many cases] The homosexual practices are justified by the belief that a boy will not mature [without these attentions] (Greenberg:26ff).

Such modern societies are profiled in The Sambia, by anthropologist Gilbert Herdt, who studied homosexuality in primitive cultures. He writes that "ritual homosexuality has been reported by anthropologists in scattered areas around the world [revealing a]...perverse link between ritual homosexuality and the warrior ethos....We find these similar forms of warrior homosexuality in such diverse places as New Guinea, the Amazon, Ancient Greece, and historical Japan" (Herdt:203). The process of a boy's homosexual initiation in these societies is horrific: he is deprived of sleep, starved, beaten and raped over several days until he is completely "resocialized" as a homosexual (ibid:179f).

Thus homosexuality in paganism is not a relic of antiquity but an ongoing phenomenon. And the prevalence of homosexuals as occult leaders continues today. In the context of Western culture this may simply be because homosexuals gravitate to philosophies which oppose Judeo-Christian morality. But this would not explain the wide occurrence of homosexual rituals in primitive and pre-Christian pagan cultures.

Homosexualist Laurence J. Rosan writes that "the priests of polytheistic or spirit religions...[are] expected to be 'different' -- unworldly, even eccentric, given to visions, dramatic pronouncements and so on -- an ideal opportunity for both male and female homosexuals!" (Rosan:268f). The Bible, however, offers its own explanation, defining an individual's homosexuality not as an incidental factor in pagan religion but, at least in some cases, as the consequence of "worshiping the creation rather than the Creator." The Book of Romans, Chapter 1, Verses 18-27 reads as follows:

For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who suppress the truth in unrighteousness, because what may be known of God is manifest in them, for God has shown it to them. For since the creation of the world His invisible attributes are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even His eternal power and Godhead, so that they are without excuse, because, although they knew God, they did not glorify Him as God, nor were thankful, but became futile in their thoughts, and their foolish hearts were darkened. Professing to be wise, they became fools, and changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like corruptible man — and birds and four-footed animals and creeping things. Therefore God also gave them up to uncleanness, in the lusts of their hearts, to dishonor their bodies among themselves, who exchanged the truth of God for the lie, and worshiped and served the creature rather than the Creator, who is blessed for ever. Amen. For this reason God gave them up to vile passions. For even their women exchanged the natural use for what is against nature. Likewise also the men, leaving the natural use of the woman, burned in their lust for one another, men with men committing what is shameful, and receiving in themselves the penalty of their error which was due (NKJ).

Ironically, the Biblical event which marks the beginning of homosexual practices in the post-flood world is the same one that is misinterpreted by pseudo-Christian white supremacists to justify their racial theories. Christian researcher Dwight Pryor gives the following interpretation (which we have summarized) of a familiar Biblical passage. In Genesis 9, Noah fell unconscious from drinking too much wine and while he was thus incapacitated Ham “saw [or uncovered] his nakedness.” This term, used primarily in the book of Leviticus, is a Hebrew euphemism for sexual intercourse. “And Noah awoke from his wine, and knew what his younger son had done to him.” As a result of his sexual attack on his father, Ham is cursed by Noah. (In Call of the Torah Rabbi Elie Munk cites Hebrew scholars who also interprets Ham's violation as "an act of pederasty") - (Munk:220). Thus Ham becomes Canaan, for whom the land of Canaan is named. Some generations later the Canaanite cities of Sodom and Gomorrah would be destroyed by God because of homosexuality. White supremacists refer to Ham as the father of the colored races which they call "mud people." But it is homosexual perversion, not skin color, which is associated with the curse of Canaan.

"Noah Cursing Caanan," by Gustave Dore.

Madame Blavatsky and the Theosophical Society

An examination of the homo-occultic influences on the Nazis must begin with the Russian-born mystic Helena Petrovna Blavatsky (1831-1891), founder of the Theosophical Society and a figure who looms large behind some of the defining actions and beliefs of the Nazi Party. Blavatsky was probably a lesbian, but we have no proof that she actually engaged in lesbian sexual activity. She is described as a very "masculine" woman who dominated her many followers, both male and female (Cavendish:250). She was married twice and maintained a long association with Theosophical Society co-founder Henry Olcott, but these were relationships of convenience. Blavatsky insisted she had never had sex with either husband (Meade:137) and wrote, "There is nothing of the woman in me. When I was young, if a young man had dared to speak to me of love, I would have shot him like a dog who bit me" (ibid.:50).

A world famous occultist, Blavatsky founded the Theosophical Society in 1875 in New York, but soon moved her operation to India where she wrote an influential occult book called The Secret Doctrine in 1888. In The Secret Doctrine Blavatsky expounds the Theosophical theory of creation; a seven-step progression of human evolution in which successive "races" evolve from a lower to a higher form of life. She calls these stages "root races" and identifies our current "root race" as the fifth of seven -- the Aryan race -- which follows the fourth race, known as the Atlantean. Blavatsky used a variety of esoteric symbols in the book, including triangles and swastikas. She claimed to be the chosen spokesperson for two “exalted masters” who communicated telepathically with her from their secret dwelling place in Tibet (Goodrick-Clarke:18ff).

Madame Blavatsky (above) and the title page of her book which based Aryan supremacy on occultic fantasies.

In 1884 the first German Theosophical Society was established. Despite its ludicrous tenets, Theosophy became extremely popular in Germany and Austria. Its Aryan racist elitism appealed to the growing number of ethnic Germans whose voelkisch, or nationalist, sentiments demanded a reunited Germany. According to Blavatsky, the Aryans were the most spiritually advanced people on earth, but the Jews had a “religion of hate and malice toward everyone and everything outside itself.” This was a message tailor-made for Nazism.

Before she died in 1891, Blavatsky chose her British disciple Annie Besant to be her successor. Besant, who had once been a devout Christian, became a dedicated occultist after meeting Blavatsky. James Webb writes, Mrs. Besant’s extraordinary transformations from Anglican minister’s wife through birth-control propagandist and labor leader to Theosophist ...are...well known...Arthur Nethercot, her biographer, suggests an element of the lesbian in the rapid domination of Mrs. Besant by H. P. Blavatsky (Webb:94).

“She addressed Annie in suspiciously fulsome and endearing terms,” writes Nethercot, “‘Dearest,’ ‘My Dearest,’ ‘Dearly Beloved One,’ and signing her self ‘Very adoring.’” Nethercot also reports that “she dispatched missives to Annie...and addressed them to ‘My Darling Penelope’ from ‘Your...female Ulysses’” (Nethercot:306).

Besant’s “mentor and partner” in running the Theosophical Society was Charles Leadbeater, whom Webb describes as “that type of mildly homosexual clergyman who is as familiar now as he was then” (Webb:95). But Leadbeater’s homosexuality was not “mild” enough to keep him

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Pederast Charles Leadbeater (left) with Annie Besant and Colonel Olcott.

out of trouble. "From his early days as a Hampshire curate until the close of his life," writes Webb, "he seems to have had an incurable taste for young men" (ibid.:95).

At one point Leadbeater claimed to have discovered the new Messiah -- the returned Christ -- in the person of a young Indian named Jiddu Krishnamurti.

Krishnamurti gained international acceptance among followers of Theosophy as the new Savior. The boy's father nearly ruined the scheme for the Theosophists, however, when he accused Leadbeater of corrupting his son. "There was...small doubt that Leadbeater had been up to his old tricks again" (ibid.:102).

Cult figure and author Jiddu Krishnamurti as an adult.

Under Besant and Leadbeater, Theosophy attracted an even greater following. The writings of both Besant and Leadbeater, as well as Blavatsky, were translated and published in Germany. An 1892 periodical, Lotus Blossoms, featured Blavatsky's writings and "was the first German publication to sport the theosophical swastika upon its cover" (Goodrick-Clarke:25). As time went on numerous other Theosophy-based occult groups formed in Germany and Austria. Several of these groups would provide the philosophical framework for Nazism.

Guido von List and the Armanen Order

Guido von List (1848-1919) was the first to combine German nationalism with the occult teachings of Theosophy. A bitter critic of Christianity, especially Catholicism, List had converted to Wotanism (worship of Wotan, the ancient German god of storms) as a young teenager. Years later List "became a cult figure on the eastern edge of the German world. He was regarded by his readers and followers as a bearded old patriarch and a mystical nationalist guru whose clairvoyant gaze had lifted the glorious Aryan and German past of Austria into full view from beneath the debris of foreign influences and Christian culture" (Goodrick-Clarke:33).

Although twice married, List was almost certainly homosexual. His closest associates included occultists Jorg Lanz von Liebenfels and Harald Gravelle, the former very probably, the latter avowedly, homosexual. Gravelle, a leading Theosophist in Germany, also contributed to the pederast journal, Der Eigene. List was also known as the Aleister Crowley of Vienna because he was deeply involved in Hindu Tantrism, a form of black magic that incorporated deviant sexual rituals (J.S. Jones:124). In The Magical World of Alister Crowley, biographer Francis King states that as part of his occultic rituals, Crowley “deliberately humiliated himself by being...the passive partner in act[s] of buggery” (King in Tompkins:421).

In 1908 List formed the Guido von List Society in part to promote his Ariosophist research and writings, which by this time had become viciously anti-Semitic (ibid.:43).

List’s occult activities ranged across a wide spectrum. He was an expert on the Rune alphabet and wrote several books on the subject. He was particularly infatuated with the dual lightning bolt symbol that would later become the designation for the SS. (J. S. Jones:125). (The single lightning bolt would be adopted by the Hitler Youth.) He was also a self-styled occult master, claiming to be “the last of the Armanist magicians who had formerly wielded authority in the old Aryan world” (Goodrick-Clarke:33). In 1911, List formed an elitist occult organization called the Hoehner Armanen-Orden (“Higher Armanen Order”). The HAO was a hierarchical priesthood in which he was Grand Master. List claimed this cult was the surviving remnant of an ancient order of priest-kings called the Armanenschaft. This group was the source of List’s greatest influence on the Nazis. Goodrick-Clark writes, List's blueprint for a new pan-German empire [based upon a re vival of the Armanenschaft] was de tailed and un-ambiguous. It called for the ruthless subjection of non-Aryans to Ar yan mas ters in a highly struc tured hi er ar chi cal state. The quali fica tions of can di dates [for po si tions in the new social order]...rested solely on their racial pu rity...But List went further still, antici pat ing the mys tical elitism of the SS in Nazi Ger many...List's ideal was a male or der with an oc cult chapter (Goodrick-Clarke:64f).

Not only is List's design strikingly simi lar to the later plans of Hein rich Himm ler for the SS- controlled state, but it is also reminiscent of the Brand/Friedlander philosophy of mili tar istic male su pre macy.

Al though the Ar ma nen Or der was never a large or gani zation, its membership included high-ranking members of Austrian society (ibid.:233n). One dev o tee of List's writ ings would become the hub of the Nazi movement: the young Adolf Hitler. After the fall of the Third Reich, a book writ ten by Guido von List was found in Hitler's private library. On the inside cover was written the inscription: "To Adolf Hitler, my dear brother in Armanen," although this is insufficient evidence to conclude that Hitler belonged to the order itself (J.S. Jones:124; Waite, 1977:90).

Jorg Lanz von Liebenfels and Ariosophy

If any occultist can be said to have had more influence on Hitler and the Nazis than List it would be Jorg Lanz von Liebenfels (1874-1954). Lanz was a former Cistercian Monk who had been thrown out of the order "for carnal and worldly desires" (Sklar:19). Since the Cistercian Order was a closed, all-male monastery, it is assumed that Lanz's indiscretions were of a homosexual nature. German writer Friedrich Buchmayr noted the following about Lanz

[F]ollowing his ordination in 1898, as a priest, Lanz was put to use as a teacher of choir boys. In April of 1899, the 24-year-old left the order, stating his reason for this step as "increasing nervousness" and "irritation." In the Chapter Book his departure was accounted to "carnal loves." His later radical hatred of women suggests a failed relationship with women (Buchmayr, Biographisch-Bibliographisches Kirchenlexikon, Vol. XVI, 1999)

It was through Lanz that Hitler would learn that many of his heroes of his story were also "practicing homosexuals" (Waite, 1977:94f). After being expelled from the monastery, Lanz formed his own occultic order called the Ordo Novi Templi or the Order of the New Temple (ONT). The ONT was related to the Ordo Templi Orientis or Order of the Temple of the East, which, like List's organization, practiced tantric sexual rituals (Howard:91).

Hitler was aware that Lanz was a homosexual, according to Frau Elsa Schmidt-Falk of the Nazi Genealogy Office of Munich, as reported by Daim. Schmidt-Falk frequently spoke with Hitler personally in her role as a genealogical researcher whose task was to verify the racial purity of highly-placed Nazis. She did not conclude from her discussions that Hitler was personally associated with Lanz (although he may have been) but she reported that Lanz was also mentioned once in the following connection: a convicted homosexual had addressed a plea for clemency to Hitler, in which he designated [Lanz] as a homosexual. Hitler allowed this man to disappear...immediately....[At another time] Hitler mentioned Roehm, Heines, etc. and also Lanz von Liebenfels and his group, about which (group) he (Hitler) at least accepted that it was actively homosexual (Daim:41).

Both List's and Lanz' organizations were modeled on the Teutonic Knights and the Knights Templars, military monastic orders founded in 1118 A.D. to fight in the Crusades (Goodrick-Clarke:60). Following the crusades, the Templars returned to Europe, but did not demobilize. Instead the members established monasteries which became centers of trade and influence. In the early 1300s the Knights Templars were condemned by Pope Innocent III for homosexual perversion and occultic practices. They were brought to trial and disbanded by King Philip the Fair of France. Igra writes, [Homosexuality's] morbid history in the German blood dates from the time of the Teutonic Knights...Their personal lives were as infamous as the more widely publicized infamies of their brother Knights, the Templars. These latter became so corrupt that they raised the practice

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Jorg Lanz von Liebenfels, "The Man Who Gave Hitler His Ideas."

of their cardinal vice [homosexuality] into a religious cult...There were innumerable public trials where the most revolting details were brought to light (Igra:18).

Others have confirmed the prevalence of homosexuality among the Teutonic Knights. Adolf Brand, writing in Der Eigene, said of the Teutons (from whom the Teutonic Knights take their name), that “the Edda [Norse mythology] extols it [homosexuality] as the highest virtue of the Teutons (Brand in Oosterhuis and Kennedy:236f). Nazi leaders, especially Himmler, were infatuated with the Teutons. Sklar writes that “Like List and Lanz, Himmler was obsessed with...the Order of the Teutonic Knights” and that he “saw his Black Guards [the S.S.] as an elite cadre of Teutonic warriors” (Sklar:14ff). Likewise, Frederick the Great, Hitler’s personal hero, “revived the vices of the Teutonic Knights” in his army (Igra:19).

Hitler’s Ordensburgen (“Castles of the Order”) were “the highest residential academies for the training of the Nazi elite” and “received their name from the medieval fortresses built by the Teutonic Knights” (Snyder:261). It was fitting, then, that the swastika flag would first be flown over one of these fortresses. On Christmas day, 1907, many years before the swastika would become the symbol of the Third Reich, Lanz and other members of the ONT raised a swastika flag over the castle which Lanz had purchased to house the order (Goodrick-Clarke:109). Lanz chose the swastika, he said, because it was the ancient pagan symbol of Wotan (Cavendish:1983). Wotanism, incidentally, was claimed by List to have been the national religion of the Teutons (Goodrick-Clarke:39).

The journal of the ONT was called Ostara, named for the female counterpart to Wotan in the pagan Germanic pantheon. Some of the titles of Ostara pamphlets included “The Dangers of Women’s Rights and the Necessity of a Masculine Morality of Masters,” and “Introduction to Sexual-Physics, or Love as Odylic Energy.” Lanz claimed homosexuality was the result of “Odylic” influences (Waite, 1977:93f). Lanz hated women, writing that “the soul of the woman has something pre-human, something demonic, something enigmatic about it” (Rhodes:108). “Na ture her self,” wrote Lanz, “has or dained women to be our slaves” (Lanz in Daim:31). He blamed Ar yan ra cial im-pu ri ties on pro mis cu ous women who were copu lat ing with “men of lower races.”

Lanz’s occult philosophies, which he dubbed Arioso-phy (Aryan Theosophy), were an enlargement upon the ideas of Guido von List. To the foundation of Theosophy and Ger man na tion al ism, Lanz added the popu lar theme of social Darwinism, as promoted by Ernst Haeckel and the Mo nist League. Haeckel is fa mous to day for his de bunked theory that “ontogeny recapitulates phylogeny,” the idea that the unborn young of all species pass through distinct em bry onic stages that re ca pitu late the evo lu tion of suc ces-sive phyla. But in pre- Nazi Ger many, Haeckel was fa mous for his ap pli ca tion of Dar win’s con cept of “sur vival of the fit test” to hu man so ci ety. Cam bridge his to rian and Lon don Times jour nal ist Ben Mac in tyre writes,

The German embryologist Haeckel and his Monist League told the world, and in par ticu lar, Ger many, that the whole his tory of na tions is ex pli ca ble by means of natu ral selection: Hitler and his twisted theories turned this pseudo- science into poli tics, at tempt ing to de stroy whole races in the name of racial pu rity and the sur vival of the fittest...Hitler called his book Mein Kampf, “My Strug- gle,” echoing Haeckel’s translation of Darwin’s phrase “the struggle for survival” (Mac in tyre:28f).

Lanz’s Ariosophy would fuel the imaginations of the Nazi elite, de spite (or per haps be cause of) its lu na tic qual-ities. “Lanz ful mi nated,” writes Goodrick- Clarke, “against the false Chris tian tra di tion of com pas sion for the weak and inferior and demanded that the nation deal ruthlessly with the un der privi leged” (Goodrick- Clarke:97). Waite re ports that Hitler was an avid fan of Ostara and developed his anti-Semitic philosophy with the help of racist pamphlets published and distributed by Lanz and Guido von List.

[Hitler] bought some anti-Semitic pamphlets for a few pennies. These pamphlets, which were so important to the formation of Hitler's political thinking, were distributed by a virulently anti-Semitic society called the List-Gesellschaft. The tracts were written by two now-forgotten pamphleteers, Georg Lanz von Liebenfels (1872-1954) and Guido von List (c. 1865-1919). Of all the racist pamphlets available to Hitler during those years, only those written by Lanz and List set forth in explicit detail the ideas and theories that became unmistakably and characteristically Hitler's own. Only they preached the racial theory of history which proclaimed the holiness and uniqueness of the one creative race of Aryans; only they called for the creation of a racially pure state which would battle to the death the inferior races which threatened it from without and within; and only they demanded the political domination of a racial elite led by a quasi-religious military leader. Hitler's political ideas were later developed and reinforced in racist circles of Munich after the war in 1919-1923, but their genesis was in Vienna under the influence of Lanz and List (Waite, 1977:91).

In 1958 Wilhelm Daim, an Austrian psychologist, published a study of Lanz entitled Der Mann der Hitler die Ideen gab ("The Man Who Gave Hitler His Ideas"). In the book, Daim recounts that Lanz had met Hitler in Vienna when the latter was 20 years old. Hitler often visited occult bookstores and he used his contacts in some of them to locate Lanz after having trouble finding back issues of Ostara. While he was destitute in Vienna, Hitler "hotly defended Liebenfels' ideas against skeptics" writes Snyder (Snyder:211). In 1932, twenty-three years after that fateful meeting, Lanz wrote, "Hitler is one of our pupils...you will one day experience that he, and through him we, will one day be vic to ri ous and de velop a move ment that makes the world tremble” (Cavendish:1983). This proclamation, however, did not sit well with der Fuehrer, and he had Lanz’s writ ings banned in 1933 (Sny der:211).

Lanz’s Ostara was a focal point for racist and occult fig ures in Ger many. In Ostara, Lanz pro posed that “un sat is fac tory” ra cial types be elimi nated by abor tion, ster ili za tion, starvation, forced labor and other means. He also recom mended Aryan breed ing farms where a mas ter race, destined to control the world, could be hatched (Cavendish:1983). Heinrich Himmler would later create such a breeding program (called Lebensborn) during the Third Reich. The close simi lar ity of Lanz’s pre scrip tion for the elimination of “inferiors” to the views of Benedict Friedlander suggests the possibility of a relationship between The ONT (Order of the New Temple) and the Community of the Elite. One link was Harald Gravelle, a homosexual member of the Guido von List Society who wrote for both Ostara and Der Eigene (Steakley:67n.34). Gravelle was “the prin ci ple the oso phist of Lanz’s ac quain tance, with the exception of Guido List” (Goodrick-Clarke:100).

Al though not di rectly con nected to the ONT, the as tro logist, Dr. Karl Gunther Heimsoth was another link between the Community of the Elite and the occultists. Heimsoth, a ho mo sex ual, was “a close friend and Freikorps comrade of Roehm” and maintained “close contact with sev eral fu ture Nazi big wigs” (Machtan:108f). He wrote a book titled Charakter Konstellation, which was devoted en ti rely to the horo scopes of ho mo sex u als (Rec tor:81); he was also a con tribu tor to Der Ei gene. Heim soth is re mem bered for coining the term “homophile” (Oosterhuis and Kennedy:188), which was a common American synonym for ho mo sex ual in the early de cades of the “gay” move ment here.

The Thule Society

In 1912, various followers of List and Lanz formed an organization called the Germanen Order. Diverging radically from the purely philosophic and spiritual focus of the groups that the two “masters” had formed, the Germanen Order was to take an active role in fulfilling the goals of Ariosophist teachings. “The principle aim of the Germanen Order,” writes Goodrick-Clarke, “was the monitoring of the Jews and their activities by the creation of a center to which all anti-Semitic material would flow for distribution” (Goodrick-Clarke:128). Only Aryans of pure descent were allowed to become members. The first World War disrupted the organization, but in the aftermath of the war the chapters of the Order began to engage in direct action against those they considered to be their enemies.

After the war the Order began to be “used as a cover organization for the recruitment of political assassins” (ibid.:133) who revived the practices of the Vehmgericht, a medieval vigilante society whose only sentence was death (Waite 1969:216ff). Prominent among these assassins were Gerhard Rossbach, Edmund Heines and other “Butch” homosexuals who would later help to shape the Nazi Party (Snyder:92, Waite:222f).

Some 354 enemies of the nationalists were killed over several years in the campaign of Vheme murders, the most prominent being Walther Rathenau, Foreign Minister of the German Republic during World War I. Ironically, many of the victims were killed for sexual and not political reasons. Waite writes,

Emblem of the Thule Society.

The Feme [Vheme] was often directed against former comrades of post-Free Corps organizations. The very multiplicity of Bunds and secret societies led to competition, quarreling and death.... Competition and conflict was intensified by the fact that many of the Freebooters were homosexuals and hence prone to jealousy and "lover's quarrels." The Mayer-Hermann case will serve as an example.

Oberleutnant Mayer was Kreisleiter of the "Arbeitsgemeinschaft Rossbach." He was also, as court testimony euphemistically put it, "an enemy of women," as was his Leader, Gerhard Rossbach and, supported by a wealthy tobaccoist, one Kurt Hermann, he founded his own "Arbeitsgemeinschaft Mayer." But Oberleutnant Mayer soon became jealous of a certain Gebauer, a former Baltic fighter, who was also courting Herr Hermann. Mayer charged Gebauer with treason and sent two of his men to Hermann's home. They found the traitor in bed with Herr Hermann -- Frau Hermann was away at the time -- and carried out the sentence of the Feme (Waite 1969:222f).

In 1917, because of the association of the Germanen Order with political terrorism, its Bavarian chapter changed its name to the Thule Society "to spare it the attentions of socialist and pro-Republican elements" (ibid.:144). The Thule Society retained many of the bizarre occult theories originated by Blavatsky and "had close ties to Crowley's organization" (Raschke:339). Historian Wulf Schwarzwalder writes,

Briefly, the creed of the Thule Society in its circle was as follows: Thule was a legendary island in the Far North, similar to Atlantis, supposedly the center of a lost, high level civilization. But not all secrets of that civilization had been completely wiped out. Those that remained were being guarded by ancient, highly intelligent beings...The truly initiated could establish contact with these beings...[who could] endow the initiated with supernatural strength and energy. With the help of these energies of Thule, the goal of the initiated was to create a new race of supermen of "Aryan" stock who would exterminate all "inferior" races (Schwarzwalder:66f).

The leader of the Thule Society was a man named Rudolf von Sebottendorf but its chief organizer was Walter Nauhaus, a former member of the Wandervoegel movement (Goodrick-Clarke:143). Members of the Thule Society who figure prominently in the rise of Nazism included Hans Kohnert, Dietrich Eckart and Rudolf Hess. In 1919 Kohnert founded Germany's largest "gay rights" organization, the Bund fuer Menschenrecht ("Society for Human Rights") which counted SA Chief Ernst Roehm among its members (J. Katz:632n94). Eckart, meanwhile, was a founding member of the German Worker's Party and became Adolf Hitler's mentor (Shirer:65). Like Hitler, Eckart was a subscriber to Ostara (J. S. Jones:301n91).

Dietrich Eckart adopted Hitler as his student in 1920. He later stated that he felt "drawn to his [Hitler's] whole being" and that he and Hitler developed an "intimate" relationship in which he referred to the younger man as "my Adolf" (Machtan:117). Eckart never confessed to being a homosexual, but the evidence suggests that he was. He is alleged by some to have been involved in Tantric occult sex rituals “similar to Crowley’s,” and even to have initiated Hitler into such activities (Raschke:399). We do know that Eckart was one of the most enthusiastic followers of Otto Weininger, a leading homosexual supremacist whose theories denigrated women (Igra:100). Alfred Rosenberg characterized Eckart as an inveterate misogynist whose “exclusively male company” destroyed his short and childless marriage in 1920 (Machtan:118f).

There is no question at all that Eckart was instrumental in Hitler’s early successes. “With Eckart as his mentor,” writes Schwarzwaller, “the gauche and inhibited Hitler -- the unsuccessful painter, former PFC, who had not even been promoted to corporal because of ‘lack of leadership qualities,’ quite suddenly...became an outstanding organizer and propagandist” (Schwarzwaller:68).

Like Roehm and Lanz, Eckart claimed credit for “creating” Hitler. In 1923, shortly before his death, Eckart wrote to a friend, “Follow Hitler! He will dance, but it will be to my tune. We have given him the means to maintain contact with them (meaning the “masters”). Don’t grieve for me for I have influenced his tory more than any other German” (Schwarzwaller:69). Though he would later ridicule many of the occultists and their ideas, Hitler dedicated his book, Mein Kampf, to Eckart, and at one time called Eckart his “John the Baptist” (ibid.:70).

Hitler’s next spiritual mentor was Karl Haushofer, who later became Germany’s leading theorist on the subject of geo-politics (the scientific study of the influence of geography on political events). A secret member of the Thule Society, Haushofer is credited with training Hitler to think in terms of world conquest and is believed to have virtually dictated Chapter 16 of Mein Kampf, which outlines Hitler’s foreign policy (Sklar:63f). Haushofer’s Lebensraum (“living space”) theory was later used to justify German expansion.

sion, while his familiarity with the Oriental allowed him to forge Hitler's alliance with Japan (ibid.).

There is evidence to suggest that Haushofer was homosexual as well. In Hitler's Cross, Erwin Lutzer accuses Haushofer of taking Hitler through the deepest levels of occult transformation until he became a thoroughly demonized being. Hitler was even transformed sexually; he became a sado-masochist, practicing various forms of sexual perversion (Lutzer:61).

Karl Haushofer

More persuasive is the testimony of Ilse Hess, wife of Rudolf Hess, the Thule Society member who would rise the highest in Nazi circles. Hess, a homosexual (his marriage notwithstanding) was one of Hitler's closest friends and a fellow student of Haushofer. Machtan reports that "Ilse Hess...complained that she had gotten no more out of her marriage than a 'girl confidant' and she even compared herself, where 'the pleasures of matrimony are concerned,' to a 'convent school girl'" (Machtan:149). He adds the following:

Hess had developed a close relationship with Haushofer, who was twenty-five years older than himself. The two of them often spent whole nights sitting together in Haushofer's home, and they also made joint excursions. "He's a wonderful person," Hess enthusiastically told his parents, and Haushofer dedicated to his "young friend Rudolf Hess" a hymn reminiscent of Stefan George [a well-known ped er ast], which spoke of “his eyes fes tively illuminating closed doors” just as “a sun set is re flected in a spring.” Ilse Hess later con fessed in a re strained fash ion, that she had “long been almost a trifle jealous” of Haushofer, who seemed to have pos i tively “ab sorbed” her boy friend (Machtan:144f).

Hess eventually became the Deputy Fuehrer of the Nazi Party. Both Hess and Alfred Rosenberg had “an immense in flu ence on Hit ler to whom they preached the gospel of the Thule So ci ety” (Angebert:172). In ad di tion to his in volve ment with the Thule So ci ety, Hess be longed to yet another off shoot of the Theo soph i cal cult. It was an or ga ni za tion called the Anthroposophical So ci ety, formed in 1912 by Rudolf Steiner. Steiner was a for mer leader of the German Theo soph i cal So ci ety who split with the group fol low ing their “dis cov ery” of the new “mes siah.” Hess was also a firm be liever in as trol ogy (Howe:152).

Hitler was also influenced by other members of the Thule So ci ety. Waite writes,

In de scribing his ini tia tion into poli tics at Mu nich in 1919, Hit ler stressed the im portance of a lit tle pam phlet en titled “My Political Awakening” ...[writ ten by] a sickly fa natic called Anton Drex ler...Drex ler was an ad junct mem ber of the Thule So ci ety, the most in flu en tial of the many rac ist anti- Semitic groups spawned in Mu nich dur ing the im me diate postwar pe ri od...By the time of the rev olu tion of 1918, the society numbered some 1500 mem bers in Ba varia and in cluded many of Hit ler’s later sup port ers. Hit ler him self, it is re ported “was often a guest of the Society”...The actual German Worker’s Party — which was to be come the mighty Nazi move ment...dif fered very lit tle from the dis cus sion groups and ac ti vi ties of the Thule So ci ety or the other rac ist groups to which all the found ers be longed. (Waite, 1977:115).

Ho mo sexual Rudolf Hess be came Deputy Fuehrer of the Nazi Party.
Yad Vashem.

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

SS Chief Heinrich Himmler was the leading occultist of the Nazi Party and may have been a homosexual as well. Yad Vashem

Yet another prominent Nazi who was strongly influenced by the German occult movement was Heinrich Himmler. Himmler maintained a close relationship with a prominent occultist named Karl Maria Wiligut, who became known as the “Rasputin of Himmler” (Goodrick-Clarke:177). It is not clear if this designation is meant to imply that Wiligut shared the infamous Russian’s penchant for sexual licentiousness. Wiligut claimed to have a gift of clairvoyant “ancestral memory,” certainly quite useful to the racial purists of the Nazi Party who were concerned with proving their own Aryan heritage. Wiligut was responsible for designing the Death’s Head ring worn by members of the SS.

Under Himmler, the SS became a veritable occultic order. Christian names of SS soldiers were replaced with Teutonic names, and all members were required to maintain the strictest secrecy and detachment from the rest of society (Sklar:100). In later years Himmler spent vast sums of money on esoteric research projects such as an expedition to Tibet “to look for traces of a pure Germanic race which might have been able to keep intact the ancient Nordic mysteries” (ibid.:102). (This little-known aspect of Nazi history is, of course, the inspiration for the Steven Spielberg movie, Raiders of the Lost Ark.)

Himmler may well have been a homosexual (two sources are cited later in the book), however, his intense obsession with secrecy largely shielded him from disclosure of his private life. He did, however, foster the cult of the maennerbund among his men. Some report that SS special forces training required recruits to soap each other’s bodies during showers to establish mutual dependency (Reisman, 1994:3). Later, Himmler would make empty threats against homosexuals in public pronouncements, but it is clear that he was completely comfortable being part of Adolf Hitler’s clique of pederasts.

In any case, we can see that the occult roots of the Nazi Party ran deep into German history. It is also apparent that many of the leading occult figures responsible for this legacy were homosexuals. From ancient pagan roots through Blavatsky to List and Lanz, and to Hitler himself, the evolution of homo-occultism gave the Nazis their theories of an Aryan Master Race and their justification for the vicious extermination of "inferior" life.

Chapter Three

THE HOMOSEXUAL ROOTS OF FASCISM

An other area of his tory we must ex plore in or der to un derstand the Nazis is the origin of fascism and national socialist ideology. Fascism is a term which eludes easy defi ni tion but most would proba bly agree that in its nar row est sense, fas cism is a form of gov ern ment char ac ter ized by three things: one-party dictatorship, centralized gov ern ment con trol of fi nance and in dus try, and mili tant na tion alism. It is im por tant to em pha size here that fas cism is a form of so cial ism. It is thus in ac cu rate and mis lead ing to call the Nazi Party “right wing” although this misidentification is nearly uni ver sally ac cepted to day.

In his 1964 work, Varieties of Fascism, his to rian Eugen Weber said “we should do well to remember that Fas cism...considered itself a form of Socialism, freed of hu manitarian sentimentalism and Marxist dialectic, truer to fun da men tal So cial ist aims in that it tried to adapt it self to a chang ing his tor ical re ality which the old Marx ist in ter pre ta tion no longer suited” (Weber:29).

In seeking the roots of fascism we once again find a high correlation between homosexuality and a mode of thinking which we identify with Nazism. It is interesting that Weber, without noting the homosexual connection, traced “the pat tern of the planned to tali tar ian state back to Plato's Republic, and the Fascist mentality to the turbulent, unscrupulous Calicles who appears in another Platonic dialogue, Gorgias" (Weber:11).

So here we begin. The inspiration for the fascist state comes from Plato, the male supremacist and apologist for pederasty. Plato is revered as the preeminent classical philosopher, although his apparent advocacy of man/boy sex is not commonly known. A prototypical statement by the philosopher is recorded in George Grant's Legislating Immorality: "Through the nightly loving of boys, a man, on arising, begins to see the authentic nature of true beauty" (Grant, 1993:24). Plato's Republic is his best known work. The following is a summary of the Republic from W.K.C. Guthrie's A History of Greek Philosophy:

The Republic (c.370 BC) advances many of Plato's principal ideas, notably those concerned with government and justice. Composed as a debate between Socrates and five other speakers, The Republic is best known for its description of the ideal state (based on Sparta), which Plato argues should be ruled by philosopher-kings (Guthrie in Grolier).

As we have noted, the Spartan society was dominated by a pederastic warrior cult that featured mandatory induction of twelve-year-old boys into homosexual partnerships with adult men. Like all such cults, the Spartan military was rigidly hierarchical and elitist. Plato's concept of the "philosopher-king" is that of an autocratic leader appropriate to such a society. The philosopher-king rules over a kind of fascist utopia. Interestingly, Plato's idealized society in the Republic includes the elimination of the family as a social unit and the elimination of private property.

The next figure cited by Weber in the historic development which would culminate in National Socialism is Frederick the Great (1712-1786) "founder of the perfect Prussian bureaucracy" (Weber:11). He writes, "The Nazi Siegfried [a Teutonic mythological hero] looked back to the equalitarian elitism of Sparta [and] to the barracks of [Frederick's] Prussian army" (ibid.:82). Frederick clearly fit Plato's description of a philosopher-king. He established a strict military order on the Spartan model and used his elite forces to great advantage, expanding his Prussian empire through ruthless lightning strikes against neighboring countries. He was also a homosexual, and, coincidentally, one of Adolf Hitler's greatest heroes (Waite, 1977:112). Homosexualist historian Noel L. Garde writes, Frederick's homosexual inclinations, of which Lt. Katte in his youth was the principle object, were attested by many authorities, notably Voltaire and Frederick himself...The other young men besides Katte were...Baron Frederick Trenck, Count Keyserlingk, Count Goerz and an Italian named Barbarini (Garde:448).

In recent years Frederick has been praised as a model of social liberalism and humanitarianism. Another side of this man, however, explains his appeal to Hitler and the Nazis. Igra describes him:

Frederick hated women, as such. Die Frau was always a Schimpfwort, an expression of contempt, with him...Though he felt obliged by reason of his position to have a queen, which involved the necessity of getting married, Frederick never lived a husband's life. And though [Martin] Luther's Reform inculcated the marriage of the clergy, with a view to stamping out the vices that had characterized celibacy in Germany, and though the same injunction logically applies to soldiers, Frederick forced the majority of his officers to remain unmarried...In his armies he revived the vices of the Teutonic Knights and the Templars. Frederick is rightly looked upon as the founder of modern German militarism, not merely as state policy but as a worship of destruction for its own sake. He despised humanity in general and looked on human life, even his own life, as a bagatelle. He constantly carried a phial of poison on his person so that he might put an end to his own life at any moment he considered opportune (Igra:18f).

According to Weber, the National Socialist brand of fascism began in the mid-1800s with the radical Universal German Workingmen's Association (UGWA) (Weber:11). The founder of the UGWA was German socialist leader Ferdinand Lassalle, once the chief rival of Karl Marx for leadership of the communist organization First International. While probably not homosexual himself (he was killed by the aggrieved husband of one of his lovers) Lassalle is remembered for his political rehabilitation of the notorious pederast, Jean Baptiste von Schweitzer, after the Social Democrat Party had expelled him. Schweitzer was a talented lawyer who, in 1862, had become editor of the main periodical of the German socialist movement, Sozialdemokrat. In August of that year, two elderly ladies, enjoying a quiet stroll in a public park in Mannheim, accidentally came upon Schweitzer and a schoolboy. Schweitzer was sodomizing the boy in the bushes. He was arrested, given two weeks in jail, and disbarred (Steakley:1).

The Social Democrats disowned Schweitzer, but only one year later Lassalle took Schweitzer under his wing (J. Katz:567n.), stating that a person's sexual tastes had "absolutely nothing to do with a man's political character" (Linsert:178). Schweitzer became president of the UGWA, and on September 7, 1867, was elected to the Reichstag (parliament) of the North German Confederation (Steakley:1ff).

Friedrich Nietzsche

Among the several men who have been dubbed “the Father of National Socialism” (including Jorg Lanz von Liebenfels), Friedrich Wilhelm Nietzsche (1844-1900) is probably most deserving of this distinction, being so labeled by Nazi luminaries Dr. Alfred Rosenberg and Dr. Franck (Peters:221). Others have called him the “Father of Fascism” (ibid.:ix). Ravidly anti-Christian and a homosexual, Nietzsche founded the “God is dead” movement and contributed to the development of existentialist philosophy. Nietzsche’s publisher, Peter Gast, called Nietzsche “one of the fiercest anti-Christians and atheists,” and described his book, The Antichrist, as a “ferocious curse” on Christianity (ibid.:119). Nietzsche called Christianity and democracy the moralities of the “weak herd,” and argued for the “natural aristocracy” of the Uebermensch or superman, whose “will to power” was grounded in the material world (Wren in Grolier).

According to Macintyre in Forgotten Fatherland: The Search For Elisabeth Nietzsche, Friedrich Nietzsche never married and had no known female sex partners, but went insane at age 44 and eventually died of syphilis. According to Sigmund Freud and Carl Jung, Nietzsche had caught the disease at a homosexual brothel in Genoa, Italy (McIntyre:91f). Nietzsche’s unflattering opinion of women was widely known. His works were “peppered with attacks against women,” and, like the pederasts of the Community of the Elite, he relegated women to the role of breeders and sexual slaves. Men, on the other hand were to be bred for war (Agonito:265f).

Friedrich Wilhelm Nietzsche

One of Nietzsche's closest friends and an other hero of Adolf Hitler was Richard Wagner, the composer. Wagner was the subject of a 1903 book by Hans Fuchs called Richard Wagner und die Homosexualitaet ("Richard Wagner and Homosexuality") in which Fuchs recommends art as a means for homosexual emancipation (Oosterhuis and Kennedy:86). We do not know whether Wagner was homosexual, although Hitler is reported to have identified him as one. In Kurt Ludecke's I Knew Hitler, the Fuehrer said the following when the issue of homosexuality among the Brownshirts was raised: "Ach, why should I concern myself with the private lives of my followers!....I love Richard Wagner's music -- must I shut my ears to it because he was a pedagogue? The whole thing's absurd" (Ludecke:477f).

Nietzsche's philosophy was grounded in Greek and Roman paganism, and in his writings he called for "a new Caesar to transform the world" (Peters:viii). Years later, Nietzsche's sister and chief promoter, Elisabeth, would enthusiastically dub Hitler the "superman" her brother had predicted (ibid.:220). Indeed, Elisabeth's adulation of Hitler was mirrored by the Fuehrer's admiration for her brother. Hitler and the Nazis were indebted to Nietzsche for his contribution to German nationalism. "It is not too much to say," writes historian George Lichtheim, "that but for Nietzsche the SS — Hitler's shock troops and the core of the whole movement — would have lacked the inspiration to carry out their programs of mass murder in Eastern Europe" (McIntyre:187). And W. Cleon Skousen writes that when "Hitler wrote Mein Kampf, it was as though Nietzsche was speaking from the dead" (Skousen:348).

Had he lived in that era, Nietzsche might not have become a Nazi. His works included numerous condemnations of anti-Semitism and nationalism (and thus were selectively censored by Elisabeth). But the best measure of Nietzsche's contribution and importance to Nazism is not in conjectures about what Nietzsche might have thought about Nazism, but in the actual reverence of the Nazis for him. Nietzsche's most celebrated book, Also Sprach Zarathustra, ("Thus Spake Zarathustra") was considered the "bible" of the Hitler Youth and was "enshrined with Hitler's Mein Kampf and Alfred Rosenberg's Myth of the Twentieth Century -- in the vault of the Tannenberg Memorial, which had been erected to commemorate Germany's victory over Russia in the First World War" (Peters:221). Hitler and the Nazis often used Nietzschean phrases such as "will to power," "live dangerously," and "Superman," but more significantly, Nietzsche became a hero to the masses as well. Certain German intellectuals canonized Nietzsche through the popular media of the day. Peters writes, Germany's intellectual elite, including poets like Stefan George and writers like Thomas Mann, saw in Nietzsche's "aristocratic radicalism" an answer to the decadent democratic ideals of the West. Ferocious young men and women met for ritualistic readings from Zarathustra. Hymns were composed to celebrate the new religion, and by the time the body of the sick philosopher was finally put to rest, he was proclaimed a saint (Peters:ix).

The Cultural Elites

Who were these "intellectuals" who popularized Nietzschean fascism in Germany? Stefan George, one of Germany's most popular poets of the time, was a pederast and "a guiding example" to the Community of the Elite. "George and his disciples," write Oosterhuis and Kennedy, "...revivified Holderlin's concept of Griechendeutschen (Hellenic Germans), [and] contrasted in their poetry and lifestyle the 'eternal spring of homoerotic friendship' from the family" (Oosterhuis and Kennedy:91). Homosexualist Ian Young wrote that "In George, aestheticism, Nietzscheanism and homosexual idealism were transmuted into a poetic philosophy" (Young:183).

Stefan George

In 1903, George became infatuated with a 15-year-old boy and made him a figure of worship in a 1907 book called Der siebente Ring ("The Seventh Ring"). His last book, Das neue Reich ("The New Kingdom"), published in 1928, "prophesied an era in which Germany would become a new Greece" (Miles in Grolier). In 1933, when Hitler came to power, he offered George the position of President of the Nazi Academy of Letters (a post which he turned down) (Mosse:60).

Thomas Mann's identification with Nietzsche may also have had something to do with the latter's homosexuality. Among other works, Mann is famous for a 1912 novella called Der Tod in Venedig ("Death in Venice"), in which "an aging writer risks life and reputation in his attempts to gaze on the Apollonian beauty of the 14-year-old Tadzio" (Reiter in Grolier). Homosexualist historian A.L. Rowse called this novella "the most publicized homosexual story of the century" (Rowse:212). A recently published biography, Thomas Mann: A Life, by Donald Prater, establishes the novelist's homosexuality. A review of this book in The San Francisco Examiner (December 23, 1995) states that the book is based in part on Mann's private diaries, which reveal a "secrethomoerotic life."

Mann was married and had six children for whom he was "a remote and sometimes terrifying figure." The article reveals that two of these children, Klaus and Michael, committed suicide. Two of his children became homosexuals (Rowse:212). Mann confesses in his diary that the character Tadzio, the 14-year-old boy in "A Death in Venice," was actually modeled after a boy on whom Mann "developed a crush while holidaying in Venice.” We must be clear, however, that Mann’s contribution to Nazism, his role in popularizing Nietzsche, was unintended. Mann was personally anti-Nazi, and was persona non grata with Hitler’s government..

Nietzsche’s influence extended beyond the German border. Adapting for its subject “the Nietzschean ecstasy” in the Italian art world, playwright Frank Wedekind’s play, Spring’s Awakening, features a cast of schoolboys whom he “allowed...to experience all forms of sexuality ...[including] masturbation, heterosexual promiscuity and..homosexual love making between the boys” (Mosse:61). Benito Mussolini himself acknowledged a debt of gratitude to Nietzsche during his dictatorship (Peters:212).

Nietzsche’s sister, Elisabeth, figured prominently in pre-Nazi and Nazi Germany. After Nietzsche’s death in 1900, she assumed control of his estate and relentlessly promoted her brother’s writings, establishing the Nietzsche Archives. During the Weimar Republic the Archives became “the center of a powerful counter-revolutionary current” of German nationalism (ibid.:206). At one point Nietzsche’s followers wanted to build a Nietzsche Temple, complete with statues of Apollo and Dionysos (ibid.:200). While the temple was never built, Adolf Hitler himself commissioned a shrine to Nietzsche, a memorial auditorium and library “where German youth could be taught Nietzsche’s doctrine of a master race” (ibid.:222). The Friedrich Nietzsche zum Gedächtnis erbaut (“Friedrich Nietzsche Memorial Building”) was opened in August of 1938 (McIntyre:192).

An interesting aside to this story is the fact that in 1886 Elisabeth Nietzsche and her husband founded a colony in Paraguay, South America called Nueva Germania (“New Germany”). After the fall of the Third Reich, Nueva Germania sheltered hundreds of fleeing Nazi war criminals, including the infamous Dr. Joseph Mengele

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store, www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Hitler is greeted by Elisabeth Nietzsche (insert) at the Nietzsche Archive which he sponsored.

(McIntyre: 5,205ff). Another interesting fact is that Rudolf Steiner, who would later found the occultic Anthroposophical Society, was briefly involved with Elisabeth in the management of the Nietzsche Archives.

Frederich Nietzsche's influence on the Nazis is reflected in all they did. "Become hard and show no mercy," Nietzsche taught, "for evil is man's best force" (Peters:227). One wonders whether history might have been different if Germans had been aware that the writings of their fascist "genius" may have been influenced by impaired brain function "caused by...the tertiary phase of cerebral syphilis" (ibid.:35). In 1902, a doctor by the name of P.J. Mobius attempted to warn his countrymen "that they should be ware of Nietzsche, for his works were the products of a diseased brain" (ibid.:184). Unfortunately for the world, Mobius's report was squelched by Elisabeth and her powerful friends.

The attraction of fascism for homosexuals appears in the history of other countries as well. As we noted earlier, pro-Nazi fascist organizations in both England and France were headed by homosexuals. In England, the organization was called the Anglo-German Fellowship, and was headed by British homosexuals Guy Francis de Moncy Burgess, and Captain John Robert Macnamara. (As an aside, while we can not state conclusively that they acted with treasonous motives, it must be noted that homosexual political activists played a major role in the appeasement of Hitler prior to World War II (Noebel:128ff)).

In France, the pro-Nazi fascists were represented by two groups, the Radical Socialist Party headed by Edouard Pfeiffer (Secretary General), and the French Popular Party headed by Jacques Doriot. Pfeiffer was openly homosexual. Less is known about Doriot, but, as we have shown, his organization seems to have had an attraction for homosexuals in any case (Costello:300ff.).

The Belgian fascist "Rexist" movement was led by Leon Degrelle "who would come to regard himself as the spiritual son of Hitler" (Toland:410). In Austria, it was Artur Seyss-Inquart, who, after Hitler's ascension to power was "appointed Minister of the Interior, with full, unlimited control of the nation's police forces” (ibid.:434). In Norway, it was the infamous Vidkun Quisling, whose very surname became synonymous with “traitor.” Igratifies all of these men as homosexual (Igra:86). A “top leader” of the Nazi Party in Czechoslovakia was also homosexual (Oosterhuis:243).

Seyss-Inquart (left) and unknown Nazi official with Hitler.

A connection between homosexuality and fascism in Germany’s military allies is implied by historian Mary Beard. In The Sex Life of the Unmarried Adult she writes that “the Fascist movement in Germany, as in Italy and Japan, is essentially a dynamic of unmarried males...Adolph Hitler, [is] a bachelor like the majority of the thirty or forty leaders of the Nazi Party...A number of the prominent Nazis are men with records of sexual perversions as well as of military daring” (Beard:158). Homosexualists John Lauritsen and David Thorstad report that in the Soviet Union, homosexuality became known as “the fascist perversion” during the 1930’s. They quote the Soviet writer, Maxim Gorky: “There is already a slogan in Germany, ‘Eradicate the homosexual and fascism will disappear’” (Lauritsen and Thorstad:69).

Wilhelm Reich, author of The Mass Psychology of Fascism was a prominent German psychoanalyst when Hitler came to power in 1933. He wrote that homosexuality was the breeding ground of fascism. In 1936, fellow psychiatrist Erich Fromm echoed this view and also linked homosexuality with sado-masochism (Oosterhuis:242). This link has been widely recognized in past decades. Oosterhuis writes,

Dutch liberal anarchist Anton Constandse...claimed that “because most National Socialist organizations are typically all-male societies, homosexuality was inevitable....Everybody knows that the sexual abuse of youths was quite common in Roehm’s SA.” From this he inferred that “the great danger of male bonding, especially in the military, is indeed homosexuality.” The anti-fascist journal Het Fundament, published in Holland, also character ized homosexuality as typical of fascism.... [F]eminist Maria Antonietta Macciocchi ...[wrote of] the extreme misogyny of “the brotherhood of male chauvinist fascists and homosexual Nazis.” Susan Sontag explained the popularity of sadomasochism in the gay subculture... simply as an “eroticizing of Nazism.” According to her, “there is a natural link” between homosexual sadomasochism and fascism. The stereotype was also made visible in such films as Luchino Visconti’s The Damned (1969), Bernardo Bertolucci’s The Conformist (1971), Pier Paolo Pasolini’s Salo or the 120 Days of Sodom (1975), and Volker Schlöndorff’s The Tin Drum (1978) - (Oosterhuis:244f).

We can see that the roots of Nazism are fundamentally interrelated with the homosexuality of its philosophers; a fact noted by many prominent writers and thinkers. (Although it may be mere coincidence we are reminded that the Latin root of fascism is fascies, “a bundle of rods.” A diminutive of fascies is “faggot,” a common pejorative for homosexuals.) In the lives of such men as Plato, Frederick the Great, and Nietzsche, whose writings and deeds were foundational to modern fascism, the common denominator is homosexual behavior. Certainly not every fascist has been homosexual, just as not every homosexual has been fascist. But the glaring truth of history is that contemporary German homosexuals bore a disproportionately large share of the responsibility for the rise of Nazism.

We have now looked at three separate and distinct realms of pre-Nazi German society which contributed to the formation and success of the Nazi Party. In the German “gay rights” movement we saw the pederastic origins of the Hellenic revival and its influence on the youth and Freikorps movements. We also saw how the rift between the “Butch” and “Fem” factions of the homosexual movement laid the groundwork for the mistreatment of some homosexuals later on in the Nazi regime.

In the realm of pagan religion we saw the importance of homosexuality in occultism and the influence of occultism in the development of Nazi thought. We have noted that many of the prominent occultists who influenced the growth of Nazism were homosexuals, and that a number of the early Nazis themselves were both homosexuals and occultists. Finally, we have seen that homosexuals and pederasts were integral to the creation and development of fascism and National Socialist philosophy.

Now that we have explored the relationship between homosexuality and the aspects of German thought and culture which led to the development of Nazism, we can begin to examine more closely the formation and early years of the Nazi Party itself, as well as the individuals, including Hitler, who led the Nazi movement.

Chapter Four

THE FOUNDING AND EARLY YEARS OF THE NAZI PARTY

What was to become the Nazi Party began as an outgrowth of the Thule Society in late 1918. It started as a nationalist discussion group called the Political Worker's Circle whose goal was to "extend the appeal of the Thule's nationalist ideology for the working classes" (Goodrick-Clarke:150). The discussion group developed the idea of forming a political party in December of 1918, and did so on January 5, 1919, at the Fuerstener Hof tavern in Munich. Adolf Hitler became a member of the German Worker's Party in September of that year. Shirer writes,

There were two members of this insignificant party who deserve mention at this point; both were to prove important in the rise of Hitler...Captain Ernst Roehm...had joined the party before Hitler...A tough, ruthless, driving man — albeit, like so many of the early Nazis, a homosexual — he helped organize the first Nazi strong-arm squads which grew into the SA...Dietrich Eckart...often called the spiritual founder of National Socialism...became a close advisor to [Hitler]...introducing him to...such future aides as Rudolf Hess (Shirer:64f).

In a very short time Hitler and Roehm began to wrest control of the small group from its founders. Within a few months they had forced the resignation of its Chairman, Karl Harrer, and begun to turn the group away from its origins as a secret society and to ward a new identity as “a mass party” (Fest, 1975:120). On April 1, 1920, they changed the name of the party to the National Socialist German Worker’s Party. Historian Joachim Fest describes the process Hitler and Roehm used in these earliest days of Nazism:

At the beginning [Hitler] went at things according to a sensible plan. His first task was a personal one, to break out of anonymity, to emerge from the welter of small-time nationalist-racist parties with an unmistakable image...making a name for himself — by unceasing activity, by brawls, scandals, and riots, even by terrorism if that would bring him to the forefront...[but] Ernst Roehm did more for the NSDAP than any one else. He held the rank of captain as a political advisor on the staff of Colonel Epp and was the real brain of the disguised military regime in Bavaria. Roehm provided the young National Socialist Party with followers, arms, and funds (Fest, 1975:126f).

By August of 1921, Hitler and Roehm had completed their take over of the party. On the third of that month they founded the SA and began to assemble the cadre of sexual deviants who would form the core of Nazi leadership for years to come. A pamphlet circulated by disgruntled Nazi members prior to the Hitler take over shows that the homosexuality of his supporters was no secret. Speaking of Hitler they said, “It grows more and more clear that his purpose is simply to use the National Socialist Party as a springboard for his immoral purposes” (Igra:70f). Former high Nazi functionary and close Hitler confidant, Otto Strasser reports, Hitler did three things to popularize the party and quiet the threatening clash of wounded vanities. He shortened the name from Nationalsozialistische Deutsche Arbeiterpartei to the letters NSDAP; he adopted the brown shirt of Lieutenant Rossbach's veteran organization for the entire party; and he assumed the all-too-familiar swastika from Erhardt's group (Strasser, 1943:34).

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Left to right: Rudolf Hess, Adolf Hitler, Ernst Roehm, Heinrich Himmler and Wolf von Helldorf. Each of these top Nazi leaders was a known or reputed homosexual.

Hitler's Clique of Pederasts

As we will see, almost all of the new leadership of the party were sexual deviants. But this fact raises a question that is foundational to our understanding of the Nazis. Who chose these men as Nazi leaders? Roehm, with whose lifestyle we are now quite familiar, was to some his torians the true power behind Hitler's throne. As noted above it was primarily Roehm who organized, funded and armed the terrorist military arm of the party, choosing only homosexuals as officers. And it is true that the party met frequently in the Bratwurstgloekl (Fest, 1975:135f), a homosexual bar where Roehm kept a reserved table.

Yet, despite Roehm's importance to the party, Adolf Hitler himself was the central figure of Nazism and increasingly it was he who de ter mined the fate of every mem ber of the party. De spite sug ges tions to the con trary, Hit ler was not anti- homosexual. In fact, like Roehm, Hit ler preferred homosexual companions and co-workers. In addition to Roehm and Hess, two of his closest friends, Hit ler ap par ently chose homosexuals and other sexual deviants to fill key po si tions near est to him self. Heiden re ports that in fact Hit ler intentionally “sur rounded him self with men of... [ho mo sex ual] ten den cies” (Heiden, 1935:417).

Rec tor at tempts to dis miss sources that at trib ute ho mo sexuality to leading Nazis, but neverthe less lists them in some de tail:

Reportedly, Hit ler Youth leader, Baldur von Schi rach was bisexual; Hit ler’s private at torney, Reich Le gal Di rec tor, Min is ter of Jus tice, butcher Governor- Gen eral of Po land, and pub li c gay- hater Hans Frank was said to be a ho mo sex ual; Hit ler’s ad ju tant Wil helm Bruck ner was said to be bisexual;...Walther Funk, Reich Minister of Economics [and Hit ler’s personal financial advisor] has fre quently been called a “no to rious” homosexual...or as a jeal ous pre de cessor in Funk’s post, Hjal mar Schacht, con tem ptu ously claimed, Funk was a “harmless homosexual and al co holic;”...[Hitler’s second in com mand] Hermann Go er ing liked to dress up in drag and wear campy make-up; and so on and so forth (Rector:57).

Wil helm Bruckner

Igra, who con fi dently as erts that the above men were ho mo sex u als, cites still other Hit ler aides and close friends who were known homosexuals. He states that Hit ler’s chauff eur and one- time per sonal sec re tary, Emile Maurice, for ex ample, was ho mo sex ual, as well as the porn o grapher,

Julius Streicher, whom Hitler appointed Gauleiter of Nuremberg. Igra writes, Julius Streicher, the notorious Jew-baiter, was originally a school teacher, but was dismissed by the Nuremberg School Authorities, following numerous charges of pederasty brought against him...His paper, Der Stürmer, was frequently confiscated by the police, even at the height of the Nazi regime, because of the sexual obscenities displayed in the drawings and described in the text" (Igra:72f).

A rare sight (above) as Hitler relinquishes the stage to his close friend, Julius Streicher. The two are caught on camera (below) on a private outing.

Among the homosexuals closest to Hitler, Heiden lists "Heines, Reiner, Ernst, Von Helldorf, Count Spreti [and] Count du Mou lin-Eckhardt, jr” (Heiden, 1935:417).

The evidence for homosexual leanings in another leading Nazi, Joseph Goebbels, is rather thin, but adds further insight to the inner workings of the group. Goebbels, Reich propaganda leader and close aide to the Fuehrer, is reported to have had a party in 1936 that degenerated into a violent homosexual orgy. The party featured “torch-bearing page boys in tight fitting white breeches, white satin blouses with lace cuffs and powdered rococo wigs” (Grunberger:70). Grunberger writes that Nazi rough necks “were so affected by the ro coco set ting that they hurled them selves upon the bewigged page boys and pulled them into the bushes. Tables col lapsed, torches were dimmed, and in the en su ing fracas a number of Party old fighters and their comely victims had to be res cued from drown ing” (ibid:70).

Gregor Strasser (left), Joseph Goebbels and unidentified boy (possibly his step son).

Goebbels may not have par tici pated in the rev elry him self, though Klaus Thew eleit writes that “there is a sig nifi cant mo ment in Ross bach’s ac count where he con tests the right of Goebbels ‘of all peo ple’ to act as a ‘moral ar bi ter,’” appar ently as sum ing that his mean ing is “‘com mon knowl edge’ on the in ter nal grape vine” (Thew eleit, Vol 2:327).

Ralf George Reuth, in Goebbels (Har court Brace, New York, 1993), re ports that Goebbels was ac cused by Roehm of pederasty. After Roehm’s homosexuality was exposed in the Ger man press, Goebbels [a long time ri val] tried to get him dismissed from the party. “Roehm took revenge by spread ing in re turn all sorts of ru mors about Goebbels’ re la tion ship with Magda Quandt. He went so far as to sug gest that Goebbels was interested less in Magda than in her young son. So along with Roehm’s homosexualexcesses, people were talking about the “cloven foot’s ‘impossible (and immoral) relationship’” (Reuth:138f). (Goebbels’ club foot apparently gave rise to the epithet.). We also know that homosexual SA figure Wolf von Helldorf escaped as sas si na tion in the Roehm purge due only to in ter ven tion by Goebbels (Reuth:137).

In his own di aries, Goebbels re vealed an an i mos ity to ward homosexuals in the party, although that does not prove he did not have such in cli na tions him self. Di aries are, af ter all, gen er ally writ ten with one’s pos ter ity in mind.

Another close Hitler associate was Albert Speer. An Oc to ber 30, 1995 book re view in Newsweek, ti tled “In side a Third Reich Insider” fea tured the book Albert Speer: His Bat tle With Truth by Gitta Ser eny. The ar ti cle speaks of a “homo- erotic (not sexual) re la tion ship” be tween Speer and Hitler that was dis cussed in a pre vious book by a Ger man psychoanalyst, Alexander Mitscherlich. Sereny writes that “Speer himself acknowledged that Mitscherlich ‘came closest to the truth.’” Although Sereny claims this relationship was non-sexual, he reports that Speer’s secretary said Speer gave himself to Hitler “body and soul.” Sereny also observes that Speer never told Hitler he was married because of his “romantic” feelings for Hitler. (Sereny:109).

In Albert Speer: The End of a Myth, German historian Dr. Matthias Schmidt commented on an “erotic” element to Speer’s relationship with Hitler. While Speer was remodeling Hitler’s official residence, Hitler invited him to lunch. “At lunch, Speer sat at Hitler’s side. The conversation became personal — and the two men ‘fell in love at first sight’” (Schmidt:41f). Aside from these insinuations we have no evidence of an actual homosexual relationship between Hitler and Speer.

Langer writes in the 1940s that “[e]ven to day Hitler derives sexual pleasure from looking at men’s bodies and associating with homosexuals” (Langer:179). He adds, quoting Strasser, that Hitler’s personal body-guard was “almost always 100% homosexuals” (ibid.:179).

It should be remembered that Hitler’s greatest hero was

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Hitler’s personal SS body guard.

Frederick the Great, a well known homosexual (Garde:44). Clearly, Adolf Hitler was not anti-homosexual, at least not in his personal lifestyle. Indeed, the evidence of Hitler's apparent preference for homosexuals is so overwhelming that, as have many historians before us, we naturally ask the question, "Was Hitler a homosexual?"

Was Adolf Hitler a Homosexual?

Until the publication of Professor Lothar Machtan's powerful biography The Hidden Hitler in 2001, we were much less confident in stating that Hitler was in deed a homosexual. Machtan, a history professor in Bremen, Germany, set out to prove Hitler's homosexuality and did so most convincingly, drawing upon hundreds of period documents. We shall consider the evidence at length.

One point upon which we remain unconvinced was whether Hitler was exclusively homosexual or whether he had relations with women. Machtan writes,

[A] small number of contemporaries...were pretty explicit on the subject of Hitler's sex life. These include August Kubizek, Kurt Ludecke, Ernst Hanfstaengl, Rudolf Diels, Erich Ebermayer, Eugen Dollman, Christa Schroder and Hans Severus Ziegler. They are all unanimous in stating, quite positively, that Hitler did not have sex with women. Some of them expressly say that Hitler was homosexual; others convey the same thing obliquely (Machtan:23)

There are at least four women, however, including his own niece, Geli, with whom Hitler is reported to have had sexual relationships. These relationships were not normal, if in fact they occurred. Both Waite and Langer write that Hitler was a coprophile (a person who is sexually aroused by human excrement) and suggest that his sexual encounters with women included expressions of this perversion as well as other extremely degrading forms of masochism. It is interesting to note that all of these women attempted suicide after allegedly becoming sexually involved with Hitler. Two succeeded (Langer:175f). Hitler contemporary Otto Strasser writes of an encounter he had with Hitler's niece Gely:

Next day Gely came to see me. She was red eyed, her round little face was wan, and she had the terrified look of a hunted beast. "He locked me up," she sobbed. "He locks me up every time I say no!" She did not need much questioning. With anger, horror and disgust she told me of the strange propositions with which her uncle pestered her. I knew all about Hitler's abnormality. Like all the others in the know, I had heard all about the eccentric practices to which Fraulein Hoffmann was alleged to have lent her self, but I had genuinely believed that the photographer's daughter was a little hysteric who told lies for the sheer fun of it. But Gely, who was completely ignorant of this other affair of her uncle's, confirmed point by point a story scarcely credible to a healthy-minded man (Strasser, 1940:72).

Langer suggests that Hitler may very well have engaged in homosexual behavior, saying “persons suffering from his perversion sometimes do indulge in homosexual practices in the hope that they might find some sexual gratification. Even this perversion would be more acceptable to them than the one with which they are afflicted.” (Langer:179). He reports, for example on the testimony of Hermann Rauschning, a trusted Hitler confidante whom Hitler appointed President of the Danzig Senate in 1932 (Wistrich:240, Snyder:282). He later fell out of favor and fled Germany in 1936 (ibid.). Langer writes, Rauschning reports that he has met two boys who claimed that they were Hitler’s homosexual partners, but their testimony can hardly be taken at face value. More condemning would be the remarks dropped by [Albert] Foerster, the Danzig gauleiter, in conversation with Rauschning. Even here, however, the remarks deal only with Hitler’s impotence as far as heterosexual relationships go without actually implying that he indulges in homosexuality. It is probably true that Hitler calls Foerster “Bubi,” which is a common nick name employed by homosexuals in addressing their partners. This alone is not adequate proof that he has actually indulged in homosexual practices with Foerster, who is known to be a homosexual (Langer:178). [Significantly, Foerster was Julius Streicher’s protégé.]

Albert Foerster

Waite concurs:

There is insufficient evidence to warrant the conclusion that Hitler was an overt homosexual. But it seems clear that he had latent homosexual tendencies...It is true that Hitler was closely associated with Ernst Röhm and Rudolf Hess, two homosexuals who were among the very few people with whom he used the familiar du ["thou"]. But one cannot conclude that he therefore shared his friends' sexual tastes. Still, during the months he was with Hess in Landsberg, their relationship must have become very close. When Hitler left the prison he fretted about his friend who languished there, and spoke of him tenderly, using Austrian diminutives: "Ach mein Rudy, mein Hesserl, isn't it appalling to think that he's still there." One of Hitler's valets, Schneider, made no explicit statement about the relationship, but he did find it strange that whenever Hitler got a present he liked or drew an architectural sketch that particularly pleased him, he would run to Hess — who was known in homosexual circles as "Fraulein Anna" — as a little boy would run to his mother to show his prize to her...Finally there is the nonconclusive but interesting fact that one of Hitler's prized possessions was a handwritten love letter which King Ludwig II had written to a manservant (Waite, 1977:283f). [Hess was known by other names in the German "gay" subculture.

Hitler, Maurice and Hess in Landsberg Prison (dark-suited man is unidentified).

In recent years, long sealed Soviet archives have been opened to the West. In Deadly Illusions authors John Costello and Oleg Tsarev report of seeing the "so-called 'Black Bertha'

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Adolf Hitler's homosexual chauffeur Emile Maurice is seen here in Hitler's first automobile.

file, named from Hess's reported nick name in Berlin and Munich" (Cos tello and Tsarev:xix).]

Other writers offer similar assessments. According to Wilfried Daim, Frau Elsa Schmidt-Falk of the Nazi Genealogy Office of Munich observed that Hitler was so enraptured by the 'maennerbuendleische' (the young male students) on parade, that on this fact alone she concluded that Hitler was at least unconsciously homosexual (Daim:41). Desmond Seward, in Napoleon and Hitler, quotes Italian dictator, Benito Mussolini, who referred to Hitler as "that horrible sexual degenerate" (Seward:148). He also reports that "the files of the Viennese police list him [Hitler] as a homosexual" (Seward:299). Writer Charlotte Wolff, M.D. quotes Magnus Hirschfeld about Hitler in her book Magnus Hirschfeld. (Hirschfeld, you will remember, was Director of the Sex Research Institute of Berlin which was destroyed by Hitler in 1934.

About three years before the Nazis came to power we had a patient at the Institute who had a liaison with Roehm. We were on good terms with him, and he told us a good deal of what happened in his circle...He also referred to Adolf Hitler in the oddest possible manner. 'Afi is the most perverted of us all. He is very much like a soft woman, but now he makes great propaganda in the heroic mode'" (Wolff:438).

Adolf, the Boy Prostitute

In Germany's National Vice, Samuel Igra wrote that as a young man Hitler "had been a male prostitute in Vienna and Munich" (Igra:67). Lending credence to this is the fact that for quite a long time Hitler "chose to live in a Vienna flophouse known to be inhabited by many homosexuals" (Langer:192). That "flophouse" was the Meldemannstrasse Hostel. Hitler's long-time "gay" friend Ernst Hanfstaengl identified this residence as "a place where elderly men went in search of young men for homosexual pleasures" (Machtan:56). "It was an open secret at the beginning of the 20th century," adds Machtan, "that municipal hostels for homeless males were hubs of homosexual activity...[where many young men] kept themselves afloat by engaging in prostitution. Hitler spent over three years in this environment" (Machtan:51).

This would help to explain Hitler's close relationships to his purportedly homosexual patrons Dietrich Eckart and Karl Haushofer. Rec tor writes that, as a young man, Hitler was often called "Der Schoen Adolf" ("the handsome Adolf”) and that later his looks “were also to some extent helpful in gaining big-money support from Ernst Roehm’s circle of wealthy gay friends” (Reich:52).

But Hitler was apparently not involved with homosexuality solely to survive financially. Even in his pre-Nazi years, most of Hitler’s reputed homosexual encounters were consensual meetings in which no money changed hands. Machtan suggests that each of Hitler’s longer-term relationships in his youth -- with Reinhold Hanisch, August Kubizek, Rudolf Hausler and Ernst Hanfstaengl -- were homosexual “love affairs.”

There are numerous other incidents (“one night stands”) in which Hitler was purported to have been the solicitor and not the solicited one. Eugen Dollman, former member of Himmler’s staff and one-time Hitler interpreter, cited testimonies from the files of the Munich vice squad in which a series of young men identified Hitler as the man who had “picked them up” on the streets for homosexual relations (Machtan:135ff). Dollman himself was also homosexual (ibid.).

Additional allegations addressed homosexual conduct by Hitler during the first World War. The so-called “Mend Protocol,” a document prepared by German military intelligence under Admiral Canaris, contains the testimony of Hans Mend. Considered highly credible, Mend had this to say about Hitler:

Mean while, we had got ten to know Hitler better. We noticed that he never looked at a woman. We suspected him of homosexuality right away, because he was known to be abnormal in any case. He was extremely eccentric and displayed womanish characteristics which tended in that direction....In 1915 we were billeted in the Le Febre brewery at Fournes. We slept in the hay. Hitler was bedded down at night with “Schmidl,” his male whore. We heard a rustling in the hay. Then someone switched on his electric flash light and growled, “Take a look at those two nancy boys.” I myself took no further interest in the matter (Ibid:68)

Ernst Schmidt (left) and Hitler (right) during World War I.

Hitler and “Schmidl” (Ernst Schmidt) were, in Schmidt’s words, “always together” during their war years. They remained very close friends and were occasional housemates for over thirty years (ibid.:89ff).

A year or so after the incident described by Mend, Hitler supposedly “posed nude for a homosexual officer named Lammers -- a Berlin artist in civilian life -- and subsequently went to bed with him” (ibid.:100). This may be the incident to which Rauschning referred when he later told U.S. Investigators “that Lance Corporal Hitler and an officer had been charged with engaging in sexual relations” (ibid.).

The homosexual connection certainly helps to explain how Hitler became involved with the nationalists generally, and Ernst Roehm specifically, after the war. It is likely that Roehm’s homosexual inclinations were the reason that Colonel Ritter von Epp, the Freikorps commander, chose Roehm as his ad ju tant. “There are many in di ca tions that the relationship between Roehm and Epp was homoerotic,” writes Machtan, “and Hitler once let slip in later years that Roehm’s ho mo sex u al i ty first be came known around 1920” (ibid.:106f). Roehm, in turn, brought Hit ler into the ho mo erotic Freikorps broth er hood.

The Bay reuth Connection

We have men tioned above that Hit ler al leg edly iden ti fied his fa vor ite com poser, Rich ard Wag ner, as a ped er ast. We are not cer tain that this is true. What is cer tain is that Wag ner’s Bay reuth was “a no to ri ous in ter na tional ren dez vous for prominent homosexuals” whose absorp tion with Wag ner achieved “a cultlike qual ity” (ibid.:39). One fac tor in this attraction may have been that Wag ner’s sons Richard and Siegfried were homosexuals. Richard later com mit ted suicide (ibid.:254). Siegfried, pres sured to have an heir, mar ried a woman much youn ger than him self and had sev eral chil dren but surreptiously con tin ued his ho mo sex u al af fairs (Wag ner:p.197).

Hit ler was very close to the Wag ner fam ily and spent a great deal of time in Bay reuth. He made nu mer ous pri vate vis its there be tween 1925 and 1933, of ten with male ho mo sex u al com pan ions (ibid.:253ff). One com mon com pan ion was Jul ius Schreck, whose pho to graph hung be side that of Hitler’s beloved mother in his (Hitler’s) private quarters (ibid.:174f). Machtan cites one in ci dent, how ever, in which he and Schreck failed to keep an appointment to vacation with their Bayreuth hosts. Instead, Schreck and Hitler turned aside at the Bad Berneck health resort, some 20 miles away, where they spent Christmas alone -- the only guests at the inn (ibid.:174).

Hit ler may have had yet darker mo tives for vis it ing the Wag ner home. Only re cently re vealed is the ac cu sa tion by Wag ner family mem bers “that Hitler sexually abused the young Wieland [Wagner's grandson, now past 75] during the '20s." These allegations came to light in a Time magazine interview with American author and former diplomat to Germany, Frederic Spotts, whose research for the book Bayreuth (about the Wagnerian opera festival of the same name) included interviews with the Wagner family (Time, August 15, 1994:56).

"Spotts says that his original source was one of Wieland's own children...Now a respected academic, Spotts says it was while he was researching "Bayreuth" that he interviewed his source -- who, he insists, is totally reliable and has no reason to lie. Spotts writes:

This family member told me Hitler sexually abused Wieland in the 1920s when the boy was a preadolescent'...Hitler, who idolized Richard Wagner's supernationalistic operas (as well as his anti-Semitism), had become a close friend of Wieland's mother's. Winifred Wagner gave him the run of the child's nursery. Far from being revolted by what allegedly happened to him, Wieland avidly collaborated with his right-wing family during World War II (Penthouse, undated:32).

Weiland later became Hitler's protégé (Wagner:228) and was exempted from military service by Hitler's personal intervention (ibid.:105). The weight of the evidence indicates that Hitler was deeply involved in a series of short and long-term homosexual relationships. Even more certain is that he knowingly and deliberately surrounded himself with practicing homosexuals from the time he was a teenager. His later public pronouncements against homosexuality were designed to hide the life-long intimacy -- sexual and/or homoerotic -- which he maintained with the various men he knew and accepted as homosexuals.

Finally, in our look at Adolf Hitler, the man, we turn to Samuel Igra, a Jew who fled Germany in 1939 after twenty years of observing Hitler and the Nazis:

For the purposes of the present investigations Hitler is important for what he has represented...when he embarked the German people on the policy that brought about the world catastrophe. He was the central figure around which a number of men grouped themselves, from the 1920's onwards, in a movement to gain supreme control of the German people. As the movement developed they were aided and abetted and supported financially as well as politically by the industrial capitalists of the Rhineland; but the initiative did not come from the latter. It came from Hitler as the condottiere [leader] of a band of evil men who were united together by a common vice [homosexuality] (Igra:26).

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

While the Nazis promoted a hypermasculine ideal, Herman Goering (seen here in rouge and make-up) was reputedly a transvestite.

Yad vashem

The Nazi Rise to Power

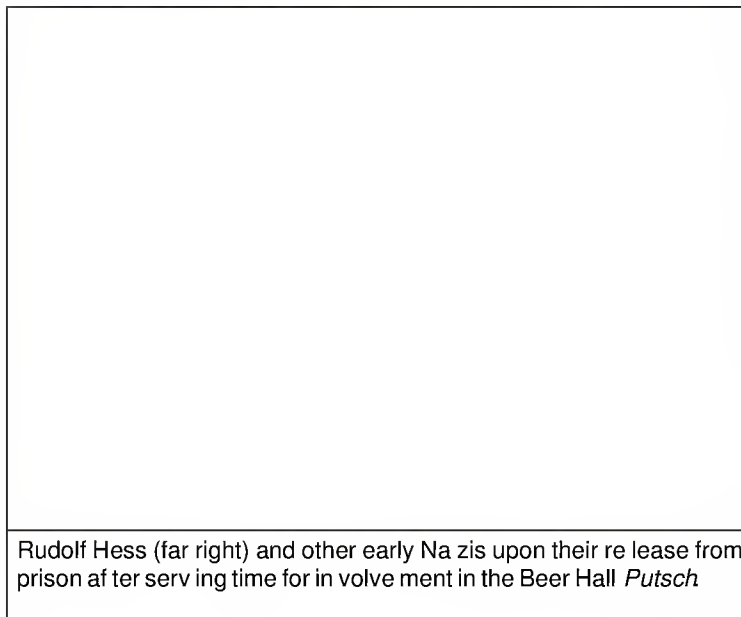

Through the 1920s, Hitler continued to capitalize on the political unrest of the German people to build the Nazi organization. The party's public image was greatly enhanced by the recruitment of Hermann Goering, a former World War I fighter ace who was revered as a war hero. Goering was probably not a homosexual though he was said to have been very fond of “painting his nails and putting rouge on his cheeks” (Fuchs:160). He joined the party after hearing a speech by Hitler in which he vowed to rebuild Germany’s military and throw off the yoke of the Treaty of Versailles. Hitler immediately set him to the task of training the SA as a military organization (Toland:123), an accomplishment that further increased Nazi power.

By the fall of 1922, Hitler had become the symbol of renewed German nationalism to many in Germany, although the average citizen had little knowledge of Hitler’s personal life or the lives of the Nazi leaders. At this point Hitler believed he would ultimately assume power in Germany through military strength, and he was not terribly concerned with portraying an image of morality. “The Party newspaper,” writes Edouard Calic, “explained that Hitler wanted to organize the movement on a military basis to achieve power, and that if it was necessary he would lead an uprising to renounce the Versailles Treaty” (Calic:33). However, his attempt to implement his plan in the infamous Beer Hall Putsch proved so disastrous that Hitler was forced to develop a different strategy.

On November 8, 1923, Hitler attempted to take advantage of a period of political turmoil to seize control of the government of Bavaria. This ill-fated maneuver (later dubbed the Beer Hall Putsch) not only failed militarily, it put Hitler in prison for nine months, thus nearly ending the party. When he was finally released from Landsberg prison on December 20, 1924, he announced that thereafter the Nazi Party would seek power through legitimate political means (ibid:64). This decision put the actions and goals of the party to the test of public opinion. Immediately, Hitler was confronted with this challenge. Shirer describes the internal condition of the party:

...in those years when Hitler was shaping his party to take over Germany's destiny he had his fill of troubles with his chief lieutenants who constantly quarreled not only among themselves but with him. He, who was so monumentally intolerant by his very nature, was strangely tolerant of one human condition -- a man's morals. No other party in Germany came near to attracting so many shady characters...pimps, murderers, homosexuals... Hitler did not care, as long as they were useful to him. When he emerged from prison he found not only that they were at each other's throats but there was a demand from the more prim and respectable leaders such as Rosenberg and Ludendorff that the criminals and especially the perverts be expelled from the movement. This Hitler frankly refused to do. (Shirer:173).

Rudolf Hess (far right) and other early Nazis upon their release from prison after serving time for involvement in the Beer Hall Putsch

Hitler learned that public opinion was not with him in the matter of homosexuality, despite Germany's international reputation as a haven for homosexuals. In criminal letters which had been stolen from Roehm by a male prostitute (Plant:60) became a public matter when Roehm took the matter to court (Hohne:81). This, of course, exacerbated the conflict among Hitler's lieutenants, and led Hitler to initialize the first in a series of public relations efforts to hide Nazi perversions from the German people. The greater part of these conflicts, interestingly, were between the homosexuals themselves who, according to Shirer "quarreled and feuded as only men of unnatural sexual inclinations, with their peculiar jealousies, can" (Shirer:172). He writes,

By 1926...the charges and countercharges hurled by the Nazi Chieftains at one another became so embarrassing that Hitler set up a party court to settle them and prevent his comrades from washing their dirty linen in public. This was known as the USCHLA from Untersuchung-und-Schlichtungs-Ausschuss — Committee for Investigation and Settlement. Its first head was a former general, Heinemann, but he was unable to grasp the real purpose of the court, which was not to pronounce judgment on those accused of common crimes but to hush them up and see that they did not disturb party discipline or the authority of the Leader. So the general was replaced by...Major Walter Buch, who was given two assistants. One was Ulrichs Graf, the former butcher who had been Hitler's body guard; the other was Hans Frank, a young Nazi lawyer...This fine judicial triumvirate performed to the complete satisfaction of the Hitler's personal attorney, Hans Frank, was also a homosexual.

Fuehrer. A party leader might be accused of the most nefarious crime. Buch's answer was, "Well, what of it?" (ibid.:174).

Obviously, the act of as signing Buch, Graf and Frank to this intra-party "court" rendered it a complete sham (at least in regard to homosexual crimes), since all were homosexuals. The only purpose of this and later efforts ostensibly designed to address charges of sexual perversion among the Nazis was to hide the truth from the public. Here is the root of Nazi "anti-homosexual" policies.

As Nazi power grew, Hitler became increasingly dependent on the support of the German population. And, understandably enough, the German people were at the same time growing increasingly disgusted with the debaucheries taking place in German cities. This two fold influence on Hitler led him to take ever more hard-line public stands against homosexuality in order to cover up the truth about the party. The severity of his public reactions to each new scandal (especially the later ones) mitigated the impact of rumors which constantly circulated in German society about Nazi leaders. Hitler's strategy regarding all moral issues was to craft his rhetoric carefully "in order not to offend the sensibilities of the people" (Mosse:159).

Roehm, of course, presented a particularly difficult problem for the Nazis because of his militant support for what we know to day as "gay rights." His SA men began to be referred to by the anti-Nazis as the "Brown Fairies" (Rector:56). Some time after Roehm's exposure as a homosexual (in his 1925 trial against the male prostitute, Herman Siegesmeyer,) he left Germany to take a post in the Bolivian Army. It is unclear whether he made this move in response to a personal sense of disgrace about the publicizing of his pederastic activities, or whether Hitler had convinced him to get out of the public eye for the good

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Roehm's SA troops, seen here leafletting prior to an election, became known as the "Brown Fairies."

of the party. In any case, Roehm's absence was only temporary. Plant writes,

In 1929 a party squabble threatened to tear the SA apart; a rebel group under Captain Walter Stennes had started a mutiny. Stennes taunted Roehm's stalwarts at a rally, dismissing them as "sissies in frilly underwear who couldn't order their boys around." As the rebellion grew more serious, Hitler ordered his old friend to return to Germany. Roehm did not hesitate to heed his Fuehrer's call and his armed squads quickly and ruthlessly suppressed the mutineers (Plant:60f).

While Roehm was away, the Nazis had been fairly successful at keeping their perversions out of sight. Most of the Nazis remained "in the closet," or at least out of situations that their political enemies could use against them. This, of course, changed when Roehm returned. Once again, stories of Roehm's exploits were passed along the grapevine. It would be old news, however, that hurt the Nazis again when Roehm's damaging letters were published by the newspapers belonging to the Social Democrats. These, along with articles on the homosexual practices of subordinate SA leaders, were published on the occasion of Roehm's appointment to head the SA (Oosterhuis and Kennedy:239n). "Social Democrats and Communists," write Oosterhuis and Kennedy, "suggested [in their newspapers] that nepotism and abuse of power in the SA and the Hitler Youth had contributed to making homosexuality an essential characteristic of the fascist system" (ibid.:251). Herzer comments that the press campaign against Roehm "invoked the possibility that 'large segments of German youth' could be led to homosexuality through abuse of military authority by SA members, most of whom were teenagers" (Herzer:225n). He writes:

The prospect of Roehm's exploiting his military authority over young Nazis for his "private" interests was the target of such headlines in the leftist press as "Captain Roehm Abuses Unemployed Young Workers," "Fox Guards Chicken Coop," or Physical and Moral Health of German Youth at Stake." It could scarcely go unremarked...that regulations otherwise rigorously implemented were suspended precisely in the Nazis private army, that the professional proscription of homosexuality that applied to every teacher, every officer, and every church functionary did not apply among the Nazis (Herzer:214).

Reunion of the "Old Fighters" who had been with Hitler in the early days of the Nazi movement.

Hitler, confronted with this threat to the Nazi image, responded with a dual strategy. He first offered a limited defense of Roehm, saying, "His private life cannot be an object of scrutiny unless it conflicts with basic principles of National Socialist ideology" (Bluel:98). Hitler also attempted to draw a distinction between the party and the SA by portraying Roehm's proclivities as an aspect of military society. "[The SA] is not an institute for the moral education of genteel young ladies," said Hitler, "but a formation of seasoned fighters" (Bluel:98). The implication seems to have been that homosexuality was an odd quirk of military life that should be overlooked in light of the value of these soldiers' mission and experience. Furthermore, he promised expulsion from the party for any one who continued to engage in "tongue-wagging" and "letter-writing" (Koehl:43).

Homosexuality was clearly not limited to the SA, however. Attorney and Hitler contemporary Erich Ebermayer, also a homosexual, observed in his diary that During its time of struggle, the National Socialist movement -- and not just the Roehm clique -- was a fraternity such as Blueher portrayed in his books, its motive force being homoeroticism...My exceedingly trustworthy sources of information about these confidential matters...have hitherto...proudly stressed the homosexual orientation of the Fuehrer and his inner circle (emphasis in the original. Machtan:232).

Secondly, Hitler strengthened his rhetoric against homosexuality in German society at large. An article that appeared in the official Nazi newspaper went so far as to threaten homosexuals with extermination. Once again this was empty rhetoric. Adolf Brand, whose openly homosexual magazine, Der Eigene, was by this time widely read in Germany, responded to the Nazi article with one of his own. Brand writes, Men such as Captain Roehm, are, to our knowledge, no rarity at all in the National Socialist Party. It rather seems there with homosexuals of all kinds. And the joy of man in man, which has been slandered in their papers so often as an oriental vice although the Edda frankly extols it as the highest virtue of the Teutons, blossoms around their camp fires and is cultivated and fostered by them in a way done in no other male union that is reared on party politics. The threatened hanging on the gallows, with which they allege they want to exterminate homosexuals, is therefore only a horrible gesture that is supposed to make stupid people believe that the Hitler people, in the matter of male-to-male inclinations, are all as innocent as pigeons and pure as angels, just like the pious members of the Christian Society of the Virgin...The public threat against the homosexuals has in the meantime not frightened any youth-friend or man-friend into deserting this party. One knows perfectly well that all those public threats are only paper masks (Brand in Oosterhuis and Kennedy:236f).

Power and Abuse

Despite Brand's protestations, Hitler's ruse was quite successful in regard to the Nazis' political fortunes. As Machtan notes, "What would now be rightly condemned as discriminatory disparagement of a minority was then still regarded as a criminological fact: that homosexuals make exceptionally skillful liars" (Machtan:103). The party fared well in the elections of 1932, and on January 30, 1933, Adolf Hitler was appointed Chancellor of Germany. The Nazi Party had finally come to power. However, the elections following Hitler's appointment, called by Hitler himself, were even more critical to the Nazis.

Hitler was demanding the power of authoritarian rule over Germany, but public support for his plan was ambiguous

(Toland:288). The greatest threat came from the Communists who had significant power and support of their own. The Nazis' diabolical solution to this problem involved the burning of the German Reichstag (another famous incident in Nazi history which is tied to the homosexuals in the party). Caroll Quigley, in Tragedy and Hope writes,

[I]t was evident a week before the election that the German people were not convinced [that the Nazis should gain the increased power they sought]. Accordingly...a plot was worked out to burn the Reichstag building and blame the Communists. Most of the plotters were homosexuals and were able to persuade a degenerate moron from Holland named Van der Lubbe to go with them...Most of the Nazis who were in on the plot were murdered by Goering during the 'blood purge' of June

The Reichstag was torched by the Nazis.

30, 1934" (Quigley:437f). Van der Lubbe was executed for the crime.

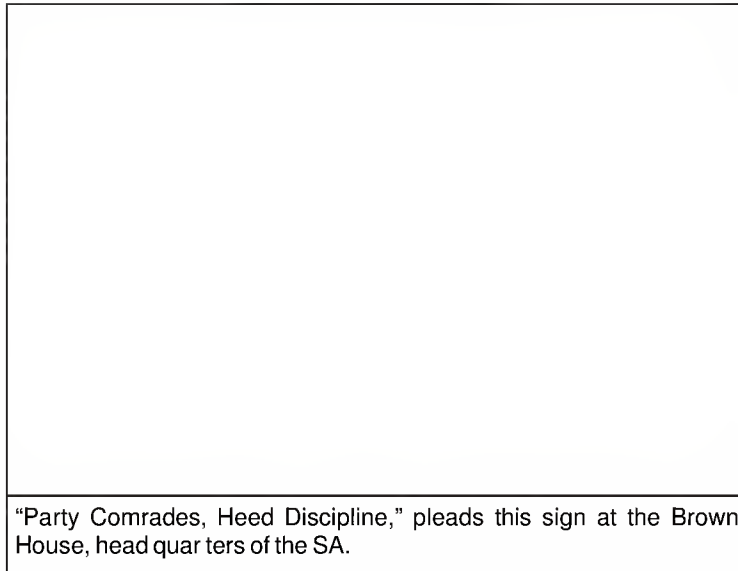

Van Der Lubbe was homosexual as well. Oosterhuis quotes a 1933 book prepared by the World Committee for the Victims of German Fascism:

Enquiries in Leyden have definitely established the fact that he [Van Der Lubbe] was homosexual. This is of great importance for his later history....Van Der Lubbe's homosexual connections with the National Socialist leaders and his material dependence on them made him obedient and willing to carry out the incendiary's part (Oosterhuis:253).

In The Life and Death of Hermann Goering, authors Ewan Butler and Gordon Young list the Reichstag fire conspirators. "The camarilla which finally drew up plans for the 'frame-up' against the Communists consisted, besides Captain Goering, its originator, of Goebbels, Roehm, Heines, Count Helldorf, leader of the Berlin S.A., Karl Ernst, a certain StandartenFuehrer (regimental commander) of the S.A. named Sander and two other members of the S.A., Fiedler and von Mohrenschild" (Butler and Young:111).

The strategy succeeded. The people, perceiving the Nazis as saviors in a time of crisis, gave the party complete control of German government. Not every one in Germany, however, was pleased with Hitler's ascension to power. Former Chancellor Kurt von Schleicher gave voice to an inner fear that foreshadowed his own death: "This pack of scoundrels, these criminals, these filthy boy street walkers! Well, they better not come near me" (Rector:64). Schleicher was killed in Munich by Hitler's murder gang during the Roehm Purge (Fest, 1975:465).

Once the party had come to power several homosexuals in the Nazi leadership believed they could act with impunity in regard to their homosexual exploits. This attitude would lead to severe consequences for these few men and indirectly dictate Hitler's official policy regarding homosexuality.

By the spring of 1934, Ernst Roehm's homosexual activities had become more flagrant than ever, to the extent that Himmler himself made a special trip to plead with Roehm to be more discrete. Roehm pretended to accede but, as Gallo reports

The next morning Himmler's agents report that one of the most fantastic orgies they had ever seen took place the night before at Roehm's headquarters. Bottles thrown from the windows smashed on the pavements below, and the sound of raucous laughter echoed in the street. Roehm himself had been an all-night participant, with his Lustknaben, his male prostitutes. Himmler is furious. (Gallo:68).

Roehm's exploits also began implicating the more genteel homosexuals in the party. Roehm's entourage now

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Ernst Roehm with aide-de-camp Count von Spreti.

included “young sons of the nobility, who form a brilliant staff with the faces of perverse angels: Baron von Falkenhausen, Count von Spreti, the Prince von Waldeck: all aides-de-camp to Captain Roehm” (Gallo:46). (Waldeck was the first member of the old nobility to join the Party and had been recruited by Himmler, himself -- Snyder:371).

At this same time Edmund Heines was appointed Chief of Police of Breslau. Gallo writes,

His staff resembles Roehm’s -- they are the objects of its chief’s amorous passion. The homosexual Engels is Obersturmbannfuhrer (Lieutenant Colonel), and the young Schmidt is aide-de-camp. This twenty-year-old is Heines' latest folly. Whatever that handsome young blonde does, he is protected by his lover. Once, in a moment of drunkenness, he publicly kills a drinking companion with his sword, but the Chief of Police forbids the public prosecutor to intervene....Beside this couple, the depraved Engels, a watchful intriguer, plays the part of Heines' evil genius. He is one of those who use the SA organization and the Hitler Youth to recruit participants for his erotic games (ibid.:70).

Samuel Igra also noted the increasingly public nature of the Nazi leaders' activities:

It was not merely that these men practiced their vices in private and among their own clique; but they made a system, almost a cult, of their moral corruption, and used their positions of power to molest with impunity innocent boys and girls whose features and physique they fancied. When Kube and his staff visited the villages of his district, Kube ist da was the warning passed from mouth to mouth among the people, whereupon parents hid their boys and girls in the cellars or in the back kitchens. The scoundrel needed so much money for his filthy orgies that he had his accomplices appointed to positions in the local savings banks and borough treasurers' offices, where they systematically robbed the tills. In Frankfurt-on-Oder, for instance, Kube's accomplices robbed the Post Office Savings Bank of 180,000 marks

Wilhelm Kube, Gauleiter of Ostmark and founder of the anti-Christian "German Faith Movement."

(about £15,000), and though the case was proved against him in court, he was dismissed only for a while and reinstated in the Party again.

These incidents divided the Nazi elite as no other issue had. Amoral scoundrels all, the majority were nevertheless practical men who knew the importance of discretion, even for dictatorial tyrants. The unquenchable arrogance of these SA leaders forced Hitler into an untenable position -- one which Roehm's enemies within the party would soon exploit. Hitler first would soon be compelled by Roehm's powerful enemies to assassinate the worst offenders in his ranks. Second, to counter the public impression that his party was rife with homosexuality, Hitler would be forced to publicly take a harder line against sexual deviance.

Chapter Five

THE PERSECUTION OF HOMOSEXUALS

Homosexualist revisionists assert that Hitler's ascension to the Chancellorship marked the beginning of a homosexual Holocaust in Germany. For example, as early as 1978, homosexual political activists claimed that "[m]any thousands and hundreds of thousands [of homosexuals] were...imprisoned in concentration camps where they died" (ONE Letter, May, 1978). Over the years the story has assumed ever more fantastic proportions. In 1986 Plant wrote, "After years of frustration...Hitler's storm troopers now had the opportunity to smash their enemies: the lame, the mute, the feeble-minded, the epileptic, the homosexual, the Jew, the Gypsy, the Communist. These were the scapegoats singled out for persecution. These were the 'contragenics' who were to be ruthlessly eliminated to ensure the purity of the 'Aryan race.'" (Plant:51). Rector writes, "Hitler's homophobia did not surface until 1933-1934, when gays had come to affect adversely his New Order designs -- out of which grew the simple solution of murdering them en masse" (Rector:24).

Unsupported assertions such as these have allowed the theory of a "Gay Holocaust" (in which homosexuals are portrayed alongside the Jews as victims of a campaign of extermination) to gain currency in the United States. The evidence does not support this theory. Unfortunately, the portrayal of homosexuals as Nazi victims has assumed a kind of "untouchable" status among supporters of "gay rights," probably because the success of the movement depends so heavily on public sympathy. Thus, today we see active suppression of information linking homosexuals to the Nazis and misrepresentation of homosexuals' experience in the Third Reich.

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store, www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Cover of Richard Plant's popular revisionist history, The Pink Triangle.

A few "gay" academics are more forthright. For example, homosexualist scholar Manfred Herzer admits:

As far as the scope of homosexual men's support of the Nazis is concerned, we face a self-imposed void in our knowledge that has taken on the dimensions of an ideologically motivated taboo. Within gay historiography, even such a repugnant figure as the Nazi leader Ernst Röhm has repeatedly been consigned to the role of victim, first of leftist and then of Nazi "homophobia," for only by doing so has it been possible to perpetuate a slanted account of history that persistently portrays homosexuals as persecuted martyrs and passive victims (Herzer:199).

Homosexualists Johansson and Percy promote the use of "outing" (exposing public figures, past and present as “gay”) to influence public opinion about homosexuality and the “gay” agenda. They advise that “[a]ctivists should clearly not out a notorious criminal or mass murderer as they would a famed medical missionary or celebrated inventor” (Johansson and Percy:284). They acknowledge that “[a]polo gists generally prefer to deny that ho mo sexu al-ity was widespread among Nazi leaders after the purge of Roehm and his associates....[although Italian “gay” activ-ist] Mas simo Con soli has re versed this ten dency by dwell-ing at length on the ho mo sexu al-ity of the early fol low ers of the NSDAP (National Socialist Party). (Consoli is, how-ever, a leading proponent of the “Gay Holocaust” public rela-tions ploy -- Grau:5).

Then we have the problem of simple error in claims such as that made by ho mo sexu al-ist Clau dia Schopp mann. She has claimed that German “gay rights” leader Martin Radszuweit was murdered in a concentration camp (Herzer:226). Herzer states authoritatively that Radszuweit did not die in a con cen tra tion camp: “...he died in the 1980s in his house in Berlin- Kopenick” (ibid.:226).

The Harvard Gay and Lesbian Re view (Summer 1995) contains an admirably candid re view of the book Hidden Holocaust? by Gunter Grau (in which Schoppmann was a minor contributor):

Grau and Schopp man con clude that there was no “holo-caust” of gays — hence the ques tion mark in the book’s title. This as sess ment is based on the wide range of con-temporary documents...Grau discounts the current wild es ti mates of the number of gays killed by the Na zis, sug-gest ing a fig ure closer to 5,000...How, then are we to read the widely quoted in cen di ary state ments by Na zis like SS leader Himm ler, who con sis tent ly called for the ‘erad-ication’ of homosexuals?...Much of this rhetoric, Grau says, was propaganda meant for public consumption...Gays were never the sub ject of po groms, and never faced the danger that the Jews did in Germany and occupied Europe.

Dr. Judith Reisman, in "The Pink Swastika and Holocaust Revisionist History," wrote this comparison of the fate of the two groups under the Nazis:

Were homosexuals treated like Jews, 2-3 million out of 2-3 million German homosexuals should have lost their businesses, their jobs, their property, their possessions and most would have lost their lives. Homo sexuals would have been forced to wear pink triangles on their clothing in the streets, they would have had their passports stamped with an "H," been barred from travel, work, shopping, public appearances without their armbands, and we would have thousands of pictures of pink triangle graffiti saying "kill the faggots," and the like. If German homosexuals were not Nazis, these 2-3 million men would have been homeless, walled in ghettos, worked as a mass labor pool, then gassed and their abuse recorded in graphic detail, as were the millions of Jews. And, if Germany's several million "gays" were not Nazi victims, they were Nazi soldiers, collaborators or murderers (Reisman: Culture Wars, April 1996).

The fact is that relatively few ho mo sex u als died in concentrations camps. They were never murdered “en masse” or “ruthlessly eliminated” by the Nazis. Yet many ho mo sex u als were jailed and some did die in Nazi work camps. (Of course, those who were jailed were males; there was never a systematic prosecution of lesbians -- Grau:15). What is the truth about Nazi persecution of homosexuals?

There are several incidents in Nazi history which are most often cited as evidence of their persecution of homosexuals. This list includes (1) the sacking of the Sex Research Institute of Berlin, (2) a series of increasingly harsh public pronouncements and policies against homosexuality by Hitler and Himmler, (3) the Roehm Purge (also known as "The Night of the Long Knives"), and (4) the internment of homosexuals in work camps. We will look at each of these issues in turn.

The Path of the Paranoid

One overarching factor must be kept in mind as we examine the history of Nazi persecution of homosexuals: the paranoia of Adolf Hitler. Hitler was deathly afraid that his own homosexuality would be exposed to the German people, undoing all that he had worked for in his ascension to power. Indeed, Lothar Machtan argues convincingly that the entire Nazi campaign against homosexuality, from the initial anti-sodomy policies to the Roehm purge to the internment of homosexuals in the camps, was orchestrated to prevent the truth about Hitler from coming out. Machtan writes Hitler's determination to destroy anything that might have provided an insight into his private life is well documented. He got rid of anything he could, and his arm was long, even before 1933. Those privy to his secrets were bribed, sworn to secrecy, blackmailed or killed....Hitler's...homosexuality...was the secret from his past that threatened at any time to rear its head as he rose politically....and he defended that secret by all available means (Machtan:20f).

One of Hitler's greatest problems was black mail. Black mail of ho mo sex u als by es tranged part ners and pros- titutes was a simple fact of life in Germany. "[H]omosexuals were particu larly vul ner a ble to black mail- ers, known as Chanteure on the ho- mo sexual scene," write Burleigh and Wippermann. "Black- mail, and the threat of public exposure, re- sulted in frequent sui- cides or suicide attempts" (Burleigh and Wipperman:184).

Police Com mis- sioner Hans von Tresckow, who served in Berlin during the years that Hit ler was on the streets in Munich and Vienna, wrote the following in his mem- oirs:

One of the worst features of homosexuality is that it gives rise to an enormous amount of male prostitution. Many per sons who are per fectly nor mal find it a lu cra tive though dis grace ful trade. In Berlin there are many cen ters where homosexuals make the ac quain tances of ac com- plices who will serve their requirements. And there are many cafés and tav erns which are fre quented al most ex- clu sively by such peo ple. The po lice are pow er less to put down this prac tice, be cause they re quire le gal au thori za- tion to in ter fere. My ex pe ri ence is that male pros ti tu tion has been steadily increasing for some de cades past and cases of black mail are be com ing more nu mer ous accordingly; for a person who goes in for this profession is almost always a black mailer. (Treschow in Lively:18).

For Hitler, the list of blackmailers included numerous political opportunists. Igra reports that Heinrich Hoffman, the official Nazi photographer, gained his position by using information about Hitler's perverse abuse of his (Hoffman's) daughter, Henny, to blackmail the future Fuehrer (Igra:74). (Henny Hoffman was later married off to reputed homosexual Baldur von Schirach, probably to quell rumors about his exploits with Hitler Youth boys). Heiden relates another story in which Hitler bought an entire collection of rare political writings to regain possession of a letter to his niece in which he openly revealed his "masochistic-coprophil inclinations" (Heiden, 1944:385).

Even more dangerous than the political opportunists were the political enemies who could not be bought off. As early as 1923, Hitler's enemies were relying on their proof of his perversion to secure an advantage, even if that advantage were only their own self-preservation. Eugen Dollman recorded his experience at a dinner meeting with General Otto von Lossow at the Bavarian war ministry.

Since November 9 [said Lossow], Hitler and his supporters have been well aware that any attempt on my life or those of my officers would cause a European scandal. I have some good friends in this world, and Adolf would lose that game just as he did on November 9 [date of the failed "Beerhall Putsch"]....The general produced from a desk drawer a police file containing secret reports and depositions about the private life of Herr Adolf Hitler dating from the time that he again turned up after the war -- all from the vice squad or police headquarters on Ettstrasse....What a dangerous weapon Otto von Lossow had forged during the years when he was at the height of his authority in Munich (Machtan:135).

Lossow would in fact survive unscathed until his death in 1938, despite "Hitler's well-documented hatred of the 'traitor Lossow'" (ibid.:137).

Others without benefit of hidden documentation of Hitler's sexual sins did not fare as well, even those with whom he had been intimate. Sklar writes that "Hitler attempted to bury all his earlier influences and his origins, and he spent a great deal of energy hiding them...[In this campaign to erase his past] Hitler ordered the murder of Reinhold Hanisch, a friend who had shared his down and out days in Vienna" (Sklar:21). Hitler was enraged that Hanisch had collaborated with Konrad Heiden, the Hitler biographer who had aired the Nazis' dirty linen (Machatan:52).

Until Hitler and his crew finally gained power in Germany, their methods for dealing with those privy to Nazi secrets were limited in form and scope. Afterwards, however, there were more and better ways to solve these kinds of problems and to punish their enemies at the same time.

The Sacking of the Sex Research Institute

The Nazis' hunt for incriminating evidence was obvious in the attack on Magnus Hirschfeld's Sex Research Institute on May 6th, 1933. As noted previously, the Sex Research Institute of Berlin had been founded by Hirschfeld in 1919 as a center for the "study" of homosexuality and other sexual dysfunctions. For all intents and purposes, it served as the headquarters for the effeminate branch of the German "gay rights" movement. For this reason alone, the "Butch" homosexuals of the Nazi Party might have destroyed the Institute. Indeed, throughout the preceding years the Nazis had increasingly harassed Hirschfeld personally.

Victor Robinson, editor of an autobiographical sketch by Hirschfeld, wrote in 1936 that "[a]lthough the Nazis themselves derived great profit from Hirschfeld's theories

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store, www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Adolf Hitler speaking to the German parliament. Once he had taken power, Hitler quickly fashioned a political climate in which he could control, jail or kill all potential blackmailers.

(and called on him personally for help) they continued his persecution relentlessly; they terrorized his meetings and closed his lecture halls, so that for the safety of his audiences and him self, Hirschfeld was no longer able to make public appearances (Haeberle:368). Homosexualist James Steakley acknowledges the “Butch/Fem” aspect of the in-cident, saying that some German homosexuals “could conceivably have approved of the measure, particularly if they were Nazi sympathizers or male supremacists” (Steakley:105).

Ignorance of the “Butch/Fem” conflict in the German “gay” subculture left many contemporary writers puzzled as to why the Nazis would attack Hirschfeld. An obituary for Hirschfeld written in 1934 exemplifies this confusion:

There is a darker and more savage irony in the fact that the Nazis should have treated him as an arch enemy; for the Nazi ranks are notoriously honeycombed with all degrees of homosexuality, and Hirschfeld is indisputably the man to whom it is mainly due that the rights of these 2 percent of sexual abnormals in the masses of the European populations to exist and to function on their own lines is now a matter for public discussion and public agitation (Herzer:221).

The attack against the Institute, however, was not motivated solely by the Nazi enmity against effeminate homosexuals. It was also an attempt to cover up the truth about rampant homosexuality and other perversions in the Nazi Party. Hitler also knew that Hirschfeld’s facility had extensive records that could be damaging to himself and his inner circle. This was the reason for the raid, according to Ludwig L. Lenz, the assistant director of the Sex Research Institute, who was in charge on the day of the raid. His description of the situation, part of which was quoted previously, is given here at greater length.

[O]ur Institute was used by all classes of the population and members of every political party...We thus had a great many Nazis under treatment at the Institute. Why was it then, since we were completely non-party, that our purely scientific Institute was the first victim which fell to the new regime? The answer to this is simple...We knew too much. It would be against medical principles to provide a list of the Nazi leaders and their perversions [but]...not ten percent of the men who, in 1933, took the fate of Germany into their hands, were sexually normal...Many of these personages were known to us directly through consultations; we heard about others from their comrades in the party...and of others we saw the tragic results: I refer here especially to a young girl whose abdomen was covered with pin scratches through the sadism of an eminent Nuremberg Nazi; I refer also to a thirteen year old boy who suffered from a serious lesion of the anal muscle brought about by a senior party official in Breslau and to a youth from Berlin with severe rectal gonorrhea, etc., etc....Our knowledge of such intimate secrets regarding members of the Nazi Party and other documentary material — we possessed about forty thousand confessions and biographical letters — was the cause of the complete and utter destruction of the Institute of Sexology (Haberle:369).

Burleigh and Wipperman report that the ransackers had “lists” of materials they were looking for (Burleigh and Wipperman:189) and that they carted away two truck loads of books and files. The materials taken from the Institute were burned in a public ceremony, captured on film, on May 10th (Steakley:105). The spectacular and oft-replayed newsreel footage of this event has caused the burning of books to become synonymous with Nazism. What information went up in smoke on that day will never be known, but we can be sure that the pile of burning paper contained many Nazi secrets. According to homosexual sources who were in Germany at the time, the Nazis destroyed twelve thousand books and thirty-five thousand photographs.

The building itself was confiscated from the SHC and turned over to the Nazi Association of Jurists and Lawyers (ibid.:105). This may perhaps be interpreted to mean that it remained in the hands of homosexuals. We know that at least Hans Frank, Hitler’s private lawyer, and the Nazi party's star attorney Dr. Alfons Sack were homosexuals (Machtan:219).

Anti-Homosexual Policies

Whenever the Nazis arrested homosexuals and raided even the homes of their supporters they were looking for incriminating evidence against themselves. Machtan writes:

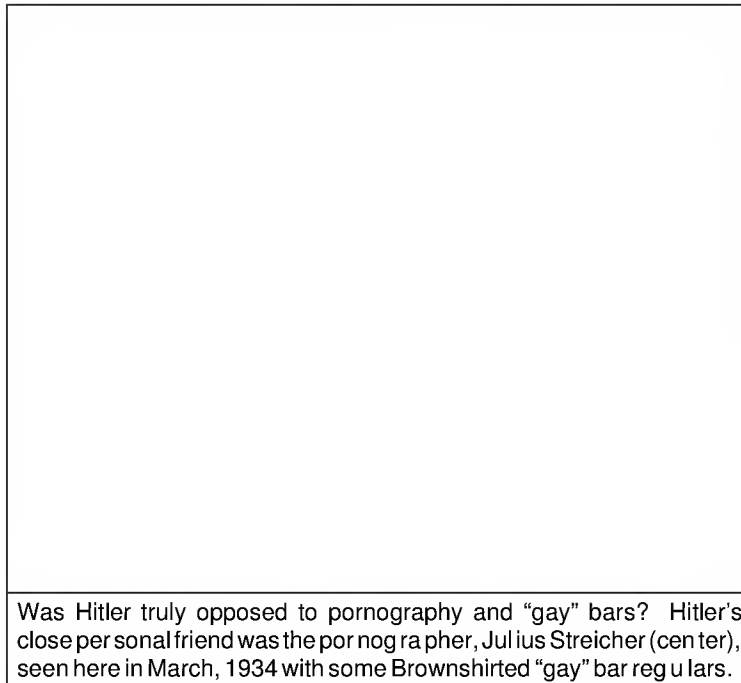

Hitler was mortally afraid of the obscurity of the homosexual milieu, which he himself had experienced first-hand in Vienna and Munich. He knew that this demimonde could at any time yield up disreputable secrets -- even some, perhaps, that might affect him personally....Although not interested in a policy of repression toward "ordinary" homosexuals, he was doubly so in cases where definite interests were involved (Ibid.:226).

However, there were also old scores to settle with the effeminate homosexuals who had opposed the Nazi rise to power. What developed, then, was a policy designed primarily to prevent embarrassment to Hitler in which all things homosexual were closely scrutinized by Himmler's secret police. But action was taken only when the Nazis caught enemies of the party or of the regime. These activities occurred independently of normal police functions in which violators of German anti-sodomy and anti-pederasty laws continued to be processed through the courts.

The law against homosexual conduct had existed in Germany for many years prior to the Nazi regime as Paragraph 175 of the Reich Criminal Code, to wit: "A male who indulges in criminally indecent activity with another male, or who allows himself to participate in such activity, will be punished with imprisonment" (Burleigh and Wipperman:188). When Hitler came to power he used this law as a means of tracking down and punishing those homosexuals who, in the words of one victim, "had defied the Weimar Republic, and who had tried to forestall the Nazi threat” (ibid.:183). Later he expanded the law and used it as a convenient tool to detain other enemies of the regime.

In February of 1933, Hitler banned pornography, homosexual bars and bath-houses, and groups which promoted “gay rights” (Plant:50). Ostensibly, this decree was a blanket condemnation of all homosexual activity in Germany, but in practice it served as just another means to find and destroy anti-Nazi groups and individuals. In deed, it is likely that Hitler had been a patron of some of the homosexual-oriented businesses that he shut down. The Berlin “Eldorado” club, for example, was a favorite haunt of the Berlin SA under Captain Paul Rohrbein, a close friend of Roehm and Karl Ernst (Machtan:185).

The “masculine” homosexuals in the Nazi leadership enforced the new policy selectively, “employ[ing] the charge of homosexuality primarily as a means to eliminate political opponents, both inside his party and out” (Oosterhuis and Kennedy:248). Revisionist Frank Richter also admits that the decree “was not enforced in all cases” (Richter:66). Oosterhuis and Kennedy write that “Although he was well known as a gay-activist, [Adolf] Brand was not arrested by the Nazis” but nearly all of his files were confiscated (Oosterhuis and Kennedy:7) .

The Washington Blade, the newspaper of the homosexual community in Washington D.C., reported on the research of John Fout, a “gay” history professor at Bard College in New York:

The Nazis shut down the two or three active Gay political organizations that had been operating in German (sic) as soon as Hitler took power in 1933. However, according to Fout, Gay bars and bath houses remained open until the late 1930s.... ‘The Gay urban subculture survived the Nazi period,’ said Fout (Researcher says Nazi persecution not systematic, The Washington Blade, May 22, 1998).

Jewish homosexual Gad Beck, Director of Berlin’s Jewish Adult Education Center, also challenges “gay” dogma on the degree to which homosexuals were persecuted in Germany. In his book, An Underground Life: Memoirs of a Gay Jew in Nazi Berlin, Beck claims “There was no problem being a homosexual Jew. Everyone turned a blind eye to whatever we boys were up to with each other” and cited only one case of the Nazi’s persecuting a homosexual man (Beck in “Fearless under the Führer,” The Advocate, October 26, 1999).

In 1935, Paragraph 175 was amended with Paragraph 175a which broadened the scope of the law restricting homosexual conduct (Burleigh and Wiperman:190). (Interestingly, the new criminal code addressing homosexuality deleted the word “unnatural” from the definition -- Reisman, 1994:3). This new law provided the Nazis with an especially potent legal weapon against their enemies.

It will never be known how many non-homosexuals were charged under this law, but it is indisputable that the Nazis used false accusations of homosexuality to justify the detainment and imprisonment of many of their opponents. "The law was so loosely formulated," writes Steakley, "that it could be, and was, applied against heterosexuals that the Nazis wanted to eliminate...the law was also used repeatedly against Catholic clergymen" (Steakley:111). Kogon writes that "The Gestapo readily had recourse to the charge of homosexuality if it was unable to find any pretext for proceeding against Catholic priests or irksome critics" (Kogon:44).

The charge of homosexuality was convenient for the Nazis to use against their political enemies because it was so difficult to defend against and so easy to justify to the populace. Since long before the Nazis assumed power, homosexuals generally lived clandestine lives, so it was not unusual for revelations of their conduct to come as a surprise to their communities when it became a police matter. This is not to say that actual homosexuals were not prosecuted under the law. Many were. But the law was used selectively against the "Fems." And even in this case, many effeminate homosexuals, especially those in the arts community, were given protection by certain Nazi leaders (Oosterhuis and Kennedy:248). Plant writes,

The most famous example is that of the actor Gustaf Grundgens...Despite the fact that his homosexual affairs were as notorious as those of Roehm's, Goering appointed him director of the State Theater...[And] On October 29, 1937...Himmler advised that actors and other artists could be arrested for offenses against paragraph 175 only with his personal consent, unless the police caught them in flagrante (Plant:116).

Even the most visible “Fems,” however, were treated far differently than were the Jews. Kurt Hiller, successor to Magnus Hirschfeld in the “Fem” faction of the German “gay” movement, was interned in a concentration camp but released (battered but alive) after nine months (Steakley:103).

An unknown percentage of homosexual prisoners were arrested not for sexual offenses at all, but for political reasons. A document from the Buchenwald archive states,

In the spring of 1942 a Berlin writer called Dahnke was sent to the camp as a homosexual. The main reason for his internment, however, was political statements which had brought him to the attention of the Gestapo (Grau:267).

A study of the Hitler Youth offers more examples that expose the meaninglessness of the Nazi’s harsh rhetoric against homosexuals. We have already noted Koehl’s observation that Himmler “mitigated his penalties privately” and tried to keep every incident of homosexual molestation of the Hitler Youth boys by the SS “as secret as possible” (Koehl:51f). But Koehl goes on to cite the records of the RJF, the security division of the Hitler Youth administration. “[D]uring the first six months of 1940,” he writes, “[there were] 10,958 crimes committed by Hitler Youths, the most common were theft (5,985), [and] homosexuality (901)” (ibid.:84). When he compared the number of homosexual offenses to the list of expulsions from the organization (an absurdly mild punishment for a supposed capital crime), however, Koehl found a low rate of expulsions for homosexuality:

Since the RJF Report listed 900 cases of homosexual crimes during a six month period alone, and only a third of that number were expelled during a twenty-five month period by court action, it suggests that the RJF was more

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Hitler Youth were frequent targets of the sexual predators in the SA and SS.
Yad Vashem

hesitant to uphold Article 175 of the Criminal Code than its official propaganda would have the public believe...[One] young delinquent with a record of minor thefts, for which he had spent eight weeks in jail, was not expelled from the HJ [Hitler Youth]. In September 1940...[officials] surprised him and several prison workers in a wild homosexual orgy in broad daylight on a road side. With sensational evidence like this in hand, the...leader then sought to have the culprit expelled from the HJ. But it took some time before this occurred, suggesting that the enforcement of Article 175 was lax (Koehl:85ff).

The increasing indifference of Hitler Youth officials toward homosexuality was an attitude reflected in the larger society as well. In 1937 the Reich Minister of the Interior issued a change of policy regarding Paragraph 175. Under the new ruling only four-time repeat offenders could be jailed or sent to camps for homosexual offenses. This was reaffirmed in 1940 by Himmler (S. Katz:146).

The Roehm Purge

The event in history most frequently cited as evidence of Nazi persecution of homosexuals is known variously as the Blood Purge, the Night of the Long Knives, and the Roehm Purge. Steakley writes that “[t]he indisputable beginning of Nazi terror against homosexuals was marked by the murder of Ernst Roehm on June 28, 1934, ‘the night of the long knives’” (Steakley:108). It was on this night (actually over an entire weekend), that Adolf Hitler’s closest aides orchestrated the assassinations of hundreds of his political enemies in one bloody sweep. Included in this purge were Roehm and several of the top officers of the SA.

We have emphasized that the leadership of the SA was mostly, if not entirely homosexual. The fact that SA leaders were the primary targets in the massacre could therefore be construed as a sort of “moral cleansing” of the Nazi ranks, which, in fact, Hitler claimed it was. But Hitler lied. The Roehm Purge was driven by political, not moral concerns. Hitler feigned disgust and outrage about the homosexuality of the murdered SA leaders to justify himself to the German people; it was a tactic he had used previously to allay public suspicions about the sexual deviancy of his inner circle. The importance of this fact is asserted in many leading works by both mainstream and homosexualist historians. The following are excerpts from four different historians who have examined the issue:

Perhaps anticipating a shortened life, Ernst Roehm published his autobiography History of a High Traitor in 1928 while in South America.

Hitler eliminated his closest friend Roehm and certain SA leaders as potential rivals. The strictly political motivation of this ruthless power play was initially too obvious to be entirely denied, but later it was conveniently obscured by charges of homosexual depravity (Haberle:369f).

The formal accusations against Roehm and those arrested with him centered on their homosexual activities, which Hitler had of course known about for fifteen years and shrugged off, it being alleged that these activities disgraced the party. For those victims without any homosexual background, "the Great Blood Purge" continued all over Germany, as Nazi leaders got rid of all their most hated enemies, as well as the inevitable "mistakes" (Garde:726f).

Ernst Roehm wasn't shot because the Nazi Party felt outraged by the abrupt discovery that he was "having" his storm troopers — that had been known for ages; but because his sway over the SA had become a menace to Hitler. In the Hitler Youth the "dear love of comrades" was evilly turned into a political end. And if the Nazi hierarchy was well larded with homosexuals, so was Wilhelm II's court and so was the Weimar Republic (Davidson:152).

Hitler himself, of course, had been well aware of Roehm's sexual orientation from the earliest days of their long association....So strong was Roehm that the Wehrmacht [German Army High Command] was concerned that he might seize control of the army. In 1934, Hitler became fearful that the Wehrmacht was plotting a coup against him to prevent such a takeover. To forestall this danger, Hitler had Roehm and about one thousand other men murdered one weekend in June 1934, the famous "Night of the Long Knives" (Crompton:79f).

There is some dispute among historians about whether Roehm had planned a coup against Hitler after Hitler's refusal to replace the regular army with Roehm's troops. This takeover of the army had apparently been part of the Nazis' original plan for the maximization of their political strength. Upon his appointment as Chancellor, Hitler was confronted with new and different challenges which required new and different alliances. For some time it appeared that Hitler would remain true to his pact with Roehm. From the time Hitler assumed control of the German government in January of 1933, until the spring of 1934, he allowed the SA to grow from 300,000 to over 3 million members (Plant:54). During this period of rapid growth, Roehm's rivals within the Nazi inner circle grew increasingly alarmed, as did the powerful industrialists and military leaders.

Tension between the SA and the army increased. General Walther von Brauchitsch, speaking for the majority of his fellow officers, said, "[t]hat gang of homosexuals, thugs and drunks should be allowed no part of [German rearmament]" (Gallo:87). For their part, the SA taunted the regular army soldiers, singing "The grey rock will be drowned in a sea of brown" (ibid.:87), meaning that the grey uniformed army would be swallowed up by the Brown shirts. Strasser writes,

At a meeting of the Cabinet, to which he belonged, [Roehm] demanded the incorporation of the Brown Shirts into the regular army, the Brown Shirt officers to retain their ranks. In other words he demanded supreme command of the Reichswehr, the S.S., and the S.A.. He confidently believed that he had Adolf's support...but Hitler remained silent...Blomberg, the Minister of National Defense, suddenly declared that the only course open to President Hindenburg would be to refuse outright. "The discussion is closed," Hitler then said, without daring to look his old friend in the face. Roehm, speechless with fury, walked quickly from the room. After June 30, General von Reichenau declared in an interview with the Petit Journal that Roehm's death sentence was virtually signed that day (Strasser, 1940:178).

As the conflict came to a head, SA conspirators created a "hit list" of Army officers who were to be killed (ibid.:218) and allegedly selected Standartenfuhrer Julius Uhl to assassinate Hitler himself (ibid.:237). It may be, however, that these allegations were invented as part of a fall-back rationale for the purge. It is well known that Himmler, Goering and Himmler's deputy, Reinhard Heydrich, worked behind the scenes to limit Roehm's power; and it has been reported by some sources that they generated rumors of a Roehm plot to drive a wedge between Roehm and Hitler. In any case, the Roehm Purge was not motivated by the homosexuality of its victims. The great majority of victims were not homosexuals at all. Otto Strasser, a high Nazi functionary whose brother, Gregor, was murdered that night, lists some of the casualties in Hitler and I:

Klausener and several other Catholic leaders were executed, as well as [Vice Chancellor] von Papen's secretaries. At Hirschberg, in Silesia, all the Jews, all the members of the Stahlhelm, and a few communists were arrested...beaten with rifle butts...and eight people were murdered...[V]on Kahr, an old man of sixty three...was taken from his bed, taken to Dachau, and tortured to death...His crime had been his failure to support the Munich putsch in 1923. Ballerstaedt...who had been instrumental in Hitler's being sentenced to three months imprisonment, was murdered by a special killer squad. [And] death was the penalty paid by Father Staempfle for having edited Mein Kampf, and therefore being familiar with the author's weaknesses (ibid.:200).

Igra provides us with a long and detailed account of the power struggle which led to the purge, beginning with a refutation of the idea that it represented a policy of extermination of homosexuals by Hitler:

We shall find that, far from eliminating the sex perverts from his party, Hitler retained most of them, and that he moved against those whom he did eliminate only with the greatest reluctance and after he had been relentlessly pushed by outside forces and circumstances. On June 14 and 15 Hitler was in Venice to see Mussolini. It soon became common knowledge that the German Dictator and his entourage had made an unfavorable impression upon the Italians...Mussolini was never a stickler for puritan morality, to say the least, but there was one vice which the Italians particularly loathe; they call it il vizio tedesco, the German vice. The conduct of some members in Hitler's entourage at Venice disgusted the Italians. Mussolini protested against the moral character and political unreliability of the leading personnel in the Nazi Storm Troops and warned Hitler that he would have to sacrifice his favorite colleagues if he wished to save his own personal prestige and that of his regime. Among those colleagues, Roehm, Heines and Karl Ernst were mentioned.

What chagrined [Hitler] the most was that he knew Mussolini had been prompted...by...[German] President Hindenberg...On June 21, Hitler went to Neudeck, Hindenberg's country seat...[He] was literally dumbfounded when confronted on the steps of the Hindenberg family home by General Blomberg and Goering, both in uniform. They informed him that the President would not receive the Chancellor, and that if the heads of the SA were not dismissed martial law would be declared, whereupon Goering would take over civilian control as Chief of Police, and Blomberg, as Minister of War, would take over military control.

Hitler was still recalcitrant and conceived the idea of rallying the Storm Troops around him, as a gesture of defiance against those gentlemen of the right...But an event occurred...which led Hitler to change his plan...He was summoned to Krupp's headquarters and there was received by Goering, and the heads of the Krupp firm and other industrialists...[T]hey delivered their ultimatum: Either Hitler should get rid of his companions or the Goering-Krupp-Blomberg combination would withdraw their support for the regime. Hitler accepted the alternative, but in his own way. He would double-cross Roehm, but he would also double-cross his taskmasters to the Right. He would eliminate a few of the elements that had proved objectionable to the Right, but he would maintain the bulk of them. Besides, he would take the opportunity of the general massacre to remove those against whom he had a grievance -- General Streicher, General Bredlow, Gregor Strasser, etc.(Igra:77f).

Lothar Machtan's analysis, benefitting from an additional fifty years of hindsight, adds an other important perspective on this critical event. His study emphasizes that while the German powers were forcing their will upon Hitler, the Fuehrer was confronted with one unescapable truth: the very men he must betray were the ones who held his own darkest secrets in trust. These were already hinting at blackmail due to the increasing tensions in the party. Machtan writes:

Roehm was not only acquainted with the shady beginnings of Hitler's political career, he was one of the very few people who knew about his homosexuality. It must have been Hitler's night mare that he would one day launch a smear campaign....Roehm's friend Edmund Heines [once threatened in 1933] "Adolf hasn't the slightest reason to open his trap so wide -- one word from me, and he'll shut up for good"....As Hitler himself put it, he was faced with "a crisis that could only too easily have had truly devastating consequences for the foreseeable future." His political instinct for self-preservation, if nothing else, compelled him to escalate matters. At the same time, he was urged on by the prospect of concealing his own homosexuality forever by the elimination of dangerous witnesses (Machtan:211f).

Edmund Heines was an especially dangerous threat if for mer Freikorps soldier Pe ter Mar tin Lampel is to be believed. In his unpublished memoirs Niemandes Knecht, Lampel claimed to know "a lot about Hitler's homosexuality," including specific knowledge of a liaison with Heines (ibid.:138). Roehm, too, was alleged to have been a sex partner of Hitler, although these rumors were considered "highly exaggerated" by one-time Hitler favorite Putzi Hanfstaengl (ibid.:113).

Pushed to the wall, Hitler chose the Nietzschean path of merciless self-interest. Machtan writes:

Hitler could defend himself only by going to extremes, so the few people who knew that he, too, was homosexual had to be either murdered or thoroughly intimidated. This is revealed by a closer look at the individual victims...Roehm, Ernst and Heines...Gregor Strasser...Karl-Gunther Heimsoth and Paul Rohrbein...senior civil servants privy to potentially explosive evidence about Hitler, for instance, [Prussian Police officials] Erich Klausener...and...Eugen von Kessel; Reichswehr Minister...Kurt von Schleicher and his right hand man, Ferdinand von Bredlow, the Munich police chief August Schneidhuber, the ex-premier of Bavaria, Gustav Ritter von Kahr....the attorneys of Roehm, Strasser, Ludecke and other senior Nazis...the Munich journalist Fritz Gerlich...and....Karl Zehnter [of the “gay” bar] Bratwurstglockl.

It may readily be inferred from these few examples that the operation carried out on and around June 30 was....a carefully planned campaign against people who knew, or were suspected of knowing, too much about Hitler (Machtan:216ff).

The Roehm Purge, then, was not a “moral” cleansing of the Nazi ranks, but a political one. Equally it was a realignment of power behind the German government which was primarily forced upon Hitler by powerful political elements, whose support he needed to maintain control. Igra points out that not only did the majority of the SA homosexuals survive the purge, but that the massacre was largely implemented by homosexuals. He cites Strasser that the “Chief Killers of Munich [were] Wagner, Esser, Maurice, Weber and Buch.” These men “were all known to be sex pervers...of one type or another,” concludes Igra (ibid.:80). Plant records that the larger campaign of assassinations across Germany was orchestrated by Reinhard Heydrich, also a homosexual (Plant: 56). Igra addresses Hitler’s justification for the purge:

Hermann Esser

Walter Buch

In his defense before the Reichstag a week later Hitler talked of “traitors.” That was his alibi...In his speech to the Reichstag he admitted that one of the motives for ordering the massacre was to get rid of the moral pervers in his party and that they were traitors because they practiced homosexuality. But under the dictatorship it was not possible for any one to put Hitler a question. No body asked him to explain how it was that, if his purpose was to get rid of homosexuals, he really didn’t rid himself of them but used them as the instruments of his own murder lust and still retained most of them as members of his personal entourage, as well as in key positions of the party organization and the government. Otto Strasser, in his book, The German St. Bartholemew’s Night (which has not been published in English), mentions sixteen of these highly placed homosexualist officials who survived the massacres of June 30 and retained their posts (Igra:82).

Following the purge, Hitler received a telegram from Hindenberg “expressing his ‘profoundly felt gratitude.’” ““You have saved the German people from a grave peril,’ the President wired” (Fest, 1975:470). Likewise, “Defense Minister von Blomberg congratulated Hitler for the successful completion of the ‘purge.’ (ibid.: 470). The army, too, was pleased by Hitler's move. Only a week after the purge an anti-Nazi Reichswehr officer told the French military attaché in Berlin that the army was 25% pro-Nazi before the purge, but 95% pro-Nazi after the purge (Gallo:312).

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Hitler with German President Hindenberg. Yad Vashem

After the Purge

While it is certainly true that several of the most prominent homosexuals in the Nazi regime were killed on the "Night of the Long Knives" the fact of history is that Adolf Hitler did not purge his regime of homosexuals in this incident or at any subsequent time. On the contrary, a simple review of the historic record reveals that Hitler continued not only to surround himself with homosexuals, but to place them in key positions in the Third Reich.

Judith Reisman notes that "Kazimierz Mocazarski, a Polish resistance fighter, confirmed that homosexuals 'remained party members...got promotions...were protected by the top [Nazi] brass' and served on the battle field and in prisons" (Reisman, 1994:3). Of the thirteen corps commanders of the SA, all known or suspected homosexuals, only seven were killed in the Roehm Purge (Gallo:16). The rest, along with the probable thousands, perhaps tens of thousands of homosexuals remaining in the SA, were quickly reassigned by Hitler, who put the entire SA under the authority of Heinrich Himmler's SS. Many of these sadistic, brutal men had been useful to Hitler since the beginning, and he made certain that their talents would remain available to him. It is likely that some of these SA survivors were among the participants in Goebbels' dinner-party-turned-orgy in 1936 (Grunberger:70).

Not all SA homosexuals remained loyal to Hitler, however. Snyder records that at least 155 SS leaders were killed in late 1934 and 1935 by a group called "Roehm's Avengers" who "identified their unit on a slip of paper pinned to the body of each victim" (Snyder:298). These assassinations help to explain why Himmler's "anti-homosexual" policies were initially strictly enforced, but later (after the Roehm loyalists had been arrested) were much less rigorously applied.

Aside from the SA, Hitler retained all of the sexual deviants of his inner circle, including Goering, Streicher, Frank, Maurice, Schaub, Wagner, Brueckner, Weber and Karl Kaufman, gauleiter of Hamburg. Hess was to remain until 1941, when he left (whether of his own accord or as an emissary of Hitler is still unknown) on his ill-fated "peace" mission to England. As an aside, the loss of Hess must have been very difficult for Hitler. As Ebermayer noted, Hess "was for many years the Fuehrer's [homosexual] partner, especially during their joint detention in Landsberg" (Ebermayer in Machtan:232).

Hitler later openly rewarded some of these men with top jobs in the government. Rector, for example, writes that "Hitler knew about [Walther] Funk, a 'notorious' homosexual, when he appointed him Reich Minister of Economics on February 5, 1938" (Rector: 63). SS

Lieutenant-General Albert Foerster, the homosexual who is mentioned in Langer as a possible sexual partner of Hitler (Langer:178), and whose “black record of atrocities against the Poles” earned him a death sentence in later war trials, was appointed Reich Regent of the Dan zig Free State just prior to World War II (Wistrich:178). And Graf von Helldorf, one of Rossbach’s original homosexual Brownshirts (Strasser, 1940:26), was appointed by Hitler to the post of police president of Berlin in 1935 (Snyder:145).

Hitler’s personal financial advisor Walther Funk

As he had turned on Ernst Roehm, several of the homosexuals in his inner circle eventually turned on Hitler himself. Johansson and Percy write,

One gay scholar, Richard Dey, for years has with others collected data computerized into what he dubs the Encyclopedia Homophilica. Recent publicity about Deputy Fuehrer Rudolf Hess’s homosexuality has led him to conclude that the tragically unsuccessful plot to assassinate Hitler in 1944 carried out by Colonel Count von Stauffenberg was masterminded by Admiral Canaris and backed by a network of other conspirators, like them, right est homosexuals (emphasis ours. Johansson and Percy:285).

Discretion would be the watch word for Nazi homosexuals after 1934, however. In light of its public stance following the Roehm purge, the Party could no longer protect flagrant homosexuals in leadership positions. A case in point is mentioned by Oosterhuis. He writes that “[i]n 1937, a top leader of the Nazi movement of the Sudeten Germans in Czechoslovakia was arrested for a homosexual offense, once again embroiling the party in a scandal that resembled the Roehm affair” (Oosterhuis:243). In response to this incident, newspaper reporter Walther Bartz (undoubtedly at great personal risk) wrote a series of articles in Die neue Weltbuehne on “the homosexual roots of Nazism” (ibid.:243).

One additional incident must be mentioned here which, aside from exposing homosexuals in the post-Roehm party, has great historical significance in its own right: the assassination of Austrian Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss, July 25, 1934. Dollfuss opposed Anschluss (the Nazi plan to annex Austria) and Adolf Hitler's personal ally. Igra writes,

A few days after the murder of Dr. Dollfuss in Vienna (July 25, 1934) the semi-official Italian newspaper, Il Popolo di Roma, published the comment:

Pederasts and assassins rule in Berlin.

By intimating that the authors of the Vienna crime were directly associated with the ‘pederasts and assassins’ who ruled in Berlin, Mussolini's paper made a grave accusation against the German government at a time when friendly relations existed between the two countries. Under ordinary circumstances the publication of such a statement would have given rise to a diplomatic protest and demanded an explanation. Yet, as far as is known, Hitler made no such protest. Moreover, Mussolini backed up his accusation by ordering the mobilization of Italian troops on the Austro-Italian frontier, as a gesture against Hitler's designs on Austria. But Hitler made no counter-move.

The explanation of Hitler's silence and inactivity in the face of the Italian challenge may be, and probably is, that he was cowed by Mussolini's blackmail. Mussolini knew that the murder of the Austrian Chancellor had been ordered by Hitler and that this was not done from political motives exclusively. He knew that personal revenge against Dollfuss was the chief motive working in the dark recesses of Hitler's mind. For Dollfuss had come into possession of an authentic affidavit which connected Hitler directly with the moral scandals I have spoken of...he had certified copies of the affidavit made and entrusted to the diplomatic representatives of [several] governments in Vienna. That is the account which has been given me, and I have every reason to believe it to be at least substantially true. Among others Dr. Hermann Rauschning assured me that he had seen a copy of such a document, which was in the hands of a foreign government. It declared that Hitler had been a male prostitute in Vienna at the time of his sojourn there, from 1907 to 1912, and that he practiced the same calling in Munich from 1912 to 1914. Mussolini obviously knew of the existence of this document, and had a copy of it at his disposal when he charged Hitler with pederasty and murder at one and the same time (Igra:66f).

Austrian Chancellor
Engelbert Dollfuss

Igra goes on to relate that the “leader of the gang who murdered Dr. Dollfuss and who actually fired the shots into the Chancellor’s body was a certain criminal named [Otto] Planetta who was also a well-known sex pervert” (ibid.:78). Hitler failed to take control of Austria at this time. That would occur in 1938 when Hitler forced the resignation of Dollfuss’ successor, Kurt von Schuschnigg in favor of Artur Seyss-Inquart (leader of the Austrian Nazis and also a homosexual -- ibid.:86, Snyder:8).

A few additional words are in order about the extent to which Hitler's personal fear of disclosure dictated Nazi policy about homosexuality after the purge. Machtan writes:

The violent imposition of a "state of emergency" was intended to enable the authorities to gain possession, at a stroke, of documents considered dangerous by Hitler... His principle motive for taking action against "Roehm and associates" was fear of exposure and black mail. What additionally confirms this is that the mountains of confiscated documents were not to be used in trials of any kind.... Only six months after the Roehm murders, the so-called Malignant Practices Act came into force. This act penalized any remark that might "seriously prejudice the welfare of the Reich".... most of the remarks... related to Hitler himself and his homosexuality.... from 1943, remarks to the effect that the "Fuehrer" was homosexually inclined were punishable by death (Machtan:220ff).

It is in this context that we must examine Hitler's instruction to Himmler to clamp down on homosexuality in the nation: "He wanted to get such a grip on the "problem" of homosexuality that it could never again present a threat to his position of power" (ibid.:225). For this reason he required a system of complete control over the homosexual community. The fact that he gained such control and did not use it beyond what was necessary to protect himself (and punish his enemies) is testament to his continued sympathy for his fellow "gays." In deed, there was really never a campaign to eliminate homosexuality from German society, despite Nazi rhetoric to the contrary.

Heinrich Himmler and the SS

Heinrich Himmler is an extremely important figure in Nazi history. He joined the Nazis in the early years of the party and "participated in the Munich Beer-Hall Putsch of November 1923 as a standard-bearer at the side of Ernst

Roehm" (Wistrich:138). After holding a number of mid-level positions in the party he was appointed "head of Hitler's personal bodyguard, the black-shirted Schulzstaffel (SS), at that time a small body of 200 men" (ibid.:138). Over the next dozen years Himmler's "astonishing capacity for work and irrepressible power-lust showed itself in his accumulation of official posts" (ibid.:138), eventually winning him the most powerful position in the Third Reich under Hitler himself.

The role of Himmler is also critically important to the assertions of homosexual revisionists. "Heinrich Himmler, Reichsfuehrer SS and head of the Gestapo," writes Steakley, "richly deserves a reputation as the most fanatically anti-homosexual member of the Nazi leadership" (Steakley:111). Indeed, if one were to accept Himmler's public pronouncements against homosexuality at face value, he would certainly deserve this distinction. For example, in a speech in which he commemorated the Roehm Purge, he said:

Two years ago...when it became necessary, we did not hesitate to strike this plague with death, even within our own ranks...in our judgment of homosexuality — a symptom of degeneracy which could destroy our race — we must return to the guiding Nordic principle: extermination of degenerates" (ibid.:111f).

However, as we have demonstrated, homosexuality was not the reason for the Roehm Purge. And if we look at other evidence we find that Himmler's practice regarding homosexuals was far different than his rhetoric would imply. Grau notes in Hidden Holocaust? that

In these speculations about a supposed "final solution" to the problem of homosexuality, there is clearly a failure to differentiate what was said in Nazi programmes from what was actually carried out. If Himmler's eradication rhetoric is thought to reflect the fate of individual homosexuals, then obviously the Nazi's policy will be seen as a drive to exterminate them all in the literal sense of the term. But things appear in a different light once we distinguish between anti-homosexual propaganda for public consumption and the reality on the ground....what he had in his sights was the homosexual type. (Grau:6, emphasis ours).

What the Nazis considered the “homosexual type” was the effeminate homosexual male who showed no interest in sexual relations with women. Let us recall the Friedlander distinction between “Butches” and “Fems.” Remember that Friedlander, together with the masculine homosexuals of the Community of the Elite, referred to effeminate homosexuals as “degenerates.” Clearly, in his speech, Himmler rhetorically lumped the masculine Roehm with all homosexuals, but it is probable that the distinction would have been lost on this particular audience anyway.

Himmler’s opposition to homosexuality was directly proportionate to the attitudes of homosexuals about procreation. For him, the individual’s highest duty to the state was the improvement of the race through proper breeding.

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Just as women in Nazi Germany were valued primarily for procreation, the fate of male homosexuals in Nazi Germany hinged primarily on their willingness to rejoin the breeding pool.

Himmler was obsessed with creating a race of “super men.” But in his view, some of the most perfect specimens of Aryan manhood were being lost to this effort due to homosexuality. Himmler felt this “loss” more keenly in light of the fact that Germany had lost two million men in World War I. He also believed there were two million homosexuals in the population. “This meant,” write Burleigh and Wippermann, “that Germany’s ‘sexual balance sheet’ had gone into deficit because ‘four million men capable of sex’ had either died or had ‘renounced their duty to procreate’ on account of their sexual proclivities” (Burleigh and Wippermann:192).

Himmler’s solution to this problem was, logically enough, not the extermination of the delinquent males. Instead he placed great hope in the use of medical “treatments” to reclaim homosexuals for the race. One experiment involved implanting artificial glands in homosexual subjects to introduce additional male hormones to the body. Other efforts paired homosexual prisoners with female prostitutes (ibid.:195f). While the idea of forced medical experiments is abhorrent, the fact that Himmler invested time and resources in such projects shows that he had a very different view of homosexuals than of other prisoners, even of those effeminate homosexuals who were held in such contempt by the Nazi “Butches.” Himmler was determined to rehabilitate rather than dispose of them.

Was Himmler a Homosexual?

Himmler may himself have been a homosexual. Filmmaker Walter Frenz, who worked closely with the Nazi elite (including a stint as Hitler’s private filmmaker), is reported to have traveled to the Eastern front with Himmler “whose pederastic proclivities he captured on film” (Washington City Paper, April 4, 1995). We also know that Gauleiter Helmut Bruckner of Silesia, upon being denounced as a homosexual by a Himmler underling in the month after the Roehm Purge, sent a veiled black mail threat via Hess and Goering to expose Himmler's alleged homosexual tendencies (Machtan:226).

Himmler began his Nazi career as an aide to Ernst Roehm, a fact which clearly refutes the idea that he was a priggish anti-homosexual zealot. On the contrary, Himmler's service to Roehm was not performed grudgingly. Himmler voluntarily wrote his own oath of loyalty to Roehm and repeated it ceremoniously each year in Roehm's presence. Gallo records a portion of a letter written to Roehm by Himmler: "As a soldier and a friend, I wish you all you could desire in obedience and loyalty. It has been and always will be my greatest pride to be counted among your most faithful followers" (Gallo:57). For many years Himmler had been pleased to serve the most brazen and outspoken homosexual in the Nazi Party.

It must be noted that even though Himmler helped to orchestrate the Roehm purge, the homosexual components of his personality had not substantially changed. Herman Glaser, in The Cultural Roots of National Socialism, writes, [Even after]...the murder of Roehm and the leading SA personalities...in a certain sense the sodomite romanticism continued to assert itself. The virтуally manic search for beautiful male figures perpetrated by Heinrich Himmler, for example, could not just be explained by the delusions of the breeder; it was also compensation for a repressed physical inferiority complex, which especially in people with homosexual tendencies gives rise to neuroses" (Glaser:132).

Himmler, like Hitler, was closely associated with homosexuals throughout his adult life. His path to Nazi leadership, however, was not, like that of so many others, through the German "gay rights" movement. Instead it was through the occult movement, and his Nazi career was defined by his passion for the occult. We have seen how Himmler was profoundly influenced by Guido von List and Jorg Lanz von Liebenfels, the homosexual gurus of nationalistic and anti-Semitic occultism. It was List's dream of a hierarchical male supremacist social order which formed the blue print for the SS. And it was from List that Himmler appropriated the “SS” symbol. From Lanz, Himmler adopted other occult themes. Wistrich writes,

For him, the SS was at one and the same time the resurrection of the ancient Order of the Teutonic Knights with him self as Grand Master, the breeding of a new Herrenvolk aristocracy based on traditional values of obedience, courage and loyalty, and a vast experiment in modern racial engineering (Wistrich:140).

Lanz originated both the revival of the Teutonic Knights theme and the plan for German racial engineering. The latter idea manifested itself in Germany in 1936 as the “State-registered human stud farm known as Lebensborn [meaning “fount of life”], where young girls selected for their perfect Nordic traits could procreate with SS men” (ibid.:138). By 1945 over 11,000 births had resulted from the program (Conway:273), which Himmler was later to claim as his greatest contribution to the Third Reich. But the plan, down to some of its details, must be attributed to Lanz. Goodrick-Clarke writes,

The similarity between Lanz’s proposals and the latter practices of Himmler’s SS Lebensborn maternity organization... indicate the survival of these mental reflexes over a generation. Lanz’s advocacy of brood mothers in eugenic convents (Zuchtkloster), served by pure-blooded Aryan stud-males (Ehehelfer), was revived in the Third Reich (Goodrick-Clarke:97).

Despite his homoerotic inclinations, Himmler was dedicated to the fantasy of an Aryan super race through eugenics, which necessitated heterosexual breeding as a cultural priority. As long as a man performed his procreative duties to the state, Himmler had no problem with his other sexual practices. This attitude is easily recognized in the case of his second-in-command, Reinhard Heydrich, whose own contribution to the Third Reich deserves special attention.

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

The homosexual Gestapo leader Reinhard Heydrich was one of the most feared men in Germany. Yad Vashem

Reinhard Heydrich: "The Blonde Beast"

In an organization which exemplified evil, Reinhard Heydrich was considered the quintessential member. "Tall, slim, blonde-haired, with slanting, deep set blue eyes," writes Wistrich, "Heydrich with his military bearing and ice-cool hardness seemed to epitomize the 'Nordic-Aryan type' of Nazi mythology" (Wistrich:134). Himmler selected Heydrich as his right hand-man in 1931, and within a few short years he was feared by everyone but Hitler himself (Reich:61). Wistrich describes him well:

...ruthless, cold and calculating, without any compunction to carrying out the most inhuman measures, Heydrich made himself indispensable to the masters of the Third Reich...His cynicism and contempt for human beings led him to exploit the basest instincts...in weaving his gigantic spider's web of police surveillance in the Third Reich. He filed extensive dossiers, not only on enemies of the Party but also his rivals and colleagues. The 'Blonde Beast,' who controlled the sole intelligence service after 1935, specialized in various methods of blackmail alongside weapons of open terror and persecution. His hand was most probably in the Tukhachevsky Affair — which led to the purge of Red Army generals in the Soviet Union — and he fabricated the scandalous intrigue which brought down the leading German generals von Blomberg...and von Fritsch...[He] masterminded the mock attack on the Gleiwitz radio transmitter which provided Hitler's excuse for invading Poland...[But] The most satanic consequence of this accumulation of power was revealed in Heydrich's implementation of the order for the wholesale extermination of European Jewry (Wistrich:134f).

Like so many of the Nazis, Heydrich had been a member of the Freikorps and "was strongly influenced in his early years by the racial fanaticism of the volkish circles” (ibid.:134). Heydrich also shared the sexual vice that marked Hitler’s circle of power. Stevenson created a profile of Heydrich taken directly from the BSC (Allied Intelligence) profile of Heydrich.

[Reinhard Heydrich] was the protégé of Heinrich Himmler, Reich Commissioner for Consolidation of German Racial Stock. Heydrich was fanatical in his hatred of Jews, having himself some Jewish blood. For this reason, Himmler considered him safe. It was always useful to have the means of blackmailing one’s colleagues.... “Nobody,” Heydrich declared in his anxiety to reach the top, “has greater contempt for Jews than my self. I intend to eliminate the strain.”

The fate of “sub-humans” herded into Germany’s new mercy-killing centers to be executed on the strength of a physician’s oath that the victim was no use to society, the preparations that moved inexorably forward to redesign Europe’s entire railroad system to serve the future death camps, all such obscenities before war were made tolerable by the pretense that if you could not actually see them, they could not be happening. In this atmosphere, Heydrich moved with single-minded purpose to a position so close to the Führer that none dared touch him except perhaps Admiral Canaris, who directed the German High Command intelligence service (HICOMINTEL). But even Canaris lost control over young Heydrich. The Admiral had a dossier on Heydrich’s homosexual activities after he had been cashiered from the navy, but Heydrich had also become expert at ferreting out embarrassing information about colleagues and superiors...

Heydrich’s career was guided and dominated by his relationship with an older friend, Friedrich Karl von Eberstein, son of Count Ernst von Eberstein, Heydrich’s godfather. Friedrich von Eberstein was Heydrich’s senior by ten years and had served in the navy during World War I. More importantly, Eberstein was one of the original Nazi leaders in the SA and was a personal friend of Adolf Hitler (Calic:33). Historian Calum MacDonald writes, While Heydrich was serving on the Naval staff in Kiel, von Eberstein had been leader of the Nazi Stuermaabteilung or SA, in Munich and upper Bavaria... In 1931, however, von Eberstein joined another organization, the Schutzstaffel or SS... On the recommendation of von Eberstein, now an officer on Hitler's staff, Heydrich became a member of the Nazi Party, number 544,916, in June 1931. He joined the SA in Hamburg and was soon involved in bloody street battles against the communists and other opponents of the Nazis. He took this step on the understanding that his association with the beer hall brawlers was to be purely temporary and that von Eberstein would use his influence to secure a speedy transfer to the SS... [Later, Hitler] began to look for someone capable of organizing the SS intelligence service on a professional basis and was handed Heydrich's file by von Eberstein (MacDonald:16f).

Outside of his involvement with the early SA we have little evidence to conclude that von Eberstein was homosexual, but we strongly suspect that he was. Other of Heydrich's close associates were known homosexuals. In 1931, when Ernst Roehm was faced with accusations of homosexuality under Paragraph 175, it was Heydrich who came to his defense (Lombardi:12). Heydrich's mentor in the navy, Admiral Wilhelm Canaris, was also alleged to be homosexual -- by Heydrich's successor in the position of Chief of the SD-SS, Ernst Kaltenbrunner (Rector:62). Rector questions this allegation because Kaltenbrunner "once said that 80% of the Abwehr [German Military Intelligence] were sexually perverted" and believed it "to be a center of every form of vice" (ibid.:62). This allegation, however, seems quite consistent with what we have come to know of certain segments of the German military, though the specific statements are perhaps exaggerated. Heydrich and Canaris were very close during Heydrich's tenure in the navy (MacDonald:12), but Canaris later came to fear the man he had trained in intelligence tactics, and kept a dossier on Heydrich's homosexuality as insurance to protect his own career (Steven son: 349). Much later Canaris was discovered to be a leader in the attempt to assassinate Hitler and was executed at Flossen berg concentration camp on April 9, 1945.

Heydrich's loyalty to Hitler never wavered. Rector writes that "Hitler considered him the ideal Nazi, and Nazi inner circles regarded Heydrich as a likely successor to Hitler even though Hermann Goering was officially slated for the post of Fuehrer" (Rector:62). Hitler's support gave Heydrich nearly unlimited power. As Snyder writes, "Heydrich could order immediate arrests and preventive detention, and he could send any persons to concentration camps at any time. He was the absolute master of life and liberty in the Third Reich" (Snyder:317).

The Grynspan Affair — Kristallnacht

Perhaps the single most infamous incident orchestrated by Heydrich was the November 9, 1938 pogrom known as Kristallnacht ("Crystal Night"), in which hundreds of Jews were killed and synagogues and businesses were destroyed across Germany. "In fifteen hours," writes Snyder, "101 synagogues were destroyed by fire, and 76 were demolished. Bands of Nazis systematically destroyed 7,500 Jewish-owned stores. The pillage and looting went on through the night. Streets were covered with broken glass, hence the name Kristallnacht" (ibid.:201). Michael Berenbaum, in The World Must Know, adds that ninety-six Jews were killed and thirty thousand were arrested and sent to the camps. Jewish cemeteries, schools and homes were destroyed. As a final insult, the Jews were held responsible for the damage and collectively fined one billion Reichsmarks (Berenbaum:54).

The Nazis characterized this wave of terror as the German people's spontaneous response to the assassination of German Embassy Councilor, Ernst vom Rath. While the "spontaneous" rioting was actually a calculated act of terrorism, the incident that allegedly sparked it was not planned. Ernst vom Rath's murder was a legitimately spontaneous occurrence which the Nazis exploited to justify an attack on the Jews which they had undoubtedly been planning for some time. Interestingly, however, the one common element in the story of the assassination and the story of Kristallnacht is homosexuality.

Ernst vom Rath was a high-level SA official who had received a diplomatic posting to the German embassy in Paris. While serving there he had taken up with a seventeen-year-old male prostitute by the name of Herschel Grynszpan, a Polish Jew (Read and Fisher:33). In partial payment for his services, Grynszpan had extracted a promise from vom Rath that his parents would be spared the consequences of a recent law that "revoked the citizenship of Polish Jews who had been living abroad for more than five years and who still retained Polish citizenship" (Rector:57). But vom Rath apparently failed to keep his promise; Grynszpan's family, along with thousands of others "were herded into camps in a no-man's land along the border region of Zbonszyn in freezing weather" (ibid.:58). In retaliation, Grynszpan shot vom Rath on the night of November 7, 1938. Two days later the Nazis staged the "Night of Broken Glass."

Grynszpan was seized by the Gestapo in 1940 (ibid:58).

When at last they had him in their possession, however, their planned high-profile courtroom prosecution went up in smoke. “At the last moment the trial was canceled on Hitler’s orders: Grynszpan had threatened to reveal a homosexual relationship with Rath” (ibid.:58). The Nazis were furious. “Vom Rath had been sold to the world as an official martyr, shot down in the service of the Fuehrer. He had even been given a state funeral at which Hitler himself had been a mourner. Was he now to be portrayed in the world’s press as a queer with a taste for seventeen-year-old boys?” (Read and Fisher:252).

Of course, the Nazis claimed that the confession was a lie, but apparently there must have been enough evidence to support the story, or the prosecutors could have easily refuted it. Instead, they delayed the trial. Read and Fisher explain:

The delay gave Goebbels the time to create a new myth about the late Ernst vom Rath, and he set about it in a highly ingenious manner. He arranged for the letters of French prisoners of war to be specially vetted by one of his men, who seized the more passionate and erotic messages. The letters were then doctored to make it appear that they had all been written to vom Rath by various mistresses, with the aim of producing them in court as written evidence of his heterosexuality. At one stroke, Goebbels would have created a new Don Juan, a German womanizer irresistible to French women (ibid:253).

Joseph Goebbels.

Clearly the Nazis could produce no legitimate evidence that vom Rath was a heterosexual. But even their falsified evidence went unused because, in the meantime, the Justice Ministry had obtained additional information that made a public trial impossible. “[A] story had been circulating in public that Herschel had in fact been vom Rath’s male whore and procurer for some time in 1938, and that vom Rath had been known in Parisian homosexual circles as ‘the ambadress’ and ‘No tre Dame de Paris’” (ibid.:253). Additionally, it was learned that vom Rath’s brother “had been dismissed from the service for homosexual offenses” (ibid.:253). This was too much for even Hitler’s propaganda machine to overcome, so the trial was again postponed.

To be fair, we must acknowledge that Read and Fisher concluded that the allegations of a homosexual affair between vom Rath and Grynszpan were untrue, merely the creation of Grynszpan’s lawyer. A review of all the evidence, however, including much which was apparently unknown to Read and Fisher, compels us to conclude that the incident occurred as we have described it herein. Our conclusion is further bolstered by the fact that the Nazis had placed pederastic homosexuals in other foreign posts. The German consul in Casablanca, Morocco, Dr. Theodor Auer, was homosexual as well. His “affair with the son of a local sheikh and his ‘behaviour’ with Arab, French and Jewish ‘bum boys’ were detailed by the British Secret Operations Executive (SOE) (‘How sex became a weapon of war,’ Daily Telegraph, July 23, 1998).

Grynszpan’s young life began and ended in tragedy associated with homosexual perversion. His home town of Hanover (perhaps not coincidentally the birth place of Karl Heinrich Ulrichs) “was a center of homosexuality,” according to Read and Fisher:

There were no fewer than 500 male prostitutes on the police books in 1918, and the chief criminal inspector put the number of homosexuals in the city at about 40,000, out of a total population of 450,000. The Grynszpan's neighborhood earned particular notoriety during the early years of Herschel's childhood through the activities of one Fritz Haarman, known as "the Butcher of Hanover," who picked up his victims, mostly adolescent boys, in the railway station, and took them home...When he had finished with them, he strangled them, butchered their corpses, and sold the flesh as meat. He was executed in 1925 (ibid.:33).

Grynszpan never did go to trial, though he remained in Nazi custody. Interestingly, the organization which came to his aid during this time was called the Society for Human Rights (ibid.:245). [We are not certain if this was the same "homosexual rights" group which had once boasted Ernst Roehm as a member, but it may have been.] Victor Basch, then head of the SHR "had pleaded for 'liberty or judgment'" in an effort to get him freed, but to no avail (ibid.:245). After 1942 Grynszpan just disappeared, probably killed secretly by the Gestapo.

Kristallnacht, the "spontaneous" incident which Grynszpan's act had supposedly sparked, has also been described as being defined by homosexuality. As all of Europe struggled to understand the cause for this horror, an answer was offered by British Consul-General, R.T. Smallbones. Smallbones was a "self-confessed Germanophile" who had served in Germany, from 1932 to 1939 and "had developed great admiration and respect for the sterling qualities of the people" (ibid.:127). "His opinion, therefore," writes Igra, "rests on first-hand experience of the German people for a long period of years" (Igra:7). He continues:

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Victims of the Lidice massacre.

[Small bones authored] a British White Paper, "Concerning the treatment of German Nationals (including the Jews) in Germany," in which the following statement is made: "The explanation of this outbreak of sadistic cruelty may be that sexual perversion, and, in particular, homosexuality, are very prevalent in Germany. It seems to me that mass sexual perversion may offer an explanation of this otherwise inexplicable outbreak"...I am convinced that this explanation is the correct one [writes Igra]. For, as a matter of fact, the widespread existence of sexual perversion in Germany...at the time the Hitler movement rose to power...is notorious. And authorities on criminal sociology are agreed that there is a causal connection between mass sexual perversion and the kind of mass atrocities committed by the Germans (ibid:7).

Heydrich, the man most responsible for this atrocity, met his death in May, 1942, at the hands of two Czechoslovakian resistance fighters. A bomb was tossed into his car, shattering his spine. He died on June 4, 1942. In retaliation "the Germans took savage revenge, after the manner of the old Teutonic rites, for the death of their hero” (Shirer:1288f). Over 1,500 people were immediately executed and thousands more followed, including the entire population of Lidice (ibid.:1289). The Lidice massacre was orchestrated by Heydrich’s replacement, Kurt Daluege, formerly a unit leader in Rossbach’s notorious homosexual Freikorps (Wistrich:43).

As for the official legal resolution of the Kristallnacht affair, that matter was handed to homosexual Walter Buch. A former early SA leader, now President of the Nazi Party Supreme Court, Buch concluded that the Nazi rank and file who had participated in the murderous pogrom were innocent of any crime (ibid:33f).

Chapter Six

HOMOSEXUALITY IN THE CONCENTRATION CAMPS

We have now arrived at one of the most sensitive topics in our discussion of homosexuality in Nazi Germany. As we have noted, revisionists have attempted to define homosexuals as a class of people who were “targeted for extermination” by the Nazis. One homosexual group went so far as to stage a high-profile “pilgrimage” to the Yad Vashem Holocaust Memorial in Jerusalem in May of 1994. They were met by a delegation of Jewish Holocaust survivors who were so overcome with outrage that some of them had to be restrained from physically assaulting the contingent of (mostly American) political activists. One man cried, “My grandfather was killed for refusing to have sexual relations with the camp commandant. You are desecrating this place...” (The Jerusalem Post, May 30, 1994).

Yet, as we have noted, some homosexuals did in fact die in Nazi concentration camps. We do not diminish the tragedy of any life lost under the Nazi reign of terror; however, we must reject the implication that homosexuals as a class should be given moral equivalency to the Jewish people and other victims of genocide. There are five reasons why we must reject this claim of the revisionists.

First, we know that regardless of Himmler's anti-homosexual rhetoric, homosexuals as a class were never targeted for extermination, as their continued role in the Third Reich demonstrates.

Second, those homosexuals who died did so primarily as the result of mistreatment and disease in slave-labor camps -- not in the gas chambers. As reported in the Washington Blade

John Fout, professor of history...said his research shows that about 50,000 men were imprisoned for homosexual related "offenses" by the Nazis between 1933 and 1945. Most of them, he said, were imprisoned for relatively short sentences and in regular German prisons, not concentration camps as has been generally believed (Researcher says Nazi persecution not systematic, The Washington Blade, May 22, 1998).

Third, though we cannot condone the form of punishment meted out by the Nazis, homosexual sodomy was a legitimate crime of long-standing for which individuals were being jailed both before and after the Nazi Regime (and in this country during the same time period). In deed, Fout acknowledges that rather than being arrested in discriminately simply for "being" a homosexual, "the overwhelming majority of those arrested...were charged with engaging in sex in public places, such as parks and public restrooms" (ibid). This is in contrast to the internment of Jewish people, whose ethnicity is morally (and in pre-Nazi Germany, legally) neutral.

Fourth, the actual number of homosexuals in the camps was a tiny fraction of both the estimated number of homosexuals in Germany and the estimate of the camp population. The camp homosexual population, estimated at 5,000-15,000 by Fout and by Joan Ringelheim of the US Holocaust museum (Rose:40), contained an undetermined percentage of non-homosexuals falsely labeled as homo-

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Dachau Concentration Camp was the first to open.

sexuals (see section titled “Anti-homosexual Policies” above). Homosexuals who died were “a small fraction of less than 1 percent” of homosexuals in Nazi-occupied Europe (S. Katz:146), compared to more than 85 percent of European Jewry. To be more specific, Buchenwald was the camp with the highest number of supposed homosexual prisoners. According to Grau, its annual population count of “pink triangles” peaked at just 189 in 1944, with fewer than 100 such prisoners in the years prior to 1942. “The figures were small in comparison with the total number of prisoners there -- well below one percent in every year” (Grau:264).

Fifth and last, many of the guards and administrators responsible for the infamous concentration camp atrocities were homosexuals themselves, which negates the idea that homosexuals in general were being persecuted and interned.

The Nazi system of concentration camps began with Dachau in 1933, but by the fall of the Third Reich the number of sites which had held prisoners in German occupied territory surpassed 10,000 (Parshall:57). It is not generally known that only six of these camps were the notorious “death camps.” In his introduction to Jean-Francois Steiner’s Treblinka, Terrence des Pres addresses this distinction:

The first Nazi camps, which were set up soon after Hitler came to power in 1933, were designed as places of detention and as training grounds for the SS. Dachau and Buchenwald were among the most notorious, and although we cannot forget that thousands of people perished in these places, we should keep in mind that camps of this kind were not intended or equipped to be instruments of genocide...however, as the Nazi policy of extermination took shape with the Jews as primary target, the major “killing centers,” as they came to be called, began to operate...The great killing centers were six: Auschwitz-Birkenau, Sobibor, Chelmno, Belzec, Maidanek, and Treblinka (Steiner:x-xi).

We make this point simply to show that the internment of homosexuals in the concentration camps was not equivalent to that of Jews and other racial groups who were, under Nazi policy, targeted for extermination. As terrible as life could be in the work camps, it offered better chances than being herded into gas chambers or shot in front of mass graves.

An additional point that deserves mention here is that the uniform pattern of brutality for which the camps are known was established as a deliberate and calculated policy by the SA under Ernst Roehm in 1933. Heiden writes that “[t]he S.A. had learned...that the will of an imprisoned mass must be broken by the most loathsome cruelty” (Heiden, 1944:565). He later adds that “[f]rightening reports also trickled through from the concentration camps, and the public began to realize that the Fuehrer’s picked troops had organized artificial hells in Dachau...Roehm admitted publicly that these things seemed unbearable to many people, but said he saw no reason for stopping them” (ibid.:732f). Though Roehm was soon killed, his system of mass torture and degradation endured.

The Guards and Kapos

There is one aspect of life in the concentration camps that is seldom noted by historians, yet is profoundly significant in this discussion. That aspect is the unique status of homosexuals in the camps. For while any prisoner could be chosen as a Kapo (a slave overseer), none other of the interned groups except homosexuals had counterparts among the Nazi guards and administrators (for example, there were no Jewish guards or administrators). Stephan Ross, founder of the New England Holocaust Museum, estimates that “about 20 percent of those guarding Jewish prisoners were homosexuals.” Ross was himself interned for five years in Nazi camps as a child and was repeatedly sexually abused by the guards. “[T]hey would beat you and make you do that [perform oral sex]” he said. “To this day I am very angry about it” (“Holocaust Survivor: Molested by Guards,” The Massachusetts News, April 5, 2000).

Examples of the homosexuality of the concentration camp guards can be found in many of the personal accounts of Holocaust survivors. Elie Wiesel, sent to the Buna factory camp in the Auschwitz complex, for example, acknowledges this in his book Night:

The head of our tent was a German. An assassin's face, fleshy lips, hands like wolf's paws. He was so fat he could hardly move. Like the leader of the camp he loved children...(Actually this was not a disinterested affection: there was a considerable traffic in young children among homosexuals here, I learned later) (Wiesel:59).

In Treblinka, the narrative account of the Treblinka uprising, Steiner records the story of another Nazi administrator, taken from interviews with survivors:

Max Bielas had a harem of little Jewish boys. He liked them young, no older than seventeen. He had a kind of parody of the shepherds of Arcadia, their role was to take care of the camp flock of geese. They were dressed like little princes...Bielas had a little barracks built for them that looked like a doll's house...Bielas sought in Treblinka only the satisfaction of his homosexual instincts (Steiner:117f).

Walter Poller, a German political prisoner who was interned in the Buchenwald concentration camp, also noted the homosexuality of certain guards. In Medical Block Buchenwald Poller describes the camp practice of mass beatings, and reports on the perverse pleasure these guards derived from the torment of the prisoners:

If the camp doctor happened to pass by after a mass whipping, and knew that a certain type of homosexual Scharführer [platoon leader] and SS officer stood at a certain gate, he arranged a little special entertainment for them, which he called a medical examination (Poller:103).

Poller leaves the details of these “medical examinations” to our imagination. But this brief glimpse into the ranks of the SS guards reveals much about the camps. Poller’s distinction between “types” of homosexual SS officers, for example, implies that there were more than a few such guards. Furthermore, their homosexuality was a matter of public knowledge. Both of these inferences are supported in another passage which tells of the retaliation against the Jewish prisoners following the attempted assassination of Hitler in July, 1944:

Two Scharführer came along the empty camp roads at about nine o’clock. One of them was...an Oberscharführer [commander of platoon leaders] known to the prisoners by the nick-name of “Anna,” because of his undisguised homosexuality. They entered one of the Jewish barracks, and there indiscriminately chose five Jews and brought them outside. From a second barracks they brought out eight more. From a third they selected another seven...the twenty Jews were ...[marched] off under Anna’s orders...Some time later we heard a burst of firing from the direction of the stone quarry. It was now clear that the earthly existence of our...Jewish comrades had ended (ibid.:136f).

Plant, though a revisionist, admits that “a few SS guards were homosexual” and that they “made some younger inmates, usually Poles or Russians, their ‘dolly boys’ (Pielpel)” (Plant:166). These homosexual antics were not carried out in secret. Plant writes that such guards would “occasionally compete with Kapos for these teenagers. They even drew lots to determine who should go to whom” (ibid.:166). Primo Levi, in Survival in Auschwitz notes that “young attractive homosexuals” had a much higher survival rate than average prisoners (Levi:81).

Younger children were not spared from abuse, but in fact many suffered more harshly. Dr. Judith Reisman writes that Nazi industrialist Alfried Krupp maintained a “children’s concentration camp” called Buchmannshof where very young children were used in sexual experiments.

In infants and children under six years of age were torn from their Krupp enslaved mothers and interned in Buchmannshof for their brief lives. Buchmannshof children died at the rate of some 50 per day for years, newly born or taken from parents brought to the Krupp slave camps. Krupp’s older slave children were called “slave youth” and little is known about their lives (Reisman, Kinsey: Crimes and Consequences:311).

Reisman believes that the Krupp camp was one source of the appalling “child or gasm” statistics cited in Table 34 of the 1948 Kinsey report (ibid.). Krupp, an exceedingly ruthless and cruel man, was tried and convicted at Nuremberg, but not for his involvement with Buchmannshof. The existence of the camp was never mentioned in the Krupp indictment (Manchester:537). (Significantly, Alfried was the grandson of Fritz Krupp, the notorious pederast who committed suicide when his sexual abuse of boys became public knowledge in Germany. The Krupp scandal exposed a powerful and corrupt homosexual clique in the government and led to high-profile courtroom trials between 1907 and 1912. For more on this chapter of German history see Lively, "Germany's National Vice Revisited," in The Poisoned Stream, 1997).

Although homosexuals constituted one of the smallest numerical minorities in the camps (Plant:153), they apparently were appointed in disproportionately large numbers as Kapos (roughly the equivalent of "trusties" in our penal system). Psychoanalyst and medical doctor Edmund Bergler writes that "[i]t is...well known that the capos in Hitler's concentration and extermination camps were only too frequently recruited from the ranks of homosexual criminals...I had firsthand information on this point from a patient who had spent six years in the infamous camp at Dachau (Bergler:279). Jan D. (who wishes to remain anonymous), in Auschwitz and Gross Rosen from 1940-1945, comments on the role of these prisoners: "The most cruelty inflicted on the Concentration Camps prisoners was done by the 'Capos' (work detail supervisors), mostly German criminals and homosexuals" (Private letter).

Alfried Krupp

In Hidden Holocaust?, Gunter Grau includes a report from the Buchenwald archives. It reads,

The kapo, Herzog, was a former member of the foreign legion, extremely brutal, apparently homosexual-sadistic and with a frightening tendency to become frenzied; if some one was beaten by him it was all over (Grau:268).

These testimonies are supported by Raul Hilberg, author of The Destruction of the European Jews and a member of the (U.S.) President's Commission on the Holocaust. Rec tor cites a De cem ber 10, 1979 Village Voice article in which Hilberg said "that homosexuals were highly valued prisoners [relative to the Jews], and that many kapos — inmates who administered the barracks and dispensed instant discipline (beatings and killings were common) were gay" (Rec tor:139).

There seems to have been a great dichotomy between the experiences of homosexuals in the camps. While on the one hand, Plant claims that homosexuals were treated more harshly than the members of other groups, citing Kogon's Dachau memoir, The Theory and Practice of Hell, other researchers refute this. Shelly Roberts, one of the Shoah Foundation's researchers posted the following comment on the World Wide Web, March 6, 1997.

I am one of the privileged who is interviewing holocaust survivors for the Spielberg video history project....I have encountered at least half a dozen survivors who offer fragments and indications and scraps of information that some German lesbians and international homosexual men were in fact treated better (a really relative term here) than the average Jewish prisoner....This is separate to any Nazi officer who collected young boys to keep in his private collection (read harum [sic]). These boys were not given any options.

If the information I am hearing from these nice Jewish survivors, who don't appear to have any axes to grind, is true, than [sic] it WOULD seem that (some?most?all?) homosexuals...may have been given some kind of favored status.

Roberts, interestingly, is no fan of The Pink Swastika, which she (or he) characterizes as “a spite-filled revisionist document on the net that purports to be a reality-based treatise on privileged gays” (ibid).

In any case, there are conflicting claims about the status of homosexuals relative to other prisoners in the camps. To some extent this may simply reflect the differences between camps and the philosophies of their administrators. But the enduring “Butch/Fem” conflict clearly had a substantial bearing on the treatment of homosexuals.

Plant writes of one survivor who reported that “the guards lashed out with special fury against those who showed ‘effeminate traits’” (Plant:172). And Rector records a statement from an interview with a former Pink Triangle named Wolf (a pseudonym) in which the issue of effeminacy was raised. “The ones who were soft, shall I say, were the ones who suffered terribly” (Rector:157).

Rudolf Hoess, the infamous commandant of Auschwitz, defined “genuine homosexuals... [by their] soft and girlish affectations and fastidiousness, their sickly sweet manner of speech, and their altogether too affectionate deportment toward their fellows” (Hoess in ibid.:137f). These “genuine homosexuals” were considered incorrigible and held in special barracks, while many non-effeminate homosexuals were released (ibid.:137). It is probable that Hoess was homosexual. He had been a member of Gerhard Roszbach’s homosexual Freikorps and a close friend of Edmund Heines (Snyder:301), the procurer of boys for Roehm’s pederastic orgies.

Rudolf Hoess

Wolf's testimony about the homosexual behavior of the SS guards also reveals the sadistic characteristic of the "Butches." "In the cell next to mine was a young male prostitute from Steglitz who the SS forced into [sexual acts]" (Rector:156). He also described a game the SS played each evening. "There were holes in the walls and they would reach through the holes and play with the genitals of the men sleeping close to the holes. Then they would say that they had caught them jacking off, and they would beat them" (ibid.:156). During his imprisonment, Wolf was also forced to witness an execution of six political escapees who had been recaptured by the guards. "They were stripped naked, tied to the table spread-eagle face up, and beaten to death with clubs, one by one," he reported. "You could see that the SS executioners became sexually stimulated while beating the screaming prisoners to death" (ibid.:157).

This extreme savagery exhibited by the "Butch" homosexuals of the camps was not rare, but some accounts of brutality are more gruesome than others. At Auschwitz, for example, Kapo Ludwig Tiene became the most prolific mass murderer of all time by strangling, crushing and gnawing to death as many as 100 boys and young men a day while he raped them (ibid.:143). Incidentally, the second most prolific serial killer in history was also homosexual, the infamous "Blue beard." The man believed to be the legendary mass killer, Bluebeard, is Gilles De Rais, born in Machecoul, Brittany, in 1404. In The Gay Book of Days, Martin Greif, reports that after being arrested on charges of blasphemy, Gilles de Rais "confessed to having killed some 150 boys 'for the pleasure and gratification of my senses'...He decided that sodomizing his victims would satisfy both his needs and the Devil's, and so more and more boys disappeared into his castle, never to be seen again" (Greif:21).

Perhaps the most grotesque story of all, however, is told by Rector in his chapter on the camps, grotesque not because it is bloodier, but because it reveals how widespread and acceptable these extremes of perversion had become among the Nazi elite. He writes,

As for the SS, their behavior was typical among those who engaged in sexual bestiality. An example is a film, in color with a sound track, that was secretly made for the pornographic enjoyment of a select coterie of Nazis showing a wild drunken orgy of beautiful boys and handsome young men being whipped, raped and murdered by the SS (Rector:144). (Note: Rector adds that this film is still to day “very discreetly and very privately shown to only an inner circle of certain homosexuals in Europe”).

No study of homosexuality in the Nazi concentration camps would be complete without mentioning a book called The Men with the Pink Triangle. In recent years this book has become a standard text for revisionists because it is purportedly the only autobiography written by a former pink triangle prisoner. The book itself, however, written by Heinz Heger, can not be considered reliable. It is presented as an autobiography, yet translator David Fernbach admits in his introduction that Heger’s account is not his own but is the story of “an anonymous victim of the Nazis, an Austrian” (Heger:9). And though it contains quite a number of anecdotes about homosexuality among the SS guards which would otherwise be useful in this discussion, these stories all have a distinct quality of sexual fantasy. We are asked to believe that nearly every male authority figure whom “Heger” encounters requires him to perform oral sex, for example.

Other ostensibly true-life histories of camp survivors are sober chronicles of enslavement and degradation, but “Heger’s” account is almost whimsical in places and includes numerous implausible scenes, such as one in which “He ger’s” Kapo lover countermands an order to punish “He ger” which comes from the camp com man dant him self. For this rea son we will not credit the many ex am ples of ho mo sex ual sa dism re ported in this work.

Before we leave the subject of guards and Kapos, we must men tion one of the few ac counts of les bi ans in Nazi history, again in connection with the prison system. In Paris Under the Occupation, His to ri ans Per rault and Azema de scribe the ac ti vi ties of the French Ge stapo. They iden tify “Sonia Boukassi, a drug addict, and Violette Morris, onetime French weight-lifting champion, both lesbians, [as] the chief women’s in ter rog a tors” in the no tor i ous tor ture cham bers of La Carlingue (Per rault and Azema:38).

The Prisoners

Homosexual prisoners did not integrate well into the prison popu la tions, writes Eugen Ko gon. The pris on ers os tracized “those whom the SS marked with the pink tri an gle” (Kogon:44). Kogon attributes this dislike to the fact that the homosexual population included “criminals, and especially blackmailers...Hostility toward them may also have been partly rooted in the fact that homosexuality was at one time wide spread in Prus sian mili tary cir cles, as well as the SA and the SS” (ibid:44).

Kogon implies that the pris on ers as so ci ated ho mo sex u al ity with their tor men tors and thus saw the “pink tri an gles” as ob jects of fear and ha tred. Plant sup ports this view, not ing that “homosexual prisoners were often tainted by the crimes of the ho mo sex ual guards—even though they themselves were often the victims” (Plant:167). There is evi dence, as well, that the ho mo sex u als in the camps al ien ated their fellow prisoners because of the predatory nature of their sex ual drive. Pol ish so ci o lo gist, Anna Pawelc zyn ska, in Values and Vio lence in Auschwitz, de scribes this situa tion:

Sometimes a confirmed homosexual would lead a prisoner of normal inclinations into homosexual practices. Such relationships were usually deeply immoral or deeply demoralizing. A prisoner-functionary's [Kapo's] desire to satisfy his or her pederastic sexual needs could also manifest itself in various brutal forms of terror and black mail used to bring the partner into compliance (Pawelczynska:98).

Pawelczynska's record also refutes Plant's suggestion that homosexual prisoners were "utterly disunited" and therefore powerless. She cites the use of prostitution as a form of currency among the homosexual prisoners. This was likely a common means of getting favors from the homosexual guards as well. She writes,

...paid prostitution existed in the camp and the choice of erotic partners was dictated by one's ability to pay — either in the form of help in gaining a better place in the camp structure or, at each visit, in the form of food or better clothes. Homosexual erotic availability became a coin of incommensurate worth, in return for which the chance of biological survival could be won, depending on the client's possibilities (ibid.:99).

In Buchenwald, however, we are told that "[a]ssisted by isolation from the other camp and more supported than supervised by the SS, a number of bandits were completely terrorizing the workforce, stealing the packets they were supposed to receive since winter 1941, and holding real orgies of brutality and the most shameless sadism. Sexual abuse and the foulest murder were the order of the day" (Grau:268).

There is one other distinction between homosexual and other prisoners. Toward the end of World War II, many homosexuals were released from the concentration camps and drafted into the Wehrmacht (Shaul:688). A leading his-

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store, www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Founder of New England Holocaust Memorial tells of his abuse by homosexual guards in a concentration camp.

torian of the period, Steven Katz cites records that “indicate that 13% of all homosexual camp inmates were reprieved and released” (S. Katz: 146). This, of course, happened as the Nazis frantically increased their “production” in the death camps, trying to exterminate every last Jew in Europe before the Allies could liberate the camps.

Were these homosexual volunteers mere cannon fodder in the Nazi military? Not for those with the right sadistic temperament. Many homosexual men chose to “transfer to a delinquent battalion like the vicious ‘Strafbataillon Dirlewanger’ (IGLA Euroletter 52, August, 1977).

Oskar Dirlewanger, a former Freikorps commander in the 1920s, was the creator of this extremely barbarous unit, also known as the Sonderkommando

Dirlewanger, “the most notorious of Waffen-SS units under perhaps the most sadistic of commanders” (“36th WaffenGrenadier-Division der SS,” www.wssob.com).

Dirlewanger put together this unit from concentration camp inmates after he himself was released from a camp after serving a sentence for sexual assault of a female child under fourteen “and other sex crimes of a vile nature” (www.eliteforcesofthethirdreich.com).

Survivor Stephan Ross says that many homosexuals were released without any requirement of military service:

All they [those accused of homosexuality] had to do to get out [of the camp] was to sign a paper to say that they had been rehabilitated and wouldn't do it [engage in homosexual behavior] any more... They were not targeted to die. Not like we were. (The Massachusetts News, April 5, 2000).

Before we leave this subject we should mention the fact that many of the non-effeminate homosexuals interned in Nazi work camps were former Storm Troopers whose allegiance had been to Ernst Roehm and not to Hitler. When “Roehm's Avengers” began killing SS leaders in retaliation for Hitler's assassination (Snyder:298), Himmler cracked down on these homosexual former SA soldiers and many were sent to the camps. (This would account for many of the incidents of sadism and brutality.) Holocaust survivor Eugen Zuckerman wrote the following in a letter to the New York Post, protesting the portrayal of homosexuals as Nazi victims in the New York Holocaust museum.

As a Jewish ex-inmate of several concentration camps, including Mauthausen, and as one who grew up in Berlin from the late 1920s until October 1939 and knows the history that led to the internment of gay men in concentration camps, I am opposed to a memorial to homosexuals...The first thousands of homosexuals interned were all members of the Sturm Abteilung (SA), the Nazi Storm Troopers (New York Post, February 16, 1997).

(For the reasons he cited above, Raul Hilberg also believes that the inclusion of homosexuals in any memorialization of Holocaust victims "would be a travesty" -- Hilberg in Reector:139).

Thus, if we add up the numbers, it appears that very few of the millions of European homosexuals were ever sent to concentration camps and of those who were, only a fraction were interned for purely sexual reasons. If, of the 5,000-15,000 homosexuals interned, the "first thousands" were SA Brownshirts and many others were non-homosexuals falsely charged with homosexuality, it is possible that mere dozens or hundreds were actually sent to camps for homosexuality over the twelve years of Nazi rule.

DEBUNKING THE “GAY” HOLOCAUST MYTH BY COMPARING “GAYS” TO JEWS
Variables	Jews	Homosexuals
1. Number of victims	As many as six million.	5,000-15,000 of which an undetermined number were political prisoners falsely accused of homosexuality.
2. The % of population sent to concentration camps	Up to 85% of all Jews in Germany and German-occupied countries.	Less than 1% of European homosexuals were interned.
3. The % sent to camps of those who were arrested	Virtually all Jews arrested were sent to extermination camps.	Of all homosexual arrests, criminal and political, 10-15% were sent to work camps.
4. Destination upon arrest	Directly or indirectly to one of six death camps: Auschwitz-Birkenau, Sobibor, Chelmno, Belzec, Maidanek or Treblinka	Homosexuals were sent to several of the 10,000+ work camps.
5. Reason for arrest	Genocide. Jews were targeted for extermination. Compare to Gypsies, Slavs and other ethnic groups.	Criminal acts. Homosexuals were arrested for violating laws against sodomy and child molestation which predated the Nazi regime. Compare to thieves, black mailers and other behavior-based groups.
6. Number that died in the camps	As many as six million.	Probably less than 6,000
7. Primary cause of death	Mass execution by firing squad, gas chamber, etc.	Starvation, disease, mistreatment by guards. Homosexuals as a class were not targeted for extermination
8. Chance of release	Jews had almost no chance of release.	Homosexuals were routinely released if they convincingly renounced homosexuality or joined the military.

Variables	Jews	Homosexuals
9. Use in medical experiments	Jews were used as guinea pigs in horrific experiments which usually resulted in mutilation or death.	To increase the breeding population, some homosexuals received surgical implants to raise testosterone levels or were forced to have sex with female prostitutes. Some were castrated. Death was rare and unintended.
10. Punishment for harboring	Punishment for hiding Jews was death.	There was no punishment for harboring homosexuals. Many were protected by Nazi leaders.
11. Representation among camp guards	There were no known Jewish guards in the concentration camps.	By some estimates, up to 20% of camp guards were homosexuals.
12. Responsibility for the Holocaust	The Jews were not in any way responsible for the Holocaust.	A high percentage of Hitler's cronies associated with Nazi atrocities were homosexuals.
13. Use of Holocaust "victim status" as a political tool	Jewish groups do not flaunt the yellow star or exploit the Holocaust for political gain.	"Gay" activists use the pink triangle as their movement's symbol and routinely invoke the "Gay Holocaust" myth for political advantage.
14. Relationship of Holocaust memorial sponsors and benefactors to victims	Jewish sponsors and benefactors of Holocaust memorials are often family members of victims. Non-relatives still share a 6,000 year ethnic and cultural heritage.	The only bond that links homosexuals in today's movement with those interred in Nazi work camps is the common practice of sodomy and a shared sense of social ostracism because of it.

Chapter Seven

THE NAZI HATRED OF JUDEO-CHRISTIAN MORALITY

A common misperception held by present day Americans is that the Nazi campaign against the Jews was driven solely by racism. However, the Nazis were equally motivated by a vicious hatred of Biblical morality. In fact, the two were inseparable. Samuel Igra addressed this question in Germany's National Vice

Why should it be the Jews particularly that the German forces arrayed under Hitler want to exterminate?... What does this small people stand for which was accounted hateful and obnoxious to the Nazi rulers of Germany? Or, to put the question in another way, what is there in the Jewish traditional code of morals which induced Hitler to come forward as the protagonist of the German people against the Jews?.... He was.... the condottiere of a band of evil men who were united together by a common vice [homosexuality, whereas] Jewish national tradition for thousands of years has been actively opposed to this particular evil; because it is germinal vice, a virus that poisons the whole life-blood of human existence (Igra in Lively, The Poisoned Stream, p.13f) .

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Race Defilement by Dietrich Hutton, published by "Deutsche Revolution" of Duesseldorf, was widely distributed in Germany.

A widely circulated German publication by racial theorist Dietrich Hutton, titled Defilement of Race, helps to illuminate this point. It preached that Germany could only achieve its racial goals (and its destiny) by destroying Judeo-Christian morality.

Through the German soul and through unadulterated German blood, the world will be able to return to a state of health, but only after it has been freed from the curse of Judaism and of Christianity....The mission of German nationality in the world is to free this world of Jews and Christians....It is the very essence of Christianity...for all people to become "united in brotherhood." To achieve this, all barriers of race must fall. The maintenance of such barriers means the preservation of national individuality, which is essentially irreconcilable with the Christian aim of universal brotherhood....Because this disintegration of racial culture has been consciously and systematically pursued by Christianity, and is still being pursued to day, it is race defilement. (Hutton:3ff).

The Nazi regime viewed Judaism as the source of the problem but identified Christianity as the essential and willing tool by which the Jews sought to gain world domination. Hutton writes,

The way in which Christianity is directed in the interests of world Jewry and its attitude toward Judaism is traceable to the undeniable fact that the founders and proclaimers of the teachings of Jesus of Nazareth were full-blooded Jews....It cannot therefore be coincidence, or negligence or ignorance that consciously makes Christians...deviate from the fundamental tenets of conserving nationality and cultivating race. The reason for this is to defile non-Jewish races, weaken and destroy them so that Judaism, as the "chosen people," can...[erect] a world sovereignty on the ruins of the non-Jewish races which Christianity has de stroyed. (ibid:19).

Signifi cantly, Hutton's ar gu ment is not fun da men tally an at tack upon race, but upon theol ogy. Both Jews and Chris tians are evil be cause of what they be lieve and how they thus or ga nize their so ci et ies.

Why then did the Na zis main tained a mur der cam paign against all Jews but only against certain Chris tians? One factor was obvi ously po lit ical prag matism since a siz able num ber of Ger mans iden tified them selves as Chris tians. But an other fac tor was that, dis tinct from Chris tian ity, the Jew ish iden tity is eth nic as well as re li gious. The sim ple so lu tion to the "Jew ish prob lem," there fore, was to scape goat and kill all eth nic Jews (even those who had aban doned Bi blical mor al ity).

In con trast, Chris tian ity was per ceived by the Na zis as merely the theological puppet of Judaism; a tool to enslave the minds of otherwise rational people of every race. Thus, the Nazi approach to Christianity was a campaign of “reeducation” by advancing Nazi ideology through relentless propaganda, while simultaneously suppressing the opposing Christian view.

If we wish to create something new [writes Hutton] we can not permit the existence and operation of disorganizing factors such as Christianity...we must overthrow and shatter all opposing and destructive forces -- unsparingly and without compromise. Germanic blood and Christian baptismal water can never mix” (ibid:15).

The Biblical Condemnation of Homosexuality

A brief review of the Judeo-Christian perspective of homosexuality is appropriate here to show why Nazi homosexuals reacted so harshly to it. We will see that homosexuality is condemned in every place in which it is mentioned; that all forms of homosexuality are equally condemned; and that homosexuality is always linked to personal and/or social destruction. The primary passages addressing homosexuality in the Torah (1-3, 7a) and the Christian Bible (1-7) read as follows:

1) Sodom & Gomorrah, Genesis 19:19. [T]he men of Sodom...surrounded the house. And they called to Lot and said to him, ‘Where are the men who came to you tonight? Bring them out to us that we may know them carnally.’...Then the angels said to Lot... ‘We will destroy this place, because the outcry against them has grown great...and the LORD has sent us to destroy it.’

2) The Curse on Sexual Perversion, Leviticus 18:22-30 You shall not lie with a male as with a woman. It is an abomination. Nor shall you mate with any animal, to defile yourself with it...It is perversion...[F]or by all these the nations are defiled...therefore I visit the punishment of its iniquity upon it, and the land vomits out its inhabitants. You shall therefore keep My statutes and My judgments and shall not commit any of these abominations...I am the Lord your God.

3) The Benjamite Wars, Judges 19-21 [S]uddenly certain men of the city, perverted men, surrounded the house and beat on the door...saying, 'Bring out the man who came to your house, that we may know him carnally!'...Then the tribes of Israel...[said] 'What is this wickedness that has occurred among you? 'Now therefore, deliver up...the perverted men who are in Gibeah...But the children of Benjamin would not listen to the voice of their brethren...Instead...[they] gathered together...to go to battle against the children of Israel.'

4) The Reprobate Mind, Romans 1:18-32 Therefore God also gave them up to uncleanness, in the lusts of their hearts, to dishonor their bodies among themselves, who exchanged the truth of God for the lie, and worshiped and served the creature rather than the Creator, who is blessed for ever. Amen. For this reason God gave them up to vile passions. For even their women exchanged the natural use for what is against nature. Likewise also the men, leaving the natural use of the woman, burned in their lust for one another, men with men committing what is shameful, and receiving in themselves the penalty of their error which was due.

5) Homosexuals Must Repent To Go To Heaven, 1 Corinthians 6:9-11 Do you not know that the unrighteous will not inherit the kingdom of God? Do not be deceived. Neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor homosexuals, nor sodomites, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners will inherit the kingdom of God. And such were some of you. But you were washed, but you were sanc ti fied, in the name of the Lord Je sus Christ and by the Spirit of our God.

6) The Reason God Destroyed Sodom, Jude 1:7

Sodom and Go mor rah...hav ing given them selves over to sexual immorality and gone after strange flesh, are set forth as an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire.

7) Regarding Homosexuality Generally, see also (a)

Gen 2:24, 9:22, Deut 23:1, 1 Kings 14:24, 15:9-12, 22:46, 2 Kings 23:7, Job 36:14, (b) 1 Tim 1:9-10, Rev 22:15.

While today certain “gay theologians” misinterpret these pas sages to try and strip them of their pro scrip tive au thor ity, these ar gu ments were un known to the Ger mans in the Nazi era. What was known, es pe cially in faith ful Jew ish circles, was that the To rah (Old Tes ta ment) des ig nates ho mo sex ual ity as toeva, or abom i na tion. This Hebrew word is in fact the se ver est term of op pro bri um in the Bi ble. Used par tic u lar ly in con nec tion with ho mo sex ual ity, toeva con notes a de gree of moral per ver sion so hei nous that (as cited above) the land will literally “vomit out” the na tion which prac tices it (Rabbi Sam uel Dresner: Pri vate let ter).

In light of this, Nazi hos til ity to Jews and Chris tians (es pe cially those who re mained true to their faith) is thus eas ier to understand. Yet even this insight does not fully ex plain the depth of Nazi ha tred.

Towards the Final Solution

There is per haps no more ter ri ble ex pres sion in hu man speech than the “Fi nal So lu tion.” In it is con tained an evil so pro found as not to be easily assimilated by the human mind. How could peo ple be so filled with mal ice, we won der, that they would seek to ex ter mi nate whole races of fel low human beings from the face of the earth? Only in a spiritual context can we truly understand the meaning of the “Final Solution,” the Holocaust of the Jews.

It is not surprising, then, that the roots of the Nazi evil are found in the neo-pagan revival of the late 1800s, which manifested itself in the glorification of occultism and the subversion of the Judeo-Christian foundations of German culture.

We have addressed many elements of the neo-pagan revival in previous chapters, but to find the specific roots of the Holocaust we must revisit the occult ideologue, Jorg Lanz von Liebenfels. Remember that Lanz, the homosexual male supremacist, was called “the man who gave Hitler his ideas,” by Austrian psychologist Wilhelm Daim. Anti-Semitic pamphlets by Lanz and Guido von List shaped Hitler’s early hatred of the Jews. It was Lanz who originated the concept of Himmler’s Lebensborn, the Aryan breeding colony. And it was Lanz, again, who can be seen behind Hitler’s answers to “the Jewish question.”

Goodrick-Clarke writes,

The similarity between Lanz’s proposals...and the Nazi plans for the disposal of the Jews and the treatment of the enslaved Slav populations in the East [is unmistakable]. Lanz’s specific recommendations for the disposal of racial inferiors were various and included: deportation to Madagascar; enslavement; incineration as a sacrifice to God; and use as beasts of burden. Both the psychopathology of the Nazi Holocaust and the subjugation of non-Aryans in the East were presaged by Lanz's grim speculations (Goodrick-Clarke:97).

Jorg Lanz von Liebenfels

We are all too familiar with the Nazi enslavement of “non-Aryans” and with their incineration of the Jews in the death camps, but these atrocities, though they agree perfectly with his ideas, do not by themselves prove any special influence by Lanz. In the Nazis’ “Madagascar Plan” (which was nothing more than a proposal to put all the Jews on the island of Madagascar), however, we find an indisputable connection to Lanz. In Harvest of Hate: The Nazi Program for the Destruction of the Jews of Europe, historian Leon Poliakov writes about the “Madagascar Plan,” but reveals that he was unaware of Lanz’s influence:

Goering had mentioned the “Madagascar Question” during the...meeting of November 12, 1938. Himmler had been dreaming of it since 1934, as one witness testified. Putting all the Jews on a large island — moreover, a French island — would satisfy the Nazi love of symbolism. At any rate, the idea was put forth by the Minister of Foreign Affairs...[and] was accepted by Himmler as well as by the Fuehrer himself. Great inventions always have several originators; other more or less famous dignitaries can claim the honor of fathering this “philanthropic solution.” For example, Philip Bouhler, Chief of the Fuehrer’s personal chancellery...hoped to become the governor of the island (Poliakov:43).

Guido von List directed his hatred more specifically against Christians, and developed an elaborate mythology to justify attacks against Christianity. Goodrick-Clarke explains List’s ideas:

[List developed] a conspiracy theory that identified Christianity as the negative and destructive principle in the history of the Ario-Germanic race. If it could be shown that Christian missionaries had been intent upon the destruction of Armanist culture, its actual non-existence in the present could be related to empirical events...List's account of Christianization in the historic German lands reiterated the debilitation of Teutonic vigour and morale and the destruction of German national consciousness. He claimed that the Church's gospel of love and charity had encouraged a deviation from the strict eugenics of 'the old Aryan sexual morality'...it was he who had demonized the Church as the sole source of evil in the pan-German scheme of belief (Goodrick-Clarke:68f).

Unfortunately, the occult dimension of Nazi history is overlooked by many historians who must attempt, therefore, to find materialist answers to ideological questions. And if the occult dimension has been ignored, this is doubly true of the homosexual dimension. As Duberman, Vicinus and Chauncey have stated in the title to their "gay studies" text, the role of homosexuals and pederasts has been Hidden from History. They, of course, imagine the influence of homosexuality to be positive. Yet the rise of homosexuality in a Judeo-Christian-based culture necessarily represents the diminution of Biblical morality as a restraint on human passions. Consequently, where Judeo-Christian ideals decrease, violence and depravity increase.

It was the pederasts of the Community of the Elite who, in large part, sponsored the revival of Hellenic pagan ideals in German society. These men were fanatically anti-Jew and anti-Christian because of the injunctions against homosexuality implicit in the Judeo-Christian sexual ethic. Johansson notes that Hans Blueher, one of the leading theoreticians of the Community of the Elite, "maintained that Judaism had suppressed the homosexual aspect of its culture, with concomitant hypertrophy [enlargement] of the family" (Johansson:816). Benedict Friedlander, in an essay

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Worship of Adolf Hitler was promoted as an alternative to Christianity.

for Der Eigene titled “Seven Propositions,” chose as his first proposition an attack on Christianity. “The white race is becoming ever sicker under the curse of Christianity, which is foreign to it and mostly harmful,” writes Friedlander. “That is the genuinely bad ‘Jewish influence,’ an opinion that has proven true, especially through the conditions in North America” (Friedlander in Oosterhuis and Kennedy:219).

For his part, Adolf Brand called Christianity “barbarism” and “expressed his desire to fight ‘beyond good and evil,’ not for the sake of the masses, since the happiness of ‘the weak’ would result in a ‘slave mentality,’ but for the human being who proclaimed himself a god and was not to be subdued by human laws and ethics” (Oosterhuis and Kennedy:183). We should not forget Nietzsche, who called Christianity “the lie of millennia” (MacIntyre:188).

Much has been made of the reported silence, and in some cases complicity, of the supposed Christian churches during the Third Reich. But few have noted the long period of “Biblical deconstruction” that preceded the rise of Nazism, and fewer still have chronicled the systematic per-sion of German religious culture by the Nazis themselves.

While the neo-pagans were busy attacking from without, liberal theologians undermined Biblical authority from within the Christian church. The school of so-called “higher criticism,” which began in Germany in the late 1800s, portrayed the miracles of God as myths; by implication making true believers (Jew and Christian alike) into fools. And since the Bible was no longer accepted as God’s divine and inerrant guide, it could be ignored or reinterpreted. By the time the Nazis came to power, “Bible-believing” Christians, (the Confessing Church of Barth and Bonhoeffer) were a small minority. Francis Schaeffer writes of this phenomenon in The Great Evangelical Disaster:

In the late nineteenth century it was these ideas [the all-sufficiency of human reason and the falsehood of supernatural religion] which began to radically transform Christianity... This started especially with the acceptance of the “higher critical” methods that had been developed in Germany. Using these methods, the new liberal theologians completely undercut the authority of Scripture... in spite of the efforts of... [theologians Hodges, Warfield and later Machen], the destructive methods of biblical criticism came into power and control in the denominations. By the 1930s liberalism had swept through most of the denominations and the battle was all but lost (Schaeffer:34).

The replacement for Biblical Christianity in Germany was a pseudo-Christian “pietism” that grew increasingly more bizarre as devotion to the social ideals of traditional Christianity was divorced from its source. In The Twelve Year Reich, social historian Richard Grunberger writes of Nazi-sponsored “charity” drives, for example, in which collectors of surplus goods for the poor became irrational fanatics:

[Collectors] indefatigably pounded the staircases of apartment houses in the large towns, rooting out the last possible donor...Small rural communities erected what were known as Boards of Shame, listing those who, 'despite financial ability, refuse to make donations.' Not infrequently, 'selfish elements' were victims of organized physical violence: 'Widow B. of Volksdorf, who had only contributed riding boots to a Winter Relief collection of clothing, had to ask the police to take her into protective custody after a threatening crowd gathered outside her house and started to smash her green houses.' Hereditary farmer, Bernard Sommer Kempdorf, who had told the collectors that if they wanted any fruit from him they were at liberty to pick it off the trees themselves, had to be taken into protective custody when a crowd of hundreds gathered around his farm chanting demands for his imprisonment. (Grunberger:88).

The Germans under Hitler developed a "purely German i.e. de-Romanized and de-Judaicized form of Christianity," writes Grunberger, while the growing "New Heathenism" rejected Jesus entirely and substituted "either Wotan worship or a cult of nature centered on the Sun" (ibid.:482). Soon, this neo-paganism had entered the weakened churches. "German Christianity [began to focus] on the Aryan savior Jesus...[and theological studies appeared] under such titles as 'Wotan and Jesus,' 'Baldur and the Bible,' and 'The German Savior'" (ibid.:482).

Despite all this, however, it would be a mistake to believe that the German church, as liberal and/or heretical as it had become, would have supported Hitler's total agenda on its own. On the contrary, Hitler and the Nazi elite were forced to conduct a slow and methodical takeover of the German churches to silence their dissent.

In September of 1933, a pro-Nazi cleric named Ludwig Muller was appointed by Hitler to bring all evangelical congregations into one State Evangelical Church. Heiden writes that “The Reich Bishop [Muller] was not formally inducted into his office before the year had expired and the last independent Churches in Bavaria and Wurttemberg had been suppressed” (Heiden, 1935:405). Justice Robert Jackson, prosecutor of the Nazi war criminals at Nurnberg many years later noted that “the policy toward the Evangelical Churches...was to use their influence for the Nazis own purposes” (Jackson:51). This was perhaps best evidenced by Muller’s decision in December, 1933 to transfer the Evangelical youth organization into the Hitler Youth which caused a complete break with the so-called Confessing Church of anti-Nazi congregations (Zentner and Bedürftig:608). Pastor Niemoller, leader of the Confessing Church, was later sent to a concentration camp (Jackson:51).

In March of 1935 seven hundred Protestant priests were arrested by the Gestapo in Prussia “for issuing condemnations of neo-paganism from the pulpit,” and later a similar number of clergy in Wuerttemberg had their teaching credentials stripped for “violating the moral instincts of the German race’ by references to Abraham, Joseph and David in the course of their teaching” (ibid.:494). The Nazis confiscated Protestant seminaries in Wuerttemberg and Catholic convents and monasteries in the Rhineland (ibid.:500). In May of 1941, a Nazi decree banned all Catholic periodicals and newspapers (Fact on File Yearbook, 1941:240).

As Grunberger asserts, Nazism itself was a “pseudo-religion” (Grunberger:79) that competed, covertly, with Christianity and Judaism. The Nazi regime, attempting to usurp the role of the church and eliminate its influence on German culture, “spawned an unending series of relatively minor, but cumulatively effective, anti-Church measures” (ibid.:500). The Nazi Party’s spiritual adjunct, the German Faith Movement (Deutsche Glaubensbewegung), represented one of several fronts in this war on the church. Its most profound attack upon Christianity, expressed by a Faith Movement leader, was the doctrine that “God has manifested himself not in Jesus Christ, but in Adolf Hitler” (Snyder:104). Grunberger writes,

The movement...could best be defined by its negative articles of faith of which the chief was enmity to Christianity and the established churches. Planning to use neo-pagan "conversion" to complement its own more general anti-Church measures (such as hamstringing communal and youth organizations, or attenuating religious instruction in schools), the Party therefore launched a drive to make individual parishioners withdraw from Church membership. The "Church Secessionist Campaign" was particularly effective among professionals materially dependent on the regime: civil servants, municipal employees, teachers, [and] full-time party workers (Grunberger:491).

As soon as the Nazis came to power they replaced many Christian holidays with pagan celebrations: "The Day of the Summer Solstice," "The Day of the Winter Solstice," and "Mothering Sunday" (which featured the so-called "Rune of Life" as a symbol to honor births) (ibid.:80f.). Marriage ceremonies increasingly invoked "Mother Earth" and "Father Sky" as the deities by whom the covenant was blessed (ibid.:492). Birth and death announcements began to feature the life and death runes, respectively, as part of a campaign to eliminate the star and the cross from public life, and crucifixes were gradually removed from hospitals and schools (ibid.:494). The Nazis made all religious activities which were not centered in the churches dependent on official permission and confiscated lists of churchgoers who were on active duty in the military (ibid.:500).

The schools were heavily targeted in the strategy to deChristianize the young. Mandatory prayer in schools was stopped in 1935, and from 1941 onward, religious instruction was completely eliminated for all students over fourteen years old (ibid.:494f). The Nazi Teachers Association actively discouraged its members from taking religious instruction, while at the same time many teachers of religious studies (who were all required to be licensed by

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

This poster from the National Archives contrasts Nazism with Christianity as opposing and incompatible views.

the state) “inculcated neo-paganism into their pupils during periods of religious instruction.” Later, teachers were outright prohibited from attending voluntary religion classes or organized by the Catholic church (ibid.:495).

In an obscene twist, the Nazis used former Christian religious facilities, seized by the government, to establish schools in which students were trained in male supremacist ideology, using teachings from the works of homosexual theorists such as Otto Weininger (Rosenthal:69). Igra writes, [Weininger’s Sex and Character] was revived as a kind of text book in the Nazi Ordensburgen, those schools for the training of future German leaders which have been set up in the confiscated monasteries and convents. There they learn the doctrine that ‘the lowest type of male is infinitely higher than the noblest woman,’ and that ‘by her very nature, woman is deceitful, mentally inferior to man and unmoral' (Igra:99).

The de-Christianization of German society was carried out in the Nazis' characteristically duplicitous style. Ever masters of the euphemism and of political sleight-of-hand, they kept the general population confused about their true motives. When Hitler needed the support of the churches in the early days of the regime, for example, the SA attended Sunday services en masse, creating "veritable SA church parades" (Grunberger:485). But just months later these same troops marched in the Nuremberg Party Rally alongside the Hitler Youth as they sang anti-Christian songs. "No evil priest can prevent us from feeling that we are the children of Hitler," the children sang. "We follow not Christ, but Horst Wessel. Away with incense and holy water...The swastika brings salvation on earth" (ibid.:489). For their part, the SA sang, "Storm Trooper Comrades, hang the Jews and put the priests against the wall" as the refrain to one of their favorite tunes.

In Hitler and I, Strasser records a conversation he had with Hitler, in which Strasser criticized Nazi propagandist Alfred Rosenberg for his pagan ideals. "Hitler stopped and looked me in the eyes," writes Strasser, "'Christianity is, for the moment, one of the points in the programme I have laid down. But we must look ahead.

Horst Wessel was declared a martyr by Hitler after being killed in the "Beer Hall Putsch" in 1923. As an early SA member, he was probably "gay."

Rosenberg is a fore-runner, a prophet. His theories are the expression of the German soul” (Strasser, 1940:96). Much later, as Hitler’s religion of hate appeared to have completely overwhelmed the German culture, Hitler proclaimed, “Do you really believe the masses will ever be Christian again? Non sense, that tale is finished” (Newton:16).

From the early years, leading Nazis openly attacked Christianity. Joseph Goebbels declared that “Christianity has infused our erotic attitudes with dishonesty” (Taylor:20). Himmler is reported to have considered Christianity “the greatest plague delivered by history, and demanded that it be dealt with accordingly” (Ziegler:85).

Martin Bormann, who replaced Hess as Deputy Fuehrer, issued a decree to the Party Gauleiters titled, “The Relations Between National Socialism and Christianity” in which he said “National Socialist and Christian conceptions are incompatible. The Christian churches build upon men’s ignorance...The people must be increasingly wrested from the churches...Never again must the churches be allowed any influence over the leadership of the people. This must be broken totally and forever” (Fest, 1970:132f). The Nazis’ ultimate goal was the elimination of all the Christian churches. Grunberger points out that “[j]ust as the genocide programme provided for certain areas to be made 'free of Jews' before others, so the Warthegau [the Posen-Lodz civil defense region] was envisioned as the first region to be 'free of churches' in the Reich" (Grunberger:498).

Martin Bormann authored a vicious anti-Christian directive that called for regional Nazi leaders to eliminate the Christian faith in Germany.

It is in the Nazi campaign against Judeo-Christian morality that we find one of the reasons for the German people's acceptance of Nazism's most extreme atrocities. Their religious foundations had been systematically eroded over a period of decades by powerful social forces. By the time the Nazis came to power, German culture was spiritually bankrupt. Historians have largely ignored the spiritual element of Nazi history, but if we look closely at Hitler's campaign of extermination of the Jews, it becomes clear that his ostensible racial motive obscures a deeper and more primal hatred of the Jews as the "People of God."

The probable reason for Hitler's attack on Christianity was his perception that it alone had the moral authority to stop the Nazi movement. As late as March 19, 1942, Julius Streicher, in an article appearing in his publication Der Sturmer complained that Christian teachings stood in the way of a "radical solution the Jewish question in Europe" (Jackson:54). But Christians stumbled before the flood of evil. As Poliakov notes, "[W]hen moral barriers collapsed under the impact of Nazi preaching...the same anti-Semitic movement that led to the slaughter of the Jews gave scope and license to an obscene revolt against God and the moral law. An open and implacable war was declared on the Christian tradition...[which unleashed] a frenzied and unavowed hatred of Christ and the Ten Commandments" (Poliakov:300).

As we examine the issue of Nazi hatred for Christianity we are reminded of the common moral standard shared by believing Christians and Jews. It is a standard which unequivocally condemns homosexuality. This fact assumes enormous significance in the context of this book and causes us to question the common wisdom, which explains the Ho lo caust in purely racial terms.

We have shown how homosexuality figures prominently in the history of the Ho lo caust. The ideas for disposing of the Jews originated with Lanz. The first acts of terrorism against the Jews were carried out by the homosexuals of the SA. The first po grom, Kristallnacht, was orchestrated in 1938 by the homosexual Reinhard Heydrich. And it was the sometime transvestite Goering who started the “evolution of the Final Solution...[with an] order to Heydrich (Jan. 24, 1939) concerning the solution of the Jewish question by ‘emigration’ and ‘evacuation’” (Robinson:25).

H omosexuality and I slamist Terrorism

We turn next to the relationship between the Nazi regime and the Islamist terror groups which share its militarism and its anti-Semitism. We distinguish the Islamist terrorists from the specifically fascist and “neo-Nazi” successors to the Third Reich which will be addressed in the next chapter. Interestingly, while Hitler ranted against Judaism and Christianity, he contrasted the “[Judeo-Christian] theological doctrines devoid of any depth” with “those of...Mohamed [which provided spiritual] sustenance of a much different value” (Angebert:246).

Islamist terrorism has become an issue of great interest since the attacks of September 11th, 2001, against the United States. Interestingly, the leaders of the nineteen terrorists, including ring leader Mohamed Atta, have been reported to be homosexuals. “Gay” journalist Rex Wockner, quoting what he described as “the sensationalistic-yet-often-accurate National Enquirer” reported that “‘Atta’s gay lover for the past two years was his right-hand man, Abdulaziz Alomari, who was with Atta when he crashed the plane into the North Tower’Atta and other terrorists believed that ‘women are for procreation only and men are for recreation” (Wockner Wire, www.PlanetOut.com, November 9, 2001). Uncharacteristically, the left-leaning Newsweek magazine “scooped” the Enquirer with a piece about the Enquirer story before it was released. “gay” strategist Michelangelo Signorile produced an editorial which, while not denying the truth of the Enquirer claims, dismissed them as irrelevant to the evil behavior of the terrorists.

Few are aware that some of the earliest terrorism of the modern era sprang from a Nazi/Arab collaboration. According to Icelandic historian, S. G. Bergsson, in Muftism and Nazism, the leading figure in this collaboration was Haj Amin Hussein, the Mufti (supreme religious leader) of Jerusalem. One of the leaders of the massacre of Jews in the 1920 Arab riots in Palestine, he became Mufti in 1921 and celebrated by organizing a Jewish pogrom that year.

Hussein first made contact with the Nazi regime in 1933, and by 1936 was carrying out anti-Jewish riots “with funds supplied by the Nazis” (Bergsson:chapter 3, p.2f.). In 1937, “during the celebration of Mohammed’s birth, the German swastika flag was flying high as well as pictures of Hitler” (Ibid.). When the British stopped secret arms shipments to the Mufti in 1938, he declared jihad against them, was quickly defeated and fled to Germany. From then on he coordinated a large and active worldwide network of pro-Nazi Moslems from Berlin and agitated for the extermination of all Jews. Hitler was friendly with Hussein, giving him the honorary rank of SS Major (Ibid.).

The Sowetan newspaper of Johannesburg published this editorial by South African legislator Jack Bloom:

Ambiguous Arab-Muslim attitudes to Hitler can be traced to his popularity in much of the Arab world both before and during the Second World War. Political parties that imitated the Nazis were founded, such as the Syrian Social Nationalist Party and Young Egypt, replete with storm troopers, torch processions and Nazi slogans. The most significant collaborator with Hitler was...Haj Amin el-Husseini....His energetic pro-Nazi efforts included a Muslim SS unit in Bosnia...

General Abdul Nasser was a member of Young Egypt and made no secret of his earlier Nazi sympathies when he became president of Egypt. Former Nazis served in his army and secret police, and his personal bodyguard was SS General Oskar Dirlewanger (The Sowetan, October 2, 2001).

One of the reasons for Nazi popularity in Egypt is that Nasser's brother Nassiri published and distributed an Arab edition of Mein Kampf in 1939 (Mac Mathuna, Flame Magazine, 1999).

Oskar Dirlewanger (see Chapter Six), was the creator of the dreaded SS Sonderkommando Dirlewanger which some homosexual inmates joined to gain release from Nazi concentration camps. Dirlewanger, was assisted by former Hitler buddies, Otto Skorzeny and Eugen Dollman, who recruited "large numbers" of former Nazi fugitives from Argentina for key posts in the new republican regime in Egypt" (ibid.). Dollman was well known as a homosexual; less is known about Skorzeny, although he had been Hitler's bodyguard in 1939, and is thus likely to have been "gay."

We have not found evidence that Hussein was homosexual. However, historian Jamie Glazov explains the phenomenon of Islamist terrorism itself as the consequence of rampant pederasty in parts of the Arab world. He writes,

Otto Skorzeny

Socially segregated from women, Arab men succumb to homosexual behavior. But, interestingly enough, there is no word for "homosexual" in their culture in the modern Western sense. That is because having sex with boys, or with effeminate men, is seen as a social norm. Males serve as available substitutes for unavailable women. The man who does the penetrating, meanwhile, is not emasculated...The man who is penetrated is emasculated. The boy, however, is not, since it is rationalized that he is not yet a man.

In this culture, males sexually penetrating males becomes a manifestation of male power, conferring a status of hyper-masculinity....In all of these circumstances, the idea of love is removed from men's understanding of sexuality. Like the essence of Arab masculinity, it is reduced to hurting others by violence....It is excruciating to imagine the sexual confusion, humiliation, and repression that evolve in the mindsets of males in this culture. But it is no surprise that many of these males find their only avenue for gratification in the act of humiliating a foreign "enemy," whose masculinity must be violated at all costs -- as theirs once was (Glazov, "The Sexual Rage Behind Islamic Terror," FrontPage magazine, 10-4-01). [For a comparison with the Spartan military camps, see pp. 54-61.]

Scholar Bruce Dunne of Georgetown University portrays the sexual world of some Arab males as a realm of unspoken and unequal "Butch/Fem" bisexuality. In this world, as with the pre-Nazi "gay" factions in Weimar Germany, "Butches" are "not [even] considered homosexual" while "Fems" are considered to be suffering from an "inexplicable...pathology" (Dunne, "Power and Sexuality in the Middle East," Middle East Report, Spring, 1998). (This attitude is not found in all Islamic societies, only those which combine hyper-masculine militarism with misogyny.)

Another parallel is the case of terrorist leader Yasir

Arafat. According to Dr. Asher Eder, Jewish Co-Chairman of the Islam-Israel Fellowship organization, the name “Yassir Arafat” is an alias. Arafat changed his real name, Abdul Rauf el-Codbi el-Husseini, to hide his relationship to Mufti Haj Amin Husseini, his uncle (Eder, “How to Dis arm the Ter ri ble Jihad Psychosis Against Jews and Israel that Afflicts the Muslim World Today,” www.rb.org, February 24, 2000).

Arafat’s ho mo sex u al i ty has been widely ac know ledged since at least 1976, when the tes ti mony of a for mer as so ci ate (also ho mo sex u al) was pub lished in a Ca na dian bi og ra phy, Arafat, the Man and the Myth by Thomas Kiernan. Kiernan quotes this man at length:

We went one night on a train ing ex er cise, about twenty of us. We were camped in a cit rus grove near Gaza in tents. There was an emer gency of some kind...Sev eral of us ran to Abu Khalid’s tent to find out what we should do. There we dis cov ered Abu Khalid and Yasir giv ing them selves plea sure -- or should I say Yasir was giv ing Abu Khalid plea sure? Af ter that, Abu Khalid was quite open about what he did with Yasir. In fact, he en cour aged all of us to partic i pate in such ac tiv i ties. He said it should be a part of the guer rilla way of life....It cre ated a closer bond among us. Most of us sooner or later were doing it as a regular way of life. Some of us even gave pleasure to Abu Khalid, and him to us. But he would never let us touch Yasir. Yasir was his spe cial prov ince (Kiernan:108).

Arafat is more often identified by his critics as a ped erast than simply a homosexual, but we did not find documentation of his alleged abuse of boys.

Recent events show that common cause still exists between Islamic radicals and Nazis: both celebrated the terror attacks of September 11th. Arafat's Palestinian supporters, including police officers, were caught on camera celebrating wildly in the streets upon hearing the news. Meanwhile, German neo-Nazi Horst Mahler used his website to thank the terrorists for "knock ing out" the "common enemy," while another Nazi group, the National Resistance (NW) said September 11th was a day for celebration (The Observer, UK, 10-7-01). Hans-Joachim Kunz, of the Bavarian section of the German Office for the Protection of the Constitution, explained that "neo-Nazis and Islamic fundamentalists have a common ideology and that is they both see the USA as their enemy" (ibid.).

We have shown that a hidden motive for Nazi anti-Semitism was a deep hatred of Biblical morality. This conclusion, supported by the comments of key Nazi thinkers, provides a more satisfying explanation for Nazi policies than does racism alone. For while widely-promoted racial theories seem sufficient to explain the persecution of the Jews, they do not explain the Nazi's equal hatred of Bible-believing Christians. The Nazis were apparently not hostile to Moslems, even though Islam ostensibly draws its authority from the same Bible. This was not merely the pragmatic tolerance of a military ally. It seems likely that the Nazis were genuinely drawn to their hyper-masculine brothers-in-arms because they shared a common homoerotic spirit.

We will find that this thread of homoeroticism is woven throughout the history of post-Hitler fascism as well.

Chapter Eight

HOMO-FASCISM AFTER HITLER

History never repeats it self, man always does.

Voltaire (In Cecil Genese, The Holocaust: Who Are The Guilty?)

One of the symbols with which homosexuals in the United States have chosen to represent their movement is the phoenix, a mythical bird that was said to burn itself on a funeral pyre every five hundred years and then rise from the ashes more majestic than before (Alyson Almanac:56). A more apt symbol for the historic cycle of homo-fascism and resulting social chaos would be hard to find. From the ashes of Nazi Germany, the homo-fascist phoenix has arisen again — this time in the United States.

The Fascist Roots of the American “Gay” Movement

The first “gay rights” organization in the United States was an American chapter of the German-based Society for Human Rights (SHR). The German SHR, formed in 1919 by Thule Society member Hans Kahnert, was a militant organization led by “Butch” homosexuals. Many of the early Nazis, including SA leader Ernst Röhm, were also SHR members.

The American SHR was formed on December 10, 1924, in Chicago, by a German-American named Henry Gerber

(J. Katz:388). Gerber had served with the U.S. occupation forces in Germany from 1920 to 1923 and had been involved with the German organization. Together with a small group of fellow “revolutionaries,” Gerber legally chartered the group without revealing its purpose and began publishing a pro-homosexual journal called Friendship and Freedom (ibid.:389), patterned after the German chapter’s publication of the same name (ibid.:632n.).

In 1925, however, the organization collapsed when Gerber, Vice President Al Menninger and another member were arrested on charges of sexual abuse of a boy, all three having been turned in by Menninger’s wife. The Chicago Examiner ran a story titled “Strange Sex Cult Exposed,” and spoke of “strange doings” in Menninger’s apartment. Menninger confessed, but Gerber claimed the incident was a set-up, saying that their arrests were “shades of the Holy Inquisition.” Rather than take his chances in court, however, Gerber hired a lawyer who “knew how to fix the State Attorney and judges” and the case was dismissed (ibid.:392). After going underground for a time, writing under the pen-name “Parisex,” Gerber reemerged in 1934 on the staff of a pro-homosexual literary magazine called Chanticleer (ibid.:394). He also retained his ties to the German SHR and published several articles in their publications (ibid.:633n.).

In Chanticleer, Gerber revealed himself as a militant socialist who regarded capitalism and Christianity as the twin pillars of ignorance and repression of “sexual freedom” (ibid.:394). In response to the news of the Roehm Purge in the American press, he admitted that the Nazis were led by homosexuals and praised “Roehm and his valiant men” (ibid.:396). Gerber is quoted at length in Katz’s Gay American History regarding the Nazi regime. He writes,

A short time ago an American journalist pointed out in the liberal “Na tion” that the whole Hit ler move ment was based on the ho mo sex ual Greek at tach ments of men for each other, and the same Jew ish au thor stated that it was another of the Hitler contradictions that the “Leader” should have ac qui esced in the burn ing of the books of Dr. Magnus Hirschfeld...Thus we get a glimpse of the in san-ity of the whole move ment: A Jew ish doc tor work ing for the in terests of ho mo sex u als is per se cut ed by a het ero sex ual mob, led by ho mo sex u als (Gerber in J. Katz:395).

It is in ter est ing to note that the ho mo sex ual in clin a tions of the Na zis were a mat ter of at least lim ited pub lic knowl edge in the United States at this time, as well as their Greek origins. We can also infer from this passage that Gerber himself was not an overt fascist, though he clearly identified with the Brownshirts in Ger many. Open fas cism in the homosexual movement would come later, but Gerber and his pederastic friends had established its foundation. By 1972, when he died at the age of 80, Gerber had wit nessed the emergence of homo-fascism as a permanent theme in the move ment.

American Nazis

Like it's German counterpart, the American Nazi movement presents a de cid edly anti-homosexual face to the world, while hiding widespread homosexuality among its lead ers.

George Lincoln Rockwell formed the American Nazi Party in 1959. Rockwell ex emplified the nar cis sistic per son al ity type so typ i cal of male ho mo sex u als, but we have no solid information that he was “gay.” How ever, one re searcher noted that Rockwell's small group was riddled with homosexuals. “Jeffrey Kaplan, a well-known scholar of extremism...writes, gays made up a ‘significant’ — if carefully hidden — part of George Lincoln Rockwell's

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store, www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

American Nazi Party in the 1960s.” The same source reports that “in America homosexuality continues to be a ‘secret of postwar American National Socialism’” (Southern Poverty Law Center Intelligence Report, “Fringe of the Fringe,” Issue No. 100, Fall 2000).

Frederick J. Simonelli addressed the issue of homosexuality in the American Nazi Party in his 1999 biography of Rockwell, American Fuehrer. He reports that Rockwell’s rhetoric, like Hitler’s, was viciously anti-homosexual, but that questions about his private life and those of his staff persisted Homosexuality within the ranks of the ANP was a constant concern to Rockwell and a constant source of speculation among his enemies. “There is a tendency for queers to come here,” Rockwell admitted to a hostile interviewer at the ANP’s Arlington Barracks; then he quickly distanced himself from homosexuals by adding, “because to a queer, this place is as tempting as a girls school would be to me.” According to FBI surveillance, Rockwell’s fear of gay storm troopers was well founded. The ANP’s Western Division, particularly, was shaken by the revelation that the unit’s chief, Leonard Holstein -- who was also half-Jewish -- was gay.

Persistent rumors of gays within the ANP’s top echelon -- primarily centering on Rockwell’s chief of staff, Matt Koehl -- damaged the party....[while] throughout Rockwell's career...[speculation persisted] about his own sexual orientation....Without digressing into a psychological analysis, suffice it to say that Rockwell's emphatic and frequent affirmations of his own masculinity raise questions about his subconscious (Simonelli:77ff).

Another branch of the American Nazi movement, the National Socialist League, was openly homosexual:

Founded in 1974 by defecting members of the National Socialist White People's Party, this San Diego-based NSL is unique in restricting its members to homosexual Nazis. Led by veteran anti-Semite Russell Veh, the group distributes membership applications declaring NSL's "determination to seek sexual, social and political freedom" (Newton:46).

While normally low-profile, the NSL stirred a controversy in 1983 when it attempted to market an infamous 1930's Nazi hate film that had been pirated by the group. An article in the Los Angeles-based Heritage and S.W. Jewish Press, titled "'Gay nazis' peddling vile 'Jud Suss' film," named Veh and the National Socialist League. "We are most familiar with Mr. Veh (which is an alias, incidentally) and his notorious operations," said legitimate film distributor, David Calbert Smith III (Heritage and S.W. Jewish Press, September 16, 1983). Veh solicited members for his group through a publication called "The N.S. Mobilizer" and through personal ads in homosexual publications, including the leading national "gay" magazine, The

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

American Nazi Party leader Frank Collin (pointing) leads Nazi march in Chicago. Collin was a homosexual who later served time for sexual abuse of teenage boys.

UPI/Bettman

Advocate (Reisman, 1994:57).

Before disappearing in the 1980s, the National Socialist League put out a journal — NS Kampfruf. (Southern Poverty Law Center Intelligence Report, Fall 2000).

The most famous incident in the history of the modern American Nazi Party (a decade after Rockwell's assassination in 1967) resulted from its 1977 demand to stage a march through the largely Jewish neighborhood of Skokie, Illinois, a Chicago suburb and the home of many Holocaust survivors. This plan was devised by Frank Collin, who often appeared with his followers "in full Nazi regalia: brown shirts, black boots, and arm bands with swastikas" and who "advocated that all African-Americans, Jews and Latinos be forcibly deported" (Johansson: 129). Civil authorities effectively blocked the march at first, but the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) rose to Collin's aid. The Nazis won the right to march but a settlement was reached in which the City of Chicago and not Skokie became the site. The subsequent event drew international media attention.

Homosexualists Johansson and Percy, in Outing: Shattering the Conspiracy of Silence, have finally revealed, more than fifteen years later, that Collin was a homosexual ped er ast. In 1979 Collin was arrested “for taking indecent liberties with boys between ages 10 and 14” and was sentenced to seven years in prison (Johansson and Percy:130).

“Gay” Nazi Skinheads

Today, Nazism survives primarily in a broad international skinhead movement made up of disaffected white male youths. Not surprisingly, homosexuals are among the most influential leaders of Nazi skinhead culture. For example, in England, birth place of the movement, the notorious National Front (NF) was headed by “gay” skinhead Nicky Crane. As reported by Murray Healy in Gay Skins, “Crane [was] by his own admission a devout Nazi who idolized Hitler” (Healy:134). Crane actively sought to revive the street-terrorism of the Nazi Brownshirts in the British urban centers “[try-ing] to cre ate a street fight ing force...for street destabilization, fighting at sports events and keep ing up racial attacks’...[S]kinheads ‘giving Nazi salutes and chanting racist slogans’ [became] a common sight ” (ibid:124).

Searchlight magazine re-ported that

At over six foot tall and ex tremely vi o lent, Crane was the archetypical nazi skin head, so much so that it was his pic-ture that adorned the cover of “Strength Through Oi,” a semi nal “Oi” al bum [mu sic of the skin head movement]. As a nazi Crane was in volved in much violence,including gay bashing. Yet at the same time, presumably unbe-knownst to those close to him in the nazi scene, he was a hard core gay porn star...[In 1993] he died of AIDS (Searchlight:Sep-tem ber, 1999).

In the 1970s, the best known “gay” nazi was the Na-tional Front’s national organizer, Martin Webster (ibid). Another homosexual nazi, Peter Marriner, was a leader in both the Na tional Front and an other fas cist group, the Brit-ish Move ment (Searchlight:Au gust, 2000).

The Nazi skinhead movement has now spread far be-yond England. Healy writes that “the same alignment of ‘skinhead’ and ‘fascist’ is also occurring globally...as far-right groups in Eu rope, Aus tra lia and parts of the United States have imported skin head imagery as the uniform for its urban terrorists” (ibid:205).

In France, the neo-Nazi movement is closely and openly tied to the “gay” community. One of the founders of the fascist group Franciose Nazionale is also the editor of the homosexual publication Gaie France (Andriette, Bill, “Is Gaie France Fascist?” NAMBLA Bulletin, September, 1992). Meanwhile, back in Germany, the alarming increase of neo-Nazi skinheads is also linked to homosexuality. Elmay Kraushaar, a journalist for Der Spiegel, the German equivalent to Time Magazine, is quoted in The Advocate:

There is a gay skinhead movement in Berlin. They go to cruising areas with leaflets that say, “We don’t want foreigners.” A major leader of the neo-Nazis in Germany, Michael Kuhnen, was an openly gay man who died of AIDS two years ago. He wrote a paper on the links between homosexuality and fascism, saying fascism is based on the love of comrades, that having sex with your comrades strengthens this bond (Anderson:54).

Emblem of the “Queer Skin head Brotherhood.”

In The Beast Re awakens, author Martin Lee described Kuhnen as the most important neo-Nazi of the 1980s, calling him the “fuehrer” of the Action Front of National Socialists, whose open homosexuality did not diminish his stature in the fascist community (Lee:195). Kuhnen’s “comrade” and successor, Christian Worch, was jailed in 1994 in connection with crimes of violence and racial hatred (Neighborhood Queen Internet Posting, Dec. 1, 1994). Another prominent German neo-Nazi leader, who is also Neo-Nazis commemorate the anniversary of Rudolf Hess' death with marches. Hess is well known in "gay" circles as a homosexual as indicated by this caricature of him in a prominent newspaper of the "gay" movement (insert).

homosexual, is Bela Ewald Althans (Searchlight: September, 1999). The subject of two neo-Nazi recruiting videos, Althans was jailed in 1995 for “inciting racial hatred.”

We must emphasize that not all skinheads are Nazis, and fewer still are open homosexuals. As Healy notes “A skinhead does not signify fascism as unequivocally as the swastika” (Healy:142). Nevertheless, the movement has become virtually synonymous with “gay” fascism in certain circles. “Skinhead identities” writes Healy, “have become increasingly popular among gay men since the mid-1980s....So widespread are these elements [of skinhead styles] in British urban gay networks that they have ceased to signify skinhead, sending out the message ‘I’m gay’ in stead. (Healy:2f).

The connections between skinheads and homo-fascism are not as well known in the United States, even though this country hosts numerous “gay Nazi” organizations. One such group is the American Resistance Corps (ARC), which offers the following history on its website:

ARC was founded by an American skinhead with the help of a Canadian skin who were dissatisfied with the state of the skinhead nation (so to speak). These two skins were both firm believers in white racialism. They also happened to be gay. The founding of ARC was a response to the two extreme ends of the skinhead scene. On the one hand were gay skinheads who denied racialism and on the other hand were non-gay racialists who advocate group hatred for gays....ARC skinheads have the pleasure of being both traditional fascists and progressive activists (ARC website, www.geocities.com/ARCOrg/Historical.htm).

The skinhead movement is not the exclusive home of “gay” Nazis in America today. Less youthful homo-fascists can be found in other Nazi and white supremacist groups. For example, The Arizona Republic ran a headline story on April 12, 1996 about a sting operation that netted 30 Aryan Brotherhood members who had allegedly smuggled guns and drugs into prisons. One of us (Lively) spoke to a detective with firsthand knowledge of the case. The detective, speaking on condition of anonymity, confirmed that he had observed a high incidence of homosexuality in this white supremacist organization. Lee reports that neo-Nazis David McCalden and Keith Stimely, both associated with the California-based Institute for Historical Review, died of AIDS in 1991 (Lee:226). It is presumed that they acquired the disease through homosexual encounters. Another interesting news item is the case of Louisiana Ku Klux Klan organizer Gregg David, charged with raping a black man in 1997 (Reuters, undated).

A final revelation about post-Hitler homo-fascism comes to us from Hitler's home land of Austria. There, powerful pro-Nazi politician Jorg Haider, head of the Freedom Party, stepped down in the Spring of 2000 amid rumors that he is homosexual. While there is no direct evidence of his alleged homosexuality, the British newspaper, The Mail, reports

There are unsubstantiated claims that he has been spotted in gay bars in Vienna; what is beyond dispute is the fact that the charismatic leader has surrounded himself with fanatical young men, some of whom have confirmed their homosexuality...This is the man who has appeared to justify Hitler's death camps as 'punishment centers', and who has proudly declared that his parents were Nazis...The Freedom Party is referred to as the 'Buberpattie' - the young boy's party -- and the Press talks about Haider surrounding himself with 'young functionaries faithful to him'...[including] its general manager Gerald Mikscha...named in the German Press as Haider's gay lover ("The Gay Acolytes haunting Haider," The Mail on Sunday (UK), April 30, 2000.

Nazi Themes in “Gay” Culture

Glorification of Nazi styles and symbolism would be virtually unthinkable in mainstream society, but the homosexual community flatly rejects such limitations. Within just a few short years after the hard won Allied victory over the Nazi regime, American “gay” style setters were already adopting Nazism imagery as their own. Healy writes

Ad from a “gay” newspaper in L.A.

As Kenneth Anger’s films (most notably Scorpio Rising) at test, flirtation with Nazi fantasies and the use of fascist iconography were not uncommon on the urban American homosexual underground leather scene of the 1950s (Healy:115).

To day, a simple perusal of the premier magazine of the homosexual movement, The Advocate, reveals that Nazi themes are common in the “gay” community. Reisman, who studied personal advertisements in The Advocate in issues from 1972 to 1991 found that the content of the ads reflected a fascist mentality. She writes,

Over all, 72% of THE ADVOCATE data socialized a set of core values—glorified nazi dress, language and “blonde” Aryan male beauty and brutality; contempt for “fems, fats,” and blacks; threats toward “politically incorrect” homosexuals, churches and others—Romanicizing “fascist” culture to a “younger generation.” Nazi costumes/fascist concepts are a common component of THE ADVOCATE and thus largely condoned by prevailing “gay” cultural values (Reisman:1992, 57).

Other elements of “gay” culture demonstrate a similar pro-Nazi ideal. One popular film, by Finnish “gay rights” advocate Ippio Pohjala, is titled Daddy and the Muscle Academy (1992). Tom, the hero in the film, is a homosexual fascist and a pornographer. The film, combining themes of pederasty and Nazi glorification, was shown in San Francisco on June 26, 1992, at the Castro Theatre. It was part of the 16th Annual Gay and Lesbian Film Festival. A reviewer for the San Francisco Examiner provided the following description of the film:

Daddy and the Muscle Academy candidly acknowledges Tom’s infatuation with body types encouraged by the National Socialists. His fantasies...[involve] sex between clean-cut Finnish boys and storm troopers, the swastika flying behind them (Bonetti: San Francisco Examiner, June 26, 1992).

A review of a stage production of “Cabaret” in The Washington Blade (September 1, 1996) reveals a similar infatuation with Nazism.

[The director]...obviously aims to disquiet...the Emcee... sings the final line — in a tight spot light — of the anthem to the Fatherland, “To mor row Be longs to Me”; and in a shocking move during the finale, he visually allies himself with Nazism. Clearly, the Emcee connects decadence, queer ness, and Na zism...He raises fright en ing ques tions of queer ness, fas cism and doom in two pe ri ods: World War II and the end of the twen ti eth cen tury.

The at trac tion of Amer i can “gays” to Na zism is not the exclusive domain of male homosexuals, however. Gertrude Stein, who, be cause of her re la tion ship with Al ice B. Toklas, is described by The Alyson Almanac as half of “his tory’s best known les bian cou ple” (149), was a great fan of Adolf Hit ler. Toland re ports in Adolf Hitler that in 1937 “Gertrude Stein thought Hit ler should get the No bel Peace Prize” (Toland:409). (The same source states that George Bernard Shaw, a Fabian socialist and outspoken defender of homosexuality, also “de fended Hit ler...in mag a zine and news pa per ar ti cles” -- ibid.:409. In ter est ingly, Shaw is ac cused by Sam uel Igra of be ing the true au thor of The Pro to cols of the Learned Elders of Zion a purportedly Jewish “se cret plan” for global con quest, which has ever since been used by anti-Semites as proof of a Jew ish world con spir acy -- Igra:1960.)

Where ho mo sex u als live in the high est con cen tra tions, some seem to feel more com fort able act ing out Nazi fan ta sies.

In Against Sadomasochism: A Radical Feminist Analysis, Susan Leigh Star, a Jewish sociologist, describes her experience in San Francisco:

For four years I have lived in the Cas tro sec tion of San Francisco, the gay (predominantly male) district. When I walk down the street in my neigh borhood, I often see people dressed in black leather, wear ing chains and some times carry ing whips. In the maga zine stores there are many sadomasochist publications. Often these include pictures of people wearing replicas of Nazi Germany uniforms. Iron crosses, storm trooper outfits, military boots. And swastikas. Once and a while someone on the street is dressed in full Nazi regalia (Star:132).

Page from a homosexual “dating” website.

Nazi Tactics in "Gay" Politics

"I shall torture you during the day time, and will keep you from a peaceful sleep at night."

Larry Kramer, Founder of ACT-UP (Leo:18).

The "gay" movement has done more than simply adopt Nazi styles and symbolism. Homosexual strategists have also embraced the terroristic tactics of the Nazi Brownshirts to advance their political agenda.

One of the most notorious groups to employ Nazi thugery is the AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power (ACT-UP) which was founded in New York by Larry Kramer and approximately 300 other activists in March, 1987. (Alyson Almanac:42). Within a few months its members had gained national attention for their aggressive actions against those whom they considered enemies. ACT-UP groups invaded Catholic churches in New York during religious services, screaming obscenities and "stomping on communion wafers" (Miller:460). Catholic churches were also targeted in Washington, Los Angeles and Puerto Rico. Newspaper boxes were smashed in Sacramento to punish an editor for his views (Grant, 1993:104). One militant who later regretted his involvement was Washington, D.C. ACT-UP founder, Eric Pollard. The following is an excerpt from his 1992 letter to the Washington Blade titled, "Time to give up fascist tactics":

This is very hard for me to write. It forces me to squarely confront my past actions and to accept responsibility for the damage I have had a part in causing. I sincerely apologize for my involvement in and my founding of the AIDS activist organization, ACT-UP D.C.. I have helped to create a truly fascist organization... The average Gay man or woman could not immediately relate to our subversive tactics, drawn largely from the voluminous Mein Kampf, which some of us studied as a working model (Washington Blade, January, 1992).

In his 1998 War on Heterosexuality, author Michael P. Wright, quotes AIDS “dissenter” Alex Russell on the fascist character of contemporary “gay” activism.

Many attributes of the HIV Homofascist Movement (or HIVism) resemble those of Fascism and the psychology of Freikorpsmen: an authoritarian personality; extreme emphasis on the masculine principle, male dominance and blood brotherhood; exclusive membership in an elite in-group; and the fetishization and aestheticization of suffering, self-sacrifice and death.

Freikorpsmen made war a way of life.... Many HIV Blood Brothers see the war on AIDS as a way of death where the Freudian pleasure principle and the death drive become indistinguishable. The Swastika armband has now been replaced by the HIV positive tattoo and the red ribbon (Russell in Wright: Chapter 5).

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Within a few years of its founding, ACT-UP spawned the more radical Queer Nation. Miller writes that Queer Nation's "in your face" tactics antagonized some in the "gay" community. Randy Shilts [a prominent homosexual writer] called Queer Nationals "brownshirts" and "lavender fascists" (Miller:460). Queer Nation adopted highly militant rhetoric and openly threatened violence. Grant describes their tactics during an Oregon election campaign (see Introduction) in which voters considered a law to ban minority status based on homosexuality:

...flyers appeared on telephone poles warning people to vote against it. One showed the Christian ichthus fish being roasted on a stick over a fire. It read, YOU BURN US, WE BURN YOU...another said CIVIL RIGHTS or CIVIL WAR. Your choice for a limited time only...It also clarified what it meant by "civil war" by listing "QUEER KNIVES, QUEER GUNS, QUEER BULLETS, QUEER MISSILES, QUEER TANKS, QUEER TRENCHES, QUEER FIRE, QUEER WARFARE, QUEER PATRIOTS (Grant, 1993:104f).

One of us (Lively) was active in that campaign and personally witnessed stencils painted on sidewalks in the City of Portland which threatened "Queers Bash Back." In the City of Eugene businesses that had supported the Oregon Citizens Alliance (which had sponsored the ballot initiative) had bricks, wrapped in swastika-embellished flyers, thrown through their windows. A Queer Nation spokesman in Eugene denied responsibility but defended the violence as justified. A separate organization which called itself “Bigot Busters” specialized in harassing and threatening petitioners seeking signatures to put the measure on the ballot. Petitions were ripped from circulators hands or doused with paint, activists blockaded petition tables, and several circulators were physically assaulted. Hundreds of false signatures were put on petitions in an effort to invalidate them. In every case “Bigot Busters” denied responsibility.

In classic Nazi style, the Oregon homosexual activists cast themselves as victims during this campaign of violence. A series of phony late-night cross-burnings were staged in the front yard of Azalea Cooley, a black, apparently wheelchair-bound lesbian in Portland. This highly publicized charade continued for six months and was blamed on a “climate of hate” created by OCA. On the eve of the election, however, police caught Cooley herself on video walking out of her own front door with a wooden cross and materials to burn it. She later confessed to all of the crimes (Oregonian, December 10, 1992).

As we have seen with Roehm’s Brownshirts, the wrath of militant homosexuals can be fierce. On September 29, 1991, following Governor Pete Wilson’s veto of Assembly Bill 101 (which would have extended minority status to homosexuals) thousands of homosexuals rioted in San Francisco, setting fire to a government building and clashing with police. This fury is often turned against individuals and families as well. Chuck and Donna McIlhenny experienced it after the San Francisco Presbyterian church (where Chuck is the pastor) fired a homosexual organizer, sparking a wave of terrorism against their family and their church. They describe the campaign of hatred that was waged against them in When the Wicked Seize a City:

Radical “gays” use ear-splitting whistles to harass police (above) and later set fire to a govt. building.

The harassment started. Rocks, beer bottles, beer cans were thrown through the church windows on many occasions. Swastikas were carved in the church doors and drawn on our house. A window in our car was smashed out. Graffiti was spray-painted all over the church, house, and sidewalk. Anti-Christian, pro-homosexual leaflets were scattered around the neighborhood calling us Nazis, bigots, anti-gay, etc. Demonstrators would come into our Sunday services and disrupt the worship...One time a man came pounding and spitting on our front door in the middle of the night, screaming, "We're going to get you McIlhenny—we're going to kill you politically!" We were verbally threatened outside the house on the way to the car. There were daily — 24-hours-per-day — telephone calls. They began with screaming and obscenities. They graduated into phone calls describing our children—by name, appearance, where they attended school, when they got out of school, and what sexually deviant behavior was to be practiced on the children be fore kill ing them...Then on 31 May 1983 at 12:30 a.m., someone actually attempted to follow through with their threats to kill us [by firebombing the house while the children were asleep inside] (McIlhenny and York:109f). [Author's note:The McIlhenny' survived these and other efforts against them and continue to serve the membership of their church in San Francisco].

On April 12, 1996, a near-riot by 400 homosexual militants in Madison, Wisconsin delayed a scheduled speech on The Pink Swastika by one author (Lively). Shouting obscenities and slogans, activists invaded and occupied the tiny Trinity Evangelical Fellowship church for nearly an hour while hundreds of others banged on the outer walls and windows with rocks and trash-can lids. Chants of "Crush the Christians!" and "Bring back the lions!" could be heard through the windows. Police refused to clear the church but later agreed to remove individual protesters who refused to be civil. Eventually, the meeting was allowed to continue, though not before some of the protesters went into the church basement and urinated and defecated on the floor.

Meetings in Janesville and Stevens Point, Wisconsin were similarly disrupted. For those who attended, however, the homo-fascism of the Wisconsin "gay" community provided a living testimony to the validity of claims of this study.

Attacks like these are not isolated incidents, but part of the strategy for increasing the political power of homosexuals in American society. Dr. Brian Clowes, in Debating the Gay Rights Issue, has compiled the following advocacy of the use of terrorism and violence by "gay" fascists:

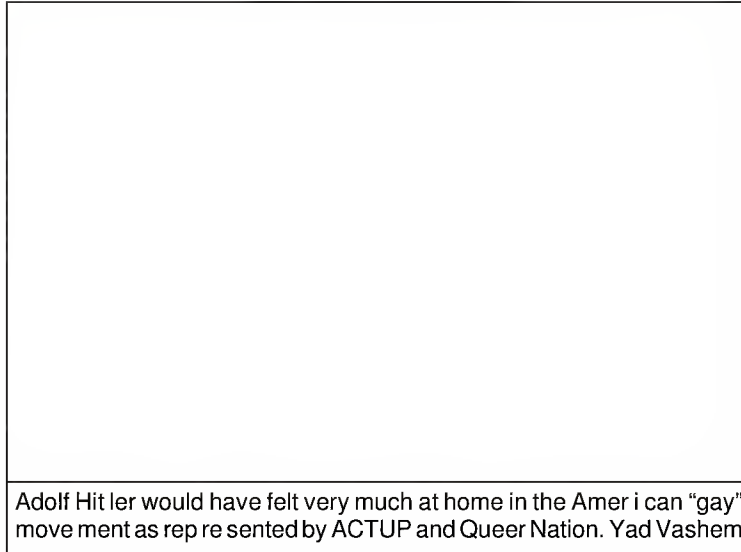

If [AIDS] research money is not forthcoming at a certain level by a certain date, all gay males should give blood. Whatever action is required to get national attention is valid. If that includes blood terrorism, so be it. (Robert Schwab in Kirk Kidwell, "Homosexuals Flex Muscles in Washington." American Family Association Journal, January, 1988, pages 6 - 8).

We should have shut down the subway and burned down city hall. I think rioting is a valid tactic and should be tried...If someone took out [killed] Jesse Helms or William Dannemeyer of California, I would be the first to stand up and applaud. (ACT-UP member Michael Petrelis, quoted in Michael Wilrich. "Uncivil Disobedience." Mother Jones. December, 1990, page 16).

It's hard to refrain from taking this man [Pat Buchanan] by the throat and squeezing as hard as you can while you look at his ugly, disgusting face and watch the eyeballs burst and pop out of their sockets. Or maybe you feel like stepping on his face and squishing his demented brain until the rot oozes out of it and onto the pavement. I have no problem imagining violence against this wacko... (Michelangelo Signorile, editor-at-large of the homosexual magazine Outweek, quoted in National Review, June 24, 1991. (Clowes:78f)

In recent years, the "gay" movement has drastically reduced its use of overtly terroristic tactics, probably because it made huge political gains during the eight years of the Clinton administration. Increasingly, the "gay" movement is being viewed more as a part of mainstream culture and less as an alien and destructive sub-culture. In most cases, homosexual activists no longer need to go to the streets to harass and intimidate their opponents. They now can use their enormous power in media, academia and government to marginalize and punish them. One example of this phenomenon is the rise of so-called "hate crimes" legislation. Ostensibly, "hate crimes" statutes are designed to deter violent criminal acts motivated by prejudice against the victim. However, the authors perceive the enactment of these laws (which are primarily sponsored by the "gay" movement), as the first phase of a process to criminalize speech that is hostile to the legitimization of homosexuality.

As it is currently envisioned, only speech that occurs during the commission of a violent crime will be deemed criminal under "hate crimes" statutes. Eventually, however, it is highly probable that speech standing alone will be prohibited. This evolution has partially occurred in California where the "gay" lobby pushed through a bill in 2000 which created a new category of "hate crime" called a "hate motivated incident." Assembly Bill 1785, signed into law by Governor Gray Davis, defines a "hate motivated incident" as "an act or attempted act which constitutes an expression of hostility" toward homosexuals or other protected groups.

As we can see, then, homo-fascism did not die with Adolf Hitler. It lives on in the neo-Nazi movement and in "gay" culture itself. Clearly, actual Nazis exist today as a radical fringe of society with no real power to threaten civilization. This would be a comforting realization if we presumed that Nazism was itself the source of the evil that threatened to engulf the world and was not merely the product of a deeper and still-enduring social problem. Our thesis, however, is that Nazism was the consequence of Germany's abandonment of Judeo-Christian morality and that the primary sponsors of its transformation were homosexuals. If this thesis is true, we would expect to find many parallels to the German experience in America, as indeed we do.

Chapter Nine

THE HOMOSEXUALIZATION OF AMERICA

If the rise of Nazism in Germany was made possible, at least in part, by the homosexualization of German society, what does this bode for America as we watch the steady advance of the “gay” agenda in this culture? Should we expect to witness something like the rise of a Third Reich on American soil? Or would the effect on American society be of an entirely different character? Is the “gay” movement in the United States sufficiently similar to its German counterpart as even to warrant concern? (Certainly the German “gay” culture was far more militaristic than the homosexual movement here, for example). Or is this the wrong question? Is there something about homosexuality (or the broader problem of sexual libertinism) that inevitably destroys the society that embraces it?

In many ways these are questions beyond the scope of this book, yet the implications of the material we have presented compel us to address them. Perhaps the most helpful approach is to search the history of homosexual activism in America for parallels with the German experience.

As we noted in the previous chapter, the first openly homosexual organization in the United States was the Ameri-

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Original charter of the Society for Human Rights.

can chapter of the German Society for Human Rights, started in 1924. The SHR was an aberration, however. The American homosexual movement really only began in the 1940s after the Allied defeat of the Nazis. We must begin our time line, then, with the observation that the center of international “gay” power in the world did in fact shift from Germany to the United States after the demise of the Third Reich. This represented a huge setback for the “gay” movement, requiring it to begin “from scratch” as it were, since America in the 1940s was at least as family-centered as Germany had been in the 1860s.

We know that the implicit goal of homosexual political activism is to legitimize homosexual conduct and relationships in a society. This necessarily requires a society to abandon its commitment to marriage as the exclusive domain of acceptable sexual conduct. The abandonment of this standard logically opens the door to every other form of sexual promiscuity. Clearly, such a transformation of attitude is now occurring in America. What we will find is that this transformation is not the result of random social forces, but of deliberate and systematic political activism by the “gay” movement.

Harry Hay and the Mattachine Society

In the words of Jonathan Katz, “a link of a kind peculiar to Gay male history connects the abortive Chicago Society for Human Rights (1924-25) and Henry Hay, the founder of the Mattachine Society” (J. Katz:407). This “peculiar link” is the fact that the man who recruited Hay into homosexuality (at age seventeen), Champ Simmons, was himself seduced by a former member of the SHR. In a perverse sort of way, then, it seems appropriate that Hay would become known as the “founder of the modern gay movement” (Timmons:cover). (In an other account, Hay claims his earliest homosexual experience was a molestation at age fourteen by a twenty-five-year-old man) (ibid.:36).

On August 10, 1948, at the tail end of an eighteen-year stint as a Communist Party leader, Hay began to organize a group that would become the Mattachine Society (ibid:132). Not until the spring of 1951 did it receive its name, but from the beginning it was seen as a vehicle to destroy social restraints against homosexuality in American culture (J. Katz:412f). The name Mattachine was taken from “medieval Renaissance French...secret fraternities of unmarried townsmen” (ibid.:412). The organization’s stated agenda was to preserve the “right to privacy.” Like the SHR, the Mattachine Society became controversial upon the arrest of a prominent member. Dale Jennings, one of the founders of the organization, was arrested for soliciting an undercover police officer to commit a homosexual act in a public restroom (ibid.:414).

Hay was not a fascist, but he was a neo-pagan. He participated in occultic rituals at “the Los Angeles lodge of the Order of the Eastern Temple, O.T.O., Aleister Crowley’s notorious anti-Christian spiritual group” (Timmons:76). Hay provided musical accompaniment to ceremonies performed by the lesbian “high priestess.” Later in life he founded a New Age group called Radical Faeries, which met in an asram in the high desert of Arizona to offer invocations to pagan spirits (ibid.:265).

In some ways, Hay can be compared to Karl Heinrich Ulrichs, the “grandfather” of the gay rights movement. Hay is his American counterpart in the sense that both men launched enduring social movements in their respective cultures. The avowed purpose of each was to undermine the Judeo-Christian moral consensus in respect to homosexual relations. And both had been molested as boys (though some suggest that this is the rule rather than the exception among homosexual men). But unlike Ulrichs, Hay became increasingly militant over the course of his life until, in the 1980s, he participated in California’s notoriously violent ACT-UP demonstrations (ibid.:292). ACT-UP, the AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power, was one of the earliest manifestations of homo-fascism in the “gay rights” movement. Though Hay was in his 70s, and is not directly linked to any of the property destruction associated with ACT-UP demonstrations, his presence validated the terrorist tactics of the group. Hay also openly endorsed pederasty as an essential part of the “gay rights” movement (ibid.:296).

Harry Hay and the Mattachine Society spawned large-scale political and social activism among homosexuals that soon outgrew their expectations and their control. Their highly motivated activists operated in groups designed like communist cells, each a “secret fraternity” bound by the common vice. As Hay stated in a later interview, “[we wanted to] keep them underground and separated so that no one group could ever know who all the other members were” (J. Katz:410). Slowly at first, from innumerable obscure sources, came theories, public statements and actions in support of the social acceptance of homosexuality. And as the power of the homosexualist political lobby grew, so did the ugliness of its demands and its methods.

Alfred Kinsey and the Kinsey Institute

While Harry Hay would soon take the homosexual movement public with the Mattachine Society, most homosexual activism continued to be carried out by hidden cell groups and individual “in the closet” activists. One such activist was Alfred Kinsey. No one but Kinsey’s closest associates and sex partners knew that his image as a respectable family man and college professor masked his role as one of the most dedicated homosexual change-agents in America.

In 1948, sex researcher Kinsey released his culture-shattering book, Sexual Behavior in the Human Male. The first major sex study of its kind, the Kinsey Report purported to show that Americans were far more promiscuous and sexually deviant than they said they were (Reisman and Eichel, 1992:2). For over forty years, Kinsey’s data went more-or-less unchallenged and the conclusions that he drew continue to serve as the “scientific” justification for the so-called sexual revolution. His theory of sex as a mere “outlet” released human behavior from what Marcuse called “the repressive order of procreative sexuality.” All forms of sexual expression were equalized in the Kinsey model.

Recently, several studies have shown that America is not the hot bed of promiscuity and deviancy that Kinsey’s study made it appear to be, even after forty-six years of influence by that study, which was loudly trumpeted as “fact” by the media and much of academia. U.S. News and World Report reported that one such recent study, conducted by the National Opinion Research Center at the University of Chicago, that it showed that “[f]idelity reigns. Fully 83 per cent of Americans had sex with one person or had no sex partners in the past year, and half of Americans have had only one partner in the past five years” (U.S. News and World Report, October, 1994:75).

Kinsey’s study was tailor-made for the homosexual/pederast community. Indeed, just weeks after its release, Harry Hay formally launched the Mattachine Society. We have no proof that Kinsey and Hay actually coordinated their efforts, although we know that Hay and Kinsey met to gether more than seven years before the publication of the first Kinsey report (Timmons:111). We also know that influential Kinsey co-worker, Wardell Pomeroy, later became a member of the Mattachine Society’s advisory board, perhaps indicating a deeper relationship between the Kinsey organization and the Mattachines (Marotta:80).

Kinsey’s vastly inflated figure of the number of homosexuals in America is the basis of the enduring myth that at least 10% of the population is homosexual. His seven-point Kinsey Scale, “in which bisexuality occupied a middle ‘balanced’ position between heterosexuality (0) and homosexuality (6)” (ibid.:10), attempted to establish homosexuality as a norm by definition. He further declared adult/child sex harmless. This “finding” was based on data gathered by pedophiles from experimentation with hundreds of children as young as two months old (ibid.:36).

In Kinsey, Sex and Fraud, Reisman and Eichel state that Kinsey “purported to prove that children were sexual beings, even from infancy and that they could, and should, have pleasurable and beneficial sexual interaction with adult ‘partners’” (ibid.:3). Reisman and Eichel go on to suggest that Kinsey deliberately overlooked criminal sexual child abuse and purposefully falsified data to further his personal sexual and political agenda. They cite former Kinsey coworker Gershon Legman who said that “Kinsey’s not-very-secret intention was to ‘respectablize’ homosexuality and certain sexual perversions” (ibid.:34). They also reference sociologists Albert Hobbs and Richard Lambert who observed “that the Kinsey authors seemed purposefully to ignore the limitations of their own samples in order ‘to compound any possible errors in almost any way which will increase the apparent incidence of [homosexuality]’” (ibid.:24).

Was Kinsey a homosexual, a pedophile or both? One historian proposed that Kinsey “may have discovered in himself the homosexual tendencies he would later ascribe to a large proportion of the population” (Robinson in Reisman and Eichel, 1992:204). But Reisman and Eichel suggest he manifested more of the behaviors of a pedophile. “In addition to his interest in sex experiments with children,” they write, “Kinsey was an avid collector of pornography (and maker of sex films) — an elemental feature of the pedophile syndrome” (Reisman and Eichel, 1992:205). In a later work, Reisman reports more specifically that Kinsey produced and directed films of homosexual sado-masochism at Indiana University, and that his collection of pornography included films of children engaged in sexual acts (Reisman, 1998:80f).

There is no question, however, that Kinsey fits the profile of a homosexual activist. Like the militant homosexuals who benefitted from his work, Kinsey was “indignant about the effect of Judeo-Christian tradition on society,” write Reisman and Eichel. “It is clear that he shared [co-researcher Wardell] Pomeroy’s view that Christians inherited an almost paranoid approach to sexual behavior from the Jews” (ibid.:6). Pomeroy, incidentally, is known for his support of adult/child sex. In a 1992 article on pedophilia, author Michael Ebert quotes Pomeroy as saying, "People seem to think that any [sexual] contact between children and adults has a bad effect on the child. I say this can be a loving and thoughtful, responsible sexual activity" (Ebert:6f).

The Kinsey Institute should be recognized as the American counterpart and successor to the Sex Research Institute of Berlin. In deed, E. Michael Jones, editor of Fidelity magazine told one of us (Lively) in conversation that he had perused some of the surviving documents of the Berlin institute in the basement of the Kinsey building. Like its German predecessor had been, the Kinsey Institute is dedicated to the legitimization of sexual perversion.

The Sexual Revolution

Within five years of the Kinsey report, Hugh Hefner launched Playboy magazine (and the modern pornography industry), whose initial target audience was the very generation of young men to whom Kinsey had been speaking on his college lecture circuit. More significantly, it popularized Kinsey's "gay" ethic of sexual license with the much of the rest of the male population of America. Hefner himself is quoted as saying that if Kinsey were the researcher of the sexual revolution, he (Hefner) was the pamphleteer (Reisman, 1998:108).

We are not suggesting the Hefner is homosexual, only that Playboy magazine serves as a tool of "gay" social engineering in that the existence of a thriving pornography industry serves the "gay" cause by morally corrupting the men who use it. It logically makes them less likely to oppose homosexuality on moral grounds and more likely to support public policies which legitimize sexual license. Exposure to pornography, especially at a young age, can also be a gateway into the "gay" lifestyle itself.

In the same manner, the "gay" cause is advanced by a successful abortion industry (which also arose in response to the sexual revolution). The choice to kill their unborn children morally compromises both men and women (making them unwilling to criticize the choice to engage in other forms of immoral behavior), and ensures that the outcome of an unwanted child will not be a lasting deterrent to those who have chosen sexual license over family. This explains why homosexuals, who by definition cannot bear children together, are among the most militant advocates of abortion on demand.

The acceptance of sexual indulgence as an important social value inevitably initiates a downward moral spiral in a culture. In American society, the selling of the idea of recreational sex to young college-aged men in the 1950s created a "market" for immodest and sexually adventurous young women, which in turn helped to legitimize the idea of female promiscuity. In the 1960s, once immodesty and promiscuity became acceptable for some women, the pressure increased for all women, competing for the attentions of men, to adopt these behaviors. This was especially true of the youngest of marriage-age women of that generation, whose personal morals and values had been influenced by a decade of sex-saturated pop culture.

The wholesale entrance of women into the world of sexual license created a number of societal demands: for a feminist political movement to "liberate" women from social expectations about marriage and child-rearing (National Organization for Women formed 1966); for contraception on demand (Griswold v. Connecticut -- 1966); for abortion on demand (Roe v. Wade -- 1973); and for "no fault" divorce (state-by-state liberalization of divorce laws began in the early 1970s). The result of these policies has been the achievement of the "gay" goal as embodied by Kinsey's teachings: the progressive denormalization of marriage and the steady normalization of sexual license. The most recent census data, published in 1998, showed a fourfold increase in divorce from 1970 to 1996, while the population of “cohabiting” couples who had never married had more than doubled.

Among the side-effects produced by these dramatic changes in the life of a people, side-effects which have increased steadily since the 1960s, are the escalation of crime (especially violent crime), the proliferation of sexually-transmitted and other diseases, and the escalation of mental illness and chronic substance abuse. These are all results which one would expect to find in a generation of citizens raised in unstable homes. Each and every one of these social problems is a direct consequence of embracing the “gay” ethic of sexual license as popularized by Kinsey. Meanwhile, as the pursuit of sexual hedonism became the personal goal of an ever larger percentage of the non-homosexual population, the “gay” movement continued its advance.

The Stonewall Riot and “Gay” Militancy

“Two, four, six, eight -- Smash the family, smash the state”
(Popular slogan of 1970s “gay” activists --Oosterhuis and Steakley:2)

By 1969, the development of a growing homosexual subculture in America had spawned an open homosexual presence in major cities. So-called “gay bars” sprang up in Los Angeles and New York, hosting a bizarre mix of “street queens,” drug addicts and boy prostitutes (Marotta:71). In New York, homosexuals regularly engaged in public sex acts with anonymous partners “in the backs of trucks parked near the West Village piers” (ibid.:93) and in the public restrooms. Homosexual activity occurred so frequently in the bushes of one public park that the authorities were forced to cut down the trees to stop it (Adam:85). In response to police efforts to discourage this increasingly offensive behavior, homosexuals began to organize to de-

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store, www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

"Gay Pride" Day is the anniversary of the Stone wall Riot. This "Gay Pride" flyer reveals that the "Gay Holocaust" myth was already being promoted in the 1970s.

mand the "right" to public decency. Emboldened by their numbers, they began picketing businesses such as Macy's Department Store, which had cracked down on homosexual behavior in their restrooms (ibid.:85).

On the evening of June 27, 1969 the "gay rights" movement officially adopted terrorism as a means to achieve power when a surly mob of “drag queens, dykes, street people, and bar boys” physically attacked police officers conducting a “raid” on the Stone wall Bar on Christopher Street in New York. Stone wall was “one of the best known of the Mafia controlled bars” (Marotta:75), and was being closed for selling alcohol without a license. It was also a haven for sexual deviants. As police began to take some bar patrons in for questioning, a mob of homosexuals gathered across the street. Homosexualist Toby Marotta’s The Politics of Homosexuality includes an eyewitness report by a writer for the Village Voice:

[A]lmost by signal the crowd erupted into cobblestone and bottle heaving...The trashcan I was standing on was nearly yanked out from under me as a kid tried to grab it for use in the window smashing melee. From nowhere came an uprooted parking meter—used as a battering ram on the Stone wall door. I heard several cries of “Let’s get some gas,” but the blaze of flame which soon appeared in the window of the Stone wall [where the police officers were trapped] was still a shock (ibid.:72).

By morning, the Stone wall bar was a burned-out wreck, and homosexual leaders had declared the violence a success. Interestingly, the anniversary of this event is known today as “Gay Pride Day” and features parades and other events most notable for their public sex and nudity (ibid.:158). It is ironic that the very activists who emerged from this new militant environment developed (in 1970) the strategy of claiming victim status through the use of the pink triangle and commemoration of the homosexuals who were persecuted by the Nazis (Adam:86).

The rise of homosexual militancy reflected the emergence of an aggressive “Butch” faction of the American “gay” movement, similar to that which occurred at the turn of the last century in Germany. (Ironically, while these masculine-oriented “gays” assume an attitude of superiority ity over “Fems,” in both Germany and the United States the “gay” movement was actually launched by effeminate homosexuals and only later became dominated by “Butches”). In The Making of the Modern Homosexual, author Gregg Blachford observed that during this time “homosexuals themselves moved away from the previous stereotype of ‘swish and sweaters’ towards a new masculine style [that became] the dominant mode of expression in the sub culture” (Blachford:187).

Following the Stonewall riot the Mattachine Action Committee of the Mattachine Society’s New York chapter clamored for “organized resistance” (Adams:81), but control of the movement was taken out of their hands by a still more radical group of activists. These men quickly formed the Gay Liberation Front, so titled “because it had the same ring as National Liberation Front, the alliance formed by the Viet Cong” (ibid.:91). At the heart of this new circle of power was Herbert Marcuse (ibid.:88), a long time Socialist who had learned his politics (and perhaps homosexuality) in pre-Nazi Germany. Homosexualist historian Barry D. Adam writes, Herbert Marcuse, who had been a youthful participant in the 1918 German revolution and had been steeped in the thinking of the life-reform movements of the Weimar Republic, caught the attention of many gay liberationists. His Eros and Civilization, published in the ideological wasteland of 1955, bridged the prewar and postwar gay movements with its implicit vision of homosexuality as a protest “against the repressive order of procreative sexuality” (ibid.:84).

The Stonewall riot became the new symbol of the “gay rights” movement. In its wake, Gay Liberation Fronts sprang up across the country, using methods of intimidation and coercion to achieve political gains. Immediately they targeted the medical community, whose increasing efec-tiveness in treating homosexual disorders threatened the logical premise of the movement (Rueda:101ff). "Gay Liberation Fronts," writes Adam, "stormed San Francisco, Los Angeles and Chicago conventions of psychiatry, medicine and behavior modification," shouting down speakers and terrorizing audience members (Adam:87f). As extreme as it had itself become, the Mattachine Society predicted the GLF's "violent tactics" would fail to inspire the movement (Marotta:136), but they were wrong. Though the GLF collapsed in 1972, in part because of a conflict between "drag queens and machos" ["Fems" and "Butches"], their philosophy prevailed (Adam:90).

On December 15, 1973 the board of trustees of the American Psychiatric Association capitulated to the demands of the radicals. The homosexuals had begun to speak of unyielding psychiatrists as "war criminals" (ibid.:88), with obvious implications. Possibly in fear for their safety, and certainly wearied by constant harassment, they declared that homosexuality was no longer an illness. The resulting referendum, demanded by outraged members of the association, was conducted by mail and was partially controlled by the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force (Rueda:1982). The homosexualists won the vote and the new official definition of homosexuality as a disorder was changed to include only those who were "unhappy with their sexual orientation" (Adam:88). Historian Enrique Rueda writes,

This vote was not the result of scientific analysis after years of painstaking research. Neither was it a purely objective choice following the accumulation of incontrovertible data. The very fact that the vote was taken reveals the nature of the process involved, since the existence of an orthodoxy in itself contradicts the essence of science (Rueda:106).

Weimar in America

How does all of this compare to the German experience? One striking parallel is the span of time over which homosexuality became culturally accepted in each country. In Germany, approximately twenty-five years passed from the formation of the Scientific Humanitarian Committee by Magnus Hirschfeld until sexual perversion was being openly practiced in Germany (roughly from 1897 to the mid-1920s). In the United States, the emergence of widespread overt homosexuality occurred in the early 1970s, a quarter-century after Harry Hay formed the Mattachine Society.

Another similarity is the extent to which perversion advanced once the moral barriers were lowered. Let us briefly compare the two societies.

Under the Weimar government, established after Kaiser Wilhelm II's abdication in 1918, many traditional attitudes were questioned, including those about sexuality. As America does today, Weimar Germany experienced tremendous conflict as these policies clashed with traditional Judeo-Christian values.

Feelings on the 'sexual question' ran high. There were disputes about the roles of the sexes and about attitudes toward marriage, the family and child rearing, and these disputes were bound up with arguments about social policy and demographic trends (Peukert: 101).

In this climate the homosexuals made significant gains. Almost immediately, major German cities became havens for every form of sexual expression. William Manchester writes of “transvestite balls, [where] ‘hundreds of men costumed as women and hundreds of women costumed as men danced under the benevolent eye of the police,” and of “mothers in their thirties, teamed with their daughters to offer Mutter-und-Tochter sex” (Manchester:57). Plant writes of “luxurious lesbian bars and nightclubs [that] never feared a police raid” (Plant:27).

Steakley records that “[o]fficial tolerance was manifested...in the unhindered consumption of narcotics in some homosexual bars, and transvestites were issued police certificates permitting them to cross-dress in public” (Steakley:81). And his tobian-biographer Charles Bracelen Flood speaks of “sad alleys patrolled by prostitutes of all ages and both sexes, including rouged little boys and girls” (Flood:196). “Berlin’s specialized establishments included a bath house featuring black male prostitutes” that was frequented by Ernst Roehm, writes Flood, and “there was a se-date nightclub for lesbians, the Silhouette, where most of the women, sitting on hard benches along the walls, wore men's clothes with collar and tie, but the young girls with them wore dresses with accented femininity" (ibid.:197).

This recently published book documents in highly pornographic detail the perverse extreme to which Germany descended during the Weimar period. The parallels to today's U.S. sexual subcultures are unmistakable.

Germany's version of Madonna was a woman named Anita Berber, "the role model for thousands of German girls...[who] danced naked...and made love to men and women sprawled atop bars, bathed in spot lights, while voyeurs stared and fondled one another" (Manchester:57). Rector describes the Weimar scene as a "sexual Mardi Gras" (Rector:15):

There were about as many — if not more — homosexual periodicals and gay bars in Berlin in the 1920's as there are now in New York City, and Berlin of the time was abuzz with the feasibility of forming a national homosexual political party. The sexual revolution, with its free-and-easy attitudes, including wife swapping and group sex as a moral precept, was a German "invention" of the Twenties...abortions were shrugged off and condoms were on sale in open display in grocery stores and almost every other public mart [Quoting from T.L. Jarman, Rector continues]...Freedom degenerated into license...Bars for homosexuals, cafes where men danced with men,...pornographic literature in the corner kiosks—all these things were accepted as part of the new life (ibid.:13).

To day, all of these things are manifest in American society as well. The lid to Pandora's Box that had been cracked open by Kinsey, Harry Hay and the Mattachine is now flung wide. Rueda writes,

...there are no fewer than 2,000 [homosexual bars in America]...They range from small "sleazy" places in dark and dangerous alleys to plush establishments...Some bars cater to a conventional-looking clientele. Others specialize in sadomasochists or transvestites. There are bars which purposefully attract young people, prostitutes

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

In the 20s and early 30s the Eldorado Club was a favorite of the Berlin SA, under Captain Paul Rohrbein. Later it was confiscated and put to use as a Nazi facility. To the left is a piece of memorabilia from the 20s.

who serve to attract older homosexuals who in turn purchase drinks for the youngsters while sexual deals are arranged. Printed guides for traveling homosexuals...[specify] the availability of prostitutes or "rough trade" (i.e., homosexuals who enjoy appearing violent or who actually behave violently) (Rueda:33).

American cities also host "bathhouses," which are not actual baths but meeting places for anonymous homosexual encounters. "People walk in there and have sex with multiple partners and have no idea who they're having sex with," reports former homosexual John Paulk. "I know this first hand and from the many many people I was associated with in the gay life style" ("The Gay Agenda" Video). Paulk reports that these "bath houses" remain open despite the AIDS epidemic. He also describes the activity called "cruising" in which homosexuals meet for anonymous sex in public restrooms and other public locations. While this has apparently always been common behavior in the homosexual community, Paulk implies that it is far more widespread today than ever before. This is substantiated by other observers of the "gay rights" movement (Grant, 1993:36f).

A great deal more could be written about the varieties of homosexual perversion that have proliferated in America's cities and towns today (and increasingly dominate the entertainment media). In deed, the authors feel that the behavior of homosexuality needs to be exposed to a public whose attention is systematically drawn away to "cover" issues (e.g. "victim" status, "rights," etc.). But it is our intention here to focus on the social, political and spiritual ramifications of this behavior.

Consequences

Leaving religion aside, the rationale for a society to limit sex to marriage is fairly basic. Marriage "sanctifies" what is otherwise merely self-centered pleasure-seeking, while also protecting individuals and society from most of the problems associated with "unwanted" children, sexual diseases and serial relationships. (How many of our most pressing social problems today are directly or indirectly related to these factors?)

Once a society abandons marriage as the prerequisite for sexual relations, however, there remains scant logical grounds to restrict any form of sexual deviance or promiscuity. For example, on what grounds can a society deny homosexuals freedom of conduct if non-homosexuals have been permitted to engage in similar disease-transmitting sexual acts? And if public health considerations no longer outweigh the "right" to sexual freedom under the law, what justifies continued limitations upon sado-masochism, incest, bestiality and even pedophilia? A society is left with no bases for regulating sexual conduct but its surviving moral standards and the legal concept of "mutual consent."

Can we have confidence that America's moral standards will present a lasting barrier to the continued escalation of sexual deviance? Certainly not with regard to consensual sex between adults. A quick perusal of the menu of available pornography on the Internet reveals that battle has been lost. But will the line hold against the legitimization of adult-child sex? The answer to that lies in the hands of the "gay" activists, whose dedication to their own sexual freedom has driven the sexual revolution.

Ped er asty in the “Gay” M ovement

The 1973 victory of “gay” politics over scientific objectivity in the American Psychiatric Association had far-reaching consequences. After the fall of the APA’s medical standard against the normalization of homosexuality, “gay rights” activists made tremendous gains in public acceptance of, or at least tolerance for, open homosexuality. This fact is especially alarming when we consider that the APA has now taken action which some construe as “normalization” of pedophilia as well. The September, 1994 issue of “Regeneration News,” the newsletter of a homosexual recovery group in Baltimore, features an article about this change. Regeneration Director, Alan Medinger compares the new set of criteria for diagnosing pedophilia with the prior standard:

In the earlier DSM-III-R [Diagnostic and Statistical Manual for Psychiatrists], pedophilia was diagnosed as a disorder if “[t]he person has acted out on these urges or is markedly distressed by them...but the new standard defines pedophilia as a disorder only if the fantasies, sexual urges, or behaviors cause clinically significant distress or impairment in social, occupational, or other important areas of functioning” (Medinger, reprinted in Stop Promoting Homosexuality Hawaii Newsletter, November, 1994. Emphasis ours).

The APA has taken a step which can be interpreted to imply that adult sex with children is normal as long as the perpetrators are not unhappy with their sexual orientation. The APA has taken exception to this interpretation.

Although many contemporary homosexual activists, especially lesbians, attempt to distance themselves from their pederastic comrades, the fact remains that pederasts (as was true in Germany) have always been at the forefront of the movement, albeit often "in the closet." And the "right" of adults to have sex with children has always been a basic goal of the movement. In February of 1972, for example, a national coalition of homosexual groups met in Chicago to draw up a list of priorities for the movement. Prominent on the list was the demand for "a repeal of all laws governing the age of sexual consent" (Rueda:201ff). Already in Canada the age of consent has been lowered to age 14 (Mulshine:10).

The organizations dedicated specifically to "pedophile rights" or "pederast-rights" in the United States are made up of homosexual men (Rueda:173ff), and in major cities with an active homosexual community "gay" book stores carry numerous titles which endorse man/boy sex (Grant, 1993:22). Tom Reeves, a self-admitted pederast who was part of the early "gay rights" movement, is one of a number of writers in an anthology called Varieties

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Cover of a NAMBLA newsletter. The most vocal advocates of "children's rights" (i.e. pedophilia) are male homosexuals.

of Man/Boy Love. He explains the role of pederasts in homosexual activism:

Almost every one of the early openly homosexual writers was a pederast. Pederasty was a constant theme of early gay literature, art, and pornography. The Stone wall riots

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Pederast Leland Stevenson (left) leads a NAMBLA contingent in the 1993 "Gay Pride" parade in Washington, D.C.

were precipitated by an incident involving an underage drag queen, yet that detail was not viewed as significant. Curtis Price, a fourteen-year-old, self-described "radical hustler," formed the first gay liberation organization in Baltimore. Many of the leaders of early gay liberation and the founders of the major gay groups in the U.S. were boy-lovers (Reeves in Pascal:47).

Another of the early leaders of the "gay rights" movement was David Thorstad, also a self-identified pederast. Thorstad was president of the Gay Activist Alliance (Stop Promoting Homosexuality Hawaii Newsletter, November, 1994:6), one of the largest of the groups which formed in New York in the wake of the Stone wall riot. The GAA invented "the strategy of 'zapping' politicians," writes Marotta, "that would later become [its] trademark...[they] had learned that homosexuals could infiltrate political gatherings and make themselves heard through sheer brashness" (Marotta:137). The GAA also developed the strategy of using these "carefully staged confrontations" to force politicians to enact “anti-discrimination” policies (ibid.:150). The GAA reorganized early in 1974 as the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force (Adam:88).

Thorstad, along with Reeves and others, later went on to form the North American Man/Boy Love Association in Boston in 1978 (NAMBLA Bulletin, September, 1992:2). NAMBLA, which is the largest “pederast rights” organization in the country, cloaks its agenda in rhetoric about concern for the rights of children to have “sexual freedom.” (Pascal:49). In recent years NAMBLA has come under attack by some elements of the “gay rights” alliance, who have tried to exclude the group from some of the higher profile media events. But this has evoked a violent response from its defenders. When NAMBLA was denied a role in the 1986 Los Angeles “Gay Pride Parade,” marcher Harry Hay donned a sweatshirt printed with the legend, “NAMBLA Walks With Me.” Timmons writes that Hay, “could not contain his outrage” that NAMBLA was excluded (Timmons:296). More recently, as reported in the NAMBLA Bulletin, Hay was a featured speaker at NAMBLA’s annual membership conference, June 24-25, 1994:

[He] gave an inspiring talk about reclaiming for the 1990’s the spirit of homoerotic sharing and love from various ancient Greek traditions of pederasty. A remarkably balanced and sensitive account of the conference appeared in the August 23 Advocate from a writer who was invited to attend (NAMBLA Bulletin, September, 1994:3).

Other homosexualist-run “children’s-rights” organizations include the Rene Guyon Society, which was formed in 1962 “to make it possible for adults to provide sexual stimulation for virtually all children” (Rueda:177), and a group called Project Truth (NAMBLA Bulletin, September, 1994). (While we’re discussing homosexual splinter groups we should mention the Eulenspiegel Society, formed in 1971 to promote “Sado-masochist rights” for homosexuals whose “special concern is freedom for sexual minorities and particularly those whose sexuality embraces S/M” — Rueda:175).

Membership of groups such as these in the International Lesbian and Gay Association (ILGA) caused it to be expelled from the United Nations Economic and Social Council in September of 1993. Attempting to forestall its expulsion, ILGA tried to separate itself from pederast groups but quickly learned that support for the “boy-lovers” was too deeply entrenched in the association. ILGA’s ouster of ten-year member NAMBLA and a couple of other high-profile groups caused European pederast member-organizations to step forward in protest. Division within ILGA continues (NAMBLA Bulletin, September 1994:3).

Another apologist for pederasty is Larry Kramer, founder of ACT-UP. In Report from the Holocaust: The Making of an AIDS Activist, Kramer had this to say about adult/child sex: “In those instances where children do have sex with their homosexual elders, be they teachers or anyone else, I submit that often, very often, the child desires the activity, and perhaps even solicits it” (Kramer:234). According to Reeves, “Queer Nation and Act-Up” were home to “both boys and men” who wanted “additional cultural activity beyond...their illegal relationships” (Reeves in Pascal:73).

Pedophilia and its promotion is not limited to male homosexuals. Virginia Uribe, a lesbian teacher in Los Angeles, has been at the forefront of a movement to “affirm gay teenagers,” through school-based pro-homosexual “counseling” (Homosexuality, the Classroom and Your Children, 1992). Her own program, called Project 10 (named for the oft-quoted “statistic” of 10% homosexuality in the U.S. population, a figure demonstrated in several recent studies to be nearer 2%), included a book for young people called One Teenager in Ten. This “resource” for troubled teens features lurid pornographic stories, including a graphic lesbian sex scene between a twelve-year-old girl and her twenty-three-year-old dance teacher. The apparent goal is to activate children's sexuality at increasingly younger ages. At a conference promoting Project 10 to public school teachers in Oregon, University of Washington sociologist Pepper Schwartz admits targeting prepubescent children for “affirmation,” saying, “At this point, getting the majority to say ‘gay’ is good’ at nine or ten years old is going to be difficult, but just because it is difficult doesn’t mean it’s not the right thing” (Homosexuality, the Classroom and Your Children, 1992).

The beneficiaries of “sexual freedom” for children and teens are often predatory adult homosexuals. The National Gay and Lesbian Task Force is on record that “gay teens should be supported in coming out” (Mulshine: 10), but writer Paul Mulshine notes that “the guidance, and the sex, tends to come from adult gays who bring the teens out...A study published in the Journal of Pediatrics showed that of a sample of gay teenagers who had steady sexual partners, the mean age of the partners was 25 years” (ibid.:10). He cites a “1985 study of arrests in 12 U.S. jurisdictions [for child sex abuse, which] showed...on average, about 40 percent of arrests for pederastic homosexuals” (ibid.:11).

Though some deny that the “right” of adults to have sex with children remains a fundamental component of the “gay rights” movement, the evidence suggests otherwise.

Alyson Publications, the leading publisher of “gay” titles, markets books aimed at pre-schoolers, such as Daddy’s Roommate and Heather Has Two Mommies, right alongside Gay Sex: A Manual for Men Who Love Men. The latter contains detailed instructions for pedophiles and pederasts on how to successfully avoid discovery and arrest. “Avoid situations,” advises author Jack Hart, “where a number of men have sex with the same boy, or group of boys, over a period of time” (Hart:123). No doubt these guidelines are gratefully received by pederasts in the community, a constituency that is larger than most people realize. For example, Reeves claimed in a 1979 speech that he personally had met “over 500 men” who “were struggling with their attraction to boys.” “Almost to a man,” said Reeves, “they are teachers and boy scout leaders and boys club leaders” (Rueda:97).

Scouts Under Siege

Fortunately, America’s version of the Wandervoegel, the Boy Scouts of America, has largely been spared the problems associated with its German cousin. This can be attributed to its commitment to Judeo-Christian ideals as represented in its pledge to be “reverent toward God” (Hillcourt:10). Still, the number of homosexuals that have infiltrated the organization is alarming. From 1973 to 1993 over 1,416 scout leaders were expelled for sexually abusing boys (The Washington Times, June 15, 1993).

Beginning in 1991 and continuing to the present time, the Boy Scouts have been targeted by “gay rights” militants for their policy against allowing homosexuals to be scout leaders. An ostensibly “spontaneous” outcry against the Boy Scouts arose across the country, led by the once-venerable United Way agency, which pulled its funding from the Scouts in various cities. United Way’s funding withdrawal was quickly followed by other homosexual-controlled or co-opted entities including Levi Strauss, Wells Fargo, Seafirst Bank and Bank of America (which later reversed itself) (Oregonian, July 11, 1992). Self-admitted lesbian, Roberta Achtenberg, then serving on the San Francisco Board of Supervisors, led a campaign to coerce the Bank of America into support for the homosexuals' demands. Shortly thereafter, Achtenberg was appointed Assistant Secretary for the Department of Housing and Urban Development (Los Angeles Times, January 29, 1993), one of more than two dozen homosexuals appointed to high-level posts in the Clinton Administration (Grant, 1993:107).

In the streets, the Boy Scouts was mocked by "Queer Scouts, a focus group of Queer Nation" (Bay Area Reporter, August 1, 1991), while homosexuals at the highest levels of government attempted to intimidate the organization into submission. Surgeon General Joycelyn Elders used her post to castigate Scout officials (U.S.A. Today, June 2, 1994) and Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt signed an order prohibiting Boy Scouts from volunteering in national parks (The Washington Times, May 28, 1993). In San Francisco and San Diego the Boy Scouts were barred from operating day programs in the public schools (San Francisco Chronicle, September 14, 1991) and in San Diego, city officials launched an investigation of the Scouts under its legal powers to prevent "discrimination" against homosexuals (San Francisco Chronicle, October 18, 1992).

So far the Boy Scouts have withstood the onslaught, but late in 1992 the organization received a letter from NAMBLA predicting that it will eventually succumb to homosexual demands. The letter is addressed to Ben Love, Chief Scout Executive, Boy Scouts of America, and was published in the NAMBLA Bulletin, November, 1992:

Dear Mr. Love,

At its 16th membership conference, held in Chicago, August 7-9-1992, the North American Man/Boy Love Association unanimously adopted the following resolution:

“NAMBLA calls on the Boy Scouts of America to cease its discrimination against openly gay or lesbian persons in the appointment of its scoutmasters. This will permit scouts to be exposed to a variety of life styles and will permit more of those individuals who genuinely wish to serve boys to do so.”

I feel especially honored to have been asked to alert you of this resolution...I have also been a scout and a scout leader and share with so many in NAMBLA affection for the movement.

We recognize, of course, that the action for which we call is inevitable. What a great added contribution your organization will make possible to all the boys and girls who participate in it when you take this step. May it be taken in the near future.

We share a common mission — to bring greater understanding and light and purpose to the young as they grow. We invite you to join with us in cherishing individual integrity, and in seeking the opportunity for every boy and girl in our country to find their own truth. We encourage you to help every person associated with your organization to be able to express those values from themselves which to them represent for themselves the Good, the True, and the Beautiful. As we work together toward these ends Light will guide our way.

We express these sentiments most respectfully,
Very Cordially,

Leland Stevenson
Co-Recording Secretary, NAMBLA (NAMBLA Bulletin, November 1992. Emphasis ours).

Stevenson's letter is reminiscent of the one Wilhelm Jansen sent to Wandervoegel parents in which he told them, "you will have to accustom yourselves to the presence of so-called homosexuals in your ranks" (Mills:167). As we see, however, Stevenson's ideological allies have far greater political power in the United States to day than Jansen's had in Germany in 1912.

On June 28, 2000, the Boy Scouts prevailed in the landmark Supreme Court case of Dale v. Boy Scouts of America. Dale, an open homosexual, had sued the Scouts under a New Jersey anti-discrimination statute for denying him the opportunity to be a scout leader. The court ruled that forcing the Boy Scouts to accept practicing homosexuals would violate their constitutional right of "expressive association." Rather than accepting this ruling, however, the "gay" movement stepped up its campaign against the Scouts, targeting the donor base of the organization. To this date, the Boy Scouts has stood firm.

Unfortunately, the moral courage of the Boy Scouts of America is not shared by all youth organizations. The Girl Scouts allows lesbian leaders in its organization and has expelled at least one heterosexual leader who refused to keep this policy secret from parents. Brenda Mailand, a Girl Scout employee in Lansing Michigan was fired after she refused to sign the following pledge:

As an employee of the Michigan Capitol Girl Scout Council, you may not proactively inform members, parents of members, prospective members or parents of prospective members, or members of the general public (including media) of the Council's and GSUSA's position on sexual orientation (Private letter, February 9, 1993).

Buy a print copy of this book, including photos and graphics, at the book store,
www.abidingtruth.com/pfrc/showproducts.php.

Advertisement in a Sacramento-area homosexual newspaper.

The Big Brothers/Big Sisters organization actively promotes “gay rights” through its organization. In 1991 Big Brother/Big Sisters’ Board of Directors lobbied the Boy Scouts to change its policy against homosexual leaders, saying “the use of ‘non-traditional’ volunteers in the service delivery to youth can serve the best interest of children” (Private letter, August 9, 1991). Homosexual “big brothers” and “big sisters” are actively recruited in some cities (Just Out, March 1, 1993).

Absent a reversal in American cultural trends, it seems likely that the barrier to adult-child sex will fall in the not-too-distant future. What then? Can any society hope to escape disaster whose citizens have, to such a profound degree, lost the capacity to restrain themselves and others regarding sexual perversion? We cannot necessarily predict the future from what happened in Germany, but the possibility of following a similar path is very real. That path leads from sexual license to violence, murder and sadistic cruelty.

Atrocities

“The wicked prowl on every side when vile ness is exalted among the sons of men” Psalms 12:10.

Has sexual perversion led to increasing violence in America? Fortunately, to this point America has not experienced the wide-scale atrocities perpetrated by the Nazis in Germany, but the actions of certain male homosexuals in recent history are reminiscent of the worst SS butchers. As noted in a January 21, 1984 editorial in The New York Times, “Many of the most violent multiple murders have been committed by homosexual males.” The correlation is even closer than the Times observation would suggest. Robert Hazelwood, a well-respected former agent of the FBI’s Behavioral Science unit, offered the following insights:

With reference to your question about homosexual killings, I will provide you with what I have learned in more than 34 years of professional law enforcement experience, countless training and educational programs provided by the forensic communities (pathologists, mental health, legal) and law enforcement, as well as my own experience in having consulted on more than 4,000 homicide cases (cases involving from 1-30 victims) including over 300 homicides involving homosexual males.

When a deceased male is found nude or partially clothed and the murder involves “overkill” (i.e., much more violence than necessary to kill) and/or multiple stab wounds to the heart or throat and/or mutilation of the genitals then the investigator begins with the supposition that the crime is a homosexual-related murder. From my own experience, I can assure you that this assumption is proven true in at least 95% of the cases (Private letter, July 12, 1999).

Dr. Brian Clowes cites some alarming statistics showing that eight of the top ten serial killers in the United States were homosexuals and that homosexuals were responsible for 68 percent of all mass murders (Clowes:97). The following is a list of nine leading homosexual serial killers, eight of which were among the top ten most prolific killers as of 1992. Clowes' sources are listed in the text and are reprinted from Debating the "Gay Rights" Issue:

Donald Garvey: 37 Murders...[a] nurse's aide [who] was convicted of 37 murders in Kentucky and Ohio. Psychologists testified that "Harvey said he was a homosexual." The New York Times, August 20, and August 17th, 1991.

John Wayne Gacy: 33 Murders...[a] professed homosexual ...who killed 33 young men and boys and buried them in his basement. The New York Times, February 22, 1980.

Patrick Wayne Kearney: 32 Murders...The New York Times described him as "an acknowledged homosexual" and "...perpetrator of the 'homosexual trash bag murders.'" The New York Times, July 27, 1977.

Bruce Davis: 28 murders...killed 28 young men and boys after having sex with them. The New York Times, January 21, 1984.

Corll, Henley and Brooks: 32 Murders. Dean Corll, Elmer Wayne Henley, and David Owen Brooks were the members of a Texas homosexual torture/murdering that captured and mutilated 27 young men. The New York Times, July 27, 1974.

Juan Corona: 25 Murders...an admitted homosexual, killed 25 male migrant workers. The New York Times, October 4, 1972.

Jeffrey Dahmer: 17 Murders...a convicted child molester and practicing and admitted homosexual, lured 17 young men and boys to his apartment, had sex with them, then killed them and dismembered them. He ate parts of his victims bodies...Dahmer was active in "gay rights" organizations and had participated in "gay pride" parades. Michael C. Buelow. "Police Believe Suspect Killed 17." The Oregonian, July 26, 1991, pages A1 and A24. Also: "Relative in Dahmer Case Sues." USA Today, August 6, 1991, page 3A. Also October 1991 Focus on the Family Letter.

Stephen Kraft: 16 Murders...killed at least 16 young men after drug ging, sodomizing and torturing them. Robert L. Mauro. "The Nation's Leading Serial Killers." The Wanderer, October 31, 1991.

William Bonin: 14 Murders...tortured and killed 14 young men...had sex with his victims before and after they died. Robert L. Mauro. "The Nation's Leading Serial Killers." The Wanderer, October 31, 1991. (Clowes:96)

William Bonin was executed by lethal injection at California's San Quentin prison on February 23, 1996. As reported in the Orange County Register, February 22, 1996, Bonin, the so-called "Freeway Killer," killed at least 21 boys and young men and dumped their bodies along California freeways (our original source mentioned only 14). After having been jailed in the early 1970s for raping boys, Bonin had vowed that in the future "there will be no witnesses."

Although various stories reported that Bonin had raped men at gun point in the army and had been engaged in sex with a man at the time of his final arrest, the media failed to identify Bonin as "gay." Standard "gay" rhetoric denies that male-on-male child molestation qualifies as homosexual conduct. Here, the perpetrator clearly was homosexual in his adult sexual relations as well, but the "gay" label was scrupulously avoided.

Thomas Hamilton of Dunblane, Scotland, is Britain's worst mass-murderer in modern history. Hamilton killed 16 children at an elementary school on March 13, 1996. According to The New York Times, Hamilton was obsessed with boys. Ousted from the Boy Scouts in 1974 for “complaints about unstable and possibly improper behavior following a Scout camp,” Hamilton later formed his own boys’ club. Once again, children complained that “he was overly familiar, made them take their shirts off and was obsessed with photographing them.” Upset that he had been branded a “pervert,” Hamilton apparently took his revenge against the town of Dunblane by killing their children.

In a spree of “gay-on-gay” violence not seen since Nazi Germany, one homosexual man, Gaetan Dugas, was directly responsible for killing over a thousand homosexual men by deliberately infecting them with the AIDS virus. Indirectly he may be responsible for tens of thousands, eventually perhaps hundreds of thousands of AIDS deaths. One of the first known AIDS carriers, Dugas was known as “Patient Zero” because he caused so many of the earliest infections (Clowes:97).

Even after his diagnosis Dugas “justified his continued sodomy with the excuse that he was free to do what he wanted with his own body. Even when he was in the final stages of AIDS he would have anonymous sex with men in homosexual bath houses, and then show his sexual partners his purple Kaposi’s Sarcoma blotches, saying, ‘Gay cancer. Maybe you’ll get it’” (“The Columbus of AIDS.” National Review, November 6, 1987:19).

As reported in the Marin Independent Journal, February 5, 1996, the first known murder connected to the Internet resulted from a homosexual encounter between two men in East Windsor, New Jersey. After meeting “through an online chat room, an electronic gathering place for gay men,” they decided to get together. “But their offline meeting Jan. 4 turned deadly, police say, when George Hemenway shot Jesse Unger in the head, as a 15-year-old boy looked on.” According to the story, the last homicide in this Trenton suburb of 22,000 was 10 years ago and also “stemmed from a homosexual ‘street encounter,’ police say.”

Other major news stories have had a homosexual element that assumes greater significance when viewed in the context of the homo-fascist connection. For example, just days after du Pont fortune heir John E. du Pont attracted national attention for his role in a shooting and a dramatic police standoff at his Pennsylvania mansion, details of his bizarre private life began to emerge. A single man who lived with his mother until her recent death, du Pont used his personal fortune to support his hobbies, which centered on traditionally ultra-masculine themes: collecting guns and military artifacts (such as an armored personnel carrier he drove around his estate) and collegiate-style Greco-Roman wrestling.

A Gannett News Service report published in the January 30 edition of the Marin Independent Journal contains allegations that du Pont was a homosexual who used his wealth to recruit others into the homosexual lifestyle. “‘You really don’t want to hear the whole truth. It would blow you away,’ said Andre Metzger, a wrestling coach who sued du Pont for sexual harassment. Metzger said du Pont used the Foxcatcher training facility to gain access ‘to kids and adults’ for homosexual relationships.”

Around the turn of the millennium, America was stunned by a string of mass murders in public high schools. The most horrific of these was the attack by teenagers Dylan Klebold and Eric Harris on their classmates at Columbine High in Littleton, Colorado. Fifteen died that day, including Klebold and Harris, who committed suicide. There are two important facts which are relevant to our study. The first is that according to fellow students, the killers were homosexual. The Gay Today news website reported, in an article titled “The Waking Dream: Homoerotic violence at Columbine High,” that “according to some accounts, Klebold and Harris were allegedly ‘bi sex u als,’ which is a teen age code word for the “G” (gay) word, which teens, especially high school teens in Col o rado, cannot use.” NAMBLA Bulletin editor, Bill Andrietti wrote that

A gay an gle sur faced al most as soon as the shoot ings hit the news, with ru mors cir cu lat ing that the boys with the bombs and guns were -- variously -- cer tainly gay, ab so lutely het ero sex ual, or self-avowed bi sex u als...Many gay public re la tions ex perts thought it best to down play Eric Harris and Dylan Klebold’s possible homosexual ity....[while a press re lease from the ho mo sex ual Met ro pol i tan Com mu nity Church re ported that] Cam pus jocks re mem ber call ing Eric and Dylan “fag got,” “homo,” and “queer” be cause “they show ered to gether” or “were seen hold ing hands.”

But asking whether Klebold and Harris were “really” gay misses the point. Like a wick soaked in gas o line, their re la tion ship was soaked with homoeroticism. The theme of brav ing death to gether in bat tle runs through the lit er a ture of queer love....In his di ary, one of the two spun out a fantasy of living on an island alone with the other....Whether they had girlfriends or not, Harris and Klebold shared a pact unto death that, if twisted hor ri bly, also was romantic (Andrietti, Bill. “Homosexuality and the Massacre, The Guide, June 1999).

The sec ond rel e vant fact is that the kill ers de lib er ately se lected April 20th to launch their kill ing spree be cause it was Adolf Hit ler’s birth day. This choice was at trib uted, by surviving stu dents, to the fact that “they be lieved in...what Adolf Hitler did”“They’re white supremacists” (Meek, James Gordon. “Littleton’s Casualties of War,” Gridlock Magazine, undated, quoting from The Washington Times and The Wash ing ton Post).

Not all of the school mass kill ers were al leged to be ho-homosexuals, although a possible homosexual connection was raised in several of the incidents with the highest number of victims. Michael Carneal killed three and wounded five students as the victims prayed to gether at Heath High School in Paducah, Kentucky. Carneal denied being a homosexual, but had been accused of being “gay” by fellow students (Martinac, Paula. “Lesbian Notions” Called Out LGBT Religious News Service, May 24, 1999).

Mitchell Johnson (13), the older of the two boys who killed five and wounded ten at Westside Middle School in Jonesboro, Arkansas had been repeatedly sexually abused by a relative of his day care provider when he was six or seven years old. It is assumed that the abuser was male. (Arkansas Democrat Gazette, April 7, 1998).

Luke Woodham attributed his murder of his mother and two students (nine others were wounded) to rage over a failed romance with a girl, but he had also been angered over being called “gay” at school (Time.com, July 6, 1998). By itself, this is rather unpersuasive evidence that Woodham struggled with homosexuality. However, we find it most interesting that in a pre-rampage explanatory note to a male friend, Woodham referred those who would be looking for clues about his motives to a section from The Gay Science by Friedrich Nietzsche (The Cincinnati Post website, 11-09-98). The section contains Nietzsche’s famous commentary on the theme that “God is dead.” The Gay Science is not about homosexuality, but we wonder if reference to it might be intended to convey a cryptic message about Woodham’s struggles. (Nietzsche’s homosexuality is an acknowledged fact in “gay” circles these days -- see Charles Stone, “Of Whom Nietzsche dreamed,” Harvard Gay and Lesbian Review, Winter 1999.) Interestingly, Woodham identified this and two other books as his favorites: Necronomicon, a book of magic, and Mein Kampf (ibid.).

More significant than the possible homosexual inclinations of the killers is the fact that school shootings have arisen in the context of rampant moral degeneracy among students. The degree to which America’s children have been corrupted was documented in a 1999 PBS Frontline special “The Lost Children of Rockdale County.” Following a 1996 outbreak of syphilis among teenagers in the middle-class community of Rockdale, Georgia, officials were shocked to learn that large numbers of local school children, from twelve years old and up, were routinely engaging in group sex together. Girls of fourteen were admitting to having had from 30-100 sex partners. Not only were the children not ashamed of their actions, according to one health care worker, students were “laughing and high-fiving” each other as they tested positive for syphilis.

Three years later, on the one-month anniversary of the Columbine massacre, Rockdale County became the site of its own school shooting. Fifteen-year-old Thomas Solomon shot and wounded six of his fellow students at Heritage High School in the city of Conyers (Grigg, William Norman. “Another Lost Generation?,” The New American, October 23, 2000). Grigg writes

To [the] grim indices of cultural decline must be added the recently coined category of “school shooters” -- murderous teenage sociopaths.... One of the most potent indictments of our degenerate culture is found in the...FBI report “The School Shooter: A Threat Assessment Perspective”...listing the warning signs intended to help school officials recognize and evaluate potential shooters within their student populations. Relatively few social commentators have been willing to explore the unspoken assumption behind that report -- namely, that our present culture...can be expected to generate teenage mass murderers on a regular basis (ibid.).

As we can see, our nation is already reaping the destructive consequences of having embraced the “gay” ethic of sexual license. Once a nation of high moral values and strong families, we are now a fractured and morally confused society. It is not certain that we shall go the way of Germany, but absent a reversal of the current trend, it is very likely that we shall face some form of cultural disaster before the homosexualization of America is complete.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A

-  Adam, Harry D. The Rise of a Gay and Lesbian Movement. Boston, Twayne Publishers, 1987.  Agonito, Rosemary. History of Ideas on Women: A Source Book, New York, G.P. Putnam & Sons, 1977.  Alyson Almanac. Boston, Alyson Publications Inc., 1990.  American Family Association Journal. January, 1988.  Anderson, Shelly. "Youth." The Advocate. January 26, 1993.  Andriette, Bill, "Is Gaie France Fascist?" NAMBLA Bulletin, September, 1992.  Andrietti, Bill. "Homosexuality and the Massacre," The Guide, June 1999.  Arkansas Democrat Herald. In Life Advocate, February, 1994.

B

-  Bay Area Reporter. August 1, 1991.  Beard, Mary. The Sex Life of the Unmarried Adult. Garden City Publishing, New York, 1934.  Berenbaum, Michael. The World Must Know. Boston, Little, Brown and Company, 1993.  Bergler, Edmund, M.D. Homosexuality: Disease or Way of Life?. New York, The Macmillan Company, 1956.  Bergsson, Snorri G. Mutism and Nazism, at www.notendur.centrum.is/~snorrigh,  Berry, Jason. Lead Us Not Into Temptation: Catholic Priests and the Sexual Abuse of Children. New York, Doubleday, 1992.  Bessel, Richard. Political Violence and the Rise of Nazism. New Haven, Yale Press, 1984.  Bianco, David, "What Was The Scientific Humanitarian Committee?", Washington Blade, August, 1997.  Blachford, Gregg. "Male Dom i nance and the Gay World,” in Kenneth Plummer, ed. The Making of the Modern Homosexual, 1981.  Bleuel, Hans Peter. Sex and Society in Nazi Germany. New York, J.B. Lippincott Company, 1973.  Blueher, Hans. Die deutsche Wandervogelbewegung als erotisches Phänomen, Templehof-Berlin, 1914.  Bonetti, David. “Muscling in on the Main stream.” San Francisco Examiner, June 26, 1992.  Buchmayr, Friedrich. Biographisch-Bibliographisches Kirchenlexicon, Vol. XVI, 1999.  Burleigh, Michael, and Wiperman, Wolfgang. The Racial State: Germany 1933-1945. New York, Cambridge University Press, 1993.  Butler, Ewan and Young, Gordon. The Life and Death of Hermann Goering.

C

 Calic, Edouard. Reinhard Heydrich: The Chilling Story of the Man Who Masterminded the Nazi Death Camps Military Heritage Press, William Morrow and Company, 1982.  Cantarella, Eva. Bisexuality in the Ancient World. New Haven, Yale University Press, 1992.  Cavedish, Richard, Man, Myth & Magic: An Illustrated Encyclopedia of the Supernatural. New York, Marshall Cavedish Corporation, 1970.  Clowes, Brian. Debating the “Gay Rights” Issue. Brooks, Oregon, Oregon Citizens Alliance, 1993.  Cory, Donald Webster, and LeRoy, John P. The Homosexual and His Society: A View from Within. New York, Citadel Press, 1963.  Costello, John. Mask of Treachery: Spies, Lies, Buggery and Betrayal. New York, William Morrow and Company, 1988.  Costello, John and Tsarev, Oleg. Deadly Illusions. Crown Publishers, New York, 1993.  Cowan, Thomas. Gay Men and Women Who Enriched the World. Boston, Alyson Publications, 1988.  Crompton, Louis. “Gay Genocide: from Leviticus to Hitler.” The Gay Academic. Palm Springs, California, ETC Publications, 1978.

D

 Daily Telegraph, “How sex became a weapon of war,” July 23, 1998.  Davidson, Michael. The World, the Flesh, and Myself. London, Arthur Baker Ltd., 1962.  Date line World Jewry. New York, Institute of the World Jewish Congress, August, 1994.  Donohue, William A. “Culture Wars Against the Boy Scouts”. Society Magazine, May/June 1994.  Dunne, Bruce. “Power and Sexuality in the Middle East,” Middle East Report, Spring, 1998.  Dynes, Wayne. The Encyclopedia of Homosexuality. New York, Garland Publishing, 1990.

E

 Ebert, Michael. “Pedophilia Steps into the Day light.” Focus on the Family Citizen November 16, 1992.  Eder, Dr. Asher. “How to Disarm the Terrible Jewish Psychology Against Jews and Israel that Afflicts the Muslim World Today,” www.rb.org, February 24, 2000.  Evans, Arthur. Witchcraft and the Gay Counterculture. Fag Rag Books, Boston 1978.

F

 Facts on File Yearbook, 1941, Volume 1, New York, Persons Index, Facts on File Inc.  Fee, Elizabeth. “Science and Homosexuality.” The Universities and the Gay Experience. New York, Gay Academic Union, 1974.  Fest, Joachim C. The Face of the Third Reich: Portraits of the Nazi Leadership. New York, Pantheon Books, 1970.  Fest, Joachim C. Hitler. New York, Vintage Books, 1975.  Flaceliere, Robert, Love in Ancient Greece, Crown Publishers, New York, 1962.  Flemming, Gerald. Hitler and the Final Solution. Berkeley, University of California Press, 1982.  Flood, Charles Bracelen. Hitler, The Path to Power. Boston, Houghton Mifflin Company, 1989.  Friedlander, Benedict. "Memoirs for the Friends and Contributors of the Scientific Humanitarian Committee in the Name of the Succession of the Scientific Humanitarian Committee." Journal of Homosexuality, January-February, 1991.  Friedlander, Henry, and Milton, Sybil (Eds.). Simon Wiesenthal Center Annual, Volume 7. New York, Allied Books, 1990.  Friedrich, Otto. Before the Deluge. (Harper and Row, New York, 1986.  Fuchs, Thomas. The Hitler Fact Book. New York, Fountain Books, 1990.

G

 Gallo, Max. The Night of the Long Knives. New York, Warner Books, 1973.  Garde, Noel I. Jonathan Gide: The Homosexual in History. New York, Vantage Press, 1969.  The Gay Agenda (video). Lancaster, California, The Report, 1992.  Gay, Peter. Weimar Culture: The Outsider as Insider. New York, Harper and Row, 1968.  Genese, Cecil. The Holocaust: Who Are The Guilty. Sussex, England, The Book Guild Ltd., 1988.  Germino, Dante. "Fascism." Collier's Encyclopedia. Volume 9. New York, Macmillan, 1991.  Glaser, Herman. The Cultural Roots of National Socialism. University of Texas Press, Austin, 1964.  Glazov, Jamie. "Sexual Rage Behind Islamic Terror," FrontPage magazine, October 4, 2001.  Goodrick-Clarke, Nicholas. The Occult Roots of Nazism: Secret Aryan Cults and their Influence on Nazi Ideology. New York, New York University Press, 1992.  Graber, G.S. The History of the SS: A Chilling Look at the Most Terrifying Arm of the Nazi War Machine. New York, Charter Books, 1978.  Grahn, Judy. Another Mother Tongue. Boston, Beacon Press, 1984.  Grant, George. Grand Illusions: The Legacy of Planned Parenthood. Brentwood, Tennessee, Wolgemuth and Hyatt, Publishers Inc., 1988.  Grant, George, and Horne, Mark. Legislating Immorality. Chicago, Moody Press, 1993.  Grau, Gunter. Hidden Holocaust? London, Cassells, 1993.  Greenberg, David F. The Construction of Homosexuality. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1988.  Greif, Martin. The Gay Book of Days. The Main Street Press, 1982.  Grigg, William Norman. "Another Lost Generation?," The New American, November 12, 2001.  Grunberger, Richard. The 12-Year Reich: A Social History of Nazi Germany 1933-1945. New York, Ballantine Books, 1971.  Guthrie, W.K.C. "The Republic." Grolier Electronic Publishing, 1992.

H

 Hasselbach, Ingo. Fuhrer EX. Random House, 1996.  Haeberle, Irwin J. "Swastika, Pink Triangle, and Yellow Star: The Elite Rights Committee, 1992.  Harvard Gay and Lesbian Review Summer, 1995.  Healy, Murray, Gay Skins: Class, Masculinity and Queer Appropriation, Cassell, 1996.  Heiden, Konrad, History of National Socialism, New York, A.A. Knopf, 1935; Der Fuehrer, 1944.  Herdt, Gilbert. The Sambia, CBS College Publishing, New York, 1987.  Herzer, Manfred. "Communists, Social Democrats, and the Homosexual Movement in the Weimar Republic." In Heckma, et al

(Eds.). Gay Men and the Sexual History of the Political Left. New York, Haworth Press, 1995.  Hirsch, Rabbi Samson Raphael. HOREB: A Philosophy of Jewish Laws and Observances. Jerusalem, Soncino Press, 1962.  Howard, Michael. The Occult Conspiracy. Rochester, Vermont, Destiny Books, 1989.  Howe, Ellic. Astrology: A Recent History Including the Untold Story of its Role in World War II. New York, Walker and Company, 1967.  Hutton, Dietrich. Defilement of Race, Duesseldorf, "Duetsche Revolution."

I

 IGLA Euroletter 52, "Gay Holocaust Survivors to get Swiss Money," August, 1977.  Igra, Samuel, Germany's National Vice. London: Quality Press Ltd., 1945, Igra, Samuel, The "Doctor's Plot" in Moscow and the Protocols of the Wise Men of Zion, 1960.

J

 Jackson, Robert H., The Nurnberg Case, New York, Cooper Square Publishers, Inc. 1971.  Jay, K., and Young, A. The Gay Report. Summit, 1979.  Johansson, Warren, "Pink Triangles." In Dynes, Wayne (ed.). Encyclopedia of Homosexuality. New York, Garland Publishing, 1990.  Johansson, Warren, and Percy, William A. "Homosexuals in Nazi Germany." In Henry Friedlander (ed.), Simon Wiesenthal Center Annual: Volume 7. New York, Allied Books, Ltd., 1990.  Johansson, Warren, and Percy, William A. Outing: Shattering the Conspiracy of Silence. New York, Harrington Park Press, 1994.  Jones, H. Kimball. Toward a Christian Understanding of the Homosexual. New York, Association Press, 1966.  Jones, J. Sydney. Hitler in Vienna 1907-1913. New York, Stein and

Day, 1983.  Jones, Nigel H.. Hitler's Heralds: The Story of the Freikorps 1918-1923. London, John Murray, 1987.  Just Out. March 1, 1993.

K

 Karlen, Arno. Sexuality and Homosexuality. New York, W.W. Norton, 1971.  Katz, Jonathan. Gay American History. New York, Thomas Y. Crowell Company, 1976.  Katz, Jonathan Gay and Lesbian Almanac.  Katz, Steven T. "Quantity and Interpretation—Issues in the Comparative Historical Analysis of the Holocaust." In Holocaust and Genocide Studies: Volume 1. Oxford University Press, New York, 1994; Volume 4, Number 2, 1989. New York, Pergamon Press, 1989.  Kennedy, Hubert. "Man/Boy Love in the Writings of Karl Heinrich Ulrichs" in Pascal, Mark (ed.). Varieties of Man/Boy Love. New York, Wallace Hamilton Press, 1992.  Kennedy, Hubert. Ulrichs: The life and works of Karl Heinrich Ulrichs, Pioneer of the Modern Gay Movement. Boston, Alyson Publications, 1988).  Kirk, Marshall, and Pill, Erastes. "The Overhauling of Straight America." Guide Magazine, November, 1987.  Knickerbocker, H.R. Is Tomorrow Hitler's? New York, Reynal and Hitchcock, 1941.  Koch, H.W. The Hitler Youth: Origins and Development 1922-1945. New York, Stein and Day, 1976.  Koehl, Robert Lewis. The Black Corps: The Structure and Power Struggles of the Nazi SS. Madison Wisconsin, University of Wisconsin Press, 1983.  Kogon, Eugen. The Theory and Practice of Hell. New York, Berkley Publishing Company, 1950.

L

 Langer, Walter. The Mind of Adolf Hitler: The Secret War time Report. Sig net, 1972.  Lauritsen, John, and Thorstad, David. The Early Homosexual Rights Movement: 1864-1935. New York, Times Change Press, 1974.  League of Nations International Health Year-book. Geneva, League of Nations Health Organization, 1924.  Lee, Martin. The Beast Re awakens. New York, Little, Brown and Co., 1997.  Leo, John. "When Activism Becomes Gangsterism." U.S. News and World Report February 5, 1990.  Levi, Primo. Survival in Auschwitz. New York, Macmillan Publishing Company, 1961.  The Limbaugh Letter. May, 1995.  Linsert, Richard. Kabale und Liebe: Über Politik und Geschlechtsleben. Berlin, Man, 1931.  Lombardi, Michael A.. "Research on Homosexuality in Nineteenth Century Germany" (Parts I and II). Los Angeles, Urania Manuscripts, 1977.  Los Angeles Times. January 29, 1993.

M

 Mac Mathuna, Sean. "Postwar Arab links to the ODESSA network," Flame Magazine, 1999, www.flamemag.dircon.co.uk.  MacDonald, Callum. The Killing of SS ObergruppenFuehrer Reinhard Heydrich. New York, The Free Press, 1989.  Macintyre, Ben. Forgotten Fatherland: The Search for Elisabeth Nietzsche. New York, Farrar Straus Giroux, 1992.  The Mail on Sunday (UK), "The Gay Acolytes haunting Haider," April 30, 2000  Manchester, William. The Arms of Krupp. Little, Brown and Co., Boston, 1968.  Manchester, William. The Last Lion: Winston Spencer Churchill. London, Little, Brown and Company.  Marotta, Toby. The Politics of Homosexuality. Boston, Houghton Mifflin Company, 1981.  The Massachusetts News, "Holocaust Survivor: Molested by Guards," April 5, 2000  Martinac, Paula. "Lesbian Notions" Called Out LGBT Religious News Service, May 24, 1999.  Mauro, Robert L. "The Nation's Leading Serial Killers." The Wanderer. October 31, 1991.  McIlhenny, Chuck & Donna, and York, Frank. When the Wicked Seize a City. Lafayette, Louisiana, Huntington House, 1993.  Meade, Marion, Madame Blavatsky: The Woman Behind the Myth. New York, G.P. Putnam & Sons, 1980.  Miles, David H. "George, Stefan." Grolier Electronic Publishing, Inc., 1992.  Miller, Neil. Out of the Past: Gay and Lesbian History from 1869 to the Present. New York, Vintage Books, 1995.  Mills, Richard. "The German Youth Movement." In Leyland, Winston (Ed.). Gay Roots: Twenty Years of Gay Sunshine: An Anthology of Gay History, Sex, Politics, and Culture. San Francisco, Gay Sunshine Press, 1989.  Mosse, George L. Nationalism and Sexuality: Respectability and Abnormal Sexuality in Modern Europe. New York, Howard Fertig, 1985.  Mulshine, Paul. "Man/Boy Love." Heterodoxy, September, 1994.  Munk, Rabbi Elie. Call of the Torah. Feldheim Publishing, 1980.

N

 NAMBLA Bulletin. November 1992; September, 1992.  NARTH Bulletin. March, 1994.  National Review. November 6, 1987; June 24, 1991.  Nethercot, Arthur H.. The First Five Lives of Annie Besant. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1960.  The New York Times. October 4, 1972; July 27, 1974; July 27, 1977; February 22, 1980; January 21, 1984; August 17 and August 20, 1991.  Newman, Leslea. Heather Has Two Mommies. Boston, Alyson Publications, 1989.  Newton, Michael. Raising Hell: An Encyclopedia of Devil Worship and Satanic Crime. New York, Avon, 1993. ***

 Newton, Michael, and Newton, Judy Ann. The Ku Klux Klan: An Encyclopedia. New York, Garland Publishing, 1991.  Nicolosi, Dr. Joseph. Reparative Therapy of Male Homosexuality: A New Clinical Approach. Jason Aaronson Inc., 1991.  Nicolosi, Dr. Joseph. Healing Homosexuality: Case Stories of Reparative Therapy. Jason Aaronson Inc., London, 1993.  Nobel, David, The Homosexual Revolution: A look at the Preachers and Politicians Behind it, Manitou Springs, Colorado, Summit Press, 1984.

 O

 Oosterhuis, Harry. The "Jews" of the Antifascist Left: Homosexuality and Socialist Resistance to Nazism." In Heckma, et al (Eds.). Gay Men and the Sexual History of the Political Left. Haworth Press, 1995.
  Oosterhuis, Harry, and Kennedy, Hubert (eds.). Homosexuality and Male Bonding in Pre-Nazi Germany: the youth movement, the gay movement and male bonding before Hitler's rise: original transcripts from Der Eigene, the first gay journal in the world. New York, Harrington Park Press, 1991.  Oregonian. July 26, 1991; July, 11 1992; August 26, 1992; December 10, 1992. Oosterhuis, Harry and Steakley, James. "Leftist Sexual Politics and Homosexuality: A Historical Overview. In Heckma, et al (Eds.). Gay Men and the Sexual History of the Political Left. Haworth Press, 1995.

 P

 Pacifici, Sergio. "D'Annunzio, Gabriele." Grolier Electronic Publishing, Inc., 1992.  Parshall, Gerald. "Hitler's Horrors." U.S. News & World Report. April 3, 1995.  Pawelczynska, Anna.

Values and Violence in Auschwitz. Berkley, California, University of California Press, 1979.  Perrault, Gilles, and Azema, Pierre. Paris Under the Occupation. New York, Vendome Press, 1987.  Peters, H. F., Zarathustra's Sister: The case of Elisabeth and Frederick Nietzsche. Crown Publishers, New York, 1977.  Peukert, Detlev J.K. The Weimar Republic: The Crisis of Classical Modernity. New York, Hill and Wang, 1987.  Plant, Richard. The Pink Triangle: The Nazi War Against Homosexuals. New York, Henry Holt and Company, 1986.  Poliakov, Leon. Harvest of Hate: The Nazi Program for the Destruction of the Jews of Europe. New York, Walden Press, 1979.  Pollard, Walter. Medical Block Buchenwald. New York, Ballentine Books, 1960.  Pronger, Brian. The Arena of Masculinity: Sports, Homosexuality and the Meaning of Sex, New York, St. Martin's Press, 1990.

Q

 Quigley, Carroll. Tragedy and Hope. Macmillan Company, New York, 1966.

R

 Rauschnig, Hermann. Men of Chaos. New World Books, 1942.  Read, Anthony, and Fisher, David. Kristallnacht: The Nazi Night of Terror. New York, Times Books, 1989.  Recter, Frank. The Nazi Extermination of Homosexuals. New York, Stein and Day, 1981.  Reeves, Tom. "Reviving and Redefining Pederasty." In Pascal, Mark (Ed.). Varieties of Man/Boy Love. New York, Wallace Hamilton Press, 1992.  Reich, Wilhelm. The Mass Psychology of Fascism. Farrar, Straus & Giroux, New York, 1970.  Reisman, Dr.

Ju dith A. "A Con tent Anal y sis of Two De cades of The Advocate , the Gay and Les bian Na tional News Mag a zine." Work in prog ress.  Reisman, Dr. Ju dith A. Kinsey, Hefner and Hay, The In doc tri na tion of Heterophobia in Amer i can Men and Women. Arlington, VA. In sti tute for Me dia Ed u ca tion, 1994.  Reisman, Dr. Ju dith A., and Eichel, Ed ward W. Kinsey, Sex and Fraud: The In doc tri na tion of a People. La-fayette, Louisiana, Huntington House, 1990.  Reiter, Joseph A. "Death in Venice." Grolier Electronic Publishing, Inc., 1992.  Rempel, Gerhard. Hitler's Children: The Hitler Youth and the SS. Cha pel Hill, North Carolina, The Uni ver sity of North Carolina Press, 1989.  Reuth, Ralf George. Goebbels. Har court Brace, New York, 1993.  Riley, Patrick G. D. "Ho mo sex u al ity and the Maccabean Re-volt." New Oxford Review, Sep tem ber 1997.  Rhodes, James M. The Hitler Move ment: A Modern Mille na rian Rev o lu tion. Stanford, California, Hoover In sti tu tion Press, 1980.  Rob in son, Ja cob. "The History of the Holocaust." Holocaust. Jeru sa lem, Keter Pub lish ing House, 1974.  Rosan, Laurence J. "Phi los o phies of Ho mo pho bia and Homophilia." The Gay Academic. Palm Springs, Cal i for nia, ETC Pub lish ing, 1978.  Rose, Rick. "Mu seum of Pain." The Advocate, Oc to ber 19, 1993.  Rosenthal, A. M., and Gelb, Ar thur. One More Vic tim: The Life and Death of a Jew ish Nazi. New York, The New Amer i can Li brary Inc., 1967.  Rossman, Parker. Sexual Ex pe ri ence Be tween Men and Boys. New York, As so ci a tion Press, 1976.  Rowse, A.L. Homosexuals in History: Ambivalence in Society, Litera-ture and the Arts. New York, Macmillan Pub lish ing Com pany, 1977.  Rueda, Enrique T. The Homosexual Network: Public Lives and Private Policy. Old Green wich, Connecti cut, The Devon Adair Com-pany, 1982.  Runes, Dagobert D. Pictorial History of Philosophy.

New York, Philo soph i cal Li brary, 1959.  Rutledge, Leigh W. The Gay Book of Lists. Boston, Alyson Pub li ca tions Inc., 1987.

5

 San Francisco Chronicle. Sep tem ber 14, 1991; Oc to ber 18, 1992.
  Sanger, Margaret. The Pivot of Civilization. New York, Bentano's, Inc., 1922.  Schaeffer, Fran cis A. The Great Evan gel i cal Disaster. Westchester, Illinois, Crossway Books, 1984.  Schmidt, Dr. Matthais. Al bert Speer: The End of a Myth. St. Mar tins Press, New York.  Schwarzwaller, Wulf. The Unknown Hitler: His Pri vate Life and Fortune. Na tional Press, Inc., and Star Agency, 1989.
  Searchlight magazine. "Gay nazi -- A contradiction in terms?" Sep tem ber, 1999. Also "A very Eng lish ex trem ist." Au gust, 2000.  Sereny, Gitta. Al bert Speer: His Bat tle With Truth. Al fred A. Knopf. New York, 1995.  Seward, Desmond. Na po leon and Hitler. New York, Si mon and Schuster.  Shaul, Elisheva. "Ho mo sex u al ity in the Third Reich." In Gutman, Is rael (Ed.). Encyclopedia of the Ho lo caust. Tel Aviv, Sifriat Poalim Pub lishing House, 1987.  Shirer, Wil liam. The Rise and Fall of the Third Reich. New York, Fawcett Crest, 1960.  Shoham, S. Giora. Val halla, Cal vary and Auschwitz. Bow man and Cody Ac a demic Pub lishing, 1995.  Simonelli, Fred er ick J., Amer i can Fuehrer: George Lin coln Rockwell and the Amer i can Nazi Party, Uni ver sity of Il li nois Press, 1999.  Sklar, Dusty. The Nazis and the Occult. New York, Dorset Press, 1989.  Skousen, W. Cleon. The Naked Communist. Salt Lake City, Utah, Ensign Pub lishing Co., 1958.  Snyder, Dr. Louis L. Encyclopedia of the Third Reich. New York, Par a gon House, 1989.  South ern Pov erty Law Center Intelligence Report, "Fringe of the Fringe" Issue number 100, Fall, 2000.  Spence, Lewis. The History of Origins of Druidism. Great Britain, EP Publishing Ltd., 1976.  Star, Susan Leigh. "Swastikas: The Street and the University." In Linden, Robin Ruth, Pagano, Darlene R, Russell, Diana E.H., and Star, Susan Leigh (eds). Against Sadomasochism: A Radical Feminist Analysis. East Palo Alto, California, Frog in the Well, 1982.  Steakley, James D., The Homosexual Emancipation Movement in Germany. New York, Arno Press, 1975.  Steiner, Jean-Francois. Treblinka. New York, Simon and Schuster, 1979.  Stevenson, William A Man Called Intrepid: The Secret War. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 1976.  Stone, Charles. "Of Whom Nietzsche dreamed," Harvard Gay and Lesbian Review, Winter 1999.  Stop Promoting Homosexuality Hawaii Newsletter. April, 1994; November, 1994.  Strasser, Otto. Hitler and I. Boston, Houghton Mifflin Company, 1940.  Strasser, Otto, and Stern, Michael. Flight From Terror. New York, Robert M. McBride & Company, 1943.

T

 Taylor, Fred. The Goebbels Diaries: 1939-1941. New York, G.P. Putnam's Sons, 1983.  Theweleit, Klaus. Male Fantasies. Volumes 1 and 2. Minneapolis, Minnesota, University of Minnesota Press, 1987.  Timmons, Stuart. The Trouble With Harry Hay: Founder of the Modern Gay Movement. Boston, Alyson Publications Inc., 1990.  Toland, John. Adolf Hitler. Anchor Books, New York, 1976.  Tripp, C. A. The Homosexual Matrix. Signet, 1975.  Tompkins, Peter. The Magic of Oberlinks. Harper and Row, 1981.

U, V

 Ulrichs, Karl Heinrich. Forschungen über das Rätsel der Mannmanlichen Liebe. Leipzig, Max Spohr Verlag, 1989.  U.S.A. Today. August 6, 1991; June 2, 1994.  U.S. News and World Report. October, 1994.

W

 Wagner, Nike. The Wagners: The dramas of a musical dynasty. Princeton University Press, 1998.  Waite, Robert G.L. Vanguard of Nazism: The Free Corps Movement in Post war Germany 1918-1923. New York, W.W. Norton and Company, 1969.  Waite, Robert G.L. The Psychopathic God Adolf Hitler. New York, Signet Books, 1977.  Washington Blade, January, 1992.  The Washington Times. May 28, 1993; June 15, 1993.  Webb, James. The Occult Underground. LaSalle, Illinois, Open Court Publishing Co., 1974.  Weber, Eugen. Varieties of Fascism: Doctrines of Revolution in the Twentieth Century. Princeton, New Jersey, D. Van Nostrand Company Inc., 1964.  Westwood, Gordon. A Minority: A Report on the Life of the Male Homosexual in Great Britain. London, Longman's Green and Co. Ltd., 1960.  Wiesel, Elie. Night. New York, Avon Books, 1969.  Willhoite, Michael. Daddy's Roommate. Boston, Alyson Publications, 1990.  Wilrich, Michael. "Uncivil Disobedience." Mother Jones. December, 1990.  Wistrich, Robert. Who's Who in Nazi Germany. New York, Bonanza Books, 1984.  Wockner, Rex. Wockner Wire, www.PlanetOut.com, November 9, 2001.  Wolff, Charlotte M.D. Magnus Hirschfeld. Quartet Books, New York, 1986.  Wren, Thomas E. "Nietzsche, Friedrich Wilhelm." Grolier Elec- tronic Publishing, 1992.  Wright, Michael Phillip. War on Heterosexuality: The Gay Patriarchy Advances. 1998.

X, Y, Z

Young, Ian. "Gay Resistance: Homosexuals in the Anti-Nazi Underground." In Leyland, Winston (Ed.). Gay Roots: Twenty Years of Gay Sunshine: An Anthology of Gay History, Sex, Politics, and Culture. San Francisco, Gay Sunshine Press, 1989.  Zentner, Christian and Bedürftig, Friedmann, The Encyclopedia of the Third Reich, New York, De Capo Press, 1997.  Ziegler, Herbert F. Nazi Germany's New Aristocracy: The SS Leadership, 1925-1939. Princeton, New Jersey, University Press, 1989.

Chapter 5

The Homintern and the Cambridge Spies

Introduction

Claire Sterling, author of the superb exposé Octopus: The Long Reach of the Sicilian Mafia, has observed that “a network is impossible to resist where imperfectly understood.”¹ Part of this understanding of networks, be it the Mafia, the Cambridge spy ring, or the 21st century Homintern in the Roman Catholic Church includes an acknowledgement that such subversive organizations do not grow “spontaneously,” but must be “directed and managed.”² To discuss such things as infiltration, subversion, spies, treason, and betrayal in the context of any subversive organization is, in the words of Father Enrique Rueda, neither “unseemly” nor “paranoid.”³

This historical overview of the Cambridge spies demonstrates how quickly Crown, State, or Church can be brought down when subversion and treason from within combines with attack from without.⁴ It not only provides an example of the development, organization, and ramifications of a subversive network, but also many concrete insights into the development and inner workings of the Homosexual International from the 1930s on. Most importantly, it provides a detailed examination of a large-scale Establishment crisis and cover-up in which homosexuality played a pivotal role in a nation’s history.

The Anatomy of Treason

A nation can survive its fools, and even the ambitious. But it cannot survive treason from within. An enemy at the gate is less formidable, for he is known and he carries his banner openly. But the traitor moves among those within the gate freely, his sly whispers rustling through all the alleys, heard in the very hall of government itself. For the traitor appears not a traitor—he speaks in accents familiar to his victims, and he wears their face and their garments, and he appeals to the baseness that lies deep in the hearts of all men. He rots the soul of a nation—he works secretly and unknown in the night to undermine the pillars of a city—he infects the body politic so that it can no longer resist. A murderer is less to be feared.⁵

Cicero 42 BC

In the realm of the profane, a traitor is defined as one who betrays his country to which he owes his allegiance by overt actions. In the realm of the sacred, the traitor is one who by deliberate acts, betrays his faith.

The motivation for treason—both secular and sacred—is generally mixed and difficult to decipher. It may include a desire for personal gain or monetary reward, or be a consequence of an illicit entanglement or former criminal action, or simply the desire to deceive and betray those for whom a violent and long-standing grudge or resentment is borne.

Although blackmail is popularly believed to be an effective means of recruiting potential traitors by enemy operatives in the secular sphere, this is usually not the case. As Alexander Orlov, a former chief of Soviet Intelligence has observed, it is a poor and dangerous strategy “to make an enemy of a man and thereafter rely on him in such a delicate and hazardous matter as an intelligence operation.”⁶ The claim of blackmail, on the other hand, is often used as an after-the-fact ploy. Convicted traitors will often attempt to “extenuate their guilt in the eyes of the jury and win as much leniency as they can from the court” by testifying that they had been forced into espionage by the threat of blackmail,” said Orlov.⁷

Since human motivation is so critical to the espionage business, the successful recruiter and network builder tends to eschew blackmail in favor of more positive means of inspiring and directing the members of his spy network. These include appeals to idealism, the lure of money, or to personal and exploitable character traits including excessive egotism, the desire for revenge or retribution.⁸ The ability to correctly assess character and motivation and to mold the members of his spy team into an effective cohesive espionage team is the mark of intelligence competence.⁹

Victor Ostrovsky, a former Mossad (Israeli Intelligence Service) agent compared the recruitment process to that of rolling a rock down a hill. “We used the word ‘ledarder’ meaning to stand on top of a hill and push a boulder down. That’s how you recruit,” he explained.¹⁰ “You take somebody and get him gradually to do something illegal or immoral. You push him down the hill. But if he’s on a pedestal, he’s not going to help you. You can’t use him. The whole purpose is to use people. But in order to use them, you have to mold them. If you have a guy who doesn’t drink, doesn’t want sex, doesn’t need money, has no political problems, and is happy with life, you can’t recruit him,” Ostrovsky said.¹¹

The Traitor as a Grievance Collector

Bradford Westerfield, an expert on espionage has claimed that, in terms of personality traits, the man who would be traitor can be defined by three primary characteristics — his “immaturity, sociopathy and narcissism.”¹²

“His self-absorption is like a dark star or a black hole — everything goes in but no light, no love, no warmth, no understanding ever comes out,” Westerfield said.¹³

In his need to preserve his “emotional virginity” and to deflect “his own guilt, blame, and responsibility,” Westerfield noted, “the traitor attributes his adverse conditions to persons or circumstances outside of himself.”¹⁴ Whatever the “actual source of his difficulties,” the traitor does not see them arising from his own actions. In this way he is able to preserve his "grandiose view of his immediate self," Westerfield said.¹⁵

The habitual mindset of a traitor has been described as one of "controlled schizophrenia."¹⁶ Not unlike the pederast priest who says Mass and immediately retires to the sacristy to sodomize an altar boy, the successful traitor needs to strictly compartmentalize his life in order to retain a sense of sanity and control and to escape detection. He must perfect the art of duplicity and concealment. He must learn to play out different roles — to constantly remake his persona. He also must have great strength of will in order to contend with the inevitable tensions that living a double or triple life brings. Failure to acquire these skills is a virtual guarantee of a mental or emotional breakdown.¹⁷

For the traitor, Westerfield said, "hatred is a powerful motivator." The traitor is a "collector" of injustices and resentments, real and imagined.¹⁸ When it is combined with an ideology like Communism that feeds on hate, the combination can be lethal. Quoting a British historian, Westerfield said that "a man is never so dangerous as when he can identify a private grievance with a matter of principle."¹⁹

This singular factor — hate — explains in part why two minority groups, notably, Jews and homosexuals, played such a significant role in a number of major United States and English spy cases during the post-1917 Bolshevik Revolution era. Both Lenin and later Stalin were able to exploit the vulnerabilities of Jews and homosexuals in advancing their dictatorships.

The Bolshevik Jews, alienated from both their own religious heritage and from Czarist Orthodox society, played a prominent role in the Bolshevik Revolution, the Communist Party, the Red Army High Command and the Soviet Cheka, the Bolshevik's secret police and primary arm of terror.

According to Zvi Y. Gitelman, author of Jewish Nationality and Soviet Politics— the Jewish Section of the CPSU, 1917-1930, "Since most Jews were not obviously devoted to the Czar, they could be expected not to support the Whites."²⁰ Also there was the matter of power. "From the Jewish point of view it was no doubt the lure of immediate physical power which attracted many Jewish youths, desirous of avenging crimes perpetrated against their people by anti-Soviet forces of all sorts," wrote Gitelman.²¹

"Whatever the reasons, Jews were heavily represented in the secret police," he said. "If you fell into their hands you would probably be shot," he continued.²² "Since the Cheka was the most hated and feared organ of the Bolshevik government, anti-Jewish feelings increased in direct proportion to the Cheka terror," said Gitelman.²³ He also reported that Lenin appreciated Jewish participation in Soviet Administration as well as the role of Jews in revolutionary activities not only in Russia, but also in other lands.²⁴

In the United States, during the decades immediately following the 1917 Revolution, investigative writers Ronald Radosh and Joyce Milton, authors of The Rosenberg File— A Search for the Truth, wrote that many Jewish intellectuals and scientists, were drawn into the spy game by their admiration for the Soviet social experiment that had made “anti-Semitism” a crime against the state.²⁵ Radosh and Milton cited convicted Soviet spies Julius and Ethel Rosenberg as “thoroughgoing ideologues,” and Ethel Rosenberg, in particular, as a “practical hater” filled with “vengeance.”²⁶

Like the Bolshevik Jews, leaders of the emerging Homintern in Europe and in the United States were filled with the same revolutionary zeal for a utopian New Order that would no longer discriminate against homosexuals. Both groups used the clenched fist as a symbol of “liberation” except that whereas the Communist raised his fist in the air, the members of the Homintern drove it into the rectum as a symbol of their rebellion.²⁷ The Comintern and the Homintern also shared a common hatred for God, for Christianity, indeed all legitimate power. Like their Jewish counterparts, Communist homosexuals were willing to take a risk because they believe that they had nothing to lose.

Treason is a deviant act.²⁸ So is sodomy. Historically speaking, there has always been a traditional association between sexual deviancy and heresy and treason.²⁹ And while it is true that not all homosexuals are traitors or radical Socialists, nevertheless the traitor and the homosexual do share common traits.

The personality profile of a homosexual closely fits Westerfields’ personality profile of a traitor — he is immature, neurotic, and narcissistic. The active homosexual is an artful seducer, a natural recruiter and a proselytizer for “the cause.” He is a predator skilled in evaluating the vulnerability of his prey. He is conditioned to acts of duplicity and split loyalties. He lives a compartmentalized life with contacts to the criminal underworld via illicit drugs, pornography, prostitution, and possible blackmail and violence. The homosexual is a gatherer of “injustices” and Marxism offers him “the attraction of a secret shrine of individual rebellion.”³⁰ It is this desire to strike back against a society that has rejected him, rather than the threat of blackmail that lures the homosexual into the enemy’s espionage net.³¹ The homosexual believes himself to be an “outsider,” who like the spy, wants to come in from the cold, but feels he cannot.

The Dutch psychologist, Gerard J. M. van den Aardweg, Ph.D., summarized the homosexual’s propensity for subversion thusly: “Subversiveness is not rare in homosexuals, as it is the hostility coming from the complex of not belonging. For that reason, avowed homosexuals may be unreliable elements in any group or organization.”³² They desire an unreal utopian world, said van den Aardweg. One that is “superior,” snobbish, more “chic,” full of “thrill and adventure” in comparison to “the ordinary world,” he reported.³³

The Espionage Business

Gathering intelligence on foreign governments including their secret offensive and defensive powers and plans, and keeping the actual or potential enemy state from discovering its national secrets has been the common goal of all national secret services since time immemorial. Traditionally, European powers relied on selected princes of the Roman Catholic Church to organize their secret services since no single nation was able to compete with the most widespread and efficient espionage system in the world.³⁴

For example, in 17th century France, acting under a request to the Holy See by King Louis XIII, Cardinal Richelieu aided by a Capuchin priest, Francois le Clerc du Tremblay, created a vast internal and external intelligence service that rivaled that of France's arch rival, England, and catapulted France into a first-class world power.³⁵

Although the objectives of modern day national secret services has changed little from the days of Richelieu, the means by which these objectives are secured and information processed has changed dramatically and vary widely from country to country. During the first half of the 20th century, the United States, and the West in general, based their doctrine of intelligence primarily on research and information gathered from "open sources," whereas the Soviets and Eastern Bloc depended more on a "cloak and dagger" approach in which intelligence is gathered from secret sources using a vast network of spies, informers, and undercover agents to ferret out highly classified documents and raw data and to lure potential traitors into their service.

By the early 1920s, the intelligence services of key Western European powers including England and France, were alerted to the fact that the Bolsheviks, in addition to building up the Cheka, their internal secret police used to combat "counter-revolutionary" activities and sabotage at home, were also planning a new and vast international espionage network.

In early 1918, Communist chief Vladimir Lenin, put the Cheka, into the hands of Felix Edmundovich Dzerzhinsky, considered to be the father of modern Soviet espionage. Although the name of Soviet intelligence services has changed over the years from the Cheka to the GPU (State Political Administration, 1922-1923), to the OGPU (Unified State Political Directorate, 1923-1934) to the NKVD (People's Commissariat for Internal Affairs, 1934-1946) to the MD (Ministry of Internal Affairs 1946-1954), and finally to the KGB (Committee for State Security) that was supplemented by the GRU (Chief Intelligence Directorate of the General Staff) in 1954, Soviet espionage agents are still known to Soviet citizens as Chekists.³⁶ Following the death of Dzerzhinsky in 1926, Lenin's heir to terror, Josef Stalin, made the newly expanded Soviet secret police the instrument of his absolute power over the Russian people.

In terms of foreign espionage, during the early 1920's, Soviet intelligence operations designed to foment World Revolution were routinely centered in Soviet embassies. Gradually, however, Stalin began to replace this highly vulnerable system with a more sophisticated network of Soviet agents headed by resident directors who had no connections to the Soviet Union's formal diplomatic staff abroad and who operated under orders directly from Moscow. Labour unions, universities, industrial centers and liberal political and cultural institutions in the United States and in Europe were the primary targets of Communist infiltration and control. For example, in England, the Trotskyists and Communists posed as Socialists and heavily infiltrated the Labour Party. Even the Tories were not immune from infiltration. The NKVD was also able to use the Comintern intelligence apparatus in Britain to recruit civil servants from the governmental bureaucracy at Whitehall, including members of the "permanent secretaries" club of heads of the Department of State."³⁷

During the late 1920s and early 1930s, as Stalin was methodically planning his Great Terror at home in the form of massive political, military, economic and agricultural purges that cost an estimated 20 million Russian lives, he also embarked upon a vastly expanded espionage program designed to secure diplomatic, military, industrial and scientific intelligence from the West.³⁸

Stalin ordered that Soviet-controlled long-term "sleepers" and "moles" be placed in secret service agencies, high government posts and key university and scientific centers throughout the West. His strategy proved deadly successful especially against British Intelligence Services and the United States' Office of Strategic Services (OSS) and later the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) and the National Security Agency (NSA).³⁹

As espionage writers Phillip Knightley, Bruce Page, and David Leitch, have pointed out, "A penetrated secret service is not just a bad one; it is an appalling liability."⁴⁰ "For at least ten years, a charitable estimate, the British Secret Service in areas of diplomacy, economics and strategic defense were the blind leading the blind; operations were forfeited; officers compromised; agents shot, imprisoned or forced to become channels of misleading information, i.e., disinformation," they charged.⁴¹

The fact, that by 1932, Stalin had already set a course of covert warfare against the West, well in advance of the onset of World War II, supports the theory put forth by historians such as Professor Ernst Topitsch of the University of Graz in Austria, that the Soviet dictator used the war as a part of the Soviet long-term strategy for the subjugation and destruction on the non-Communist world, that is to say, the Second World War was essentially Stalin's war not Hitler's.⁴²

A Soviet Hook for Everyone

Stalin honed Soviet espionage into an exacting science with a "hook" tailor-made for an exact fit of every potential target of recruitment.

In terms of diplomatic intelligence, the principle sources of State secrets were foreign diplomats, ambassadors, staff members of foreign ministries including code clerks and secretaries, members of parliaments and ambitious politicians who in their quest for power sought financial aid and support from the liberal establishment.⁴³

Foreign Office departmental heads were of particular value because they were able to supply the Soviets with confidential documents of the secret policies and strategies of multiple foreign governments. The greatest Soviet prize, however, was the hooking of a high level diplomat or ambassador who, in addition to being privy to important foreign policy decisions, could be used by the Soviets as a Judas-goat to attract other recruits, or as an "agent of influence" as well as a vehicle for disinformation.⁴⁴

Soviet intelligence offices kept detailed life histories of potential recruits in the diplomatic field that included background information on their character traits and temperament, family life, schooling, religion, finances, associations, ideology, politics, and sexual habits and vices.⁴⁵ Since diplomatic posts including those of the United States and Europe as well as the Vatican, have traditionally attracted an inordinate number of male perverts, the Soviets found that in the case of homosexual diplomats, blackmail was worth the extra risk and expense.⁴⁶

Interestingly, even when a Soviet agent failed to hook homosexual diplomats with a threat of blackmail or exposure, his illegal overtures were rarely reported to the authorities by the compromised diplomat or ambassador, since the latter was unwilling to expose his own illicit sexual habits.⁴⁷

Significantly, in sharp contrast to the Soviets who were quick to appreciate and exploit the traditional blackmail potential of homosexuality, British intelligence services were not. Active homosexuality, as we shall see, was not an automatic disqualification for either intelligence work or high civil service positions in England between 1939 and 1945. Even in 1948, when the exclusion policy of positive vetting of known homosexuals was put into effect by England's national security agencies, it was never fully enforced. No middle class intelligence employee was likely to jeopardize his job by questioning the moral qualifications of upper-class civil service and intelligence applicants who, by reason of birth or wealth, were automatically granted the choicest of governmental appointments as well as rapid upward career mobility. Even if a whistle-blower was willing to risk his job by blackballing an upper-class bugger as a security risk, his recommendation could be over-ridden by his superior or by Whitehall. This was one reason why once the Soviets had established their "rich-boys" spy-mole network at Oxbridge, the numerous Marxist cells were able to wreak so much havoc on Britain's (and America's) intelligence services.⁴⁸

When it came to gathering intelligence of a scientific nature, the Soviets found that flattery and the promise of greater power and influence was a more powerful hook than sex. As English writer Rebecca West has pointed out in her many excellent works on the subject of treason, prominent foreign scientists were lavishly wine and dine and treated with a feigned deference by Stalin.⁴⁹

In connection with the cases of convicted atomic scientists and Soviet agents Alan Nunn May and Klaus Fuchs, West noted, that "Little can be said in defense of this policy of trying the criminal in a manner which concealed the nature of the crime from the public which had suffered from it. It helped the Communists, enabling them to present the scientist Communist spies as starry-eyed altruists who imparted secrets to other powers just because they were scientists and wanted their fellow scientists to have the benefit of their own discoveries, and were so unworldly that they did not know that they were doing any harm, and hardly knew what ideologies were about. This was the picture the world got and it was as untrue."⁵⁰

May was a well-known Marxist and a radical member of the Cambridge branch of the Union of Scientific Workers and Klaus Fuchs who betrayed atomic secrets directly to the Soviets was a long-time Marxist ideologue who was deep into the Communist network, said West.⁵¹ These men had an exaggerated sense of their own importance and power, she said, because their knowledge was tied to weapons of mass destruction and therefore people could be blackmailed into submission.⁵² Their uniform defense, that "science is reason, therefore it cannot know treason," and that "scientists can do no harm because they are scientists and science is right," she concluded, was patently false and subversive to truth and to the nation.⁵³

"Sexpionage"—The Soviet Honey and Drone Trap

The linking of sex with spying goes back to biblical times, but Stalin honed sexual entrapment into an art form. The Soviet sex hook proved particularly valuable in connection with securing military, national defense and political intelligence, and as a weapon to bring down political opponents of the Soviet Union.

In his 1976 exposé, Sexpionage—The Exploitation of Sex by Soviet Intelligence, David Lewis described the complex, costly and utterly dehumanizing training of Soviet "swallows" (female agents) and "ravens" (male agents) who were generally recruited by the KGB from respectable, middle class families and had professional backgrounds.⁵⁴

In addition to basic ideological, political and technical training, the sex agents were subject to a thorough process of sexual desensitization prior to their formal instruction in all forms of sex acts including homosexuality and sadomasochism.

Lewis reported that the Soviets kept a large stable of homosexuals as full-time agents whose varied targets included foreign diplomats and tourists.⁵⁵ These men were usually young male prostitutes who were given a "choice" of working for the KGB or being imprisoned.⁵⁶ According to a "graduate" Lewis interviewed from the Verkhonoye sex center near Kazan who used the name "Dimitri," these homosexual prostitutes were exceedingly handsome and some were "very young."⁵⁷ They were kept separate from the other KGB recruits, he said. "They seemed to suffer a great deal from the dehumanizing training methods, and two of them committed suicide during my stay there," Dimitri told Lewis.⁵⁸

In 2001, Jamie Glazov, FrontPage Magazine's managing editor, revealed one of the Soviet's most innovative homosexual sting operations.

The Soviet target was John Watkins, Canadian ambassador to the Soviet Union from 1954 to 1956.⁵⁹ Glazov reported that during his assignment in Moscow, Watkins, a homosexual with known Marxist sympathies, routinely sought out anonymous sex partners. One of his Russian acquaintances named Alyosha, an employee of the Soviet Foreign Ministry with whom Watkins formed a close friendship was none other than the famed KGB spy recruiter Oleg Gribanov, whose legendary success at homosexual entrapments had secured virtually all of NATO's classified documents for the Soviet Union.⁶⁰

According to Glazov, while posing as Watkin's friend, Gribanov set up the hapless ambassador with a KGB plant in a Moscow hotel. The two men were captured on film in flagrante delicto. Gribanov promised to run interference for Watkins if the ambassador could bring himself to "warm up" to the Soviet ambassador to Canada, Dimitri Chuvakhin, when he returned to Ottawa that spring. When Watkins completed his posting and returned to Canada, he made no effort to inform the authorities that he was being blackmailed. He was offered the job of Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs and there he remained until his retirement, said Glazov.

In the meantime, in the United States, between 1961 and 1964, no less than three high-ranking Soviet defectors informed the CIA that a homosexual Canadian ambassador to Moscow was being blackmailed by the Soviets. In August 1964, after an investigation of suspected candidates, Canadian officials ordered the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to hoof over to the Watkins' residence and pick him up for questioning. During the RCMP interrogation Watkins was reported to have suffered a fatal heart attack which brought a quick and tidy end to the distasteful affair. It remains unclear, whether Watkins did or did not act as an "agent of influence" for the Soviets before his untimely death. For the record, as reported by Glazov, the new Canadian Ambassador to Moscow, David Johnson, who replaced Watkins, was also reported to be a homosexual.⁶¹

It was the Soviet's experience, however, that many of their most successful homosexual traitors recruited from the West needed no elaborate sexponage scheme to induce them to treachery.

British and American Intelligence Services

As we have already observed from England's attempts at penetration of Catholic seminaries in France during the Elizabethan period, the English were not slouches when it came to spying and intelligence gathering.

By the late 1700s, the beginning of a formal structure for Britain's secret service was set into motion with the creation of a Home Office and Foreign Office within the Department of State. In the decades that followed, Britain's vast complex of foreign embassies provided the cover for an expanded secret service abroad and a domestic service that specialized in code breaking and infiltration of enemy intelligence services especially those of Russia and Bismarck's Prussia.

Britain's modern Secret Intelligence Service (SIS) known as MI6, was founded in 1909. It was attached to the Foreign Office and directed British espionage work abroad. During the First World War, it concentrated on the infiltration of Germany's espionage units. After the war, the SIS was instrumental in assisting the United States in developing its own intelligence network. The British and the United States also entered into a secret agreement for sharing counterintelligence information which later gave Stalin another major avenue of intelligence gathering especially in relationship to the development of the atom bomb.

One of the SIS' most valuable anti-Soviet operations was the 1927 raid on the London offices of the All Russia Cooperative Society Ltd., (ARCOS), the Russian trade delegation, from which the British secured thousands of secret documents on Communist activities and agents in England.

The raid was staged by MI5, the British Security Service attached to the Home Office and dealt primarily with homeland security including the capture of foreign spies, terrorists and insurgents on English soil. Its nuts and bolts activities included the maintenance of a Central Registry for tracking suspected enemy agents and a specialized intelligence Black List. Other specialized subsidiary intelligence units existed both within and without the framework of MI5 and MI6 including the famous Government Code & Cypher School, that broke the German code (ULTRA) during the Second World War.

In 1941, the British created an ultra-secret security division that operated in the Western hemisphere, British Security Coordination (BSC), as a legal cover for all of its other intelligence units including MI5 and MI6, Special Operations Executive (SOE) and the Political Warfare Executive.⁶²

The structure of United States domestic and foreign intelligence services closely mirrored that of the British system. Up until the end of the First World War, the responsibilities for gathering and interpreting enemy diplomatic, military and political secrets were divided between the State Department with its systems of foreign attachés and embassies, and the military intelligence services of the Armed Forces that included the Office of Naval Intelligence (ONI) and G-2, the War Department's Military Intelligence Division. During World War I, both the Army and the Navy had established separate offices to decipher and read foreign and enemy communications. In 1920, the American military intelligence secret cryptologic section known as the "Black Chamber," broke the Japanese diplomatic cipher, a major espionage achievement. However, Secretary of State, Henry L. Stimson, shut the code-crackers down in 1929 with the admonition that "gentlemen do not read each other's mail."⁶³

On July 11, 1941, in an effort to reduce the growing friction and competition between the various United States intelligence sectors, President Franklin D. Roosevelt appointed William "Wild Bill" Donovan as the coordinator to a new centralized, civilian wartime agency, the Office of Information modeled after the British SIS and based at the White House. Donovan was a Columbia Law School graduate, a World War I hero and a member of the liberal Eastern Establishment from which he drew much of the OSS leadership. The Office of the Coordinator of Information (COI) was charged with intelligence gathering and assimilation of matters touching upon national security. COI opened its London office in November 1941.

In June, 1942, Donovan's COI underwent a major reorganization. Its staff and budget was divided into two sectors — an Office of Strategic Services (OSS) directed by Donovan, but placed under the office of the Joint Chiefs of Staff (JCS) with its own overseas counterintelligence secret service (X-2), and the Foreign Information Service (FIS) that was placed under Roosevelt's direct supervision at the newly created Office of War Information.

The overall purpose of the OSS was to support military operations in the field by providing research, propaganda, and commando support. Donovan filled the OSS' Research and Analysis Branch (R&A) with well-known elite members of the Eastern Establishment, while the Special Operations Branch (SO) that ran paramilitary and psychological warfare operations in Europe and Asia represented a more multi-talented, multinational force that assisted Allied and partisan forces during World War II. The OSS also established a Secret Intelligence Branch (SI) under Princeton-educated SI station chief, Allen W. Dulles, who operated out of the American Embassy in Bern, Switzerland.

Professional military intelligence officers convinced Roosevelt that General Donovan and his OSS should be denied access to top secret Allied deciphered communications from Japan using the decoder system nicknamed MAGIC as well as decoded messages from Germany using ULTRA. However the OSS' counterintelligence branch, X-2 which shared its intelligence with British SIS, did have access to German ULTRA intelligence. This proved to be a fatal error.

By the end of World War II, the OSS dubbed "Oh So Social" by its critics, had been infiltrated by at least 15 Soviet spies as well as other criminal elements from the Sicilian Mafia which meant that not only was the OSS an expensive, internally-corrupted and ineffectual “secret service,” it also became a dangerous source of Soviet disinformation and of post-war infiltration by Soviet agents. In short, the OSS was the most deeply penetrated of the United States intelligence services. None had so many Soviet moles as the OSS.⁶⁴

On October 1, 1945, under the Truman Administration, the OSS was officially dissolved. Its R&A sector was transferred to the State Department and all other OSS branches including Secret Intelligence and X-2 were absorbed by the War Department. Two years later, Truman, with the approval of Congress, authorized the creation of the Central Intelligence Group (CIG), later renamed the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), under the National Security Act of 1947. Like the OSS, the key posts of the CIA were filled by academics and politicians with all the proper Eastern Establishment credentials — a veritable Old Boys Club not unlike that which spawned the Cambridge spies.⁶⁵

Domestic counterintelligence, however, remained the task of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) headed by J. Edgar Hoover, the ONI and G-2.

The Genesis of the Cambridge Spy Ring

It has been reported by various Soviet defectors to the United States and England, that when Ivan Maisky, the Soviet Ambassador to Great Britain initially proposed the novel concept of recruiting young English radical upper-class highfliers as Soviet intelligence agents before they entered the corridors of power, both Stalin and Lavrenti Beria, head of the NKVD, were skeptical that such a plan could work.⁶⁶

When they learned that many of these potential recruits were confirmed pederasts and homosexuals they were even more incredulous. However, since the GRU was already well established in London and legal and illegal residents were in place to serve as controllers, Stalin gave the go ahead to Soviet Foreign Ministry officials to set the plan in motion. The year was 1932. Soviet intelligence under Comintern cover began the process of identifying, cultivating, evaluating and ultimately recruiting liberal-minded, anti-Fascist candidates from Oxbridge.

Much to the Soviets’ amazement, the scheme worked like magic. It appeared that Cambridge and to a lesser extent Oxford, Britain’s two senior university centers were already well primed to become the epicenters of the greatest Soviet espionage success of the 20th century.⁶⁷

For more than a century, the religious beliefs of faculty and students at England’s premier educational institutions had been undermined by Oxbridge’s literary and intellectual elite. Christian morals had succumbed to the aggressive assault of neo-pagan Hellenism. The few remaining loyal servants of the King’s religion found they could no longer even defend what little was left of the emasculated religious beliefs they had settled for against the rising tide of Modernism in its own clerical and secular ranks.

The British satirist, George Orwell (Eric Blair) once observed:

Culturally ...the English intelligentsia are Europeanized. They take their cookery from Paris and their opinions from Moscow. In the general patriotism of the country they form a sort of island of dissident thought. England is perhaps the only great country whose intellectuals are ashamed of their nationality. In Marxist circles it is always felt that there is something slightly disgraceful in being an Englishman and that it is a duty to snigger at every English institution, from horse racing to suet puddings. It is a strange fact, but it is unquestionably true that almost any English intellectual would feel more shamed of standing to attention during "God save the King" than of stealing from a poor box."⁶⁸

The 1930s recruitment of liberal-minded intellectuals and scientists at Oxbridge as "sleeper" agents represented the final phase of subversion by the Soviets that had begun decades earlier with attacks on England's class system and the penetration of Britain's trade unions and Labour Movement. Communists "sold the sizzle" to Oxbridge's young idealists, that is, the idea of making the world safe from the menace of Fascism. However, Marxism found it difficult to compete with the popular Fabian Socialists, the more genteel of the collectivist movements.

On campus, avowed Communists including economics dons like Maurice Dobb who helped found the Cambridge Communist Cell, Piero Sraffa, an associate of the Italian Communist leader Antonio Gramsci, and Roy Pascal, Professor of German at Cambridge, brought a generation of Oxbridge radical undergraduates into the Soviet's orbit of influence.

The Marxists were also aided and abetted by a vast network of quasi-Masonic secret societies that pervaded upper class Britain as a whole and Oxbridge in particular. The most famous and exclusive of these secret campus societies was Cambridge's "Conversazione Society" known simply as "the Society," and its members as "Apostles."

The Apostles, Homosexuality, and Marxism

The Conversation Society based at King's College began in 1820 as a small, private club of Cambridge undergraduates founded by George Tomlinson from St. John's College. Tomlinson later became Bishop of Gibraltar.⁶⁹ The all male, 12-member society gathered every Saturday night to discuss the philosophical issues of the day within the anti-authoritarian context of the liberal Broad Church Movement that had found an uneasy home in the Anglican Church.⁷⁰

Among the earliest "Apostles" were the young Victorian poet Alfred (later Lord) Tennyson (1809-1892) and his dearest friend Arthur Henry Hallam (1811-1833). Conspicuous by their absence were undergraduates who excelled in the scientific field, since by the 19th century the "two cultures" of the sciences and the arts had decided to go their separate ways.⁷¹

By mid-century, the Apostles had developed into an elite secret society with heavy homoerotic undertones, a distinctively aggressive agnostic flavor, and politics that were decidedly liberal and pacifistic. According to Richard Deacon, author of The Cambridge Apostles, their agenda embraced “the laicization of the University and the abolition of religious tests for undergraduates and graduates.”⁷² Spiritual rot was afoot. Deacon also reported that members like William Johnson (Cory), Lord Rosebery’s tutor, had already taken to recruiting other active homosexuals into the New Order.⁷³

Understandably, since homosexuality as well as agnosticism and atheism and anti-imperialistic sentiments were generally unwelcome in Victorian life and an obstacle to career advancement, the growing emphasis on secretiveness was both logical and necessary.

According to Andrew Sinclair, another expert on the Apostles, the Society was a kind of “Cambridge Mafia...all members when accepted into the Society, had to swear a fearful oath that their souls would writhe in unendurable pain for all eternity if they were to betray the society to anyone not a member.”⁷⁴

For many of its socially alienated members, the Society functioned more as a family than an organization — a place where these perpetually adolescent “misfits,” in love with their own sense of superiority and importance, didn’t have to worry about competing in the real world for either women or commercial jobs or social position.⁷⁵

By the turn of the century, members with decidedly pederastic desires such as the congenital bachelor Goldsworthy Lowes Dickinson, a well-known disciple of “Socratic love,” were recruiting qualified “embryos” based less on their intellectual qualifications than on their good looks and physical attributes.⁷⁶ The new “High Church” of the Apostles now aggressively warred against Christianity. It boasted its own line of “Apostolic succession” and mystical hierarchy as well as its own dogma, religious services, and blessings, all of which served to mock Christian doctrine and the Sacraments.⁷⁷ It replaced Sacred Scripture with a new “bible” that touted the virtues of the “Higher Sodomy.”⁷⁸ The fact that a significant number of Apostles engaged in sexually criminal behavior buttressed their sense of mutual dependency and loyalty toward one another not merely during their university years, but for a lifetime.

The Bloomsbury Connection

It would be impossible to understand the inner workings of the Apostles and the Society’s connection to the Cambridge spy organization without at least a brief reference to the Bloomsbury Group to which many of its most influential members were intimately tied. This exclusive and influential cultural coterie developed out of a series of friendships between the well-to-do literary and artistic Stephen children — Vanessa, Virginia, Julian Thoby and Adrian — and their Cambridge friends that included such prominent Apostles as John Maynard Keynes, Lytton Strachey, Duncan Grant, and E. M. Forster.⁷⁹ Novelist D. H. Lawrence's pointed description of "Bloomsberries" as "little swarming selves" reflected the self-absorbed, queer character of the group that held court on Thursday evenings at the Stephen residence at 46, Gordon Square in the bohemian Bloomsbury section of London.⁸⁰

Bloomsberries were agnostic, politically liberal, pacifist and sexually liberated. Sexual partnerings were of primary importance within the closed Bloomsbury collective. All affairs, homosexual, bisexual and heterosexual, were in a constant state of flux and reconfiguration.

For example, Vanessa Stephen was married to the wealthy coal heir Clive Bell, but had a child by the handsome Scottish-born painter artist Duncan Grant who was attracted to Vanessa's brother Adrian, but who also had a string of homosexual affairs with fellow Apostles Keynes and Strachey who had been engaged in a bitter tug-of-war over the Society's new acquisition Arthur Lee Hobhouse, who had fallen head over heels in love with Grant, who later formed a menage-a-trois with Vanessa and Grant's new lover, David Garnett.

When World War I began and young eligible men became in short supply, some of the Apostle-Bloomsbury "buggers," as Virginia Stephen Woolf used to call them, began to console themselves with female companions and a few even discovered "the joys of domesticity."⁸¹ For instance, the outrageously promiscuous Keynes, whom the jealous Strachey once referred to as "safety-bicycle with genitals," later in life, fell in love with, and much to the alarm of his fellow Apostles and Bloomsberries, actually married, and successfully so, Lydia Lopokova, one of the greatest dancers of Diaghilev's Russian ballet.⁸²

Given the overall importance and great influences of the Apostles and their Bloomsbury intimates on Cambridge university life in the late 1920s and early 1930s, it was logical that the NKVD's efforts at recruiting rich upper-class young men for their expanded spy ring at Cambridge would have included plans to exploit both groups.

As related by Andrew Sinclair in The Red and the Blue—Cambridge, Treason and Intelligence, the actual take-over of the Apostles by the Soviets proved to be a relatively uncomplicated operation. By the late 1920s, "the affinity for Marxism" had become as important a requirement for membership in the secret society "as good looks and intelligence."⁸³ Sinclair reported that of the 26 Apostles elected between 1927 and 1937, 20 of them, that is 75% of the new membership "were either Socialists, Marxist sympathizers, Marxists, or committed Communists." "This in a student body that was no more than a fraction of one percent Marxist," he emphasized.⁸⁴

The active hostility of the Bloomsbury Apostles toward Christianity and traditional morality and their clandestine network of criminal and illicit sex, when combined with the equally forbidden and subversive agenda of Marxist World Revolution, made for an explosive mix, that when fully activated, would prove a deadly one for the British nation.

Anthony Blunt— A Treasonable Life

On May 5, 1928, the first man of the Cambridge Ring of Five, 19-year-old Trinity undergraduate Anthony Frederick Blunt was accepted into the inner sanctum of the Society as Apostle no. 273.⁸⁵ Blunt's immediate predecessors in the "Apostolic line" of the Society were Alister Watson and Philip Dennis Proctor, both of whom either were or became Soviet agents.⁸⁶ In the fall of 1928, the enthusiastic Marxist revolutionary, Julian Bell, Vanessa and Clive's son, followed his lover Blunt into the Society. Julian, who was killed in the Spanish Civil War, was not a particularly attractive young youth, but the short-lived affair gave Blunt an entrée into the art and homosexual world of the Bloomsbury Group, that is to say, Julian proved useful to Blunt, and "useful" people were Blunt's forte.

Anthony Blunt was born on September 26, 1907, in the small provincial town of Bournemouth, Hampshire into an affluent upper middle class family with strong roots to the Church of England. Blunt's fraternal grandfather had been Suffragan Bishop of Hull. His father, Reverend Arthur Stanley Vaughan Blunt, also a well-known Anglican cleric, was appointed chaplain in 1912 to St. Michael's, the British Embassy church in Paris where Sir Francis Bertie was serving as Britain's ambassador.⁸⁷ It was in Paris that young Anthony was first exposed to his lifelong passion of French Renaissance art.

According to Miranda Carter, one of Blunt's more contemporary biographers, the young boy's claim to fame came from the maternal side of the family tree. His mother, Hilda Violet Master Blunt, of the 16th century landed-gentry Masters of Barrow Green, was second cousin to the Earl of Strathmore, the father of the future Queen Elizabeth II.⁸⁸

In the Blunt family constellation, "little Anthony" was the runt of the litter and his mother's favorite, said Carter. Hilda doted on her very bright, pretty, blue-eyed son whose "delicate" health demanded extra solicitous care and attention. Anthony in turn formed a life-long attachment to his oldest brother, Wilfred, with whom he shared a nascent "artistic temperament" and attachment. This left middle brother Christopher out in the cold, said Carter.⁸⁹

As each Blunt boy reached boarding school age, he was sent back to England to receive his education at Marlborough, one of Britain's "Great Schools" that catered to the sons of clergymen.⁹⁰ Anthony arrived at the prestigious public school in January 1921 at the age of 14 thoroughly prepared to light up the school with his academic brilliance and sense of noblesse oblige. Alas! It was a rude awakening for the young man to discover that at Marlborough, athletics were all, and he was neither physically or temperamentally inclined toward organized sports. Further, upper-classmen who served as prefects ruled over all aspects of campus life.

Robert Cecil, a former classmate of Blunt's reported that young Blunt was able to beat the system by catering to the sexual needs of senior boys and prefects.⁹¹ Cecil's statement was backed up by other former Marlborough, boys including academic John Hilton who noted that by his senior year, Blunt had had a number of serious homosexual affairs and a stable of favorites who were sometimes referred to as the "Elect."⁹² Hilton along with Blunt and the future poet Louis MacNeice, another cleric's son, formed a "Wildean aesthetic" trio behind which the lads were able to disguise their rejection of their religious heritage.⁹³ Hilton described Anthony in his later years at Marlborough as "an austere hedonist...living for gratification of the senses, with an eye for social esteem and seeking anchorage in a system of scholarly detail."⁹⁴ Young Anthony was apparently a rebel with a cause at a relatively young age.

Some contemporaries recalled that Blunt was notorious for his vindictiveness and personal vendettas. Others recall his reptilian coldness. All agreed that he was exceedingly conceited about his intellectual abilities which, in fact, were very good. There is one word that never appeared on the lips of Blunt's friends, of which there were a few, or foes when describing his character — that word was "kind." Blunt was a totally self-absorbed, selfish individual.

In October 1926, Blunt entered Trinity College, Cambridge on a Marlborough scholarship. When his efforts to gain honors in Mathematics failed, he switched to Modern Languages with a specialty in French.⁹⁵ In the meantime his interest in art grew apace, although here he met with another source of frustration. Blunt was very intelligent, but, according to Art Master Christopher Hughes, "he had little artistic ability himself."⁹⁶ The creatively impotent Blunt soothed his wounded ego by later becoming an art historian, critic and cultural revolutionary.

One of Blunt's closest friends was Knox Cunningham (later Sir) who attended Fettes Clare College in Cambridge. Cunningham, was to later go on to a distinguished political career in Parliament and served as Private Secretary to Prime Minister Harold Macmillan from 1959 to 1963. He also held important positions in the Orange Order and the Masonic Province of Gloucester as well as various Ulster Unionist posts in Northern Ireland. According to Irish-born bisexual writer and full-time gossip, Robin Bryans (pseudonym Robert Harbinson) who became part of London's up-scale homosexual clique in the mid-1940s, Cunningham was known as a "muffle queen" who liked to be "screwed by young boys."⁹⁷ Bryans said that Cunningham remained in contact with Blunt after his Cambridge years and later became a frequent visitor to Blunt's London home.⁹⁸

By 1928, Blunt's connections to Bloomsbury's art critics Clive Bell and Roger Fry, and to Trinity don and art authority Andrew Gow gave him an entrée into London's prestigious art circles.⁹⁹ At the same time, his membership in the Apostles gave him access to Cambridge's most influential secret society and homosexual network.¹⁰⁰ That Blunt was also a confirmed Marxist by this time has been confirmed by a number of reliable sources including Louis MacNeice.¹⁰¹

In 1932, Blunt was elected a Trinity fellow. He remained on campus where he tutored in French and began to carve out a career in art history with a special passion for the work of Nicolas Poussin.

Somewhere between 1933 and 1934, either before, during, or immediately after an academic "tour" of Moscow, Blunt was officially recruited as a paid Soviet agent.¹⁰² He was given the Code Names YAN, JOHNSON, and TONY.¹⁰³

It remains somewhat of an irony that, had Blunt ventured out of his down-town Moscow hotel to engage in a little "cottaging," during his trip, he might have noticed that the sexual pickings were rather lean except, of course, for KGB-trained male "ravens" who regularly monitored public urinals and other haunts frequented by foreigner homosexuals. This dearth of available young Moscovites was due to the fact that in early 1933 Stalin had given the OGPU (political police) permission to begin a round-up of Moscow homosexuals who were shipped for use as slave labor to prison "workcamps" like that at the "Third Watershed" on the Baltic-White Canal that housed about 3,000 Moscow homosexuals.¹⁰⁴

There is no evidence, however, that Blunt ever expressed any objection to Stalin's purges of sodomites in Moscow once the news became public knowledge to London's homosexual underground. Nor that Soviet sexual entrapment either in Moscow, London or Cambridge ever played a role in inducing Blunt to betray his country. He did it out of sheer pleasure.

Thanks to his many influential patrons and close friends including the trend-setting socialite Victor Rothschild, Blunt's influence in the art field grew. From 1937 to 1939 he worked on the staff of the Warburg Institute of the University of London, a "progressive" and "revolutionary" art research center, and produced his first book on Renaissance art, Artistic Theory in Italy, 1450-1600 which was dedicated to his dear friend, Guy Burgess.¹⁰⁵

According to Charles Saumarez Smith, a book reviewer for The Observer, among Blunt's severest critics was Rebecca West who knew Blunt in the 1930s, and "regarded him then as intellectually lightweight, a known Communist, always sporting a red tie and frequently drunk."¹⁰⁶

When England entered the Second World War, Blunt volunteered to serve in the British Army, was commissioned an officer, served briefly in the Military Security Police in Military Intelligence and then was ordered by the Soviets to join MI5, the British Security Service.¹⁰⁷

It should be noted that prior to Blunt's entry into MI5, he had used the influence of his brother, Christopher, to enter Minley Manor in Hampshire to take an Army staff college course on counter-intelligence. His commander at that time was Colonel Shearer who told Blunt that he had received orders from the War Office in London that Blunt was not to be assigned to intelligence work.¹⁰⁸ However, the departmental recommendation was overridden when a highly placed senior civil servant intervened on his behalf. The Ministerial official was none other than Dennis Proctor (later Sir), an Apostle and Soviet agent, who served as private secretary to former Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin.¹⁰⁹ Blunt also got assistance from Victor Rothschild who was working for MI5 and Guy Burgess who was assigned to Section D of MI6.¹¹⁰

Captain Maxwell Knight, a homosexual, who joined MI5 in 1925, warned MI5 officials about that "bugger" Blunt, but his lone voice was ignored. Unfortunately, Knight was never far out of the woods himself given his occult connections to Satanist Aleister Crowley.¹¹¹ Knight was also personally compromised by his passionate obsession with Tom Driberg (Lord Bradwell), a lover of Burgess and MP, who served the Soviets as a paid agent for 12 years.¹¹²

Tom Driberg's "arrangement" with the Soviets went way back when he solicited sex from a man at a public urinal on one of his visits to Moscow. The man turned out to be a KGB agent of the SCD second Chief Directorate.¹¹³ After Driberg was confronted with photographs of his sex acts with the Soviet "raven," he started to serve Moscow using the Code Name AGENT ORANGE. The Soviets used Driberg to gather political intelligence on the Labour Party and to promote active measures in political circles within his sphere of influence.¹¹⁴ The KGB also had photographs of Driberg engaging in homosex with Guy Burgess.¹¹⁵

During the five or so intervening years between his recruitment and his activation by his Soviet controller in 1939, Blunt had already proven to be a valuable "spotter" and recruiter for the Soviets, although, contrary to popular opinion, he did not recruit the three other known members of the Cambridge team—Guy Burgess, Donald Maclean, or Harold "Kim" Philby.

Despite his increased professional responsibilities as a double agent, Blunt managed to carry-on a satisfactory and relatively open sex life that included a string of affairs with other Cambridge homosexuals of his own class including John Lehmann, an Etonian who became a Soviet underground courier, and Blunt's long-time lover, Peter Montgomery, second cousin of British World War II hero Field Marshall Montgomery. Peter Montgomery became a musical director at the BBC and later a wartime army-intelligence staff officer. The reader may want to put a mental check mark after his name as we shall be revisiting Peter Montgomery, and his brother, Hugh, again in greater depth at the end of this chapter.

In terms of sexual partners, however, Blunt preferred rough trade, partners who were both his intellectual and social inferior and over whom he could exert his desire for power and dominance. This desire for power was a trait that was not lost on the Cambridge Soviet talent scouts who found in young Blunt all the characteristics of a successful traitor— a superior, but “underappreciated” intelligence, ruthless ambition, solipsism to the nth degree, homosexuality, a vice that could be exploited, and an ability to compartmentalize his life and play out many roles. Psychoanalysis aside, perhaps book reviewer David Pryce-Jones writing in the New Criterion best summarized the essence of Blunt’s “being” in his simple yet poignant epithet, “Blunt was a shit through and through.”¹¹⁶

Guy Burgess— The “Conspicuous Spy”

In his autobiographical reminiscences, fellow Cambridge spy Kim Philby once remarked that, “He (Burgess) must have been one of the very few people to have forced themselves into the Soviet special service...(He) was a very special case.”¹¹⁷ While the Soviets “were clearly anxious to recruit him,” wrote Philby, he himself, was of the opinion that Burgess’s unrelenting capacity for “making himself conspicuous” would compromise him as a secret agent. In the end, however, Philby and his Soviet controller “Otto” correctly concluded that it would be better to bring Burgess into their spy circle than leave him out in the cold, especially as he was likely to break the door down anyway. Thus it was that in the summer of 1934, Guy Francis de Moncy Burgess entered the annals of history as the most “conspicuous” member of the Cambridge spy ring. His Code Name was MÄDCHEN, German for girl.

Guy Burgess came from good military stock. Born in 1911, in the West Country’s famous naval port-city of Devonport, Plymouth, Guy was the eldest son of Naval Officer Lt. Commander Malcolm Kingsforth Burgess and Evelyn Gillman Burgess. He had a younger brother, Nigel.¹¹⁸

The young Burgess had just entered Eton in January 1924, at the age of 13, when his father died. About three years later, his widowed mother remarried, but the spoiled and cosseted Guy and his stepfather Colonel John R. Bassett D.B.O., a retired British Army officer, did not hit it off well, so it was off to military school with him.

Shortly after his 16th birthday, in keeping with his family’s maritime tradition, Guy was sent to the Royal Naval College at Dartmouth, but he never graduated. Thirty-three months after his entrance to the Naval College he abruptly left and returned to Eton, ostensibly because of failing eye sight. The suddenness and circumstances of his departure, however, gave credence to the theory that Burgess was privately dismissed from Dartmouth because he had attempted to sexually seduce other cadets into homosexual liaisons.

So it was back to Eton, where the extremely bright and handsome Burgess captured both the Rosebery and Gladstone History Prizes and a scholarship in History to Trinity College, Cambridge which he entered in October 1930.

Not surprisingly, his Adonis good looks and personal charm, keen intelligence, love of young men and anti-fascist, pro-Marxist sentiments which he enthusiastically wore on his sleeve, quickly brought him to the attention of Soviet infiltrated Apostles. He was initiated into the Society along with his close friend Victor Rothschild, one of the few scientists ever accepted into the Apostles, on the evening of November 12, 1932. Burgess also joined the Cambridge University Socialist Society (CUSS) that was gradually being taken over by the Communists.

In June 1934, Burgess visited Germany. He was in Berlin during Hitler's political purge—the "Night of the Long Knives." Next, Burgess joined a small Cambridge "tour" group to Moscow that included Anthony Blunt and Burgess' friend Derek Blaikie, an Oxonian Communist killed in World War II.¹¹⁹

One of the many stories told about Burgess' stay in Moscow, was that he was found by the Soviet police dead drunk in the Park of Rest and Culture and inside of his coat pocket the police discovered letters of introduction to prominent Russian scholars and politicians from members of the Astor family.

Burgess later claimed that while in Moscow, he had a long secret interview with Nikolai Bukharin, a powerful member of the Soviet Politburo and editor of Izvestia.¹²⁰ All things considered, it was probably in Moscow where Burgess and Blunt were given their final vetting by Stalin's agents. Guy Burgess had successfully fought his way into the ranks of the Cambridge spies.

Although Burgess was fired up politically, his greatest passion was passion, that is, homosex. Seduction, especially of older men was his forte, although any man who walked upright was a potential target for a sexual overture.

His Cambridge classmate Goronwy Rees, explained that Guy regarded sex "as a useful machine for the manufacture of pleasure ...and at one time or another he went to bed with most of his friends."¹²¹ Rees said:

He (Guy) was a kind of public schoolboy's guide to the mysteries of sex and he fulfilled his function almost with a sense of public service. Such affairs did not last long; but Guy had the faculty of retaining the affection of those he went to bed with and also, in some curious way, of maintaining a kind of permanent domination over them, long after the affair was over he continued to assist friends in their sexual lives, which were often troubled and unsatisfactory, to listen to their emotional difficulties and when necessary, find suitable partners for them. To such people he was a combination of father confessor and pimp and the number of people who were under obligation to him must have been very large indeed.¹²²

Among Burgess's earliest sexual conquests at Cambridge were Anthony Blunt who was besotted by Burgess, the effeminate bisexual Donald Maclean who was recruited at the same time as Burgess, and even the notorious womanizer, Kim Philby, who assisted in Burgess's recruitment. Burgess, like Blunt also pursued sex with working-class young men and recommended them to his Cambridge homosexual friends as a means of releasing them from their "bourgeois" hang-ups.¹²³

Jackie Hewit was one of Burgess's live-in partners who bed-hopped between Guy and Anthony. Years later, after Burgess fled to Moscow and British intelligence services interviewed Hewit about his relationship with Guy, Hewit told them that Guy kept all his love letters not for blackmail, but "as proof to himself of his own power to make men love him."¹²⁴ Although it is clear that the naïve Hewit would not have been privy to if or how Burgess's controllers used the love letters, Jackie was right on the money when he noted that Burgess's homosexual affairs were part of a "power-game" that Burgess used to control other men. Hewit was also correct when he told the SIS agents that "to the mostly heterosexual MI5 and MI6 agents, the dynamics of the gay world of the 1930s must have seemed an incomprehensible web of interlocking relationships."¹²⁵ Unfortunately for the British, the Soviets did comprehend the scope and exploitability of the Homintern on a worldwide scale and put that knowledge to excellent use against their enemies in England, the United States and Europe.

Kim Philby — Master Spy

Of all the Cambridge traitors, Harold Adrian Russell Philby, by way of his parentage and background, most likely would have been voted "the most likely to succeed" in the spy business.

Born on New Year's day, 1912, in Ambala, India where his father St. John Philby served as a high ranking civil servant in the Indian government, Philby was nicknamed "Kim" after Kipling's young hero. When Sir John was stricken with wander lust and abandoned his Protestant faith to follow Mohammed along the lines of T. E. Lawrence, his wife Dora took over the rearing of Kim and his three sisters. Sir John's prolonged absences from home, which apparently his wife did not mind, and his strict sense of discipline and lack of warmth towards his own children when he was at home, created family tensions that were to leave an indelible mark on his young son. The sensitive and serious Kim developed a stutter early on in his childhood that he retained for life. The negative influence of father upon son can also be seen in Philby's self-centered cynicism that came to characterize his relationship toward his fellow creatures, especially women, as well as his instinct for duplicity and self-preservation at all costs so necessary in the espionage game.¹²⁶

On September 18, 1924, the 12-year-old Kim entered his famous father's alma mater, Westminster. Academically he excelled, winning the Marshall Memorial Prize for History, and he eventually developed some competency in sports. Emotionally speaking, however, he remained stunted. His speech impediment grew into a major source of embarrassment. His antipathy toward Protestant religious observances at the school increased his sense of religious and moral conflict. As an underclassman he was subject to sexual exploitation by seniors and prefects — “I was ‘buggered’ and ‘bugged.’” at Westminster he would later admit.¹²⁷ But perhaps, most telling, was the charge that was brought against young Philby during his third year at Westminster. One of Kim’s tutors by the name of Luce reported to school officials that Philby had developed a propensity for untruthfulness, that is, he had lied or cheated on a serious matter.¹²⁸ Indeed, among his own classmates, Kim had already acquired a reputation for deceitful behavior. In the end the matter was set aside, no doubt due to Sir John’s influence and Philby was allowed to continue at Westminster. He graduated the following year with two scholarships, one for Christ Church, Oxford and the other for Trinity College, Cambridge.¹²⁹ At his father’s insistence, he selected Trinity. Kim was 17 when he went up to Cambridge in the spring of 1929.

Although he was originally drawn to a career in politics, Kim’s disappointing academic performance in his history exams forced him to switch his major to economics in October of 1931.¹³⁰ His personal interest in politics continued, however. Given Sir John’s affinity for Socialism, it was not surprising that his son should eventually be drawn further left to the more daring and revolutionary tenets of Marxism. For starters, that summer, Philby joined and later became an officer of the Cambridge University Socialist Society.

Through Dennis Holmes Robertson (later Sir), Kim’s Director of Studies in economics who was also a closeted member of Cambridge’s circle of homosexual academicians, Philby was introduced to the campus’s most sought-after stud, Guy Burgess. The two men formed a strong friendship that was reinforced when Philby joined the Apostles in 1932, the same year that Guy Burgess had entered the Society.¹³¹ Although Philby was not a homosexual, given the relentlessness with which Guy pursued his sexual quarry and Kim’s adventurous temperament, his rebellious attitudes towards Establishment mores and heavy drinking, it is possible that the two men did engage in a brief and transitory affair at Cambridge.¹³²

Immediately after graduating from Trinity in the summer of 1933 with a second-class degree in economics, Philby filled out an application for the Foreign Service. That fall, he set off for a vacation trip to Europe where he mixed romance with his growing interest in the Comintern.¹³³ On the suggestion of Professor Maurice H. Dobb, a Marxist recruiter at Cambridge, Philby met Communist leaders in Paris including Willi Münzenberg, a recruiter for the NKVD.¹³⁴ The Paris committee provided him with Communist contacts in Vienna where he met and on February 23, 1934 married, Alice “Litzi” Friedman, a 23-year-old Polish Jewish divorcé who was a member of a number of revolutionary groups including the Zionist Socialist Movement and the Revolutionary Socialists that were working against the Dollfuss government.¹³⁵ Litzki confirmed Kim's commitment to Marxism.

Upon returning to England the following April, Philby immediately met with Dobb. He also visited Communist Party headquarters on King Street, London. He told Party officers that he and Litzki wanted to join the CPGB, but he was instructed to wait. Soon afterwards, Philby was put in touch with "Otto" who had been assigned as his case worker and controller. Kim was informed that under no circumstances was he to join the Party, as this would hinder his entrance into the Foreign Service. Instead, Philby became a Soviet spy and mole.

One of Philby's first assignments was to spy on his own father whom the Soviets suspected was a British spy. Dutifully, Kim went through Sir John's papers at his London residence.¹³⁶ In the meantime Philby began to make out his list of potential recruits. At the bottom of his list was Guy Burgess. Near the top of his list was Donald Maclean.

Donald Maclean— The Deadly "Innocent"

The crest of the clan Maclean bears the words "Virtue Mine Honour." Cambridge spy, Donald Duart Maclean (1913–1983) however, upheld neither the "Virtue" nor "Honor" of his Scottish ancestors.¹³⁷

Considered to be the quintessential young diplomat on the rise, Donald Maclean (Code Names WISE, LYRIC, HOMER and STUART) was the younger son of Sir Donald Maclean, a staunch Presbyterian, successful solicitor, Liberal Party MP who served as Minister of Education under Stanley Baldwin's National government and as President of the Board of Trade in the Ramsey MacDonald's National Coalition Government of 1931.

Young Donald's physical features and temperament— thin, blond, effete and gentle— reflected his mother's beauty and kindly demeanor rather than his father's aggressive and imposing features. Following in the footsteps of his elder brother, Ian, Donald was educated at the elite Gresham's School at Holt on the Norfolk coast. The vast majority of Gresham's alumni annually moved on to top British universities including Cambridge, Oxford, Balliol and Christ Church. Maclean was no exception.¹³⁸ Unfortunately, by the time Maclean left Gresham's for Trinity Hall, Cambridge in 1931 at the age of 18, he had contracted two revolutionary viruses— one political (Communism) and the other sexual (homosexuality).

The winsome Maclean soon found himself in the company of Burgess, Blunt and Philby— the former soon added Donald to his long list of sexual conquests while the latter helped recruit him as a Soviet spy.¹³⁹ Although the gung-ho Maclean was intent on immigrating to the "Worker's Paradise," he was finally persuaded to take the Civil Service exam in order to secure a position in the Foreign Office, which he succeeded in doing in October 1935, largely on the reputation of his recently deceased father.

Maclean's first posting with the Foreign Office was Secretary of the Western Department with responsibility for the low countries, Switzerland, Spain and Portugal, but the "Old Boys' Network" at Whitehall, as the Soviets had anticipated, soon promoted him to the Office of Secretary at the British Embassy in Paris.¹⁴⁰

From here Maclean began to supply Moscow with diplomatic secrets and information on British foreign policy. It was in Paris that the sexually ambivalent Maclean met and married the American heiress, Melinda Marling. At the start of the Second World War, Maclean and his new wife, who was informed by her husband that he was a Soviet agent, returned to England where he continued to supply Moscow with top secret documents while he awaited his next diplomatic appointment.

Cambridge Moles Burrow in For Maximum Impact

In 1935, when Stalin issued orders that Communist agents abroad go underground or if necessary fake a conversion to Fascism, the Cambridge spies were forced to change their political spots and burrow deeper into their holes. It was great fun.

When we last left Blunt, he had joined MI5 where he had begun making his way up the intelligence ladder. Between 1940 and 1945, and even after the war was over, Blunt continued to pass on to Moscow top secret documents from both MI5 and MI6 as well as German coded messages that had been deciphered at Bletchley Park, some 17,000 pieces of classified materials in all, that included invaluable information on vital Allied post-war policies with regard to Poland, Latvia and Czechoslovakia that enabled the Soviets to bring down the Iron Curtain in Europe.¹⁴¹ Blunt also provided the Soviets with the names of thousands of Russian expatriates living in Britain, many of whom, along with their wives and children were forcibly returned and systematically slaughtered by Stalin under the provisions of the Yalta Agreement.

Blunt (and Philby) provided the Soviets with details on the Allied landing at Normandy in the summer of 1944 as well as on various MI5 operations like "XX" (Double Cross) that involved "turning" both German and Soviet agents including Anatoly Gorsky, the First Secretary of the Soviet Embassy in London who just happened to be Blunt's controller.¹⁴²

In addition to sending thousands of foreigners to their death, Blunt, who had an almost photographic memory, was proud of the fact that he had passed on to the Soviets the name of every MI5 officer.¹⁴³ He also had access to the security vetting files of MI5, information from which was also sent to Moscow.¹⁴⁴

According to intelligence writer, John Costello, author of Mask of Treachery, Blunt was the personification of the "agent of influence." He helped thwart later internal investigations within MI5 and MI6 by laying false trails away from Burgess, Maclean and Philby "while they were still operational, and even after they had defected to Moscow."¹⁴⁵

Blunt also recruited a number of important Cambridge academics including the brilliant linguist, John Caircross, who is sometimes referred to as the Fifth Man in the Cambridge spy ring, although there were probably more than a dozen Oxbridge Soviet agents who could have claimed that title including a handful of MI5 and MI6 officers. Blunt also recruited Leo Long, an Apostle and military intelligence officer posted to MI14, who specialized in code breaking and signal intelligence.¹⁴⁶

Just before the war ended, King George VI sent Blunt on a highly secret mission to Germany. Although the exact nature of this mission that lasted through 1947 remains shrouded in mystery, though not for want of theories, we do know that Blunt was aware of the contents of the private papers he was instructed to retrieve, and that he probably passed that information on to his Soviet controller.¹⁴⁷ According to Costello, his success in procuring the so-called "Windsor files" later proved to be "a gold-plated insurance policy" against prosecution for treason over the next 34 years, indeed, for his entire lifetime.¹⁴⁸

After the war, Blunt continued his dual career as an art historian and critic and as a traitor. From 1945–1979 he held the position of Surveyor of the King's (later Queen's) Pictures, in which capacity he administered the Royal Family's extensive collections.¹⁴⁹ In 1947, he was appointed director of the Courtauld Institute of Art. Three years later, he was elected a Fellow of the British Academy and in 1960, he became Professor of Art History at the University of London. He was knighted in 1956.

In his "salad days," Blunt became somewhat of a fixture at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle where he maintained offices. It became somewhat of a standing joke that when Blunt walked down the halls, the Palace guardsman would quip about the necessity of putting "their backs to the wall," said Costello.¹⁵⁰ Obviously, homosexuality was no detriment to employment by the Royals, and never had been. Homosexual personal valets and courtiers in the Royal household, like homosexual diplomats in the Foreign Office, had distinct advantages over family men who, by necessity, were "distracted" by the cares of daily life. They could afford to be overly solicitous with their time and attention and were always on call. Some Royal valets and attendants were also known to sexually service their masters.¹⁵¹

Blunt and Burgess did much of their "entertaining" of MI5 and MI6 officers and staff at their 5 Bentinck Street flat, a three-story maisonette building with recording and photograph facilities that was owned by Victor Rothschild. Their guests included Major General Sir Stewart Menzies head of MI6 from 1939 to 1952; Sir Dick White, head of MI5 from 1953 to 1956 and later director of MI6 from 1956–1968; Sir Roger Hollis, dubbed "Mr.

Inertia" and reputed to be bisexual who headed MI5 from 1956–1965; and Captain Guy Maynard Liddell, a Deputy Director of MI5.¹⁵²

The fact that Liddell and Hollis spent so much time in the company of homosexuals like Blunt and Burgess on a regular basis later made Liddell and Hollis candidates for MI5's Fifth Man or "super mole" contest.¹⁵³ The criticism leveled against Hollis and Liddell, however, applied to virtually all of the upper echelons of British intelligence during the 1940s and 1950s—that is, no director of national intelligence services had a right to be so gullible and trusting.

Blunt was also on friendly terms with Sir Dick White and they used to spend Christmas together with Victor Rothschild in Rothschild's house in Cambridge. The Baron Rothschild and his second wife Teresa "Tess" Mayor, a former British intelligence employee, would also visit the Bentinck flat from time to time.

In essence, Blunt knew everyone who was worth knowing. His privileged education and contacts produced a large number of highly placed and influential friends and protectors. But it was his knowledge of London's high and low homosexual society, and the multiple networks that each represented and how they could best be exploited, that was of particular value to the Soviets.

According to Costello, among the homosexual haunts frequented by Blunt and Burgess and fellow high-class buggers was the Pakenham, a pub centrally located to Whitehall, Buckingham Palace and the barracks of the Household Cavalry and the Guards.¹⁵⁴ The Irish writer, Robin Bryans, whom Burgess picked up at Oxford in 1944 and who later became a regular of the Blunt-Burgess circle of buggers at Pakenham, reported that Blunt was very proud of his royal connections and all his important interlocking associations and talked openly about them at the pub.¹⁵⁵ Blunt also used to host after-hours homosexual orgies at the Courtauld Institute that always drew a large crowd of handsome, aspiring sexually and politically exploitable young artists and post-graduate students.

It appears that the Soviets were more than willing to indulge the sexual eccentricities of the Cambridge spies as long as it was profitable to do so, but it was highly unlikely that the Communists ever really trusted any of them. None of the spies was ever given a position of substantive import in Soviet Intelligence Services after their defection. Philby remained a colonel in the KGB in name only. Blunt suspected this would be the case which is why, in the end, he refused to trade in his plush director's flat at the Courtauld Mansion or his offices at the Palace for a dreary Moscow suburban flat like Maclean, Burgess and Philby did.¹⁵⁶

The Metamorphosis of Guy Burgess

One of the most remarkable aspects of Burgess's life as a sot, a homosexual, a Marxist and a traitor was that he never lacked for a job or a patron.

Late in 1934, after Burgess had failed to make the grade as a don at Cambridge, Victor Rothschild, hired the uncouth goy as a “financial consultant” at £100 per month. Never mind that Burgess was a history major and that Rothschilds were a legendary banking dynasty going back three generations.¹⁵⁷

This elaborate and thoroughly transparent ruse, of course, was designed to facilitate the transformation of Burgess from that of a known Marxist to that of a neo-Fascist pro-Nazi sympathizer, as per Stalin’s directive that Soviet agents go underground and if necessary change sides.

Rothschild and Stalin, it should be remembered, shared the same ostensible enemy—Hitler. Where Stalin’s interests corresponded with his own, Rothschild appeared willing to cooperate with the Soviets against Nazi Germany and even the United States.

In 1936–37, Rothschild made Burgess the titular editor of a new business and investment newsletter that specialized in German finances. Then the baron hired a German Communist, expatriate, and homosexual named Rudolf “Rolf” Katz, who was also a Comintern agent, to professionally ghostwrite and edit the publication.¹⁵⁸

The newsletter, along with the well-planted “rumor” that Burgess had undergone an ideological conversion following his trip to Moscow, facilitated Burgess’ entrance into the Conservative Party and other right-wing Parliamentary circles.

Burgess targeted a number of bisexual and homosexual MPs who were known to frequent the Café Royal, the famous watering hole of Oscar Wilde and Lord Alfred Douglas. One of his most successful seductions was Conservative MP, Harold Nicolson, who became Burgess’ guardian angel. The pair dined together regularly at the Reform Club, a respectable British establishment that became an important target of Soviet subversion. Nicolson was a married man with a family, but he apparently felt the need for homosexual liaisons to spice up his life.

Burgess obliged and was rewarded with more influential contacts within Parliament and the Foreign Office including Sir Joseph Ball, the Conservative Party’s director of research and Archibald Clark Kerr (Lord Inverchapel) a married homosexual with a large collection of homosex porn and a Soviet valet named Yevgeny Yost.

Archibald Kerr served as Britain’s Ambassador to the United States from May 1947 to May 1948, and became a nemesis of FBI Director, J. Edgar Hoover.¹⁵⁹ Obviously, though homosexuality was still illegal in England, sexual deviancy appeared to be no drawback to diplomatic and political advancement for members of Britain’s Old Boys’ Club regardless of the danger of compromise and blackmail by the Soviets and other foreign agents.

It was through men of influence like Rothschild and Nicolson and Ball, that Burgess was able to penetrate the pro-Fascist Anglo-German Fellowship created by Hitler to improve relations between England and Germany and to advocate for an alliance of the two countries against the Soviet Union. The president of the Fellowship was Eton-educated Charles Edward, Duke of Saxe Coburg and Gotha. Its membership included a number of influential English aristocrats with German sympathies.

Although he did not gain a post in the Conservative Party central office, Burgess did succeed in becoming secretary and "personal assistant" to the Conservative MP (Tory) John Robert MacNamara, known to his friends as "Captain Jack." The 32-year-old former guardsman was a member of the Fellowship and a homosexual who quickly fell under Burgess' charms. This affair, in turn, led to another important sexual conquest for Burgess— that of the Venerable J. H. Sharp, the Anglican Archdeacon for Southeastern Europe.¹⁶⁰ In the spring of 1936, Burgess accompanied MacNamara, Sharp and Tom Wylie, a young official at the War Office, on a fieldtrip to the Rhineland sponsored by the Foreign Relations Council of the Church of England. They were to escort a group of pro-Fascist school boys to a Hitler youth camp.¹⁶¹

At a stopover in Paris, Captain Jack introduced Guy to Monsieur Édouard Pfeiffer, a close friend of Édouard Daladier, the future Prime Minister of France. According to Costello, "As a connoisseur of homosexual decadence, Pfeiffer had few equals, even in Paris. As an officer of the French boy-scout movement, his private life was devoted to the seduction of youth."¹⁶² The two men became intimates and Pfeiffer visited Burgess in London when he was in town, recorded Costello. In 1938, when Pfeiffer obtained a leading post in the Daladier government, Burgess was able to pump him for critical information on the French Cabinet's position on Nazi Germany.¹⁶³

The wealthy American Michael Straight, another of the Apostles recruited by Blunt, recalled that during a dinner conversation with Burgess one night, Guy told him that he accompanied Pfeiffer and two members of the French Cabinet to a male brothel in Paris one evening. "Singing and laughing, they had danced around a table, lashing a naked boy, who was strapped to it, with leather whips," Burgess told Straight.¹⁶⁴

As Burgess played out his multiple roles— a courier for Rothschild— a Soviet mole— a neo-Fascist— a lover of important men, his connections to the emerging Homintern on the Continent rapidly expanded. So did his running list that the Soviets had him keep of potential recruits and influential persons that could be sexually compromised.¹⁶⁵

Burgess' tart, Jackie Hewit, a keen observer of the operations of the International Homintern described it as a kind of "gay intellectual freemasonry."¹⁶⁶ He likened it to the five concentric circles of the Olympic ring. "One person in one circle knew one in another and that's how people met."¹⁶⁷

Burgess Enters MI6

In 1936, Burgess got a job as host on a weekly British Broadcasting Company (BBC) radio show that included interviews with members of Parliament.¹⁶⁸ He was appointed by fellow King's man, George Barnes, the deputy director of Talks, who was rumored to have kept both a "boyfriend" (Burgess) as well as a "mistress."¹⁶⁹

Using the British airways, Burgess was able to promote Moscow's propaganda line especially with regard to its intervention in the Spanish Civil War that had just broken out. On occasion, he brought Blunt in for an interview.¹⁷⁰ Through the contacts he made at his BBC post and his Old Boys' Club connections, Burgess secured entry into Britain's Secret Intelligence Service, Section D of MI6 in 1939, notwithstanding the fact that Burgess had just been arrested by the London metropolitan police for homosexual solicitation in a public lavatory at Paddington railway station.¹⁷¹

One of his assignments in the European Propaganda Department of MI6 involved working with Poles whom the British were training for sabotage in Poland and the Soviet Union. Rebecca West reported that these men were by and large brave, virile and pious Roman Catholic patriots and anti-Communists who were willing to risk their lives for their nation. She was incensed by the thought that the Brits would hand them over to a flaming homosexual and (possible) Communist, like Burgess.¹⁷² As for Burgess, he methodically added all of the Polish patriots' names to his list for Moscow. After the war, that list became a death sentence for many of these Poles and their families who were repatriated behind Stalin's Iron Curtain. When Section D was abolished in July 1940, Burgess found himself without a job, but not for long.

Burgess returned to the BBC and resumed his work as a journalist, until June of 1944, when he landed a job in the Press Department of the Foreign Office. Then by a stroke of luck, Guy's close friend Hector McNeil MP became the Foreign Secretary in the Labour government. McNeil asked Burgess to be his private secretary. In 1946, when McNeil moved up to the second spot in the Foreign Secretary's office, the new British Minister of State took Burgess with him. The upward-bound Burgess served McNeil for two years during which time he had access to virtually all of Britain's national security files as well as diplomatic secrets.¹⁷³ Burgess provided the Soviets with full reports of various Parliamentary committees and Ministry of Defense classified documents.¹⁷⁴

Next, Burgess went over to the Far Eastern Division of the Foreign Office where he got into hot water as a result of a drunken pederastic spree while on official assignment to Gibraltar and Tangier. The disgraceful incident should have ended Burgess's government career and would have, had Burgess not been a protégé of Hector McNeil who was now Secretary of State for Scotland. So rather than firing Burgess outright, Foreign Office officials decided to bump him upstairs. The "problem boy" was promptly posted to the United States as Second Secretary of the British Embassy in Washington, D.C. to serve under Sir Oliver Franks who had replaced the queer Archibald Clark Kerr as Britain's Ambassador to the United States.

And here Burgess remained, until May 1951, when he was suddenly recalled to England, and then "mysteriously disappeared" along with fellow spy Donald Maclean. British Intelligence would not see either of their faces again until February 12, 1956, when both men resurfaced in Moscow at a KGB-arranged televised press conference at which time they declared their allegiance to the Soviet Union and denounced Western Imperialism.

The Soviets knew that they were taking a gamble when they brought Burgess into the Cambridge ring, but it was a gamble that paid off in the end. During his 12 years as an Establishment figure in the British Foreign Office, Burgess became one of Moscow's most productive spies and agents of influence.¹⁷⁵

Burgess had successfully manipulated the outcome of a number of policies in the Foreign Office in favor of the Soviet Union. He gave the Kremlin the inside track on all Anglo-American policies and strategies.¹⁷⁶

While in the United States, Burgess passed on to the Soviets vital details on the critical opening of the Korean War.¹⁷⁷ According to Costello, Burgess took tons of documents to the Soviet embassy in Washington, D.C. to photograph. Cable and diplomatic pouches were used to transfer other valuable information to Moscow.¹⁷⁸ While working at the British embassy in the United States, Burgess provided the Soviets with top-secret data on the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) and American nuclear research.

It was reported that when MI5 agents arrived at Burgess' flat on New Bond Street to search the premises, among the things that Burgess had left behind was a box of letters from his former sex partners.¹⁷⁹ Burgess was sending British intelligence a message, but MI5 remained clueless.

Philby's Foreign Adventures

Kim Philby's life as a Soviet mole (Code Names SÖHNCHEN, TOM, and STANLEY) took a somewhat different turn in the road than that of Burgess and Blunt once he had returned to England in the summer of 1934 with his new bride.

His Soviet controller had decided that Philby could best serve Moscow by trading his Communist cloak for a Fascist one and by taking up a career in foreign journalism where he could make use of his linguistic talents.

Philby took a low-paying job as an assistant editor and review for the down and out liberal publication Review of the Reviews while he took some linguistic courses at the London School of Oriental Studies.¹⁸⁰ By the time the Review collapsed in 1935, Philby's transformation from "leftist" to "rightist" was sufficient to secure him membership in the Anglo-German

Fellowship and a promised position as editor of a new Anglo-German trade journal that never materialized.¹⁸¹

When the Spanish Civil War broke out in 1936, Philby received press credentials as a foreign correspondent from several British papers including the London General Press.¹⁸² He departed from England on February 3, 1937, ostensibly to cover the warfront as a reporter, but his real reason for going to Spain was to arrange for the assassination of General Francisco Franco, the opposition leader to the Popular Front.¹⁸³

In the end, Franco was not assassinated, but by a strange turn of events, Philby managed to get himself the Spanish Red Cross of Military Merit for bravery that was pinned on the covert Soviet agent by Franco himself.¹⁸⁴

In 1939, at the outbreak of the Second World War, Philby was posted to the British Expeditionary Force in France as a seasoned war correspondent. Kim managed to get himself ingratiated with the British Secret Intelligence Service by providing them with valuable information on various German enterprises— information that the NKGB had supplied to him for just such a purpose.¹⁸⁵

Although Philby's loyalty to Moscow was strained by the Stalin-Hitler Pact and news of Stalin's purges that included the killing of some of Kim's former NKGB friends, he remained in the Communist fold and went on to become a "master spy" for the Soviet Union.

In July 1940, Philby entered Section D of the SIS and was assigned to work under Burgess. Shortly thereafter, a new sabotage and subversion agency, the Special Operations Executive (SOE) was formed and it absorbed Section D. Burgess was fired, but Philby was retained thanks to the influence of his father's old friend Colonel Valentine Vivian, a counter-espionage officer in Section V. The SOE was responsible for carrying out covert operations against the Nazis in occupied Europe.

In September 1941, Philby was assigned to MI6's Section V where he was put in charge of covert counterintelligence operations on the Iberian Peninsula and the Atlantic Islands.¹⁸⁶

In the meantime, Philby had supplied the Soviets with a nearly complete list of MI6 operatives around the world as well as MI6's world-wide organizational and operational charts and manuals.¹⁸⁷ Among the more curious and esoteric reports filed by Philby was one on homosexual orgies, drug use and Black Masses in high English society.¹⁸⁸

Socially, the sign that Philby's star was on the rise was an invitation to join the Athenæum, one of England's most prestigious clubs preferred by Whitehall and England's clerical elite.¹⁸⁹

In the summer of 1944, Kim Philby, Soviet spy, was made head of a new intelligence department, Section IX of MI6 responsible for Soviet Counterespionage! Once Philby took office, the chance of catching Soviet spies was virtually nil unless the NKVD deliberately wished to sacrifice the agent. Philby had become a very dangerous man.

In August, 1945, KGB Colonel Konstantin Volkov, the newly assigned Soviet consul to Turkey, went into the British Embassy in Istanbul and asked for asylum and money. In return, he offered to reveal the names of two Soviet spies in Britain's Foreign Office (Burgess and Maclean) and one in British Counterintelligence (Philby) among other pieces of intelligence. Volkov was put on hold while embassy officials called home. British intelligence was alerted to the defection and MI6 Director Steward Menzies then assigned Philby the task of debriefing Volkov. After alerting Soviet intelligence, Philby delayed his arrival in Turkey in order to give the Soviet SMERSH time to kidnap Volkov and bring him home to Stalin who ordered his execution.¹⁹⁰ SMERSH is derived from the acronym of "smert' shpi-onam" — "death to spies."¹⁹¹ Soon after his arrival in Istanbul, Philby dutifully informed his superiors at MI6 that the case was dead.

Four months later, on November 20, 1945, Philby informed his NKGB contacts that Elizabeth Bentley, one of the Soviet's most important agents in America had defected and was in the hands of the FBI.¹⁹²

In August of 1949, after spending two years as Head of Station, Turkey, where MI6 had assigned him to collect Soviet intelligence that might affect Britain's oil interests in the Middle East, Philby (and the Soviets) got their big break. Philby was informed that he was to be posted to Washington, D.C. as MI6's Liaison Officer to the CIA and FBI.

Prior to his leaving London for America, Philby was briefed on the VENONA Codex, the most guarded intelligence secret of the Allies during the Cold War. Since there are a large number of references to VENONA in this chapter, a brief explanation as to its history, scope and its significance should prove helpful to the reader.

In February 1943, the U.S. Army's Signal Security Agency (SSA) started up a very small and very secretive project that was later given the arbitrary code name VENONA. Its purpose was to decipher Soviet diplomatic cables which the Army had been collecting since 1939 when Stalin and Hitler signed their Non-Aggression Pact. Unfortunately, the complexity of the two-part deciphering system did not permit the SSA to read the cables until 1946, after the war had ended. It was at this time that the SSA realized that of the 750,000 intercepted cables thought to contain mundane diplomatic and commercial trade data, just under half were actually secret Soviet communiqués, that is, Soviet spy messages between the NKVD (Soviet Secret Police) and the GRU (Soviet Military Intelligence) and their Soviet operatives in the United States and around the world.¹⁹³

Today, we know that prior to receiving Philby's report on VENONA, the Soviets had already planted a mole at the SSA. His name was William Weisband and he was a NKGB agent (Code Name ZHORA).¹⁹⁴ This meant that by 1949 the Soviets were already in the process of changing their code. However, they could do nothing about the cables sent prior to the change, that is, cables sent between 1940 and 1948. These cables revealed the code names of hundreds of Americans who spied for the Soviet Union, before, during, and after the Second World War, most of whom were recruited by the Communist Party — USA.¹⁹⁵

Philby in the United States

Once Kim and Aileen (Furse) the second of his four wives, got settled in their beautiful Washington, D.C. home at 5228 Nebraska Avenue, the Philby residence became famous for its glamorous, liquor-flowing parties where top-level CIA and FBI agents (and their wives) were entertained and, while under the influence, let drop occasional tidbits of agency news for Philby and Moscow.¹⁹⁶ Among those that befriended Philby was CIA Counterintelligence Chief, James Jesus Angleton.¹⁹⁷

In August 1950, when the British Foreign Office dumped Burgess on the United States, Guy moved in with Kim, Aileen and their young family. Although Burgess's disgusting behavior and anti-Americanism became legendary in CIA and FBI quarters, his well-honed image as a homosexual drunken lout prevented his identification as a Soviet agent. He simply did not fit the profile of a Russian spy.

At one of the Philby parties in January 1951, the drunken Burgess came in uninvited and drew an obscene caricature of the wife of the guest of honor, Bill Harvey, the FBI's resident counterintelligence expert. A scuffle ensued and Libby Harvey left the affair followed by her irate husband. Harvey never forgot the incident, but interestingly, his nemesis became Philby not Burgess.¹⁹⁸ The next morning, a stay-over-guest, Professor Wilfred Basil Mann, a British-born nuclear scientist later identified as a Soviet agent, said he saw Philby and Burgess in bed together with a bottle of champagne, but conveniently, he did not mention the incident to Angleton at the CIA until one year later when Burgess was safely in Moscow.¹⁹⁹

In the meantime, the treachery continued.

As early as 1946, Philby had learned that British Intelligence Services were interested in initiating covert operations against Stalin in Eastern Europe as part of its Cold War strategy. This meant that Philby (and the Soviets) were in on the ground floor of the SIS-CIA jointly-conceived invasion of Albania. This series of tragic misadventures led by Albanian guerrilla-forces between 1949 and 1953, led to the death, gaoling, torture and forced labor of several thousand Albanians.²⁰⁰

In September of 1949, just prior to his departure to America, Philby had been briefed by M16 on the general details of the Albanian mission which he passed on to his Soviet contacts before leaving London. The Soviets in turn alerted the Sigurimi, the Albanian secret police and its Soviet advisors, that the British and Americans were preparing to send native, anti-Communist insurgents into the country.²⁰¹

From 1949 to 1951, Philby, as “joint commander” and liaison for the American Office of Policy Coordination (OPC), the anti-Soviet subversive operations arm of the National Security Council (NSC) that spearheaded the top-secret covert Albanian mission, provided the Soviets and the Sigurimi with names, types of weapons carried, dates and landing locations of the small bands of Albanian operatives. Wherever and whenever the insurgents entered Albania— by sea, overland or by parachute— the secret policy and security forces were always waiting for them. Many of the volunteers, including the legendary Zenel Kadrijal, Captain of the Royal Guard of the exiled Albanian King Zog, were shot on the spot, or tried and then sentenced “to suffer death by the cord,” or imprisoned from seven years to life.²⁰² Their relatives and friends were picked up for interrogation. Some were shot outright, others left to rot in jail or sent to Siberia where many of them, including children, died of malnutrition. The Americans smelled a rat— a rat named Philby.

In June 1951, two months after Burgess and Maclean’s mysterious “disappearance,” Philby was also recalled to London. Despite demands from CIA chief Walter Bedell Smith that Philby be removed from intelligence service, and despite all the years of accumulated evidence that Philby was a Soviet mole, he was permitted to take a semi-retirement until 1953 when he was reassigned to another intelligence posting. Ironically, many of his MI6 colleagues believed that Philby was a victim of American “McCarthyism” and had been unjustly demoted.

Although the British and Americans were fully aware that their Albania mission had been compromised from the very beginning, the covert operations continued until 1953. The results were predicable enough. The Albanians never trusted the West again. British and American Intelligence were set at each other’s throats. And Philby continued his espionage activities for the Soviets including advising them on the day-to-day status of VENONA. It was all in the day’s work.

In later years, Philby would disclaim the notion that he was ever a “double agent.” “All my life I’ve worked for only one intelligence service— the Soviet service,” he told his Russian wife Rufina.²⁰³

Maclean— The Model English Diplomat

The reader’s last contact with Maclean, was when he had returned to London from Paris at the start of the Second World War. He arrived in the company of a new wife and was patiently awaiting a new posting that reflected his high-station in life. His patience paid off. Despite his increased drinking and known homosexual liaisons, his connections to the Old Boys Club saw him through.²⁰⁴

In 1944, Maclean preceded Philby and Burgess to the United States as a First Secretary to Lord Halifax, at the British Embassy. In 1946, Lord Inverchapel, one of Burgess’s older homosexual protégés with decidedly pro-Soviet views, had replaced Ambassador Halifax. The Soviets could not believe their good fortune! Maclean's new post would give him (and Stalin) access to all vital military, scientific, political and diplomatic secrets of the United States as well as those of the Allied Powers in the critical post-war era. Maclean did not disappoint.

As World War II was drawing to a close and the Cold War was heating up, Maclean provided the Soviets with all U.S. military plans in Europe including the fact that American troops would stop east of the Elbe River giving the Soviets first access to Berlin. He sent the Soviets all cable communications between Winston Churchill and Roosevelt and later Truman and Churchill. He notified the Soviets that VENONA had broken their wartime code and he reported every message that had been deciphered. Thanks to Maclean, Stalin knew in advance what the Allied positions at Yalta and Potsdam Conferences would be and how hard he could push for post-war territorial and political concessions from the Allies including the forced repatriation of thousands of Russian citizens and soldiers who had sought refuge in the West. Stalin was confidently able to bluff his way to victory in post-war Europe because he knew, thanks to Maclean, that U.S. as yet had no atomic bombs in its military arsenal.

In 1947, Maclean was appointed the British representative to the Combined Policy Committee on Atomic Development with full access to U.S. Armed Services and Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) classified information "without escort," a privilege that even FBI chief J. Edgar Hoover was denied. Later on, Maclean gave the Soviets data on the U.S. purchase of uranium from Canada and the Belgian Congo. This information enabled the Soviets to approximate the number of atomic bombs the United States was producing.²⁰⁵

As late as 1948, when Maclean was preparing to return to London, he continued to feed the Soviets top U.S. and Allied secret documents that included plans for the formation of the North American Treaty Organization (NATO), a 12-nation mutual defense pact in Europe created in April 1949.²⁰⁶

When Maclean rejoined the Foreign Office in London, he was assigned to head the American Department where he continued to monitor NATO activities for the Soviets. In 1950, he helped formulate Anglo-American policy for the Korean War. It was Maclean who told Stalin that the United States had made the decision not to use atomic weapons except in the most extreme circumstances, information that proved critical in China's decision to intervene in the war.²⁰⁷

As for the gap in Soviet intelligence left by Maclean's departure to England, it was soon filled, as described earlier, by Philby, and later by Burgess.

Thus it was that in the spring of 1951, when FBI and CIA officials informed British Intelligence that Maclean was a Soviet mole, he and Burgess were able to make their escape to Moscow with the acquiescence of the SIS who were told not to interfere with their flight by Whitehall under direct orders from the Royal Family, who did not want a scandal and public trial.

In the meantime, Philby, who had also come under immediate suspicion as a result of his long association with Burgess and Maclean, was able to hold out for another 11 years. Finally, on January 23, 1963, while on SIS assignment in Beirut, he too was permitted to escape to Moscow aboard a Polish ship destined for Odessa on the Black Sea.²⁰⁸

Blunt managed to hold out the longest. After Philby's defection Yuri Modin, Blunt's controller, offered him a one-way ticket to "a comfortable life" in the Soviet Worker's Paradise. Blunt cut the conversation short by asking— "No doubt you can also guarantee total access to the Chateau de Versailles, whenever I need to go there for my work?"²⁰⁹ Working for the Soviet Union was one thing— living there was another. Modin said he was left "speechless."²¹⁰

The SIS finally got around to picking Blunt up for interrogation in the spring of 1964. Blunt invoked the Official Secrets Act.²¹¹ The British government offered him immunity from prosecution on two conditions. First, that he had terminated his services for the Soviets after the Second World War ended. Blunt lied and said he had. Second, that he would agree to provide details of his long service for the Soviets. This he never did. Nor did he ever express any regret for betraying his country.²¹² It was not until he received full immunity that he "confessed." Afterwards, he underwent six years of tedious and useless debriefings. Blunt knew enough of the Royal family's darkest secrets to keep him safe from harm. He was permitted to keep his title and position as Curator to the Queen's art collection and the directorship of the Courtauld Institute until his retirement in 1972.

The official cover-up of the Blunt disaster by Sir Roger Hollis head of MI5 with at least the tacit, if not official approval of Whitehall and the Royals, included keeping many Cabinet-level officials in the dark as to the extent of Blunt's treachery and the damage he had done to national security.²¹³ Before he left office in 1965, Hollis ordered that the hundreds of hours of recordings of Blunt's testimony be destroyed leaving only summary reports behind.²¹⁴ Britain's strict libel laws helped for a time to keep the press off Blunt's doorstep.

Yuri Modin later expressed the opinion that Queen Elizabeth wanted the whole scandal squelched because of Blunt's former close relationship with her father, George VI. Modin stated that she gave Blunt a de facto secret pardon.²¹⁵

The public was kept in the dark about the entire affair until November 15, 1979, when Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher took the floor of Parliament and confirmed circulating press reports that Blunt was the Fourth Man in the Cambridge ring. A finger-pointing debate took place on November 21, 1979. Only then was Blunt's knighthood revoked. Blunt died of a heart attack at his country home on March 26, 1983. He was 75 and a millionaire.

His closest friend, Burgess had a more difficult time of it in Moscow.

One night as Burgess prowled around the city's streets in his English tweeds looking for a male prostitute, he lost "half his teeth to some Soviet stilyagi who wanted to show this Angliski golden boy what real men did to zvolochi like that."²¹⁶ In the end, the Soviets provided Burgess with a live-in lover, but this did not appear to ease his homesickness. He died of liver disease on August 19, 1963. His younger brother, Nigel, flew to Moscow to attend the funeral and returned with an urn of ashes that was buried at the family plot at St. John the Evangelist Church in Hampshire, England.²¹⁷

On March 6, 1983, Donald Maclean died of a heart attack in his Moscow apartment. He was 69. Maclean, the most ideologically driven of the Cambridge spies, was homesick for England. Like Burgess, his body was cremated and his ashes returned to England for burial.

Philby, fared somewhat better in his adopted homeland. Like Burgess and Maclean, he was awarded a lifetime pension. The KGB assisted him in his writings on spycraft and gave him a minor role in intelligence affairs. In 1970, after a serious bout with alcoholism, depression and an attempted suicide, he met and later married his fourth wife, Rufina, who was by his bedside when he died on May 11, 1988. At his burial at Kuntsevo Cemetery, west of Moscow, that was traditionally reserved for generals, his casket was attended by a detachment of KGB guards although as Modin noted, contrary to reports in the West, Philby never obtained the rank of general in the KGB.²¹⁸

Victor Rothschild— The Elephant in the Living Room

It might seem impossible, although many writers on the subject have actually done so, to engage in any study of the Cambridge spies without at least a cursory examination of the role played by one of their most intimate and active patrons—Victor Rothschild of the famous Rothschild banking dynasty.

Nathaniel Mayer Victor Rothschild, the Fourth Baronet and Third Baron was born on October 31, 1910. He was one of four children, the only son of Charles and Rozsika Rothschild of the London Rothschilds. Charles, had inherited the family fortune but not the family title. This went to his eccentric, unmarried elder brother Lionel Walter. Both brothers preferred science to banking—a trait that Victor and his older sister, Miriam picked up.

Victor, who was not particularly close to his parents, was just approaching his 14th birthday when his father committed suicide on October 12,

1923 after a six-year bout with the then incurable sleeping sickness.²¹⁹ As he grew into manhood, Victor adopted the non-observant secular Jewish sentiments and pro-Zionist sentiments of the Rothschild clan that was committed to the establishment of a Jewish State in Palestine and other sundry revolutionary pet projects.²²⁰

Rothschild came to Trinity College, Cambridge, from Harrow. He was later elected a Fellow of Trinity. Science, specifically zoology, was his game and he was as good at it as he was at cricket.

While at Cambridge, his occasional tutor in French was none other than the young, debonair Anthony Blunt.²²¹ Like Blunt, Victor was a chosen Apostle even though the Society traditionally passed up young men of science no matter how talented. This was also the year that some spectators suggest Rothschild became a member of the British Communist Party, a secret he supposedly kept from his family, although one wonders why he bothered.²²² Considering he hired Comintern agent Rudolf "Rolf" Katz to ghost write for Burgess, there is no doubt that Rothschild was closely connected to Communist networks on the Continent and within the Zionist Movement.²²³ For the record, in 1940, Katz was "ordered out of England due to homosexual contacts with British Naval personnel," Costello reported.²²⁴

He was also reported to have been working closely with the Haganah, the Zionist underground resistance force and secret intelligence network — the precursor of the Central Institute for Intelligence and Special Duties (Mossad Letafkidim Meouychadim) commonly known as the Mossad, to which Rothschild is said to have been later attached.²²⁵

Rothschild's intelligence triumvirate was completed when he secured a post in the Commercial Espionage Unit of Section B of MI5 in 1940, at the start of the Second World War. Victor had aided Burgess in getting his job at MI6, and later, Burgess through his friendship with Deputy Director Guy Liddell helped get Rothschild a posting in MI5. Victor was privy to the progress of the Enigma project at Bletchley Park thanks to his older sister, Miriam who worked there. His second wife, Teresa "Tess" Georgina Mayor, also worked for British intelligence.

Over the years, Victor Rothschild became a regular visitor to every British intelligence office and wined and dined every MI5 and MI6 Director and Deputy Director including Guy Liddell at his family mansion at Tring Park, along with an assortment of past and current prime ministers and members of Whitehall, Parliament, the Royal family and, of course, the Cambridge spies. After the war, in 1948, the Rothschild mansion at Whaddesdon Hall in Hertfordshire was used by British military intelligence to analyze more than 400 tons of documents that had arrived from the Allied Documents Center in Berlin.

With unlimited financial resources and unlimited social, scientific and political connections there were few State secrets to which Rothschild was not privy nor any door leading to the corridors of power in England that was closed to him.

As noted earlier, Rothschild kept his dear friend and fellow Apostle Burgess on retainer and used him and Blunt as errand boys on the Continent. Victor had introduced Burgess to Robert Vansittart, an Under-Secretary in the Foreign Office who acted as MI6's watchdog.²²⁶ He also arranged Guy's sojourns into "Conservative" political circles, especially those with Nazi connections. It was Rothschild who had recommended Blunt for a position in MI5 and Kim Philby for a post with Section D in MI6. When Kim Philby was in Paris he stayed at the Rothschild's Avenue Marigny house.²²⁷ When Philby drew up his original list of possible Comintern agents, not surprisingly, Victor's name was on it.²²⁸

The Rothschild house at 5 Bentinck Street, which was home to Burgess and Blunt, was a blackmailer's paradise.²²⁹ Every revolutionary worthy of the name passed through its doors at one time or another.²³⁰ The famous Cambridge author and Catholic convert, Malcolm Muggeridge (1903-1990), whose wife Kitty was related to the Mayors, once visited Rothschild's basement flat and said the company of "displaced intellectuals," reeked of "decay and dissolution."²³¹ "Muggers" was particularly offended by Guy Burgess whom he considered to be the equivalent of "a moral leper."²³²

After the war, Muggeridge, who had served in the Army Intelligence Corps, was in Paris and attended a party given by Victor at his mansion on the Avenue Marigny. He reported that he engaged his host and another guest, Kim Philby, in a debate on the merits of Churchill's decision to withhold from Stalin vital Enigma data (most of which Stalin already had access to). Muggeridge, who was one of the few British writers to report on Stalin's purges and induced famines, said that the Russian dictator could not be trusted. Victor and Kim, who were quite liquored up, argued that the Soviets should have open access to all German decoded messages.²³³

Between the time that Burgess and Maclean defected to Moscow in 1951 until Philby's escape to Moscow and Blunt's exposure as a Cambridge spy, Rothschild was interrogated no less than 11 times by British intelligence including the Serious Crimes Squad of Scotland Yard. As with Blunt, these "chats" produced nothing.

According to former MI6 agent James Rusbridger, Peter Wright and another MI5 source, Rothschild was fed information in 1962, which ended up "in the wrong place" — namely with the KGB inside the Soviet Embassy in London. But like much of the evidence against Rothschild it was considered circumstantial. In the end, Victor Rothschild walked away from the scandal, but for the rest of his life he remained under a cloud of suspicion that he was the "Fifth Man" of the Cambridge spy ring.²³⁴

Britain's Espionage Woes Continue

Between 1951 when Burgess and Maclean ensconced to Moscow and 1979 when Blunt was publicly exposed as a Soviet spy, Britain was hit with a succession of espionage scandals that suggested Whitehall and Britain's intelligence service remained "criminally negligent." Virtually all of these cases were related to national defense.

First came the Portland Spy Case that featured Konon Trofimovich Molody, alias Gordon Lonsdale, a Soviet illegal resident operating in London and his spy crew; Harry K. Houghton, a naval clerk and known security risk who was posted in 1952 to Britain's top secret naval nuclear submarine project at the Portland Harbor base; and his paramour (and later wife) Ethel Gee who had a high-security clearance at the base. A Polish defector to the CIA, Michael Golenewski identified Houghton as a spy. This led to the apprehension, trial and conviction of Lonsdale, Gee and Houghton as well as that of Helen and Peter Kroger alias Morris and Lona Cohen, a KGB communications team who had also spied in the United States.²³⁵

The next Soviet spy to make his public debut was George Blake. Blake, who identified himself as a "cosmopolitan" Dutch Jew, was a career MI6 officer whose father had fought for the British during the First World War. Blake attended officer's training at the Royal Navy Reserve where his exceptional linguistics skills attracted the attention of the SIS, although as Rebecca West pointed out, there was sufficient evidence of his Communist connections to militate against his appointment to MI6.²³⁶

Initially, Blake was assigned to spy against the Russians in East Germany. He was then brought back to London to learn Russian at Cambridge. His next posting was head of the MI6 office in South Korea at which time Blake decided to "change sides" and work for the great humanitarian dictator, Stalin. The year was 1951. Blake said he thought it "better for humanity if the Communist system prevailed."²³⁷ It was at this point that the media myth that he had been 'brainwashed' into becoming a Soviet spy took form.

Blake's MI6 credentials gave him a ground floor seating at the Anglo-American Berlin Tunnel negotiations — a daring project designed to secure high-level Soviet and East German military and KGB communications. This meant that the Soviets were on to the elaborate and expensive scheme of Operation Gold (Berlin) and Operation Silver (Vienna) at the earliest planning stages. Blake's greatest contribution to the Communist cause, however, was the inside information he provided on MI6 agents and world-wide operations that lead to the death of 600 British and American agents and their contacts and informers.²³⁸

Clues from the collapse of the Lonsdale cell eventually led to Blake's capture and conviction and a sentencing on May 3, 1961 of 42 years — the longest prison sentence ever handed down by a British court. His incarceration was cut short when in 1966 a group of “peace activists” helped him escape from the Wormwood Scrubs prison to Moscow where he eventually joined Lonsdale who had been traded by the Brits for one of their own businessmen-spies. Although he appeared to be satisfied with the treatment accorded him by the Soviets in Moscow, Blake was never given a posting in the KGB. Except for the fact that Ethel Gee was desperate for a man and latched on to the compromised middle-aged Houghton who had kept a Polish mistress while stationed at the British Embassy in Warsaw early in his naval career, sex did not appear to play a major role in either the Lonsdale or Blake spy episodes. This state of affairs, however, rapidly changed with the Vassall and Profumo sexpionage cases that quickly followed these revelations.

John Vassall — The “Miss Mary” of the Admiralty

William John Christopher Vassall, born on September 20, 1924 in London, came from solid Anglican stock. His father was an Anglican cleric and his parents had upper-class roots, but without the money that went with it. This may account for young Vassall’s personal vanity and snobbishness and his insatiable instinct for social climbing and ingratiating himself into the circles of the rich, the famous and the influential. He was an ambitious, effeminate “camp” young man with plenty of charm and a multitude of interests, talents and social graces.

Nevertheless, without title or wealth, he was forced to begin his professional career at the low end of the totem pole. His first civil servant job was a Grade II clerk and photographer for the Royal Air Force. Later he went Navy and worked for a time with the War Registry, the Admiralty’s chief communications center.²³⁹

In his private life, he was a much-sought-after sex partner by London’s active upper-class homosexual coterie. On occasion he traveled abroad in the company of wealthy homosexuals and was passed around from one host to another much like Burgess had passed Jack Hewit around to his influential associates.²⁴⁰ Vassall believed his “bedroom eyes” and pert girlish looks attracted men to him.²⁴¹

In 1954, much to the surprise of his friends, Vassall announced that he had taken a position as clerk in the Naval Attaché’s office in Moscow — a job considered hardship duty in a country where sodomy was a prosecutable crime. In fact, the Moscow appointment brought Vassall an entirely new source of revenue along with some great sex.

Within days of his arrival in Moscow, the KGB was alerted to Vassall’s spy potential. The informer was most likely Sigmund Mikhailsky, a Pole and KGB agent, who worked under-cover, literally and figuratively, at the British embassy as a jack-of-all trades, general “fix-it” man, and supplier of heterosexual and homosexual favors. The enterprising Sigmund was reported to have been trained at the Soviet sexpionage center at Verkhonoye.²⁴²

The British knew of course that Mikhailsky was a plant— virtually all Soviet-supplied employees at foreign embassies were— and had warned its staff against having any personal dealings with him. Vassall paid no heed and quickly took Mikhailsky on as a lover. Despite the fact that a Miss Wynne had filed a report with embassy officials stating that Mikhailsky had confided to her that Vassall was one of his four assigned targets, the affair was permitted to continue uninterrupted. There was also evidence that Vassall was engaged in sex with another diplomat at another embassy in Moscow.²⁴³

The Soviets waited until the winter of 1955 before they allegedly sprung their trap. General Oleg Gribanov, then chief of the Second Directorate of the KGB was put in charge of the “entrapment” of Vassall. This fact alone indicated the importance that Soviet intelligence attached to Vassall.

The KGB captured the intoxicated Vassall on film in flagrante delicto with several men at a party hosted by Mikhailsky at the Hotel Berlin.²⁴⁴ At his trial, Vassall insisted that the Soviets threatened to withdraw his diplomatic immunity and throw him in jail for sodomy if he did not cooperate with them. Vassall’s story, however, did not jibe with his past record that clearly demonstrated he betrayed his country willingly and with great skill and enthusiasm. The alleged blackmail photos that Vassall produced at his trial were said to have looked too staged. Vassall’s head was always in view. The more likely scenario was that the Soviets won Vassall over by appealing to his vanity, feeding his resentments and providing him with plenty of cold, hard cash. The KGB gave Vassall the Code Name MISS MARY.

Blackmailed or not, Vassall was soon squirreling away top-secret documents from the Naval Attaché’s office in his brief case to be photographed by the Soviets and then returned to the files the following morning. No one at the embassy appeared to notice that Vassall’s life-style had suddenly become luxurious. And so, his daily espionage activities at the British Embassy in Moscow continued until July 1956, when he returned to London and his new posting to the Admiralty’s Naval Intelligence Division.

In 1958, Vassall was appointed assistant private secretary to Mr. Thomas G. D. Galbraith, the Civil Lord of the Admiralty and a member of Parliament for the Hillhead Division of Glasgow.²⁴⁵ The flow of classified information to the Soviets continued including research reports from the Admiralty’s Underwater Weapons Research Establishment at Portland.²⁴⁶

In October 1959, Vassall received a substantial promotion to the Fleet Section of Military Branch II. The Soviets had struck gold! Vassall now had access to highly classified British Navy and NATO intelligence that included information on the Admiralty’s world-wide fleet including its operations and naval communications systems, and the latest breakthroughs in anti-submarine devices and radar technology.²⁴⁷ Vassall also provided the Soviets with details on the latest development of the British Royal Navy's Invincible class aircraft carriers.

By now, Vassall had become so adept at his craft, that he was able to photograph the thousands of top-secret documents he brought home by himself, which cut down on the time necessary to transmit the classified materials to the KGB Center at 2 Dzerzhinsky Square in Moscow.

In the meantime, no one at the Admiralty questioned how Vassall could afford his expensive new flat on Dolphin Square that was exquisitely furnished with costly antiques. Nor how Vassall managed to afford custom-made suits, shoes and accessories on a clerk's modest salary.²⁴⁸

Unfortunately for Vassall, in 1961, British Intelligence was put on "Red Alert" by Soviet defector Major Anatoli Golitsin, who reported that there was a mole in the Admiralty Office in London.²⁴⁹ Eighteen months later, in September 1962, Vassall was arrested by Special Branch officers on espionage charges after he was apprehended leaving his office with an attaché case filled with classified documents. When his apartment was searched, intelligence officers found 176 top-secret documents hidden in a secret drawer in his desk along with sophisticated photography equipment. Unlike the Cambridge spies, Vassall made a full confession that included a statement that he was motivated to spy for the Russians because he felt that his talents were under-appreciated by his superiors.

At his trial, Vassall played his "blackmail" card and, by coincidence, he had the photographs mentioned above to prove it. He then threw himself on the mercy of the court, but the presiding judge was more impressed by his bulging bank account, which pointed to old-fashioned greed as the real motive behind Vassall's espionage career.

During the hearings, it was revealed that a backlog in Naval Intelligence had prevented the "positive vetting" of Vassall. One of the letters of recommendation found in his file from an elderly lady friend hinted that the young man did not appear interested in the opposite sex, but this illusion to Vassall's homosexual proclivities apparently went over the head of the vetters at Whitehall. At work, his deceptive milk-sop demeanor made him an object of amusement and gossip, but not suspicion.

Fleet Street made its own unique contribution to muddying the truth by portraying Vassall as an ineffectual "pansy," "a homosexual wimp" and a "perfect idiot," forgetting, of course, that for seven years this "perfect idiot," had in the words of Rebecca West, "neatly weaved his way every evening down Whitehall to his flat on Dolphin Square, with an envelope in his overcoat full of secret documents, spending fussy and capable evenings photographing them nicely for the Soviet government, and every morning neatly weaving his way up Whitehall to the Admiralty again, to spend five minutes fussily and capably replacing the documents in their files."²⁵⁰

Later investigation revealed that at the Military Branch where Vassall worked, the security cupboards were operated by common keys and highly classified material was not separated or stored in more secure environments.²⁵¹ Vassall had his own suite key. The security guards stationed at office entrances rarely conducted random checks of the 9,000 employees that went through the Admiralty's doors every day.²⁵²

In the end, Vassall was found guilty of offenses against the Official Secrets Act and sentenced to 18 years in prison by the Lord Chief Justice, but he was paroled after serving only ten years. John Vassall died on November 18, 1996.

Inevitably, the question of blame came to the forefront. After the Burgess, Maclean and Philby spy spree, the public was convinced that Vassall had the protection of some influential official or officials at Whitehall. The opposition Labour Party who was having a political field day with the Vassall spy debacle suggested that Lord Peter Carrington, the First Lord of the Admiralty should resign.

The Kennedy Administration contributed its two-cents worth to the Vassall case by naïvely suggesting that Prime Minister Harold Macmillan fire all known homosexuals that were connected with government posts related to national security and defense. Macmillan, all too aware of the large numbers of high-ranking homosexuals at Whitehall, the Foreign Office and British Intelligence Services, fired back that he would not sink to McCarthy-like tactics.

Prime Minister Macmillan, however, did reluctantly appoint a formal Tribunal headed by Lord Radcliffe, Lord of Appeal, to conduct a thorough investigation of the circumstances in which Vassall's offences had been committed as well as other allegations that involved ministers, naval officers, and civil servants said to be connected with the case.²⁵³ Of particular interest were the 23 letters that were found among Vassall's belongings from Mr. Galbraith to Vassall that were written in 1957. For what reason would a Minister of the Crown be privately corresponding with his assistant secretary?²⁵⁴

However, the Tribunal's primary interest appeared to be tracking down two newspaper stories on the Vassall spy case that claimed 1) that Vassall had two sponsors in the Admiralty who had shielded him from important parts of the vetting process and 2) that Vassall sometimes wore women's clothes on West End trips.²⁵⁵ When Reg Foster of the Daily Sketch and Brendan Mulholland of the Daily Mail who filed the original stories refused to reveal their sources, Foster was sentenced to six months in jail and Mulholland received a three month sentence for contempt of court.

Soon it was back to business as usual at the Old Boys' Club.

Macmillan and his Conservative government managed to survive the Vassall scandal, only to be taken down by the Profumo Affair that was simmering in the wings. The well-publicized 1963 sex scandal did not involve homosexuality, at least directly. I have, however, included a brief synopsis of the affair because it will introduce the reader to Dr. Stephen Ward, who like Peter Montgomery, mentioned earlier in connection with his lover Anthony Blunt, will figure prominently at the conclusion of this chapter on the Vatican connection to the Cambridge spies.

The Profumo Scandal — Pimps, Call Girls and Spies

For all its world-wide publicity, it was basically a gal meets guy affair with one major complication. The “guy” was the very married, very distinguished, Harrow-Oxford graduate and former MP, John “Jack” Profumo, the British Secretary of State for War. The “gal” was a young beautiful showgirl and part-time hooker named Christine Keeler, who came from the stables of the well-known socialite-osteopath-pimp, Dr. Stephen Ward. And the “complication” was Captain Yevgeny “Eugene” Ivanov, an officer in the GRU (Soviet Military Intelligence) posing as a naval attaché at the Soviet Embassy in London. Keeler was also sexually servicing Ivanov. The whole affair probably would have been swept under the rug, like so many of the other tawdry affairs of prominent Establishment figures with girls many years their junior, had not Profumo made the unforgivable mistake of— no, not committing adultery and possibly imperiling national security— but, of denying the affair in a speech before the House of Commons.

Profumo was forced to retire in disgrace, but later managed to salvage some self-respect by conducting charity work in the East End for which the Queen awarded him one of the nation’s highest honors, the Commander of the British Empire. Keeler got a nine-month prison sentence for an unrelated perjury charge, loads of publicity, and numerous lucrative scandal-sheet contracts for revealing her “story.” Ivanov was called back to Moscow, after having successfully brought down the Macmillan Government, and was never heard from again.

Stephen Ward, who was responsible for introducing Profumo to Keeler, fared the worst. He allegedly took his own life under suspicious circumstances on July 30, 1963, the last day of his trial for pimping. The British Establishment could sleep much better at night now that Ward, the keeper of their dark secrets, was dead.

By the time titillation of the Profumo case wore off and the Vassall Affair became a distant memory, Philby had made it safely home to Moscow while Blunt was still freely roaming the halls of the Courtauld Institute.

The Cambridge Spies — A Final Assessment

It is impossible to discern which of the Cambridge spies was the most important to the Soviets or did the most damage to the national interests of Great Britain and the United States and their allies. Each, in their own way, contributed to the wholesale destruction of the West’s intelligence services that hemorrhaged for more than 30 years. There is no question today that for Stalin, virtually every intelligence secret Britain and the United States had was an open book.²⁵⁶

The record is clear. The Soviets knew every major intelligence operation run against them from 1945–1963. They knew every wartime movement the Germans made (in advance) thanks to their penetration of Bletchley Park where the British code breakers broke the German Enigma machine. They knew the exact date of D-Day — a secret that Churchill tried to keep from Stalin. They had access to every electronically transmitted verbatim communication between Roosevelt and Churchill, and later Truman and Churchill. Soviet scientists had sufficient scientific data to build an atomic-bomb. Stalin had previewed diplomatic agendas for all the Big Four Conferences on post-war Europe, and on and on, thanks to the Cambridge spies.

The Cambridge spies not only sent thousands of their own countrymen to their deaths, but American and other Allied forces as well. Yet none went to the gallows for their treachery. Nor did a one spend a single day in jail. It is a matter of public record that Whitehall did its part to make the life of Burgess and Maclean in Moscow as financially carefree as possible by granting the traitors “emigrant status” which enabled them to draw sterling from their private accounts with the Bank of England through the Russian State Bank.

Indeed all the evidence points to the fact that Burgess, Maclean and Philby were permitted to escape behind the Iron Curtain in order to avoid a public scandal. If Whitehall and Buckingham Palace wanted them caught — they would have been caught. British security laxity was criminal, but whose fault was that?

The famous spy novelist John le’ Carré, who like Rebecca West and John Costello, share a realistic view of traitors, once called MI5 and MI6 “sanctuaries for male misfits.” In intelligence work as in all British political life, top positions and rapid advancement was based foremost on class. There were many highly qualified MI5 and MI6 employees who were untainted by corruption, but high posts and rapid promotions were the exclusive prerogative of Britain’s ruling class — political leaders, high government officials and influential members of Parliament. That some were confirmed pederasts and/or Communists mattered not.²⁵⁷ It was a system that guaranteed British intelligence would self-destruct and it did with the Cambridge spies. The next step was to attempt an Establishment cover-up to protect the Old Boys’ Club and hide from the British public the extent of the damage done to the nation by the Cambridge spies. The age-old instinct for survival kicked in. When in doubt or difficulty, sit tight and say nothing and hope the disaster will blow over, was the “Law of the Club.”²⁵⁸ The Soviets depended upon it and they were not disappointed.

Lessons for the Catholic Church

In addition to offering a concrete example of the development and colonization of the emerging Homintern in the West during the first half of the 20th century, the betrayal of Britain and the British people by the Cambridge spies offers other insights that are applicable to the current situation in which the Roman Catholic Church finds itself besieged by the clerical Homintern.

As the late John Costello wrote, "If there is one lesson to be drawn from the career of Anthony Blunt and his Cambridge co-conspirators, it is that the ethics of conspiracy and the motivations for betrayal, are not merely ideological, but timeless and never-ending."²⁵⁹

Was the official cover-up by the British Establishment of the horrendous deeds of the Cambridge spies so very different from the American bishops' cover-up of the criminal deeds of its pederast and homosexual clergy and religious? Is not the Catholic clerical Homintern as capable of inflicting as great a harm on the Church and the faithful as that inflicted on the people and government of Britain by the Cambridge spies under the direction of the Communist Comintern?

Although the issue of the Communist infiltration of the Vatican and American Church as a factor in the rise of the Homintern in the Church is taken up in Chapter 18, "Twentieth Century Harbingers," some general observations based on the Cambridge experience are worth noting here.²⁶⁰

First, no effective action can be taken against the Homintern Network within the Roman Catholic Church unless that network is acknowledged and well understood. "Subversion and treason from within" combined with "attack from without" is as near perfect a prescription for disaster for the Church as it was for Britain during the era of the Cambridge spies.

The fact that the Catholic seminary, priesthood and religious orders are relatively "closed" societies is no guarantee they can't be effectively penetrated and colonized by hostile forces. After all, Japan was a relatively "closed" society during the 1930s and 1940s, and yet it was effectively penetrated by one of Stalin's greatest spy-masters, the Russian-born Richard Sorge. His Japanese espionage ring penetrated the highest levels of the Japanese intelligence that was thought to be impenetrable by foreign agents.²⁶¹

Careful vetting is as essential to the Catholic priesthood and religious life as it is to national intelligence services, even more so, since the stakes for the former are eternal. The current sex abuse scandal in the Catholic priesthood and religious orders in the United States and abroad is ample demonstration of this.

As in the secular order, prevention is the best cure for moral disorder. Once the moral cancer of homosexuality metastasizes a seminary or house of religious, half-measures are generally inadequate to bring the disease under control and the whole institution must be shut down.

However, as in the specific incidence of Cambridge traitor Anthony Blunt, competent vetting can be undone by corruption of those who exercise ultimate power and authority. The American bishops have their version of the British Old Boys' Club—the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops—and as it is currently constituted, it has been thoroughly compromised and corrupted by the Homintern.²⁶² The homosexual network at the USCCB operates no differently from the homosexual network at Cambridge, London, and Whitehall that made the Cambridge spy ring possible. The Old Boys' Club protects its own.

There is a similarity between a secular traitor's hatred of the Social Order and nation that nurtured him, and the homosexual priest's hatred of the Roman Catholic Church with its moral absolutes and restrictions and authority figures. Once the homosexual priest or religious is absorbed into the Homintern, his allegiance and subservience to it supersedes all other former loyalties. His devotion to his family and his faith is atrophied.

As Father Rueda has charged, this new allegiance is capable of functionally dissolving the normally stronger bonds of religious affiliation. Homosexual priests and religious not only foster dissension within the Church in matters of sexual morality, they also use the Church and its resources to spread the teachings and propaganda of the Homintern.²⁶³

Neither the State nor the Church can afford to ignore the presence of vice in its midst. Britain's upper-class winked at the violation of the moral law with regard to homosexuality and paid a heavy price for its folly. Likewise the Church cannot be indifferent to vice within its priestly ranks and expect to escape unscathed from the consequences of its actions.

The treacherous exploits of the Cambridge spies resulted in the massive hemorrhaging of intelligence to the Soviets and untold damage to Britain's national interests. The treacherous exploits of clerical pederasts and homosexuals in the Church has resulted in the massive hemorrhaging of fidelity in the Church and a feeling of betrayal in the hearts of every loyal Catholic layman and priest.

But even more damaging than the foul acts of a handful of moral miscreants in the priesthood and religious life, has been the cover-up by the American hierarchy of these betrayers of the Faith including those in their own ranks. Like the secular traitor, the homosexual-pederast bishop should be condemned as a moral pariah by his fellow bishops and scorned and ostracized by them. The Vatican should at the very least, remove the offending bishop from any position of authority, and where warranted, defrock and return him to the lay state.

Dame Rebecca West when commenting on the sentimentality generally associated with traitors like the Cambridge spies noted that "Everybody knew that they were Communists, but very few people really believed it," she said. For many, West continued, "Communism is like a dream, something you can recollect about ...a feature of a vulgar district in the world of fancy...and that it seemed quite ridiculous to think of it as a real threat." "Now even the media as well as the papers, with the day to day reporting of the Maclean and Burgess affair realized that this international conspiracy of Communism was as real as the railway accidents they were reporting and a lot more dangerous to the nation," she concluded.²⁶⁴

Likewise, today, virtually everyone in the Catholic Church today knows that there are active homosexual-pederasts in the priesthood, religious orders, national hierarchy and the Vatican, yet very few people actually believe it. Not until the secular media started to expose actual court cases involving clerical sex abuse by Catholic clerics did Catholics begin to realize the real threat to the Faith and the faithful posed by the clerical Homintern. All may not be lost, however, if to paraphrase the words of Dame West, Church leaders are willing to "trade in" their humiliations and wounded pride for "some much needed wisdom."²⁶⁵

The Cambridge Spies and the Vatican Connection

The Vatican connection to the Cambridge spies is best approached indirectly through the central character of Dr. Stephen Ward, to whom the reader has already been introduced in connection with the Profumo Scandal. For more than a decade, Ward played the sex-broker for a large number of wealthy and influential members of the British Establishment. He also provided high-class call girls for the British Intelligence Services some of whom were used in various honey-trap schemes or to fill the sexual needs of visiting dignitaries.²⁶⁶

Ward, as one might guess, was not your typical money-grubbing pimp. Rebecca West described him as a court jester who took vicarious delight in heterosexual matchmaking for his high-flying clients whose homes he inhabited—most notably Cliveden, the fabled English estate in Buckinghamshire of the Anglo-American Astors that was an exclusive gathering-place for London's wealthy, well-connected individuals—politicians, diplomats, policy analysts and peers. John Profumo's affair with Christine Keeler, a Ward creation, began at the Cliveden swimming-pool, and British Intelligence sometimes used the Astor residence to accommodate foreign hosts.²⁶⁷

A man of varied talents, Ward was a successful American-trained osteopath by profession, an outstanding bridge player and a professional portrait artist whose clients included members of the Royal family. He attracted a large number of upper class patients to his up-town Cavendish office including members of the Churchill family and other high-level government officials, peers, well-known vice-racketeers and international celebrities. Ward was also known to do abortions on the side.²⁶⁸ His fourth talent was pimping and the organization of exclusive sex parties that catered to the sophisticated sadomasochist and occult London crowd.²⁶⁹ Among Ward's close friends was Bill Astor, eldest of the four Astor boys, and one of Ward's wealthy and powerful patrons who had unconventional sexual tastes.

A lesser-known facet of Ward's quasi-secret world was his connections to London's upper class homosexual and lesbian networks that included prominent diplomats and clergy, Whitehall officials, and members of Oxbridge and London's literary and artistic circles.

One of Ward's most intimate relationships was with Bobbie Shaw, Bill Astor's stepbrother by his mother Nancy's first marriage. An active homosexual and alcoholic, the handsome and charming Bobbie was drummed out of the Blues, the Royal Horse Guards, for being drunk on duty and was later arrested and imprisoned for homosexual offenses. He died by his own hand.²⁷⁰

Among the prominent British homosexual diplomats and civil servants with whom Ward cavorted was Sir John Gilbert Laithwaite, the first United Kingdom Ambassador to Ireland and Deputy Under Secretary of State in the Commonwealth Relations Office for India.

Laithwaite was a prominent member of the elite Travelers' Club that catered to travelers of distinction and where London's upper-crust homosexuals shared drinks, ideas and gossip.²⁷¹ Sir Gilbert maintained his homosexual connections with numerous Foreign Office officials scattered around the world as senior diplomats. He, like Bobbie Shaw, was indebted to Ward for introducing him to young homosexual partners that were brought to Cliveden.

Ward was also on friendly terms with the dynamic Cambridge homosexual trio of Guy Burgess, Anthony Blunt and Peter Montgomery, Blunt's young lover and closest friend and confidant.

Peter Montgomery was born in 1909 to a distinguished Irish family with important connections to the Protestant Orange Order and a large estate at Blessingbourne, Fivemiletown in Northern Ireland.²⁷² Like many Irish upper-class gentlemen, he was a product of the English public school system that included Wellington College and Cambridge. A handsome, rather shy young man with girlish looks, the artistically-inclined Montgomery remained the submissive and adoring partner of Blunt throughout their short-lived romance and life-long friendship.

At the start of the Second World War, to the surprise of all his friends, Peter decided to follow the Montgomery family tradition and took up a career in the military with the Royal Intelligence Corps, 21st Army Group.²⁷³ In 1945 he was made aide-de-camp to Archibald Percival Wavell, the Viceroy and Governor-General of India.²⁷⁴

After the war ended, Peter drifted back to his first loves, art and music, and to Irish politics.

A talented musician and accomplished conductor in his own right, he was appointed to the BBC's General Advisory Council (1952-1971) and became President of the Arts Council of Northern Ireland where he served from 1964-1974. In 1964 he was made High Sheriff of County Tyrone and later, Her Majesty's Vice-Lieutenant of County Tyrone.²⁷⁵

Although, in his later years, Peter Montgomery went on record as telling British Intelligence, who was investigating Blunt's Soviet connections, that he never had any secrets from Anthony, it remains unclear if he ever shared any classified information, knowingly or unknowingly, with Blunt while in the Army.

When in London, Peter stayed with Anthony at the Courtauld Institute and was introduced to Blunt's Royal connections at Buckingham and Westminster and to Blunt's young "gay" party guests.²⁷⁶

In turn, Blunt occasionally visited Peter at the family estate in Northern Ireland where the Cambridge spy was introduced to the Irish "country-house" homosexual circuit.²⁷⁷ It is possible that Peter and Anthony were provided with young Irish boys from local orphanages or welfare centers like the Kincora Working Boys' Hostel in East Belfast. In 1980, the Kincora Pederast Scandal broke into the news.²⁷⁸ The orphanage's "housefather" William McGrath, dubbed "The Beast of Kincora" was arrested, tried and convicted for rape and sodomy of minors under his care. One of the dark secrets that came to light during the trial was that McGrath, who had served as an MI5 operative and was active in Ulster paramilitary adventures, had been financed up until mid-1976 by none other than Sir Knox Cunningham, Blunt and Peter Montgomery's mutual friend and fellow homosexual from Cambridge.²⁷⁹

Hugh Montgomery and Battista Montini

What little is known about Hugh Montgomery, Peter's brother, has come to us largely from the Irish writer Robin Bryans, who, although himself from humble origins, eventually became part of the London homosexual clique that included all of the above mentioned characters. Taken as a whole, Bryans' observations, and recollections have proven to be quite accurate and he has kept a large correspondence to back up his memories.

According to Bryans, Hugh Montgomery, like his brother, Peter, was a member of Ward's homosexual clique. Hugh's one-time lover was Sir Gilbert Laithwaite who sponsored him for membership in the elite Traveler's Club.

During the mid-1930s, Hugh Montgomery, as a young and upcoming member of the British diplomatic corps, served as the Chargé d'Affaires under Sir Alec Randall, the British representative to the Vatican. It was at this time that Hugh met an equally ambitious and upward-bound Vatican diplomat by the name Mgr. Giovanni Battista Montini. Later, Hugh converted to Catholicism, entered Beta College, and was ordained a Catholic priest. Harbinson said that Hugh told him that at one time he and Montini had been lovers.²⁸⁰

Was Hugh Montgomery telling the truth about his relationship with the future Pope Paul VI or was he exaggerating the degree of intimacy of their friendship? Did Hugh discuss his alleged affair with Montini with his brother, Peter? If so, had Peter relayed the story to his lover Anthony Blunt, who, most assuredly would have passed the information on to his Soviet controller for possible blackmail use? In short, is there a connection between the Cambridge spy network and the Vatican? These are important as well as intriguing questions that will be fully explored in Section V that includes a detailed analysis of the charges of homosexuality that have been leveled against Pope Paul VI.²⁸¹

Notes

- 1 Claire Sterling, Octopus: The Long Reach of the Sicilian Mafia (New York: W.W. Norton and Co., 1990), 314.
- 2 John Costello, Mask of Treachery— The First Documented Dossier on Blunt, MI5, and Soviet Subversion (London: William Collins Sons & Co. LTD, 1988), 8.
- 3 Rueda, 249– 250.
- 4 Martin Dies, The Trojan Horse in America (New York: Arno Press, 1977; reprint, New York: Dodd, Mead and Company, 1940), 224. The endnote is a paraphrasing of Dies' classic commentary: "The enemies within a country constitute a peril as great as any foreign force— treason from within aided by invasion from without."
- 5 Radosh and Milton, Introduction.
- 6 Alexander Orlov, Handbook of Intelligence and Guerrilla Warfare (Ann Arbor, Mich.: University of Michigan Press, 1963), 25. Before WWII , Orlov was one of the chiefs of Soviet Intelligence. After his defection to the West, he lectured widely on Soviet tactics and strategy of intelligence and counterintelligence. In 1936, Orlov wrote a manual used by the newly created NKVD schools for undercover intelligence officers and for the Central Military School in Moscow. In 1963, he was commissioned by the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor to reconstruct that manual.
- 7 Ibid., 94.
- 8 Ibid., 95.
- 9 Ibid.
- 10 Victor Ostrovsky and Claire Hoy, By Way of Deception— The Making and Unmaking of a Mossad Officer (New York: St. Martin's Press, 1990), 98.
- 11 Ibid.
- 12 H. Bradford Westerfield, ed., Inside CIA's Private World— Declassified Articles from the Agency's Internal Journal 1955–1992 (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1995), 79– 80.
- 13 Ibid., 80.
- 14 Ibid., 75.
- 15 Ibid.

- 16 Statement of Atomic-bomb spy Klaus Fuchs as recorded in William Stevenson, Intrepid's Last Case (New York: Villard Books, Random House, Inc., 1983), 169. See also Radosh and Milton, 30. Compartmentalization is the hallmark of a spy as well as a homosexual. Atomic bomb spy, Klaus Fuchs, stated he used his "Marxist philosophy to establish in my mind two separate compartments: one compartment in which I allowed myself to make friendships ...to help people and to be in all personal ways the kind of man I want to be ...I knew that the other compartment would step in if I approached the danger point. ...I had succeeded in the other compartment of establishing myself completely independent of the surrounding forces of society. Looking back, it seems better to call it a controlled schizophrenia." Similarly, Harry Gold (Golodnitsky) a graduate from Xavier University and a U.S. convicted industrial and atomic spy for the Soviet Union, testified that in order to deal with the tremendous tensions and inconveniences of living a life as a Communist agent he developed a dual personality. He said that when he went on a spy mission, he totally forgot his normal life, his home, family, work and friends, and just became a single-minded automaton. When he returned home, he swung into reverse gear and he would bury all that he had done that night or on that particular mission.
- 17 Westerfield, 75.
- 18 Ibid., 80.
- 19 Ibid., 75.
- 20 Zvi Y. Gitelman, Jewish Nationality and Soviet Politics— the Jewish Section of the CPSU, 1917–1930, (Princeton, N.J.: Princeton Press, 1972), 117. The author's research was carried out under the auspices of the Research Institute on Communist Affairs, Columbia University. See also Louis Rapoport, Stalin's War Against the Jews (New York: Maxwell Macmillan International, 1990).
- 21 Ibid.
- 22 Ibid.
- 23 Ibid.
- 24 Ibid., 118.
- 25 Radosh and Milton, 23–25.
- 26 Ibid., 338–339.
- 27 Rueda, 127.
- 28 William R. Corson and Robert T. Crowley, The New KGB — Engine of Soviet Power (New York: William Morrow and Co., 1985), 14.
- 29 Bray, 19.
- 30 See Andrew Boyle, The Fourth Man, (New York: Dial Press/James Wade, 1979), 221.
- 31 John Barron, KGB The Secret Work of Soviet Agents (New York: Reader's Digest Press, E. P. Dutton & Co., 1974), 207. See Chapter X, "Treasures from the Vault" for an extraordinary tale of espionage.
- 32 Gerard J. M. van den Aardweg, Ph.D., The Battle for Normality — A Guide for (Self-) Therapy for Homosexuality, (San Francisco: Ignatius Press, 1997), 68–69.
- 33 Ibid., 69.
- 34 Deacon, The French Secret Service, 17.

- 35 Ibid., 17–20.
- 36 David Lewis, Sexpionage— The Exploitation of Sex by Soviet Intelligence (New York, London: Harcourt, Brace, Jovanovich, 1976), 25.
- 37 Chapman Pincher, Inside Story (New York: Stein and Day, 1979), 28.
- 38 For an excellent analysis of Stalin's massive purges see Robert Conquest, The Great Terror— A Reassessment (New York: Oxford University Press, 1990).
- 39 Phillip Knightley, Bruce Page, David Leitch, The Philby Conspiracy (Garden City, New York: Doubleday & Co., 1968), 14.
- 40 Ibid.
- 41 Ibid.
- 42 For a credulous new analysis of the origins of World War II see Ernst Topitsch, Stalin's War (New York: St. Martin's Press, 1985).
- 43 Orlov, 15.
- 44 Ibid., 17.
- 45 Ibid., 15.
- 46 Ibid.
- 47 Costello, 216.
- 48 Reference to lax British intelligence vetting policies of known homosexuals in sensitive government and intelligence positions taken from Andrew Hodges, "The Military Use of Alan Turing" available from <http://www.turing.org.uk/publications/mathswar3.html>.
- 49 West, 172.
- 50 Ibid.
- 51 Ibid., 103.
- 52 Ibid., 142.
- 53 Ibid., 173.
- 54 Lewis, 44–45.
- 55 Ibid., 36.
- 56 Ibid.
- 57 Ibid., 56.
- 58 Ibid.
- 59 Jamie Glazov, "A Homosexual and Naïve Canadian Ambassador to Moscow: A Serious No-No in the Cold War," FrontPageMagazine.com., July 25, 2001 at <http://www.frontpagemag.com/Articles/Printable.asp?ID=993>.
- 60 Ibid.
- 61 Ibid.
- 62 West, 216.
- 63 Lewis, 4–5.
- 64 See John Earl Haynes and Harvey Klehr, VENONA: Decoding Soviet Espionage in America (New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press; 1999). For further insights into the Soviet infiltration of the OSS see <http://members.iglou.com/jtmajor/Venona1.htm>. For information on the role of the Sicilian Mafia in the OSS see Sterling's Octopus.
- 65 The OSS trained many of the early leaders and personnel of the Central Intelligence Agency including four future Directors of Central Intelligence: Allen Dulles, Richard Helms, William Colby, and William Casey. James Jesus Angleton, CIA Counter-intelligence Chief, began his espionage career in the OSS working with his father in Italy. Victor Marchetti and John D. Marks in The CIA and the Cult of Intelligence (New York: Alfred A Knopf, 1974) described the CIA's Old Boys' Club thusly: "Its holy men are the clandestine professionals in the Central Intelligence Agency. Its patrons and protectors are the highest officials of the federal government. Its membership, extending far beyond government circles, reaches into the power centers of industry, commerce, finance and labor. Its friends are many in the areas of importance— the academic world and the communications media. The cult of intelligence is a secret fraternity of the American political aristocracy." How closely the CIA is tied to the liberal Eastern Establishment, (that works closely with the "conservative" Right-wing groups) is demonstrated in the minutes of a private meeting of former and active CIA members at the Harold Pratt House, home of the quasi-secret Council on Foreign Relations, that took place on January 8, 1968. The purpose of the gathering was to discuss the role of the CIA in "covert-action" abroad. It is interesting that the meeting did not take place at the CIA's official headquarters in Langley, Virginia. The nature of this elite meeting composed almost exclusively of WASPish (white, Anglo-Saxon Protestant) Establishment figures reflected the prototype of the CIA's leadership since its creation in 1947. The confidential minutes of the 1968 meetings were discovered in 1971 when a group of radical students ransacked Harvard University's Center for International Affairs and found the document among the papers of Center associate William Harris.

- 66 Corson and Crowley, 193. See also Christopher Andrew and Vasili Mitrokhin, The Sword and the Shield— The Mitrokhin Archive and the Secret History of the KGB (New York: Basic Books, 1999), 57.
- 67 It is true that the GRU had several other independent-operating spy rings in place in Britain. However, all of them, including the Oxford spy ring lacked the equivalent of the clandestine powerhouse— the Apostles— that made the Cambridge spy carousel go round and insured automatic access to the corridors of power and rapid advancement to the top of the intelligence and governmental heap. Members of the Oxford Soviet spy ring included Patrick Day; Phoebe Pool, a courier for the Oxford Ring and a colleague of Blunt's at the Courtauld Institute who committed suicide by throwing herself in front of a train; Peter Floud, Director of the Victoria and Albert Museum; Bernard Floud, a senior Labour MP who was recruited by James Klugman and committed suicide in 1967; Herbert Hart who married a Communist agent (Jennifer Hart)— Herbert shared his MI5 office with Blunt; Sir Andrew Cohen, a senior diplomat who died of a heart attack following an intelligence interrogation; and Arthur Wynn, who was active in trade union circles and joined the civil service and Sir Peter Chalmers Mitchell of Christ Church College. VENONA also gave the Code Names of other British spies including DAN, LEAF, JACK, and the intriguing team of DAVID and ROSA implying that there was a broader net of British spies acting for Soviet interests than hereto suspected. See <http://www.trinity.ox.ac.uk/ian.yeung/spy.htm>. Goronwy Rees, a Fellow of All Souls and Oxford scholar, was a close friend of Blunt and a confirmed Marxist, but he did not accept Blunt's offer to become a Soviet agent. Costello related that after 1939, Rees helped British intelligence. In 1956, Rees authored a sensational series of anonymous articles for The Sunday People that charged that blackmail and homosexuality had contributed to extensive Marxists penetration of the British security system. According to Rees, Blunt was a kind of Grey Eminence behind Burgess and other disciples most of whom belonged to the Apostles, and he manipulated his friends through the agency of the Mosca-like Burgess. Among the advantages that Cambridge had over Oxford in terms of high-level recruitment was, of course, the Apostles. Cambridge also had the Cavendish Laboratory, one of the world's leading research centers in physics. In 1921 Stalin sent the Russian scientist Pyotr Kapitza to Cambridge where he founded the Kapitza Club, that encouraged scientific "sharing" apart from any ideological differences. When Kapitza was ordered by Stalin to return to Moscow he took all his Cavendish equipment with him including the clocks and wall fittings that were packed and shipped for his new Soviet lab. To evade British intelligence there were three separate ship loadings of the materials. The information provided by Soviet spies in Britain and the United States pales in comparison with the "vast materials gleaned openly at the Kapitza Club," claimed Andrew Sinclair. Stephen Spender agreed that, "these Communist scientists were victims of a kind of moral blindness which had long characterized science, but was not to be excused for that reason."

- 68 George Orwell, The Lion and the Unicorn: Socialism and the English Genius, Part I, "England Your England," (London, 1941) available from <http://www.k-1.com/Orwell/lion.htm>.
- 69 Richard Deacon, The Cambridge Apostles (New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1986), 1. Although Deacon's research on the Apostles as a group is excellent, his political opinions are less objective. For example, he referred to Senator Joseph McCarthy's "virulent and ridiculous anti-Communist campaign," when in fact, McCarthy's charges were anything but ridiculous, as confirmed by the VENONA revelations. See also Dennis O'Keeffe, "Cambridge, Right or Wrong," from a World and I review (May 1987) available from <http://www.worldandi.com/public/1987/may/bk5.cfm>.
- 70 Robert Skidelsky, John Maynard Keynes, Vol. I, "Hopes Betrayed 1883-1920," (New York: Viking Penguin, Inc., 1986), 116.
- 71 Deacon, 3.
- 72 Ibid., 40.
- 73 Ibid., 55.
- 74 Andrew Sinclair The Red and the Blue— Cambridge, Treason and Intelligence (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1986), 39, 144.
- 75 Skidelsky, 119.
- 76 Costello, 143.
- 77 Michael Holroyd, Lyttton Strachey— The Unknown Years 1880-1910, Vol. 1, (New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 1967), 167.
- 78 Ibid.
- 79 John Maynard Keynes (1883-1946) attended Eton and King's College, Cambridge. As recorded by his principle biographer, Robert Skidelsky, in February 1903, Keynes was initiated into the Apostles as no. 243. For much of his early adult life at King's as an undergraduate and later fellow, Keynes led a very compartmentalized existence between his private and public-professional life. Skidelsky states he had many casual homosexual affairs including trysts with rough trade during his university days, at least one of which led to his being blackmailed. Among his "great loves" was Trinity freshman, Arthur Hobhouse, whom Keynes later brought into the Society. After World War I, Keynes played a key role at the Paris Peace Conference. Over his lifetime, he held many key government economic posts and became chairman of the National Mutual Life Assurance Society that "put him at the center of England's financial oligarchy." Giles Lytton Strachey (1880-1932) was a sexual rival of Maynard Keynes. According to his biographer, Michael Holroyd, Strachey was a sickly and nervous child with a clever intellect. He went on to become one of Trinity College's most notorious homosexuals. From 1904 to 1914 he was a literary reviewer for The Spectator magazine, but his most prominent written work was his 1918 classic the Eminent Victorians. The artist Dora Carrington fell into a one-sided love affair with Strachey and cared for him until his death even though she was married to Ralph Partridge. On March 14, 1932, seven weeks after Lytton's death, she took her own life. Carrington was one of a number of what homosexuals today refer to as "fag hags" — women who attach themselves to known homosexuals in unrequited relationships. Duncan James Corrowr Grant (1885-1978), a leader of the English Post-Impressionist painters was a much sought out sexual partner among the Apostles and Bloomberries. He was born into a prominent Scottish family at his ancestral home Inverness shire on January 21, 1885. A seasoned traveler to India and Burma by the age of nine, he was educated at Hillbrow Preparatory School, Rugby, and later attended the Westminster School of Art, and Trinity College, Cambridge. Lytton Strachey was Grant's cousin. The "great love" of his life, according to his biographer, Douglas Blair Turnbaugh, was Paul Roche, whom Grant met in 1946 when Roche, a newly ordained Roman Catholic priest, was serving at a parish in Chelsea. Grant also loved Vanessa Stephen Bell who was his confidant for more than 50 years and by whom he fathered a daughter, Angelica (Bell). He died at the age of 93 and was buried beside Vanessa in the little churchyard at Firle. David "Bunny" Garnett, who was one of Grant's partners, married Angelica Bell in 1942. An important but more peripheral figure on the Bloomsbury scene was writer Edward Morgan (E. M.) Forster (1879-1970). He was born in Dorset Square, London, to middle-class parents. His father died when he was one year old and he grew up in a household dominated by females. He attended boarding school at Tonbridge Wells, which he hated. In 1897, he went up to King's College, Cambridge, which he loved. He became an Apostle with the aide of another King's undergraduate, H. O. Meredith and was an avowed homosexual. Although he had a distinct weakness for lower class youth, he never confused "loving working men individually with loving the masses," that is to say, he was not a Marxist. His most lasting works were A Room With A View, Howards End and A Passage to India. One of Forster's protégées was the young writer and playwright, Joseph Randolph (J. R.) Ackerly (1896-1967) who was studying law at Cambridge when the two met. Ackerly's autobiography My Father and Myself (New York: Poseidon Press, 1968) contains some of the most memorable insights into homosexual promiscuity ever written. Ackerly wrote that his early solitary and group masturbatory activities began at Rossall Preparatory School and continued through public school at Lancashire. His later sex life at Cambridge and afterwards resulted in sexual contact with hundreds of working-class youth and uniformed soldiers. Oddly enough, Ackerly said he was monogamous not promiscuous, but he had simply had "a run of bad luck...." looking for his "ideal friend." In his relations with guardsmen, who Ackerly said were prone to robbery and violence against "twanks," "prossies" and "bags" like him, the writer said he deliberately selected boys who were of "colorless character" or "no character at all." In the mid-30s he began to keep a day-to-day diary of his nocturnal ramblings, but it was so boring he gave up writing in his diary about them. Ackerly said that some 15 years later he chanced to come across the diary and he "saw it as something evil." "The evil was in the misery," he said. "It contained no single gleam of pleasure or happiness, no philosophy, not even a joke; it was a story of unrelieved gloom and despondency, of deadly monotony, of frustration, loneliness, self-pity, of boring "finds," of wonderful chances muffed through fear, of the latchkey turned night after night into the cold, dark, empty flat, of railings against fate for the emptiness and wretchedness of my life. It contained, the saddest thing of all, my critical comments upon my first meeting with that Welsh boy, now dead, his dullness and smelly feet." Happiness came to Ackerly in the form of an Alsatian bitch, named Tulip. He said she gave him "the constant, single-hearted, incorruptible, uncritical devotion" that his sex life never brought him. His "ideal friend" turned out to be "man's best friend." Ackerly, however, did not give up his homosexual life altogether and still went looking for sexual adventures as the occasion provided especially when he went abroad.

- 80 Other Bloomsbury members included millionaire country squire, Trinity graduate and art critic for the New Statesman and Nation, Clive Bell (1881–1964) who married Vanessa Stephan in 1907; Trinity educated, civil servant in Ceylon, writer, publisher Leonard Woolf (1880–1969) who married Virginia Stephan; Trinity man and Apostle, and long-time civil servant in the British Treasury, Saxon Sydney-Turner; King's College man, prominent art critic and lover of Vanessa Stephen, Roger Fry (1866–1934); and editor and journalist Desmond MacCarthy (1877–1952) and his wife Molly. MacCarthy attended Trinity College, and was a member of the Apostles. He was a close friend of the philosopher George Edward (G.E.) Moore (1873–1958), whose revolutionary work Principia Ethica (1903) had an important influence on the Bloomsbury group. Moore was a student of Apostle Bertrand Russell.
- 81 Skidelsky, 329.
- 82 Ibid., 193. The author recorded that Strachey said Keynes kept an inordinately filthy engagement book of homosexual affairs during his Cambridge years at King's College. For a look at Keynes new found love see Polly Hill and Richard Keynes, eds., Lydia and Maynard—The Letters of John Maynard Keynes and Lydia Lopokova (New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, NY, 1989). It seems to this writer that no person of good-will and normal intelligence who reads the delightful correspondence and love letters between Keynes and his future wife between 1918 and 1925, can hold the view that homosexuals can never change the object of their sexual desires.
- 83 Sinclair, 189.
- 84 Ibid.
- 85 There has always been a debate among intelligence writers on the Cambridge spy ring as to the order of recruitment and the relative importance of Anthony Blunt, Guy Burgess, Kim Philby and Donald Maclean and the mysterious "Fifth Man" about which there has been endless speculation. My preference is to list them by birth dates beginning with Blunt, the oldest traitor and ending with Donald Maclean, the youngest, but by no means the least of the Apostles.
- 86 Costello, 145. After leaving Trinity, Alister Watson worked for the Radar and Signals Establishment of the Navy before becoming head of the Submarine

- Detection Research Station at the Admiralty Research Laboratories where he had access to many secrets but was subsequently transferred to a less sensitive post when MI5 discovered his Marxist beliefs. He never confessed to any wrongdoing. See by Andrew Hodges, "The Military Use of Alan Turing," at <http://www.turing.org.uk/publications/mathswar3.html>. In 1965, Dennis Proctor served as Permanent Secretary at the Ministry of Fuel and Power. As a senior civil servant he was instrumental in overriding MI5's recommendation that Anthony Blunt be excluded from British intelligence work based on his Marxist affiliations including a trip to the Soviet Union. This is an example of the Soviets having the right man in the right place at the right time.
- 87 Biographical information on Blunt's early years was taken from a number of sources including Miranda Carter, Anthony Blunt, His Lives (New York: Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 2002).
 - 88 Ibid., online version.
 - 89 Ibid. Wilfrid Blunt reminisced about his childhood and early homosexual yearnings and life as a schoolmaster in Married to a Single Life—An Autobiography, Years 1901–1938 (London: Michael Russell Ltd., 1983). Unlike his brother, Anthony, Wilfrid appeared to be a kindly, simple soul with a good sense of humor and a conscience (albeit, an agnostic one). He was a partially sublimated pederast who remained somewhat of an "innocent" throughout his life.
 - 90 Ibid. Under the Marlborough tuition system, sons of clergymen paid only 60% of the fees paid by laymen.
 - 91 Costello, 60.
 - 92 Ibid., 66.
 - 93 Ibid., 77–78.
 - 94 Ibid., 77.
 - 95 Ibid., 130.
 - 96 Ibid., 86.
 - 97 Bryans comments on Cunningham were recorded in Chris Moore, The Kincora Scandal (Dublin: Marino, 1996), 89.
 - 98 Ibid., 88–89.
 - 99 Clive Bell's son Julian was one of Blunt's lovers.
 - 100 Costello, 147.
 - 101 See David Pryce-Jones, "A complete moral void," a critical book review of Miranda Carter, Anthony Blunt: His Lives from The New Criterion Online, Vol. 20, No. 7, March 2002 available from <http://www.newcriterion.com/archive/20/mar02/blunt.htm>. As Pryce-Jones points out, Carter was uncritical of Blunt's treachery and would have liked to have "rehabilitated" him if she could.
 - 102 Ibid. That Blunt along with Burgess, Maclean and Philby were well paid for their treachery was confirmed by Oleg Gordievsky, the former KGB resident in London and the highest ranking KGB officer ever to defect to the West. He said that it was part of his duties to keep the record of payments to the Cambridge spies.
 - 103 Ibid.
 - 104 See Dan Healey, Homosexual Desire in Revolutionary Russia—The Regulation of Sexual and Gender Dissent (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 2001), 185. Also Conquest, 317. In March 1934, the Supreme Soviet made the urban sodomite purge official when it reinstituted Russia's anti-sodomy laws as an "anti-fascist social hygiene measure" to curb pederasts who "corrupt" Soviet youth.

- 105 World Revolution in art as in politics costs money, and the Warburgs had sufficient wealth to finance both. Aby Warburg (1866–1929) founded the Warburg Institute in Germany. It was transferred from Hamburg to London in 1934. Aby's brothers financed World Revolution— both Nazism and Marxism. Paul M. Warburg, a partner in Kuhn, Loeb & Company, was a representative of the Rothschild banking dynasty in England and France who helped finance the Bolshevik Russian, and brother Max Warburg was head of the Warburg banking consortium in Germany and the Netherlands. See Anthony Sutton's masterpieces Wall Street and the Bolshevik Revolution, (Virginia: Arlington House, 1974) and Wall Street and the Rise of Hitler (Ill.: Bloomfield Books, 1976).
- 106 See Charles Saumarez Smith, "Scholar, gentleman, prig, spy," The Observer, 11 November 2001. This review of Miranda Carter biography of Blunt is found at Guardian Unlimited Online— <http://books.guardian.co.uk/whitbread2002/story/0,12605,842777,00.html>.
- 107 Costello, 369.
- 108 Nigel West and Oleg Tsarev, The Crown Jewels— The British Secrets at the Heart of the KGB Archives (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1998), 132.
- 109 Ibid.
- 110 Costello, 369.
- 111 Ibid., 368.
- 112 Ibid., Also Christopher Andrew, Her Majesty's Secret Service— The Making of the British Intelligence Community (New York: Viking Press, 1986), 403.
- 113 Andrew, 403.
- 114 Ibid., 401.
- 115 Chapman Pincher, Their Trade is Treachery, Revised ed. (New York: Bantam Books, Inc., 1982), 245.
- 116 Pryce-Jones. The myth that Blunt was corrupted in his personal and espionage life but honorable in his professional role as an art historian and authenticator is put to rest by Igor Golomstock in "The Forger and the Spy," Commentary, May 1999, available from http://www.findarticles.com/cf_0/m1061/5_107/54561433/print.jhtml. Golomstock revealed that, Eric Hebborn, an English-born painter, homosexual and former lover of Anthony Blunt, who maintained his own private art gallery in Rome, had a number of certificates of authentication issued for his forged masterpieces that were sold to famous art galleries around the world. When his crime was discovered and his intimate relationship with the Soviet spy revealed, Hebborn insisted that he never asked Blunt to authenticate any of the forgeries he had brought to England from Italy. According to Golomstock, however, there were several passages in Hebborn's memoirs that confirmed that Blunt did in fact play an important role in certifying the painter's fakes as genuine. Hebborn died in a Rome hospital in January 1996 shortly after he was found in a public park in Rome, the victim of a violent attack.

- 117 Kim Philby's comments concerning young Guy Burgess were reported by his wife, Rufina, in Rufina Philby, Hayden Peake and Mikhail Lyubimov, The Private Life of Kim Philby (New York: Fromm International, 2000), 230–231.
- 118 Unlike the other Cambridge traitors, early biographical data on Burgess including his family life and early childhood is conspicuously absent from the records. The author obtained some information on his early life from the Dwyer-Laye Family website at <http://www.geocities.com/layedwyer>. The website was created by Patrick Paskiewicz who teaches English at Henry Ford, Oakland, and Schoolcraft Community Colleges.
- 119 Yuri Modin, My 5 Cambridge Friends, Burgess, Maclean, Philby, Blunt and Cairncross (New York: Farrar Straus & Giroux, 1994), 72. Yuri Modin, the KGB controller for the Cambridge spies including Guy Burgess from 1947–1953, confirmed the details of Guy's Moscow visit in his recollections of the Cambridge spies.
- 120 Deacon, 119.
- 121 Barrie Penrose and Simon Freeman, Conspiracy of Silence: The Secret Life of Anthony Blunt (New York: Farrar Straus & Giroux, 1987), 319–320.
- 122 Ibid.
- 123 Costello, 203.
- 124 Penrose and Freeman, 320.
- 125 Ibid., 206.
- 126 For an excellent portrait of Sir John Philby and his son see Anthony Cave Brown, Treason in the Blood (Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company, 1994). Also Phillip Knightley, Bruce Page, and David Leitch, The Philby Conspiracy (Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday & Co. 1968) and Phillip Knightley, The Master Spy—The Story of Kim Philby (New York: Alfred A. Kopf, 1989).
- 127 Brown, 133.
- 128 Ibid., 134–135.
- 129 Ibid., 135.
- 130 Ibid., 138.
- 131 Ibid.
- 132 Ibid., 140.
- 133 Modin, 49.
- 134 Ibid.
- 135 Rufina Philby, Peake, and Lyubimov, 404.
- 136 Ibid., 407.
- 137 Clan website at <http://www.electricscotland.com/webclans/m/maclean2.html>
- 138 Well known literary artists and homosexuals W. H. Auden and Christopher Isherwood were Gresham's School alumni.
- 139 See Costello, 307. Also, Rufina Philby, Peake, and Lyubimov, 406.
- 140 See Dr. Diana M. Henderson, "Scots at War/Secret War/Soviet Spies," available at <http://www.scotsatwar.org.uk/secret/soviet.html> Trust, Edinburgh, Scotland.
- 141 Pryce-Jones. The figure 17,000 is based on information from the Soviet archives recently made available to scholars from the West. Burgess, Maclean and Cairncross were each said to have transferred three times that number to Moscow.

- 142 Costello, 432, 412.
- 143 E. Michael Jones, "Homosexual as Subversive: The Double Life of Sir Anthony Blunt," Fidelity Magazine (May 1988): 29.
- 144 Costello, 372.
- 145 Ibid., 606.
- 146 Ibid., 407.
- 147 Among the various theories that have been put forth as to the exact nature of Blunt's royal mission are; (1) It involved the retrieval of some romantically indelicate letters belonging to the Royals; (2) That Blunt and the Royal librarian from Windsor Castle visited the old Kronberg castle in May 1945 to secure from the U.S. Army officials stationed there two crates that supposedly contained secret documents, but were in reality valuable gems; and (3) That they were ordered to retrieve Nazi records that involved a possible secret alliance between Germany and England against Stalin.
- 148 Costello, 369, 443-471.
- 149 Ibid., 4.
- 150 Ibid., 465.
- 151 Ibid., 466.
- 152 See Vivian Bird, "Homosexuality in Britain gets Increasing Acceptance," Spotlight, 29 February 29, 1988.
- 153 Guy Liddell, a Deputy Director of M15 in charge of "B" the Counterintelligence Division, was in the midst of a disastrous marriage when Blunt befriended him. Like Blunt, Liddell had some distant aristocratic connections. His father was reported to have been a stern military-type and his mother a doter. According to intelligence writer John Costello, Liddell also harbored a philistine view of British society. His "incautious" friendships and "unfortunate" wartime associations with known homosexuals made him an exploitable commodity for the Soviets, said Costello. The fact that his early performance at M15 was fraught with so many "mishaps" and irregularities, and that Moscow's penetration of British counterintelligence reached its peak under Liddell, said Costello, indicated one of three things— either he had "unconceivable bad luck" or he was "totally incompetent to the point of criminal negligence" to hold office or he was a Soviet mole. In any case Costello noted, compromised and "passive" spies can be "every bit as damaging as active ones." Hollis was a different story. Born in 1905, Roger Hollis was like Blunt, the son of a clergyman. He was educated at Worcester College, Oxford where he gravitated toward liberal politics. Among his Oxford friends were Claud Cockburn, a dedicated Communist; Maurice Richardson and the notorious homosexual and later Communist agent, Thomas Driberg. Hollis worked at the Standard Bank in London for a time and then went to China where he made contact with the dedicated Communist, Agnes Smedley. The thrice-married Hollis was regarded as somewhat of a womanizer and "a retailer of risqué stories." Hollis' record of incompetency as General Director of M15's was legendary. According to Chapman Pincher, Hollis was "a disaster" in the Fuchs spy case and grossly mishandled the Profumo Scandal as well as the critical interrogation of Philby. He was in office when Commander Lionel Crabb the navy frogman was murdered and his headless body washed ashore following a mismanaged espionage trip against a Soviet vessel in Portsmouth. At one point during his stint at M15, Hollis attempted - to destroy the diaries of Liddell that gave a full record of M15 activities during the war. Interestingly, the allegations that Hollis might be a Soviet spy originated from his own colleagues inside M15. When Hollis was later interrogated he gave a poor accounting of himself, but no issues were ever settled. Like Liddell, Hollis' general incompetence appeared to be no detriment to his promotion and eventual knighthood. His was a charmed life. It should be noted that Costello and Pincher and other intelligence writers and researchers believed that there was prima facie evidence that a super-mole existed in British intelligence outside of the Cambridge spy network.

- 154 Costello, 466, 27. One of Blunt's sex partners was former guardsman, John Gaskin, with whom Blunt had a long-term rocky affair that ended when Gaskin fell over a balcony to his death.
 - 155 Ibid.
 - 156 Ibid., 561.
 - 157 Rothschild claimed his Hungarian-born mother had put Burgess on her payroll to advise her on finances.
 - 158 Costello, 305.
 - 159 Ibid., 660–663. Donald Gillies' biography of Inverchapel, Radical Diplomat: The Life of Archibald Clark Kerr, Lord Inverchapel, 1882–1951 (New York: St. Martin's Press, 1999), makes no mention of Inverchapel's homosexual proclivities except for a passing observation that the aging diplomat preferred male company, "particularly young, intellectually energetic talkers" to that of his young and beautiful wife, Tita, nearly 30 years his junior, whom he "remarried" after a two-year divorce. Donald Maclean was one of the upcoming, but still lowly, First Secretaries at the British Embassy in Washington, D.C., who served under Lord Inverchapel. John Costello was more critical than Gillies of Inverchapel's pro-Communist politics, his enchantment with Stalin and his low, blackmailable morals. According to Costello, during Kerr's early diplomatic years he formed a number of intimate attachments with known Soviet agents including Stig Wennestrom who he met during his ambassadorship to China and who turned out to be a major general in the KGB and a Soviet military attaché. If not an outright spy or informer, Lord Inverchapel was, at the very least, an effective Soviet "agent of influence," concluded Costello.
 - 160 Costello, 300.
 - 161 Ibid.
 - 162 Ibid., 315.
 - 163 Ibid., 318.
 - 164 Michael Whitney Straight, After Long Silence (New York, London: W. W. Norton and Co., 1983), 142.
 - 165 Andrew and Mitrokhin, 61–62.
 - 166 Jones, 27.
 - 167 Ibid.
 - 168 Robert J. Lamphere and Thomas Shachtman, The FBI-KGB War—A Special Agent's Story (New York: Random House, 1986), 167.
 - 169 Costello, 317.
 - 170 Ibid., 318.

- 171 Ibid., 333.
- 172 Rebecca West, 225.
- 173 Lamphere and Shachtman, 235.
- 174 Modin, 143.
- 175 Costello, 473.
- 176 Ibid.
- 177 Ibid., 537.
- 178 Ibid., 474.
- 179 Pincher, Their Trade is Treachery, 141.
- 180 Rufina Philby, Peake, and Lyubimov, 406–407.
- 181 Lamphere and Shachtman, 233. Also Rufina Philby, Peake, and Lyubimov, 407.
- 182 Lamphere and Shachtman, 23.
- 183 Also Rufina Philby, Peake, and Lyubimov, 408.
- 184 Lamphere and Shachtman, 233.
- 185 Ibid., 24.
- 186 Ibid., 235.
- 187 Rufina Philby, Peake, and Lyubimov, 412.
- 188 Knightley, Page, Leitch, 316.
- 189 Ibid., Costello, 421.
- 190 Lamphere and Shachtman, 235.
- 191 SMERSH was part of the Ninth Division of the KGB, a military counter-intelligence agency dedicated to terror and diversion. See <http://search.yahoo.com/bin/search?p=SMERSH>.
- 192 Rufina Philby, Peake, and Lyubimov, 414.
- 193 The recent declassification of the VENONA Project, one of the Cold War's best kept secrets, has laid bare the extent of Soviet espionage and influence operations directed against the U.S. That project, the work of dedicated cryptographers, succeeded in breaking the coded communications back and forth between the Soviet establishments in New York and Washington and Moscow, mostly during the years 1943–47. In all, only about 3000 messages were completely or partially decrypted over a period of years. More than 100 Soviet agents were uncovered, many identified only by code name, some of whom have not, to this day, been positively identified. Most had been recruited through the Communist Party. See Hayden B. Peake, "The VENONA Progeny," (summer 2000) available at <http://www.nwc.navy.mil/press/Review/2000/summer/re2-Su0.htm>.
- 194 In 1949, Weisband complained to Moscow that they had changed codes so abruptly that it well might have been suspected that there was a spy in the code breakers' ranks. See <http://members.iglou.com/jtmajor/HaunWood.htm>.
- 195 For additional information on VENONA see Allen Weinstein and Alexander Vassiliev, The Haunted Wood: Soviet Espionage in America—The Stalin Era (New York: Random House, 1999; Harvey Klehr, John Earl Haynes, and Fridrikh Igorevich Firsov, The Secret World of American Communism (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1995; John Earl Haynes and Harvey Klehr, VENONA: Decoding Soviet Espionage in America (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1999; and Herbert Romerstein and Eric Brindel, The VENONA Secrets (Washington, D.C.: Regency Publishing Co., 2000). Professor Harvey Klehr was kind enough to respond to a number of the author's queries on VENONA. There is an interesting footnote to the VENONA story. In their 1992 book The American Communist Movement: Storming Heaven Itself, written before academics were given access to VENONA, Library of Congress historian John Haynes and Emory University history, Professor Harvey Klehr, wrote that although "American Communists owed their first loyalty to the motherland of communism rather than the United States...in practice few American Communists were spies." They went on to conclude that viewing "the American Communist Party chiefly as an instrument of espionage or a sort of fifth column misjudges its main purpose." These opinions, however, were altered when Haynes and Klehr studied the VENONA cables and discovered that "Not few, but hundreds of American Communists...abetted Soviet espionage in the United States" in the 1930s and 1940s." See <http://www.nwc.navy.mil/press/Review/2000/summer/re2-Su0.htm>. Haynes and Klehr's work on VENONA remain the most objective book written on the subject to date.

- 196 When Aileen and Kim Philby married on September 25, 1946, she was pregnant with the first of their five children. In September 1956, Philby started an affair with Eleanor Pope Brewer. After Aileen died in December 1957, Philby married Eleanor on January 24, 1959. According to Chapman Pincher, when Philby heard that Aileen had died he was at a cocktail party where he raised his glass and said, "You must all drink to the great news. Aileen's dead!" After Philby defected to Moscow, and while Eleanor was on a visit to the United States, Philby began a fling with Maclean's wife, Melinda. In 1965, Eleanor left Moscow and Philby, who was in a hospital bed, and never returned. Philby's fourth wife, Rufina was of Russian-Polish origin. Philby had four grandchildren.
- 197 James Angleton (1911-1980) began his intelligence career working with his father who was in the OSS in Italy at the end of WWII. Early in the game he developed close ties with the leaders of the Zionist underground that later developed into the Mossad, Israel's secret service. As head of CIA's counter-intelligence unit, he specialized in foreign spies and moles. Although he wine and dined Philby on a regular basis and appeared to be on friendly terms with the MI6 representative, Angleton had suspicions that Philby might be a Soviet agent and conveyed those suspicions to his superiors who blithely attributed them to Angleton's alleged "paranoia" and "obsession" with moles and double agents. When William Colby took over as CIA in 1974, Angleton was basically put out to pasture and eventually resigned. Colby then dismantled the counter-intelligence branch of the CIA. This turned out to be a grievous error confirmed by the devastation wrought by Aldrich Ames and Robert Hansen who spied for the Soviet Union. See <http://www.angelfire.com/dc/1spy/Angleton.html>.
- 198 Costello, 539-540.
- 199 William Stevenson, Intrepid's Last Case (New York: Villard Books, Random House, Inc., 1983), 187.
- 200 This ill-fated joint SIS-CIA operation is described in detail in Nicholas Bethell, Betrayed (New York: Times Books, Random House, 1984).

- 201 Bethell, 111.
- 202 Ibid., 202.
- 203 Rufina Philby, Peake, and Lyubimov, 275.
- 204 The FBI had monitored Maclean's homosexual prowling in the United States.
- 205 Lamphere and Shachtman, 235.
- 206 Ibid.
- 207 For additional information on Maclean's activities in the United States see Knightley, Page, Leitch.
- 208 As early as February 1962, the Royals and Whitehall had decided not to charge Philby with treason. Rather, the plan was to offer him immunity for disclosing all the details of his Soviet-KGB connections. If he refused to cooperate, the powers-that-be determined it would be better to give him an opportunity to "defect" to Moscow than have to face the specter of a security scandal and public trial.
- 209 Modin, 222.
- 210 Ibid.
- 211 According to Penrose and Freeman, both the Officials Secrets Act (OSA) and Britain's libel laws were designed to protect Britain's governing class, "that interconnected group which traditionally dominated the civil service, politics, the universities, the City, the arts and sciences." The original OSA was passed in 1889, but it was the 1911 law that was rushed through Parliament that began the attack on the peoples' right-to-know. The law makes it an offense for any civil servant to reveal any information obtained in the course of their employment, without authorization. It also makes it an offense to receive such information, even unintentionally. There is no "public interest" defense. Without a confession or without the arrest of a spy in the act of passing secret information to a hostile power, espionage is a very difficult crime to prove.
- 212 Pincher, Their Trade is Treachery, 150–151.
- 213 One of the theories as to why Blunt was never prosecuted is found in War of the Windsors—A Century of Unconstitutional Monarchy by Stephen Prior, Clive Prince, Lynne Picknett, and Robert Brydon (Mainstream Publishing, Edinburgh, 2002). The authors claim that Blunt may have been the bastard child of the amorous King George V and Blunt's mother. However, when one considers Hilda Master's upbringing and strong religious convictions, this scenario appears to be highly unlikely. A more plausible theory would have been that Blunt managed to sexually compromise a member of the Royal family. Costello, for example, reported that Harbinson (Bryans) told him that the Duke of Kent, the black sheep of the Royal family had a drug problem and was attracted to partners of both sexes. Blunt was introduced to the Duke of Kent via Prince Chula Chakrabongse while at Trinity College. If Blunt was sexually involved with Queen Mary's youngest wayward son, this would have been sufficient to keep M15 and M16 wolves from his door. The tall, fair-haired Duke was killed in a Royal Airforce crash in 1942.
- 214 Ibid., 152.
- 215 Modin, 241.
- 216 This incident is recorded in a book review by Joseph T. Major of Stephen Koch, The Terrible Secret (New York: Free Press,1994) available from <http://members.iglou.com/jtmajor/2Lives.htm>.

- 217 Private communication with Patrick Paskiewicz. Nigel once described his brother as "an extraordinary mixture of loathsomeness and charm." See Verne W. Newton, "The Cambridge Spies," at <http://members.iglou.com/jtmajor/2Lives.htm>.
- 218 Modin, 268.
- 219 Roland Perry, The Fifth Man: The Soviet Super Spy (London: Sidgwick and Jackson, 1994), 27.
- 220 As soon as the State of Israel was formed, Rothschild assisted Chaim Weizmann in setting up a top-secret nuclear program in Rehovoth. In 1947, at the United Nations, both the Soviet Union and the United States voted in favor of the establishment of a Jewish state in Palestine. The "Kibbutz" was Israel's contribution to the Socialist-Communist experiment in the new nation-state.
- 221 Ibid., 36.
- 222 Ibid., 41.
- 223 Ibid., Costello, 305.
- 224 Ibid., 293.
- 225 In addition, according to former Mossad member Victor Ostrovsky, Rothschild's banks act as "bank sayanim," that is, they assist the Mossad by providing financial assistance at any time, day or night for emergency situations at no charge.
- 226 Modin, 77.
- 227 Costello, 249.
- 228 Rufina Philby, Peake, and Lyubimov, 436.
- 229 Sinclair, 85.
- 230 Ibid., 89.
- 231 Malcolm Muggeridge Chronicles of Wasted Time— The Green Stick, Vol. 1, William Morrow & Co., 1973, 107.
- 232 Ibid.
- 233 Ibid., 109.
- 234 VENONA communications indicate that Code Names David and ROSA could possibly have been Tess and Victor Rothschild. Was Victor Rothschild the so-called "Fifth Man" of the Cambridge spy ring? In my opinion, the question is wrongly phrased. If Rothschild did collaborate with and provide the Soviets with British and American secret intelligence before, during and after the Second World War, he did not do so as a servant of the Soviets as was the case with Burgess, Maclean, Blunt and Philby. Rothschild was not one of five. He was in a class by himself. His relationship with the Soviets as with all the modern shakers and movers of World Revolution with whom he collaborated operated on a completely different level and scale. Perhaps the question had been better put— whose interests did Victor Rothschild represent and in what hierarchy of order did he place his loyalties. Certainly these interests embraced those of his family, his financial dynasty, his race, and the creation and survival of a Jewish homeland in Palestine. Unlike his Cambridge friends, Rothschild was not driven by any claptrap about the supremacy of Communist ideology. Nor did he suffer under any illusions as to the nature and outcome of Stalin's war against the Jews as documented in Louis Rapoport's book by the same name (Stalin's War Against the Jews (New York:

Maxwell Macmillan International, 1990). Rather, Victor Rothschild's "arrangement" with the Soviets would have been likely a strictly pragmatic one— secret intelligence and scientific, military and political data from Britain, America and elsewhere in exchange for 1) Soviet support in the United Nations for the creation of the Socialist State of Israel. 2) the securing of atomic weapons to defend the new State in a hostile Arab environment and 3) the release of Russian Jews from behind the Iron Curtain for resettlement in Israel. Scientific knowledge, weapons of mass destruction, superior intelligence, international support, money and people were all necessary for Israel to survive. Rothschild provided all of these in generous amounts, even when doing so meant going against British interests. That the Rothschilds and the Israeli government were quite capable of such actions was demonstrated in the Pollard Case that involved the selling of highly classified American intelligence to the Soviet Union by Israeli agents. In 1986, an American Jew, Jonathan Pollard who worked for U.S. Naval Intelligence was caught spying for Israel. On the day he was apprehended he had sixty classified U.S. documents in his possession. The Israelis were giving American intelligence to the Soviets and Eastern Bloc nations in exchange for the release of Jews from those countries. As for Rothschild's other interests, it is fascinating to note that when the Cold War ended, Victor Rothschild, as if on cue, took up a rather curious cause— the so-called "population explosion." The war against Communism had turned into a war against the proliferation of people and Rothschild stood ready to lead the charge in the next phase of the continuing march of World Revolution. See Richard Deacon, The Cambridge Apostles (New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1986), 178.

- 235 See Gordon Lonsdale, Spy: Twenty Years of Secret Service, Memoirs of Gordon Lonsdale (New York: Hawthorn, 1965). Also http://intellit.muskingum.edu/uk_folder/ukspycases_folder/ukspycasesb&l.html.
- 236 Rebecca West, New Meaning of Treason, 297.
- 237 See PBS interview at http://www.pbs.org/redfiles/kgb/deep/interv/k_int_george_blake.htm. See also George Blake, No Other Choice: The Cold War Memoirs of the Ultimate Spy (London: Jonathan Cape Limited, 1990).
- 238 "George Blake, the last survivor of the legendary KGB 'moles,'" Pittsburgh Press, 16 January 1992. After the Blake debacle, the Radcliffe committee was set up to examine security measures in the public service. The committee's final report stressed "the need to know" principle but apparently MI5 and MI6 did not get the message. The door was left open for further foreign espionage activities against the British government and the Crown.
- 239 Rebecca West, 316. See also Rebecca West, "The Vassall Affair," Sunday Telegraph, London, 4 July 1963.
- 240 Ibid., 317.
- 241 Ibid.
- 242 Lewis, 18.
- 243 Rebecca West, 320.
- 244 Lewis, 89.
- 245 Ibid., 90.
- 246 Ibid.

- 247 Rebecca West, 321.
- 248 The Soviets reportedly made monthly payment to Vassall of £700 pounds that doubled his income from the Admiralty.
- 249 Pincher, 75. Actually Golitsin reported that there were two moles in the Admiralty, but after the Vassal trial, British Intelligence ignored that warning.
- 250 Rebecca West, 323.
- 251 Ibid., 328.
- 252 Ibid.
- 253 See "The Warren Commission from the Procedural Standpoint" with notes on the Radcliffe Tribune by Arthur L. Goodheart, New York University Law Review, Vol. 40 (May 1965): 404-423, available from http://karws.gso.uri.edu/JFK/History/WC_Period/Legal_views_of_WC/Goodheart—from_procedural_standpt.html.
- 254 Ibid.
- 255 Ibid.
- 256 Ernest Volkman and Blaine Baggett, Secret Intelligence—The Inside Story of America's Espionage Empire (Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday, 1989), 161.
- 257 Costello 182-183.
- 258 Andrew Boyle, The Fourth Man (New York: Dial Press, James Wade, 1979), 450.
- 259 Costello, 615.
- 260 See Communist Party member Harry Hay's description of the organization of early homosexual networks in the United States in Stuart Timmons, The Trouble With Harry Hay—Founder of the Modern Gay Movement (Boston: Alyson Publications, 1990).
- 261 Richard Sorge was born in the Caucasian state of Azerbaijan, a former Soviet republic. His father was German and his mother Russian, but Richard was a Russian through and through and a dedicated Bolshevik. He spied for Stalin in Shanghai and then went to Tokyo where he passed himself off as a reputable German journalist. He then formed a strong friendship at the German Embassy in Tokyo with Lt. Col. Eugen Ott, liaison officer with Japan's Third Artillery Regiment. He was a heavy drinker and womanizer and was vocal about his anti-Nazis views. Yet, acting through his friend Ott, he was able to secure access to extremely valuable military and diplomatic intelligence and coded messages from both the Germans and the Japanese. Sorge was eventually apprehended by the Japanese government. He believed that the Soviets would trade him or exchange him for another prisoner, but they did not. He was executed as a foreign spy on November 7, 1944 in Sugamo Prison. Twenty years later, on November 6, 1964, Sorge was made a hero of the Soviet Union. See Gordon W. Prange, Target Tokyo—The Story of the Sorge Spy Ring (New York: McGraw-Hill, 1984). In his essay "The Business of Deception," Professor Revilo P. Oliver noted that thanks to intelligence supplied by Sorge, Stalin was able to achieve important military victories in World War II by withdrawing his huge armies massed along the Manchurian border and using them against the Germans. Oliver observed that Sorge was able to effectively mask his espionage activities behind an outward veneer of high and fast living. In short, he made himself into a "character" who was "ostentatiously addicted to "social" pleasures, rather than to political

- interests." See
http://www.revilo-oliver.com/rpo/Business_of_Deception.html.
- 262 Rev. Paul J. Shaughnessy, "The Gay Priest Problem— What Needs to Be Done, and Why It Won't Be," Catholic World Report, (November 2000), 54–58. Father Shaughnessy, a Marine Corps and Navy chaplain wrote, "I define as corrupt, in a sociological sense, any institution that has lost the capacity to mend itself on its own initiative and by its own resources, an institution that is unable to uncover and expel its own miscreants. It is in this sense that the principal reason why the action necessary to solve the gay problem won't be taken is that the episcopacy in the United States is corrupt, and the same is true of the majority of religious orders. It is important to stress that this is a sociological claim, not a moral one." The full text is available from <http://www.sdnewsnotes.com/ed/articles/2000/1200ps.htm>.
- 263 Rueda, 78.
- 264 Rebecca West, 237.
- 265 Ibid., 99.
- 266 Stephen Dorrell and Anthony Summers, Honeytrap— The Secret Worlds of Stephen Ward (London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1987), 48.
- 267 Ibid.
- 268 Ibid., 52.
- 269 Ibid., 28.
- 270 Ibid., 36–37.
- 271 Penrose and Freeman, 254, 484.
- 272 Peter Montgomery's father was Major-General Hugh Maude de Fallenberg Montgomery. His uncle was Field-Marshal Sir Archibald Montgomery-Massingberd, Chief of the Imperial General Staff. His second cousin was Bernard Montgomery, the legendary Second World War commander.
- 273 Penrose and Freeman, 284.
- 274 It was probably through his familial connections that Peter gained his position with Wavell in India. None of the Wavell biographies mentions Peter Montgomery by name.
- 275 Chris Moore, The Kincora Scandal (Dublin: Marino, 1996), 88.
- 276 Carter, 384.
- 277 Costello, 466.
- 278 The Kincora boys' home was opened in 1958 to serve as a transitional refuge for troubled teens and orphans from the Belfast area. The warden chosen for Kincora, Joseph Mains, was an active homosexual pederast. He was joined in 1964 by Raymond Semple, another "boy lover." The two men turned the residence into a living hell for many young boys who were placed at Kincora by the State for safe keeping. When William McGrath joined the staff in 1971, the hell at Kincora was complete. On January 24 1980, Dublin reporter Peter McKenna of The Irish Independent wrote an article that charged that an official cover-up of the sexual abuse of young boys and teens at the Kincora Boys Home had been going on for more than 20 years. Further, McKenna reported that various public agencies in both Northern Ireland and Whitehall as well as British Intelligence had been informed of the criminal activities at Kincora and had done nothing to halt the abuse. Chris Moore, author of The Kincora Scandal, has insisted that although the boys of Kincora were raped and sodomized by McGrath, Mains and Semple— all of whom received stiff prison terms after their December 1981 trials— there was no prostitution ring that operated out of the home. McKenna, however, reported that there was an organized pederast ring that operated out of Kincora and that some boys were taken from the orphanage to nearby Birr Castle to serve as sexual fodder for prominent Belfast and London upper-class pederasts and homosexuals. We know that McGrath, was a MI5 operative in Northern Ireland as well as a leader of the Orange Order prior to his arrest. We know that he was also a frequent visitor to London and moved in high political circles. However, British Intelligence (MI5) closed down their investigation before the alleged Belfast and British pederasts could be identified and questioned. The fact that Blunt's friend and fellow sodomite, Sir Knox Cunningham, who died in 1976, was closely connected to McGrath lends support to the possibility that Kincora boys were sexually abused by men other than McGrath, Mains and Semple. Until such times as the Crown or Whitehall or the British Parliament decide to reopen the Kincora Case, it is unlikely that the full truth shall ever be revealed to the Irish and British public. What information about Kincora, if any, Blunt shared with his Soviet paymasters is also likely to remain buried. In addition to the Moore book, Labour Party defender Paul Foot has provided additional information on the Kincora scandal in Who Framed Colin Wallace? (Macmillan, London, 1989).

279 Moore, 88–89.

280 Dorrill, 38. In the text, Dorrill, who interviewed Robin Bryans, aka Robert Harbinson, mistakenly states that Montini became Pope John Paul I rather than Pope Paul VI.

† The Leonine Prayers

Instituted by Pope Leo XIII in 1884

Hail Mary (3 times)

Hail Mary, full of grace, the Lord is with thee.
Blessed art thou amongst women and blessed is the Fruit of thy womb, Jesus.
Holy Mary, Mother of God, pray for us sinners, now and at the hour of our death. Amen.

The Hail, Holy Queen (Salve Regina)

Hail, Holy Queen, Mother of mercy, our sweetness, and our hope!
To thee do we cry, poor banished children of Eve.
To thee do we send up our sighs, mourning and weeping in this valley of tears.
Turn then, most gracious advocate, thine eyes of mercy toward us.
And after this exile, show us the blessed
Fruit of thy womb, Jesus.
O clement! O loving! O sweet Virgin Mary!

V. Pray for us, O holy Mother of God

R. That we may be worthy of the promises of Christ.

Let us pray. O God, our refuge and our strength, look down in mercy upon Thy people who cry to Thee, and by the intercession of the glorious and immaculate Virgin Mary, Mother of God, of Saint Joseph her spouse, of Thy blessed Apostles Peter and Paul, and of all the Saints, in mercy and goodness hear our prayers we pour forth for the conversion of sinners, and for the liberty and exultation of our holy Mother the Church.
Through the same Christ our Lord. Amen.

Saint Michael the Archangel, defend us in battle;
be our protection against the wickedness and snares of the devil.
May God rebuke him, we humbly pray: and do thou,
Prince of the heavenly host, by the power of God, thrust down to hell Satan and all wicked spirits, who wander through the world seeking the ruin of souls.

R. Amen

V. Most Sacred Heart of Jesus,

R. Have mercy upon us. (3 times)

PRAYERS

† The Prayers of Fatima

O my Jesus, forgive us. Deliver us from the fire of hell.
Lead all souls to Heaven, especially those in most need of Your Mercy.

O Jesus, it is for Your Love, for the conversion of sinners, and in reparation for the sins committed against the Immaculate Heart of Mary.

My God, I believe, I adore, I hope and I love Thee!
I ask forgiveness for those who do not believe,
do not adore, do not hope and do not love Thee!

Most Holy Trinity, Father, Son, Holy Ghost
I adore Thee profoundly and offer Thee the most Precious Body, Blood, Soul and Divinity of Jesus Christ, present in all the tabernacles of the world, in reparation for the outrages, sacrileges, and indifferences by which He is offended.
And through the infinite merits of His Most Sacred Heart and of the Immaculate Heart of Mary,
I beg of Thee the conversion of poor sinners.

† Prayer for Priestly Vocations

O God, we earnestly beseech Thee to bless Thy Church with many vocations to the Holy priesthood: men who will serve Thee with their whole strength and gladly spend their lives for Thy Church, and to make Thee known and loved. Amen.

Mary, Mother of priests, obtain for us many holy priests.

Coming Soon

THE RITE OF SODOMY HOMOSEXUALITY AND THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH

VOLUME II

MALE HOMOSEXUALITY

THE INDIVIDUAL AND THE COLLECTIVE

- Male homosexuality—Its nature and causes
- Parental roles in fostering homosexuality
- The playground as a dress rehearsal for life
- Sexual preciousness and sexual molestation
- Male homosexual behaviors
- Pedophilia and Pederasty—Understanding the difference
- The Homosexual Collective—
Constructing an anti-culture based on sexual deviancy

VOLUME III

AMCHURCH AND THE

HOMOSEXUAL REVOLUTION

- Posing a historical framework for today's clerical homosexual scandals
- Homosexual prelates and bureaucrats in the NCCB/USCC [USCCB]
- The homosexual colonization of seminary and religious life
- AIDS outs active homosexual clerics and religious
- Treatment centers for clerical pederasts—
Therapy or hideaway?
- The homosexual legacy of William Cardinal O'Connell of Boston
- Francis Cardinal Spellman—
The kingmaker and his homosexual court
- The secret life of John Cardinal Wright

VOLUME IV

THE HOMOSEXUAL NETWORK IN THE AMERICAN HIERARCHY AND RELIGIOUS ORDERS

- Proving the existence of the homosexual network in AmChurch
- Theodore Cardinal McCarrick—
A homosexual prelate in denial
- A portrait of ten hierarchical wolves in sheep's clothing
- The operations of AmChurch's homosexual underworld and overworld
- The special case of Joseph Cardinal Bernardin
- Religious Orders—
The epicenter of the Homosexual Collective in the Church
- New Ways Ministry—A study in subversion

VOLUME V

THE VATICAN AND POPE PAUL VI— A PARADIGM SHIFT ON HOMOSEXUALITY

- The Visionaries of NewChurch
- The role of Communist infiltration in the homosexualization of the clergy
- Pope Paul VI and the Church's paradigm shift on the vice of sodomy
- Epilogue—A homosexual hierarchy—It's meaning for the future of the Roman Catholic Church
- Bibliography

Available in Very Limited Quantities

THE RITE OF SODOMY

A very limited number of copies of the original text of The Rite of Sodomy by Randy Engel is available on a first-come-first-serve basis.

- At website—www.newenglepublishing.com
- By phone for credit card orders at 1-724-327-7379
- By mail. Send check or money order to N.E.P. Publishing, Box 356, Export, PA 15632, USA

Price: $64.00 US plus $8.00 postage/handling

International Orders: $64.00 plus $28.50 postage/handling

Softbound: 1312 pages, Bibliographical references, Index

Revolutionary Union

A Stalino - Leninist Guide to Love and Sex

NOTE: This pamphlet is a response to male-domination in the East/West social systems of capital accumulation. It is produced from a male perspective and thus contains conscious and unconscious emphasis on the male viewpoint, but the sexism of stalino-leninist ideology can hardly be obscured by a defective presentation.

Leninism, like corporate capitalism, has the notion that persons are "things" to be controlled, manipulated, bought and sacrificed to maintain and support a present or future ruling group. Leninist vanguard parties, in power or out, almost universally condemn love for one of the same sex as a transitory byproduct of capitalism, instead of seeing it as one basic way of relating to people. "Socialist" states recognize that the breakdown of heterosexuality and the monogamous ideal will threaten the breakdown of the family (that "factory for the reproduction of dominant cultural patterns" -- Reich), and with it threaten these states with a population no longer held in check by authoritarian conditioning and respect for power and tradition. A growing few leninist sects in the Western imperialist countries already consider recruitment from and "infiltration" of the gay liberation movement as a potential method for building their organizations. Obviously this tactic will succeed only to the extent that gay organizations follow the leninist model (dogma, hierarchy, manipulation) and to the extent that their members are colonized by bourgeois and leninist behavior patterns (acceptance of intellectual/moral/physical authority, puritanism, uncritical obedience). Similarly, the still-marginal trend in Western society to end legal and social oppression of homosexuals is widening -- but only to the extent that homosexuals adopt the moral values of straight society, play the roles, accept the "right" of straight society to reproduce itself, in other words restrict gay liberation to the bedroom.

The capitalists want to make us believe that if we are not happy with life it is because we are at fault for failing to get a satisfying job and for failing to practice the bourgeois ethical code. The leninists want to make us believe that their Workers' Government is a big improvement over the capitalist way of running things. Nonetheless, we who sell our time to either aren't making decisions, either about how we go about our jobs or whether what we're producing or doing is even worth producing or doing. We fail to rebel against these conditions in part because we have been conditioned since birth to play narrow sexual roles and to accept the legitimacy of parental and social authority. If people really were free and happy, would they seek self-fulfillment, for example, in (1) participating in a global war industry, (2) converting millions of trees into millions of tons of paper for advertising and administrative purposes, (3) being salespeople or East/West bureaucrats to push that same paper around, (4) being academic apologists for the necessity and virtue of the above activities? The fact that everywhere we are willing to play these and many other roles for global capitalism shows how little control we actually have over our lives.

Are we to overthrow East/West control of our personal relationships without overthrowing that same control of our social-productive lives?? One is impossible without the other, just as there is an indissoluble link between love and creativity. Down with the Mao Tse-tung/Pepsi Cola/Billy Graham axis!

April, 1975

address to those who think themselves Normal

You do not feel that you are oppressors. You screw like everyone else, it's not your fault if there are sick people or criminals around. You can't help it, you say, since you are tolerant. Your society -- for if you screw like everyone else, then it is yours -- has treated us as a social plague for the State, as the object of scorn for true men, as the subject of fear for mothers. The same words that are used to designate us are your worst insults.

Have you ever thought of what we feel when you string these words together: "cocksucker, ass hole, fairy, queer"? when you say to a woman "Dyke"? You protect your daughters and your sons from our presence as though we were disease bearers.

You are individually responsible for the vile mutilation that you have made us undergo by reproaching us our desire. You who want a revolution, have wanted to impose upon us your repression. You fought for the Blacks, you treated the pigs like cocksuckers, as though there didn't exist a worse insult.

You, worshippers of the proletariat, have encouraged with all your might the maintenance of the virile image of the worker; you have said that revolution would be the work of a manly, rugged proletariat.

Do you know what it is like, for a young worker, to be a closet homosexual? Do you know, you who believe in the virtuous influence of the factory, what the person who is treated as a faggot, by his friends at work, goes through?

We know, because we know one another, because we alone can know. We are, with women, the moral door-mat on which you wipe your conscience.

We are saying here that we've had enough, that you won't smash our faces any longer, because we will defend ourselves, that we will lead an offensive on your racism against us even as far as language.

We are saying more: we will not stop at defending ourselves, we are going to attack.

We are not against "straights", but against "straight" society. You ask: "What can we do for you?" You can't do anything for us as long as each one of you remains the representative of straight society, as long as you refuse to see all the secret desires that you have repressed. You can't do anything for us as long as you don't do anything for yourselves.

Front Homosexuel d'Action Revolutionnaire

translated by Louis Landerson

ON HOMOSEXUALITY

Revolutionary Union

The following is the R.U. position on homosexuality and gay liberation. Our position on homosexuality and the gay liberation movement starts from an analysis of the concrete conditions of life in the U.S.A. today. The problem we direct ourselves to is what is the correct path to follow if we are to defeat imperialism and establish socialism in this country, and what role will homosexuals and gay liberation play in the revolutionary struggle. We will deal first with our analysis of gay liberation.

The U.S.A. is an imperialist power on the decline. It is being attacked by rising revolutionary movements throughout the world and within the U.S.A. itself and it is facing increased competition from other imperialist powers. To maintain its wealth and power, the ruling class is forced to increase its oppression and exploitation at home. Although [it] hits hardest on Third World and working class people, it is felt by almost everyone, including large sections of the petty bourgeoisie. The alienation that people living in capitalist society already feel is greatly intensified. The ruling class attempts to hold back the advancing revolutionary movement by increasing the contradictions between white and Third World

"You must be a man, and only a man."

---Fidel Castro, to launch purge of homosexuals, 1965

(NY World, Mar 15 16, 1965, p. 4)

ARTICLE 154-a

Sexual intercourse between two men (homosexuality) is punished by deprivation of liberty from 3 to 5 years. The same, if committed by using violence or by abusing the subordinate position of the victim, is punished by deprivation of liberty from 5 to 8 years.

Revised Constitution of the Republic of Cuba, 1976, Art. 154, REVISTA, 1976, p. 14

Lenin, great revolutionary teacher of the proletariat, and his successor, the great Marxist-Leninist Stalin. After the death of Lenin, Stalin inherited and defended the cause of Leninism in his struggle against the class enemies at home and abroad and the Right and "Left" opportunists in the Party. He led the Soviet people to advance continually along the road of socialism, and won great victories. In World War II, under the command of Stalin, the Soviet people became the main force in defeating the fascist aggression and made meritorious achievements in the history of mankind which will never be effaced.

workers, between working class and the petty bourgeoisie, between men and women.

Homosexuality is a response - consciously or not - to a male supremacist society. Because it is a response to oppressive institutions and oppressive relationships it is not necessarily a progressive response or one that challenges the power of the monopoly capitalist. We see that the pressures that capitalist society [puts] on each individual are tremendous. The difficulty we have in all of our relationships, the lack of fulfillment in our daily lives is a source of anxiety and personal suffering. As our relation-

"The youth movement too is attacked with the disease of modernity in its attitude towards sexual questions and in being exaggeratedly concerned with them...You must be aware of the famous theory that in Communist society the satisfaction of sexual desires, of love, will be as simple and unimportant as drinking a glass of water. This glass of water theory has made our young people mad, quite mad. It has proved fatal to many young boys and girls. Its adherents maintain that it is Marxist...I think this glass of water theory is completely un-Marxist, and moreover, anti-social...Of course, thirst must be satisfied. But will the normal man in normal circumstances lie down in the gutter and drink out of a puddle, or out of a glass with a rim greasy from many lips?"

---Vladimir Ilyich Lenin, Autumn, 1920

Reprinted in Revolution and the Youth

The October League tends to ignore the subject of sexual repression altogether. Michael Klonsky, leader of the OL, explained at a panel discussion in San Diego this summer why this question had not been taken up by his organization, saying that he didn't see why so much fuss was being made about something that only took a few minutes a day. The October League did not, however, draw back from assisting in the exclusion of a group of lesbian members of the Chicago Women's Union from a trip to China.

Women and Revolution, Autumn 1974, p. 5 doesn't, it is not progressive.

Homosexuality is an individual response to male supremacy and male chauvinism; it is a response which turns its back to the struggle between men and women. We think that Lesbianism is more understandable as an escape from male chauvinism; male homosexuality reinforces male chauvinism in its refusal to deal with relationships with women. Both forms of homosexuality, however, are premised upon the unwillingness to struggle with the opposite sex in very important relationships.

It is important to deal concretely with homosexual relationships as they exist in our society today. Many people, especially women, have become homosexuals as a matter of choice, usual-

The Chinese and Sex

Ann Landers

Dear Readers: Here's another column on my visit to The People's Republic of China as a member of the American Medical Association's delegation.

My question to a 35-year-old Chinese professional woman (married), one of the most attractive and articulate people I met on the entire trip:

"I understand there is very little premarital sex in your country. Is this true?"

Answer: "Yes. And there are good reasons for it. Nearly half of our country's population is under 10 years of age. This means 400 million of our people have been reared under Mao's teachings.

"To keep the birth rate down, the Chairman has suggested 25 as a good age for a woman to marry, and 28 for a man. Sex before marriage is considered highly immoral and completely unacceptable.

"Our young people are taught at a very early age that all their time and energy must be spent in self-improvement, study or work."

Question: "But how do they keep their normal sex drives under control? Isn't it natural for members of the opposite sex to become attracted to one another?"

Answer: "A child whose thoughts are conditioned from birth grows up to believe as he has been taught. We teach our young children that sex before marriage is a shameful and disgraceful thing. A young couple who strays from these teachings is looked down upon by their peers.

"The Chairman's motto is, 'Serve the people,' and young couples who spend their time amusing themselves with sex are not serving the people.

They are being selfish, and they are taking time and energy from study and work."

Question: "Are you saying there is no premarital sex in The People's Republic of China?"

Answer: "Such a statement would be ridiculous. In a country with 600 million people, there must, of course, be exceptions.

"But I am sure we have less sex before marriage as well as OUTSIDE of marriage, than any country in the world. Adultery is quite uncommon. It is considered 'back-haul' every bad by relatives, friends and fellow workers."

Question: "From my conversations with both women and men here, I'm beginning to get the impression that there is also less sex INSIDE of marriage. Am I right?"

Answer: "Probably, as compared with other countries. And there is a reason for this. In Old China, concubines and prostitutes were part of the culture. They provided the sexual entertainment. Wives were not expected to be sexy. They were for childbearing.

"Today, concubines and prostitutes are against the law and most wives look upon sex as their mothers did. Also, they are too hard-working to be sexy. After a woman has produced one or two children, she feels she has done her duty. There are many exceptions, of course, but most Chinese women consider sex a chore."

ly after some involvement in the women's movement. These are women who said that they wouldn't or couldn't deal with men in their personal relationships. Such a choice is clearly individualist; it says: I have a right to relate the way I want to, I can do what I want with my body. There are many people who became homosexual out of inclination, or for a thousand other reasons which we can call more or less unconscious. Objectively, however, there are no real difference [s] between the two cases, although the subjective attitudes of the people involved might be different. In both cases, people are in relationships which necessarily place them outside the mainstream of our society and thus puts enormous strains upon the relationships, strains over and above which exist in heterosexual relationships, which are by no means MOSCOW: Asked about the Soviet Union's official policy towards homosexuals in their country, the Ministry of the Interior said that broad guidelines had been laid down in an international conference in Geneva in 1924.

At this conference, he said, it was accepted that homosexuality was partly a sickness -- and agreement had been reached on how homosexuals should be treated.

Gay News, March 14-21, 1974, p. 20

Any romantic attachment that goes the distance, outside the marriage bed, is actually a statutory offense, worth six months in jail for the overeager young man...

Shimon de Vidyasa Chitra, Red & Green ideal. Because of such strains, homosexual relationships are rarely long lasting. The relationships that are principled require much more cultivation, much more time and energy - in short, much more self indulgence. This is not meant to put down such relationships as abnormal or immoral. It is simply a recognition of the social context in which homosexual relationships must

"Young people, particularly, need the joy and force of life. Healthy sport, swimming, racing, walking, bodily exercises of every kind, and many-sided intellectual interests. Learning, studying, inquiry, as far as possible in common. That will give young people more than eternal theories and discussions about sexual problems and the so-called 'living to the full'. Healthy bodies, healthy minds!"

---Vladimir Ilyich Lenin, Autumn, 1920

Reminiscences of Lenin, Great Britain, 1930

exist. As materialists we don't deal with anything in the abstract, we don't deal with homosexuality as it might exist in some future society where people live without sexual or other inhibitions. We don't make reference to some so-called "natural" state. As a rule, homosexual relationships in our society are extremely difficult, require a lot of time to make work, if they work at all. They involve a great deal more cultivation than do heterosexual relationships.

Under Soviet conditions masturbation is no longer the mass phenomenon it was in the past...No illness was ever caused through abstinence, which is quite harmless for young and less young alike... The law cannot concern itself with every case of immoral conduct. The pressure of public opinion must continue to play the leading role against all forms of immorality.

Discourse on Sexual Education, P.S. Akatov (Physician, Director of the Russian Soviet Socialist Republic), 1946, Moscow quoted in The Unfinished Revolution, p. 37-38

Based on the above considerations, we see that homosexuals are forced to live on the periphery of society (insofar as their relationships are subject to public abuse), and therefore, such relationships can be only individual solutions to the contradictions of imperialism, much in the same way as going to live on a commune is an individual response to alienation or in the same way as embracing a religion is an individual solution. Because people who make such a choice are estranged is unfortunate, but again it is not a sign of their being progressive. The thing that makes it individual - and not progressive - is not that it is done alone (communes can involve a lot of people), but that it does not engage the masses of people in struggle, it doesn't organize or set the basis for organizing masses of people to fight around their needs.

In posing an individual solution to the contradictions of monopoly capitalism, homosexuality is an ideology of the petty bourgeoisie, and must be clearly distinguished from proletarian ideology. The ideology of the working class is based on the knowledge that the only way to resolve the contradictions of capitalism is through mass struggle with each other and against our common oppressors. To say that homosexuality is based on petty bourgeois ideology is not to cast aspersions on homosexuals any more than calling most students petty bourgeois is to put them down. As "The most important thing for the liberation of women is that there be an equal number of men and women in parliament...women elected as governors and senators...then there will be equality."

"...Any woman, no matter what post she occupies, should remain a woman...She should know how to cook and how to keep house nicely. If she does not, she is not a woman.

"...The highest appraisal...payment...for women would be respect from the family... They should understand that bringing up children and keeping the house is also important."

---Yekaterina Alekseyevna Furtseva, Minister of Cultural Affairs of the USSR

New York Times, Jan. 19, 1970, p. 42

Chairman Mao says: "In class society everyone lives as a member of a particular class, and every kind of thinking, without exception, is stamped with the brand of a class."

To say that homosexuality is stamped with the brand of the petty bourgeoisie should not imply that gay people cannot be and are not strong fighters against imperialism. But we should be clear that it is not the homosexuality of gay people which makes them into anti-imperialist fighters. It is quite possible that many gay people begin to recognize the nature of imperialism as a system because of particular attacks on their democratic rights. There is, however, often a difference between the way in which people come to recognize the beast and the weapons they use in fighting it. Gay people can be anti-imperialists, because they see imperialism as the enemy and they can understand and take up the main spearheads of struggle against imperialism.

While gay people can be anti-imperialists we feel that they cannot be Communists. To be a Communist, we must accept and welcome struggle in all facets of our lives, personal as well as political. We cannot struggle with male supremacy in the factory and not struggle at home. We feel that the best way to struggle out such contradictions in our personal lives is in stable monogamous relations between men and women based on mutual lives and respect. Because homosexuals do not carry the struggle between men and women into their most personal relationships they are not prepared, in principle, for the arduous task of class transformation.

As Communists we have chosen to put class struggle and the revolutionary movement of the working class and all oppressed peoples into the

In Shanghai, members of the Revolutionary Committee demand mercilessly that they be asked more and more questions. "How would you deal with a case of rape?" causes slight consternation, however. "Rape does not exist in China," comes the inevitable reply. "Maybe not, but tell me how would you handle a rape case if such an unimaginable event should ever occur?" This causes the members to retire to a corner of the room, where a heated debate goes on for five minutes or so. Then, proudly and with complete certainty, the leader announces: "Should a rape be committed, we should arrange a marriage."

and Eastern Economy Review, March 1968, Vol. 12, No. 3, p. 12 forefront of our lives. It is a serious task. "A revolution is not a dinner party, or writing an essay or painting a picture." Because homosexual relationships require so much time we have found that homosexuals have had an extremely difficult time meeting the strenuous requirements of a communist organization and they have often put unnecessary burdens on their comrades.

Because we put class struggle first, we are opposed to all relationships which are seen by the people in them as the main source of their well being or as a source of personal salvation. It is extremely difficult to have totally fulfilling relationships in this society and any attempt to have one must be a fulltime job. As things exist now, given the prevalent conditions of relationships under capitalism, we see that monogamous heterosexual relationships are by far the most favorable for providing the grounds for struggle, respect and love. And it is within such relationships that Communists can best devote their lives to the enormous task ahead. It is important for us to deal with the reality that Koreans generally have beautiful voices, and it is really terrible to hear a good-looking girl make hoarse sounds.

On Capturing Revolutionary Literature and Art, Kim Il-Sung, 1970, p. 15

...[The opera A True Daughter of the Party] portrays the heroic exploits of a nurse, Kang Yon Ok, during the Korean War of 1950-53...Kang finally earns membership in the Korean Workers (Communist) Party, only to die while protecting others during an American air raid.

The nurse's dying words are: "Comrade party cell chairman, here's the monthly party fee."

The opera reaches its climax with the nurse's death, the trooping of a huge red flag, a North Korean battle victory in the distance, tracer bullets, and a galvanic chorus -- "Every moment of our lives we will dedicate to our leader!"

New York Times, Jan. 19, 1977, p. 3

The red sun rises in the east; the cheering and applause of the masses sound like thunder. Our great teacher, great leader, great heroic commander and great helmsman Chairman Mao and his close comrade-in-arms Comrade Lin Biao review the army of the great proletarian cultural revolution from Peking. They are full of energy and vitality. For Chairman Mao to be in such good health is the greatest happiness of the Chinese people and the people of the world.

now exists, with the material conditions which now exist. Utopian schemes for relationships such as bisexuality will only disrupt our work. We are not dealing with chimeras of the mind but with a powerful enemy. Perhaps in some future society bisexuality will blossom. That is not for us to decide, and we certainly can't base our lives and the revolutionary movement on such experiments. It is not a change in life style that will overthrow imperialism, but a united front led by the working class fighting in its material interests.

When homosexuality is raised to a principle, when the banner of "gay is good" is raised as a strategy for defeating imperialism, then it becomes a reactionary force retarding the struggle of the working class and of the people as a whole. This is born out in both the theory and the practice of the gay liberation movement.

There has been a lot of confusion about the relationship of women to the gay liberation movement. Much of this confusion is based on HAVANA, May 27 (Reuters) The University of Havana has launched a campaign against homosexuality. Jaime Crombet, president of the University Student Federation, declared that inquiries were going to be opened by discipline committees formed by the students themselves, and that those who were found guilty would be dismissed immediately. Some people believe that the campaign is not to be limited to the University of Havana, but must be extended into the artistic spheres, notably to those of the theater and dance. "What is at stake is an ideological battle against all forms of deviation in the heart of the University. Our goal is the elimination of all corrupted elements," added Mr. Crombet.

Le Monde, May 26, 1965, p. 3

the fact that many sections of the petty bourgeois women's movement of the sixties concentrated on the psychological aspects of the oppression of women, on the attitude of male chauvinism. Women's oppression was caused by sexist attitudes, by male chauvinist ideas which placed women (and men) in certain well defined roles.

With such an analysis, parts of the women's movement began to see that gay people were equally oppressed by sexist attitudes and gay relationships equally distorted by oppressive roles. The oppression of women and gay people were seen as rooted in the same cause: sexism.

What this analysis left out was the primary cause of women's oppression, that is, the material cause of their oppression. That is why we speak of male supremacy to speak of the institutional forms of oppression, and male chauvinism as the ideology and psychological attitudes which are used to justify male supremacy. In Marxist terminology they are related as base to superstructure. The oppression of women developed historically out of the division of labor of ancient slave society and continues today

In China...

Does a tacitly "engaged" couple ever make love? "Instances of premarital relations are really rare," replied a doctor friend. "As for actual promiscuity, it is regarded as a deviation requiring social discipline or, in repeated cases, reform in confinement. Extra-marital intercourse is uncommon but it occurs more often than premarital intercourse."

The Long Revue-Critique, 1973, p. 46

with the division of labor in capitalist society. The oppression of women is based primarily on material oppression due to their position in production (reserve labor force, cheap labor, unpaid labor in the home) and reproduction (as mothers). Imperialism profits directly from the oppression and exploitation of women. This is not true for gay people. They are not materially oppressed as a group, and the denial of their democratic rights does not secure great profits for the ruling class.

The confusion of the fight for democratic rights with a liberation struggle is based on idealistic, metaphysical understanding of oppression. To raise the slogan of "go gay and smash the state" is to lead all people down the road of certain defeat. The gay liberation movement has no class analysis of imperialism, it claims to be above classes, attacking the "deeper" roots of oppression. The roots of oppression are summed

During the summer of 1965, for example, the revolutionary authorities...started a cruel campaign against homosexuals. They did not encumber themselves with theoretical explanations or justifications but simply drafted "guilty" and suspects alike into UMAP (Military Units to Aid Production). Most of this contingent was made up of intellectuals -- Khrushchev had already said that only a homosexual could be an abstract painter -- and the purge at Havana University had been specially severe. But in contrast to what usually happens in socialist countries, the Cuban Union of Writers and Artists (UNEAC), far from applauding the wisdom of the political leaders, had sent them a very bitter letter of complaint. Fidel heeded their appeal and the UMAPs were dissolved.

Guerrilla in Cuba, R. S. S. 1970, p. 495

[Alexandra Kollontai] declared that for her a man was merely a necessity, like a glass of water for a thirsty person. And she drank from many glasses, often from several at once. Stalin despised her for this...Stalin never would shake hands with her. He will never forget nor condone her glass-of-water theory.

I Was Stalin's Bodyguard, Ahmed Abu, 1952, p. 72 up in the fundamental contradiction in capitalist society, that between the petty bourgeoisie and the working class. In reality, gay liberation is anti-working class and counter revolutionary. Its attacks on the family would rob poor and working class people of the most viable social unit for their survival and for the revolutionary struggle against the imperialist system. The only real liberation, the only road to real happiness for homosexuals - like all people caught in the mire and muck of bourgeois decadence - is to eliminate the reactionary, rotting system that drives them to homosexuality; and to build a new society, under the rule of the working class, that promotes working class culture and ideology - the principles of equality, cooperation and the dignity of collective labor - in opposition to selfishness, self-indulgence and the decadence of individualism and exploitative relations.

The practice of gay liberation bears out its anti-working class ideology. An example of this is a demonstration called by the National Organization of Women in N.Y.C. last August. Although N.O.W. is petty bourgeois it does have progressive aspects. At this rally, Third World women who had led the struggle of maids at Columbia University against discrimination in hiring and firing were scheduled to speak. Lesbian activists attacked the speakers' stand and seized the microphone because no Lesbians had been on the program. This destroyed the rally and held back the

I then pulled a gaffe by asking if sexual relations outside marriage were common in view of the trend to late marriage. Yu, glancing about in embarrassment at the other Chinese who had crowded into the dispensary out of curiosity, lost his temper with me for the first and only time and snapped: "That's a silly question." But he put it to the doctor and nurse, who said that extramarital relations were rare.

Journeys Between Two Climates, Seymour Topping, 1972, p. 197

unity of the women's movement.

Gay women also played a destructive role in N.Y. in recent planning for a rally around International Women's Day. All groups present agreed on only raising slogans concerning the democratic rights of women such as daycare and free abortion. The fragile unity which existed between the participating groups was destroyed when the gay women refused to take part in any demonstration which didn't "raise support for gay liberation" as a slogan. Many of the Third World women

"...Nearly 20% of [homosexuals] attempt suicide, [however] 60% do not want to be treated in any way because they consider their own condition to be normal.

"The most highly recommended method of treatment in such cases is a combination of hypnosis and small doses of apomorphine, which produces nausea. The patient is not told about the effect of the drug, but when it is at its height he is shown [homosexual] pictures and films to accompany the acute nausea. This aversion treatment is given several times but the results appear to be doubtful...At best it only produces a temporary cure."

---Abram Moiseyevich Svyadosch in Female Sexopathology, Moscow, 1974

Gay Notes, Sept. 12-25, 1974, p. 5

in the group were dismayed at the blatantly anti-working class and national chauvinist character of the gay group.

The R.U. supports the democratic rights of gay people under capitalism but we do not feel that the Attica Brigade has to take a stand on this question. Although we support these democratic rights, we do not do so in an abstract way. We oppose the arbitrary use of laws against homosexuality and we oppose bourgeois methods of treating homosexuals as "criminals". We do not uphold any so-called general abstract "right to be homosexual". To make a comparison with religion - we support the democratic rights of people to exercise freedom of religion, but we wouldn't support the right of some Jesus-freak sect to proselytize in working class neighborhoods, but we would support a Black Muslim being brutalized in prison. We support the democratic right of free speech, but we don't support the racial demagogues.

PEKING, Sept. 17 (AFP) A Chinese peasant who had himself sterilized "in order to consecrate all his energies to the construction of socialism in China," has been warmly congratulated by Mr. Chou-en-Lai in public according to Communist Youth (the official organ of the League of Young Communists) in its issue of September 1...

Communist Youth and Youth's Daily, another official publication of the League of Young Communists, discuss the matter of birth control at great length and advise their readers to marry as late as possible, if they absolutely have to reject celibacy...The League of Young Communists also publishes numerous letters from both sexes that proclaim their decision to remain celibate and chaste.

E. World, Sept. 16, 1963, p. 4

SECTION III

ARTICLE 12: To institute a "Motherhood Medal" -- 1st and 2nd class -- for award to mothers who have given birth to and brought up:

5 children . . . 2nd class medal

6 children . . . 1st class medal

ARTICLE 13: To establish the Order "Motherhood Glory" -- 1st, 2nd and 3rd class -- for award to mothers who have given birth to and brought up:

7 children . . . 3rd class

8 children . . . 2nd class

9 children . . . 1st class

ARTICLE 14: To establish that mothers who have given birth to and brought up 10 children shall receive the title of honor "Heroine Mother" with award of the Order Heroine Mother and certificate of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R.

---The Family Law of July 8, 1944

The Family in the U.S.S.R., Rudolf Schickel, 1949, p. 371-372

As Communists, we are always guided by the revolutionary principle: to promote, defend and fight for whatever builds the unity of the proletariat and the people in struggle against monopoly capitalist rule; to expose, oppose and struggle against everything that divides, demoralizes and weakens the proletariat and the overall anti-imperialist struggle.

Our position can be summarized in three main points:

(1) Homosexuality in the U.S. today is an individual response to the intensification of the contradictions brought about by decaying imperialism; in particular it is a response to the contradiction between men and women which is rooted in male supremacist institutions and male chauvinist ideology. Because homosexuality is rooted in individualism it is a feature of petty bour-

LOS ANGELES--A gay communist group was denied participation in an October [1974] demonstration in support of Puerto Rican independence. The Lavender & Red Union learned of the demonstration, sponsored by the Puerto Rican Solidarity Day Committee, through a public leaflet, and requested that they be allowed to enter a gay contingent in the parade. The request was denied by the majority of supposedly socialist groups; those voting against were the Free Los Tres, La Raza Unida Party, and Puerto Rican Socialist Party, and not voting were the Socialist Workers Party and the October League. Two groups, the International Socialists and the New American Movement, voted for inclusion of the gay contingent.

The reactionary elements dragged out the usual hoary arguments: that the representative of PSP had never been confronted with the concept of a gay marxist-leninist, that LRU's presence would offend their constituency and them, and that gayness in Puerto Rico is a product of U.S. imperialism and bourgeois decadence and would disappear after liberation. The last is the same justification used by the ruling bureaucrats in the Soviet Union and elsewhere in their attempts to exterminate gays through "education" and other means.

(See references, Dec. 1974 - Jan. 1975, p. 5)

geois ideology which puts forth the idea that there are individual solutions to social problems.

(2) Because homosexuality is based on petty bourgeois ideology and deals with the contradiction between men and women by turning its back on it, (at least in intimate personal relationships), homosexuals cannot be Communists, that is, belong to Communist organizations where people are committed to struggle against all aspects of their lives.

(3) Gay Liberation in its putting forth of gayness as a strategy for revolution in this country is a reactionary ideology and can lead us only down the road of demoralization and defeat.

appendix on Cuba

DECLARATION BY THE FIRST NATIONAL CONGRESS ON EDUCATION AND CULTURE, 1971

The social pathological character of homosexual deviations was recognized. It was resolved that all manifestations of homosexual deviations are to be firmly rejected and prevented from spreading. It was pointed out, however, that a study, investigation, and analysis of this complex problem should always determine the measures to be adopted.

It was decided that homosexuality should not be considered a central problem or a fundamental one in our society, but rather its attention and solution are necessary.

A study was made of the origin and evolution of this phenomenon and of its present-day scope and antisocial character. An in-depth analysis was made of the preventive and educational measures that are to be put into effect against examine how best to tackle the problems of the presence of homosexuals, in the various institutions of our cultural sector.

It was proposed that a study should be made to find a way of applying measures with a view to transferring to other organizations those who, as homosexuals, should not have any direct influence on our youth through artistic and cultural activities.

It was resolved that those whose morals do not correspond to the prestige of our revolution should be barred from any group of performers representing our country abroad.

Finally, it was agreed to demand that severe penalties be applied to those who corrupt the morals of minors, depraved repeat offenders and irredeemable antisocial elements.

Cultural institutions cannot serve as a platform for false intellectuals who try to make snobbery, extravagant conduct, homosexuality and other social aberrations into expressions of revolutionary spirit and art, isolated from the masses and the spirit of the revolution.

Excerpted from Granma, daily organ of the Communist Party of Cuba isting focuses, including the control and relocation of isolated cases and degrees of deterioration.

On the basis of these considerations, it was resolved that it would be convenient to adopt the following measures:

a) Extension of the coeducational system: recognition of its importance in the formation of children and the young.

b) Appropriate sexual education for parents, teachers and pupils. This work must not be treated as a special subject but as one falling into the general teaching syllabus, such as biology, physiology, etc.

c) Stimulation of proper approach to sex. A campaign of information should be put into effect among adolescents and young people which would contribute to the acquisition of a scientific knowledge of sex and the eradication of prejudices and doubts which in some cases result in the placing of too much importance on sex.

d) Promotion of discussion among the youth in those cases where it becomes necessary to delve into the human aspect of sex relations.

It was resolved that for notorious homosexuals to have influence in the formation of our youth is not to be tolerated on the basis of their "artistic merits."

Consequently, a study is called for to deter-

TALK WITH JOSE A. CHAVEZ, ADMINISTRATOR OF THE DISTRICT HOUSING PROJECT IN SANTIAGO

"We don't need in the society we are building someone interested in this...if we find someone practices this thing we don't move him to this district. They have to be married. Single people are moved elsewhere..."

"No, no, no, we don't move any homosexuals here. And no married bisexuals. We make an investigation into all members of the family. We can also detect this while they are still working in the mini brigade. It's the same with a loafer; we don't move his family to the district either. We make a very hard selection."

"We understand that people here should be completely pure, free from that sort of custom. We aspire to make our tenants model people. This way the district will be a socialist society and all the residents will arrive to a 100 percent level of harmonious living together."

WHY NO HOMOSEXUALS?

"Let's just say this spoiled apple is in this box with everybody and we have to eliminate it."

Granma, Cuba, Jan. 14, 1972, p. 127-128

POLICY FOR RECRUITMENT FOR THE FIFTH VENCEREMOS BRIGADE---SPECIFICALLY CONCERNING THE GAY LIBERATION MOVEMENT:

Through many discussions in the past few months, the National Committee of the Venceremos Brigade (BV) has formulated several conclusions concerning the practice of the gay liberation movement. And from these, we have developed a policy concerning recruitment from the gay movement.

The Cuban people, opening a full discussion on homosexuality, have come to a certain perspective on its origin and its historical development within Cuba. They have done so by examining the role of homosexuals within the revolutionary context of the society. The present conclusion of this discussion is that homosexuality in Cuba is a social pathology left over from the decadent bourgeois order.

We feel that however else the gay movement may be progressing in other aspects of its practice within the U.S., we believe that the path it has generally taken regarding Cuba (generally anti-Cuban) is dangerous and incorrect -- and must be corrected if the gay movement is to move in a consistently anti-imperialist direction.

Generally, the past activities of the gay North Americans have been destructive. A list of specific activities would include "re-educating the Cubans" (assuming that the situation in Cuba must be the same as that of the U.S.), outright attacks and denunciations on the Cuban Revolution "boycotts", remaining silent and allowing incorrect tendencies to flourish unchallenged, etc.

In general, homosexuals in Cuba have not participated in the revolutionary process. They have existed side by side with the Revolution, and are essentially parasites in the revolution. (It must be noted that there are a few exceptions; however, here we are not concerned with individuals and individual actions, but with groups and group actions.) This has been the reality of homosexuals in Cuba; and it is on this basis that their conclusions rest. (This basis has nothing to do with the policy demanding all brigadistas to strive to be consistent anti-imperialists, both in theory and practice, in words and in action. Cultural imperialist activity is not and will not be tolerated on the BV. Clearly, this is the only logical position that an anti-imperialist project can take.)

These activities are particularly dangerous at this time because they join a cultural imperialist offensive against the Cuban Revolution carried out by U.S. imperialism in an attempt to discredit the Revolution and alienate North Americans from it.

Secondly, the above manifestations tend to distort the gay movement's perspective on Cuba's position on homosexuality in Cuba. This reaches such absurdities as feeling that the Cuban Revolution is "witch-hunting" for homosexuals so as to oppress them because of their homosexuality in Cuba.

In light of this tendency, a high degree of political consciousness is required in order to prevent these distortions from getting out of hand.

Some gay North Americans have said that we are asking them to go "back in the closet". This is a clear example of a distortion of the BV policy demanding all brigadistas to strive to be consistent anti-imperialists, both in theory and in practice, in words and in action. Cultural imperialist activity is not and will not be tolerated on the BV. Clearly, this is the only logical position that an anti-imperialist project can take.

THE POLICY OF THE BRIGADA VENCEREMOS

1. Since there has been no fundamental basis of support in the gay liberation movement for the Cuban Revolution; and since the BV stands for firm solidarity with the Cuban Revolution as its primary objective; we do not see any purpose in recruiting from any movement which at this time does not openly share that objective.

2. As there are some gay North Americans who do share that objective, we will require of them a much higher degree of political consciousness. This is because of several factors. The BV involves activity within the Cuban setting. As guests of the Cuban Revolution, we must also realize that internal questions concerning Cuba's development can only be answered by the Cuban people; answers cannot be imposed from the outside. Only the Cuban people have all of the essential elements to analyze and solve their problems correctly. North Americans, who are usually divorced from a historical understanding of Cuba, have a tendency to totally distort the Cuban Revolution, e.g., the question concerning Cuban homosexuals.

It should be clear that the BV is not pretending to analyze the potential or validity of the gay liberation movement. The potential or validity of any sector in the U.S. movement will be determined by their practice within the context of the anti-imperialist struggle carried out inside the U.S.

We recognize that progressive people in the gay liberation movement are struggling to overcome the tendencies mentioned above. As it becomes clear from their efforts that a stronghold of support for the Cuban Revolution exists, both in theory and in practice, in the broad base of the gay movement (as it does in other progressive sectors in the movement in the U.S.), the BV will respond to that revolutionary direction.

---The National Committee of the Venceremos Brigade, 1971

excerpted from Insurgente, internal organ of the Venceremos Brigade reprinted in Blat, Feb. 15, 1977, p. 15-16

INTERVIEW WITH YOUTH COLUMN LEADER:

Paula Diaz, the Centennial Youth Column leader described the Column's policy of excluding lesbians and homosexuals. "All homosexuals in general -- we call them invertes -- are prohibited. The young people should be young people who are able to carry with dignity the name of the Column. That kind of person can't be with us. They're antisocial people, prohibited in our society."

WHY ARE HOMOSEXUALS PROHIBITED IN CUBAN SOCIETY?

"Because they are going against the development of our society. This is our criterion. They're going against the ideological formation of young people. We think homosexuality is an immoral act."

IS THIS A HERITAGE FROM ROMAN CATHOLICISM?

"We have no vestiges from the Church. It is against the ideological formation of our young people. These people have a weak character. Sometimes it is a question of being born with it. Other times because of the education persons got in their home. We don't treat them as bastards. They have the opportunity to participate as any other man, even though we are fighting not to increase the number of homosexuals. It's possible some people practice homosexuality as part of struggling against their society, a protest in capitalist society. But the homosexual can't be a Marxist. He could only be a progressive person."

IS THIS BASED ON MARX'S WRITINGS?

"It's not exactly that Marx wrote about that subject. It's because a person's behavior shouldn't be immoral. The fundamental roles of men and women in a Revolution like ours is to create a developed country, to become fully developed people and to create a developed country. That's why we can't understand young people who are homosexuals."

COULD A PERSON WHO MASTURBATES BE A TRUE MARXIST REVOLUTIONARY?

"It would depend on the person. It depends. It is one thing to do it and another to practice it as a need to have it, a habit. If a person did that it would be against the Revolution and he couldn't be a Revolutionary. We are seeking to form the new man without any mental aberrations. That is why it is impossible to consider as Revolutionary a person with these aberrations. We are concerned with bad comportment. People should be completely equal, the same. We are concerned that people be born and be educated in the same social method. This way men and women, black and white, are considered the same. Homosexuality is a capitalist inheritance."

Inside Cuba, Joe Napolitano, 1974, p. 119-121

INTERVIEW WITH FIDEL CASTRO

LOCKWOOD: There has apparently been an organized effort by men in your government to deal firmly with homosexuals, some of whom were in positions of responsibility. It seemed that a general, naively conceived effort was under way to stamp out homosexuality.

CASTRO: That problem has not been sufficiently studied nor sufficiently analyzed. Nor do I believe that definitive norms exist yet anywhere in relation to this delicate problem.

We have considered it our duty to take at least minimum measures to the effect that those positions in which one might have a direct influence upon children and young people should not be in the hands of homosexuals, above all in educational centers.

LOCKWOOD: Is it your position that if one is a homosexual he cannot be a Revolutionary?

CASTRO: Nothing prevents a homosexual from professing revolutionary ideology and, consequently, exhibiting a correct political position. In this case he should not be considered politically negative. And yet we would never come to believe that a homosexual could embody the conditions and requirements of conduct that would enable us to consider him a true Revolutionary, a true Communist militant. A deviation of that nature clashes with the concept we have of what a militant Communist must be.

But above all, I do not believe that anybody has a definite answer as to what causes homosexuality. I think the problem must be studied very carefully. But I will be frank and say that homosexuals should not be allowed in positions where they are able to exert influence upon young people. In the conditions under which we live, because of the problems which our country is facing, we must inculcate our youth with the spirit of discipline, of struggle, of work. In my opinion, everything that tends to promote in our youth the strongest possible spirit, activities related in some way with the defense of the country, such as sports, must be promoted. This attitude may or may not be correct, but it is our honest feeling.

It may be in some cases a person is homosexual for pathological reasons. It would indeed be arbitrary if such a person were maltreated for something over which he has no control. You can only ask yourself, when assigning a person to a position of responsibility, what are the factors which might help that person do his job well, and what are those that might hinder him?

Castro's Cuba, Cuba's Castro, Lee Lockwood, 1969, p. 108-102

We are against homosexuality as we are against heterosexuality; these are words which take reality only in a socially determined context. It is necessary to destroy this social context so the words will no longer have any meaning. The same goes for relations between men and women, for the family and for the notion of power: we are against whoever presumes to seize power, whatever the ideology with which he identifies himself. Power is not for the taking, it is the notion of power that is to be destroyed.

---Front Homosexuel d'Action Revolutionnaire

translated by Louis Landerson

ANN ARBOR, MICHIGAN

THE COMPILERS OF THIS PAMPHLET NEITHER INVESTED CAPITAL IN ORDER TO PROFIT FROM ITS SALE, NOR PRINTED IT IN ORDER TO BE PAID FOR THEIR TIME.

FALL, 1967

SPECIAL DOUBLE ISSUE
$1.00

HUMANIST

Psychedelics and Religion: A Symposium

Allen Ginsberg-Raziel Abelson
Michael Wyshogrod

Civil Disobedience-Sidney Hook

The Homosexual Revolution
Donald J. Cantor

The Alimony Trap
Sidney I. Liebowitz

The Challenge We Face Willard Wirtz

PLUS

A Supplement: The American Indian Today

HUMANIST

A publication of the American Humanist Association

Publication Committee

Paul Kurtz, Chairman

Roy P. Fairfield • David Cole Gordon • Lloyd L. Morain

Maurice B. Visscher

Associate Members

George E. Axtelle • Harry Elmer Barnes

LeRoy Bowman • Peter Cromie • Rudolf Oreikurs

Herbert Feigl • Stephen A. Fritchman

Miriam Allen deFord • Hector Hawton • Julian Huxley

Lester A. Kirkendall • Corliss Lamont • A. H. Maslow

Robert E. Mogar • David Norton • Harold Oram

Arnold Sylvester • Judith Yellen

Editorial Director, Tolbert H. McCarroll

Editor, Paul Kurtz

Consulting Editors

Roy P. Fairfield • David Cole Gordon

Art Director, Dorothy B. Moore

Editorial Associates

Scott Beach • Roberts W. French • Arthur M. Jackson

Lyn Draper • Charles Landau • Hal Lenke • Oliver

Loud • Claire McCarroll • Margaret McCoy • E. C.

Vanderlaan

THE HUMANIST is published 5 times per year in January, March, May, July and October. (Normally THE HUMANIST is a bi-monthly publication. The October issue is a double issue.)

Copyright © 1967 by the American Humanist Association, Yellow Springs, Ohio 45387. Second class postage paid at Yellow Springs, Ohio.

Annual Subscription: $3.00. Single copy: 50 cents.

THE HUMANIST is a journal of contemporary ethical concerns on all levels—personal, interpersonal, and social. The articles attempt to serve as a bridge between theoretical philosophical discussions and the needs of a larger audience by emphasizing the practical applications of humanism to the lives of the readers.

Opinions expressed are those of the authors and not necessarily those of the editors or the American Humanist Association. Humanist Viewpoints and other unsigned comments are the views of the editorial staff, unless otherwise indicated.

Manuscripts for publication are received primarily through invitations from the editors. However, unsolicited manuscripts are carefully considered. A contribution not accepted will not be returned unless the author has provided a stamped self-addressed envelope. All manuscripts must be accompanied by three additional copies and should be typewritten, double-spaced on plain white paper.

Address manuscripts and correspondence to Prof. Paul Kurtz, Editor, Dept. of Philosophy, State University of New York at Buffalo, 4244 Ridge Lea Road, Amherst, N.Y. 14226. Send subscription orders, change of address notices and inquiries to the appropriate department at the American Humanist Association, Humanist House, 125 El Camino del Mar, San Francisco, California 94121.

Humanism is a way of life which relies on human capacities and natural and social resources. Humanists see man as a product of this world—of evolution and human history—and acknowledge no cosmic mind or supernatural purpose or forces. Humanism expresses an attitude or conviction which requires the acceptance of responsibility for human life in this world, emphasizing mutual respect and recognizing human interdependence.

The American Humanist Association was incorporated as an educational membership organization in 1941 to represent the views of humanists in the United States and Canada. It is a founding member of the International Humanist Ethical Union.

contents

September/December 1967

Volume XXVII, Nos. 5 and 6

EDITORIALS

- 151 The Moral Crisis in Humanism—Paul Kurtz
- 152 The Arab-Israeli Conflict and the Negro Riots—David Cole Gordon
- 173 Indignation Keeps Us Warm—Roy P. Fairfield

ARTICLES

- 153 Psychedelics and Religion: A Symposium—Raziel Abelson, Allen Ginsberg, Michael Wyschogrod
- 157 Social Protest and Civil Obedience—Sidney Hook
- 160 The Homosexual Revolution: A Status Report—Donald J. Cantor
- 164 The Alimony Trap—Sidney I. Liebowitz
- 167 The Challenge We Face—Willard Wirtz
- 168 Public Funds for Parochial Schools—Aryeh Neier
- 170 One World Via Global Communication Satellites—Oliver L. Reiser
- 185 Epicurus—Roberts W. French
Fifth in the series on humanist views

SPECIAL FEATURES

- Indian Supplement
- 174 Who Speaks for the Indian?—Jack O. Forbes
- 177 The Continuing "Last Indian War"—Janet McCloud
- 180 Indians, White Men, and I—Jerry Gambill
- 183 An Assault in the Sixties—William D. Bachrach

FILM REVIEW

- 186 La Guerre est Finie and The Taming of the Shrew—Robert Gessner

BOOK REVIEWS

- 194 The Autobiography of Bertrand Russell—Gabriel Gersh
- 195 The Metaphysics of Naturalism by Sterling P. Lamprecht—Corliss Lamont
- 196 The Psychology of Science: A Reconnaissance by Abraham H. Maslow—Arthur H. Rogers—Glenn E. Roudabush
- 197 The Harrad Experiment by Robert H. Rimmer—Robert W. McCoy
The Pill Conspiracy by George Johnson—Ernest Morgan
- 198 The Medium is the Massage by Marshall McLuhan—David Ramacitti Abortion by Lawrence Lader—Oagmar Schultz
- 200 The Encyclopedia of Philosophy edited by Paul Edwards—Rollo Handy
The Sparrow's Fall by Fred Bodsworth—William O. Pruitt, Jr.
Words by Robert Creeley—Roberts W. French

MISCELLANEA

- 201 Reader's Forum
- 205 Index, Volume XXVII, 1967
- 207 Humanist News—Art Jackson

THE HOMOSEXUAL REVOLUTION

A STATUS REPORT

by Donald J. Cantor

Obscured by the Negro revolution, the homosexual is, almost unnoticed, pursuing and advancing his own revolutionary cause. Like the Negro, and like every other group that has fought to establish its rights, the homosexual first had to discover that he deserved rights, that what he had been told about himself was not true, that his intrinsic merit was the equal of his detractor, that he need not feel guilt and inferiority by definition. The homosexual is achieving this sense of inner worth and is thus becoming able to withstand identification, in some instances even bear notoriety in service of his cause.

There was a time when homosexuality was thought to be a result of excessive debauchery, or a morbid predisposition activated by onanistic practices, or the placement of a male soul in a female body, or vice versa. Others postulated that homosexuality was a congenital abnormality, and some thought the explanation lay in the hormonal composition of the body. Thus, early theory, when coupled with theological condemnation ("Thou shalt not lie with mankind, as with womankind: it is abomination." Leviticus 18:22; "for even their women did change the natural use into that which is against nature . . . men with men working that which is unseemly . . ." Romans 1:26, 1:27) made the homosexual easy to despise. For not only were his acts sinful but his condition was either freakish or degenerate or both.

The movement for homosexual rights could not, therefore, begin until at least one of these premises was challenged. Freud did just that. Freud maintained that all persons are born with a psychic sexual duality, the capacity to express both male and female characteristics. He traced the existence of homosexual tendencies to Oedipal trauma but did not identify such childhood difficulties as the exclusive cause. Today, the bulk of psychiatrists will point to the child's resolution of the Oedipus complex as crucial, but admit the existence of other childhood conflicts as possible causes. In short, most will concede that no one really knows what causes homosexuality.

But it was the late Dr. Kinsey's study of the sexual habits of the white American male and female which provided the impetus for the homosexual movement. Kinsey and his researchers concluded that one's sexual direction is conditioned by the effects of initial sexual experiences and the subsequent failure of cultural pressures to alter this direction. Kinsey considered homosexuality to be a capacity inherent in humans, not in some only, and not due to a failure to resolve infantile trauma. He wrote: "The homosexual has been a significant part of human sexual activity ever since the dawn of history, primarily because it is an expression of capacities that are basic in the human animal."

When Dr. Kinsey and his associates set forth their finding that 37 per cent of the white American males have had at least one homosexual experience involving orgasm during their lives, they delivered a body blow to homosexual mythology from which it can never recover, for the stereotyped homosexual—the effeminate, mincing dandy—clearly was not one of every three males, and this meant that the great majority of persons who had expressed homosexual inclinations looked just like those who despised them. The inferior image, the crucial difference which had made the mythological homosexual ridiculous, and thus easily persecutable, was suddenly labeled false. Kinsey also attacked the old convenient notion of sexual categories, the idea that one was homosexual or heterosexual the way one was American or alien, and showed instead that sexual activity covered a broad spectrum, much of which was a mixture of homosexual and heterosexual, not clearly either. And thus was the purity of the heterosexual sullied. Kinsey forced society to see that, instead of having just heterosexuals and homosexuals, it had many active bisexuals, and many more who were potentially so.

Ten years later, in 1958, the Wolfenden Report was issued in London, and the homosexual movement was blessed with a champion of unimpeachable qualification and respectability.

This report by an English parliamentary committee would have been important solely because it recommended that private, adult, consensual homosexual acts be made lawful, but it was infinitely more important because of the caliber of its membership and because of its depth of research. The Wolfenden Report considered the varied arguments against making such acts lawful, i.e., that homosexuality deprives society of children, that homosexuality creates nervous, undependable persons, that homosexuality menaces the health of society, that homosexual behavior threatens the family, and that homosexuals may turn eventually to minors, and rebutted them all. This Report concluded that overpopulation, not underpopulation, was the social danger, that nervous homosexuals are so because of the present law not because of their homosexuality, that homosexuality is no threat to the social health, that homosexuality is no greater threat to the family than heterosexuality, and that, if anything, legalization of private, adult, consensual homosexual acts would decrease homosexual overtures to minors since these would remain unlawful.

The Wolfenden Report, however, served a greater function than the arguments and conclusions it advanced. It occasioned a great parliamentary debate, one which became a national and then an international education. Homosexuality, once a totally unmentionable subject, a contamination even to contemplate, became a topic people actually discussed and thought about and argued over—all without apparent injury.

Since the Wolfenden Report, more has happened to focus on and alleviate the troubles of the homosexual in the United States than in all the years prior.

In 1961, Illinois amended her criminal statutes and now does not make adult, private, consensual homosexual acts a crime.

Donald J. Cantor is a practicing attorney in Hartford, Conn. He is a graduate of Harvard Law School and is a frequent contributor of articles on homosexuality, narcotics and divorce to The Atlantic Monthly and other magazines.

Last year the criminal law of New York state came close to being similarly revised when a bill was presented to the legislature which would have made adult, private, consensual homosexual acts lawful, but this bill was amended on the floor of the legislature and such acts remain misdemeanors in New York state. But this last minute failure is of far less import than the fact that the attempt was made to liberalize New York law and that it nearly succeeded.

North Carolina amended its sodomy statute in 1965, eliminating a punishment of not less than five nor more than sixty years, and substituting in its place a fine or imprisonment "in the discretion of the court." The eradication of the five year minimum sentence constitutes definite progress. Since the American Law Institute has drafted its Model Penal Code with this recommendation in it, in light of the influence of the Institute and the prestige of its members, there can be little doubt that like amendments will be offered in other states and probably again in New York.

But the true progress of the movement cannot be solely or even primarily gauged by statutory changes, although these changes are the primary goals. Much more crucial at this time are developments within the churches and within the homophile organization themselves. The churches are important because homosexuality is mainly despised for reasons based upon the religious concept that homosexual acts are sinful. Thus, if the revolution of the homosexual is to succeed, it must reach the churches. This it is doing.

The Methodist Conference and the Congregational Union indicated support of the Wolfenden Report in 1958. In Philadelphia, during November of 1965, a special symposium met to discuss the homosexuality question in its various aspects, many different disciplines being represented. The reason, I was told, for the symposium being convened was that the United Presbyterian Church had felt the need to speak to the problem. (Churchmen, I have learned, never speak of or about a problem, but only to it.)

In Hartford, Connecticut, the Greater Hartford Council of Churches has for two years had a committee existent to study homosexuality and devise means by which the church can assist the homosexual, both as a group and as individuals. Great interest in this work has been manifested by other Councils of Churches throughout the United States. Denver has had an active Council of Churches. San Francisco, in 1964, formed the Council on Religion and the Homosexual, its purpose being "To promote a continuing dialogue between the religious community and homosexuals," and, in New York, the George W. Henry Foundation has, since 1948, offered assistance in many different forms to homosexuals in trouble. It has received backing from the Episcopal ministry, in particular, and now has a Connecticut branch which has broad Protestant support. In November, 1966, The National Council of Churches, Department of Ministry, meeting in White Plains, New York, discussed the relation of the church and the homosexual, and in August of 1966, The World Council of Churches, meeting in London, held a seminar on this question.

As to the homophile organizations themselves, they are not only existent and operative, but are becoming vocal and militant. Homophile organizations are no longer content to provide social comradeship and mutual reassurance; they are evolving into organs of protest, media for propaganda and active lobbyists. Their leaders do not shrink from publicity or shun public identification. The Homosexual Law Reform Society of America in Philadelphia has organized public demonstrations and distributed leaflets protesting the exclusion of homosexuals from the armed services. Mr. Clark Polak, Executive Secretary of the Homosexual Law Reform Society, has appeared on radio and television, at symposia, before service organizations, and has spoken to a great diversity of audiences to decry the injustice America inflicts on its homosexuals. When the Florida Legislature contemplated legislation deemed inimical to homosexuals, Richard Inman, President of Athenaeum Society of America, Inc., now The Mattachine Society of Florida, Inc., not only propagandized and lobbied, but had articles sympathetic to his cause printed and distributed to all legislators. Homophile organizations have picketed the White House, Pentagon, State Department and the U.S. Civil Service Commission in Washington and the Philadelphia Navy Yard, among others. A survey taken by and of the Florida Mattachine Society indicated 82 per cent of those questioned were in favor of public picketing by homosexuals, and sentiment in other homophile groups in the country appears similarly inclined.

This personal involvement of homosexuals in public advocacy of their view often accomplishes infinitely more than the propagation of those views. It serves the function of exposing the stereotype for the ridiculous nonsense it is. Every time a homosexual leader appears publicly, walks to his seat without swaying, dressed without frills, talking without a lisp, forcing his audience to the realization that they would not realize he was homosexual if he didn't tell them, a great stride is made. These leaders know this and thus seek constantly to address groups of all kinds. Nothing induces a man to feel tolerance more than seeing similarity between himself and the ones previously scorned. Difference is the root of prejudice, and prejudice dies as difference dissipates.

Those who administer the law give further evidence of this new feeling about homosexuality. Prosecutors, in deciding whether to prosecute and on what charge, and judges, in determining how to sentence, are good barometers of current social values. There is an unmistakable tendency today to allow homosexuals to plead guilty to lesser charges than those for which they were arrested and to sentence leniently, often with probation in place of incarceration. A study of the disposition of arrests for felonious homosexual acts in Los Angeles County, in March, 1966, U.C.L.A. Law Review, showed that only .6 per cent (3 defendants of 493) received ultimate felony dispositions. The remainder were all treated as misdemeanor offenders and the great majority received suspended sentences, probation or fines. John Gerassi, in his recently-published book, The Boys of Boise, indicates that this trend is not restricted to the larger, supposedly more sophisticated metropolitan centers, but is a present fact of legal life in Boise, Idaho, as well.

There are other extremely important philosophical influences which are having and will continue to have their effect on the law and the relation of the law to the homosexual. One is the opinion that law should not legislate morality, but should rather confine its proscriptions to those areas where acts or omissions have demonstrably injurious social consequences. This is not, of course, a philosophical innovation; the same notion was quite eloquently advanced by John Stuart Mill in his essay On Liberty, and by others of note, but its adoption with specific reference to the question of homosexual acts by a Catholic body is of special importance.

When the Commission which produced the Wolfenden Report was created, it requested the view of many different committees representing churches, professions, and other organizations. The late Cardinal Griffin of Westminster commissioned The Roman Catholic Advisory Committee on Prostitution and Homosexual Offenses and the Existing Law, and the report of this body, while stating "all directly voluntary sexual pleasure outside of marriage is sinful," nonetheless also stated:

It is not the business of the State to intervene in the purely private sphere but to act solely as the defender of the common good. Morally evil things so far as they do not affect the common good are not the concern of the human legislator.

This singularly statesmanlike report went further, adding the following particularity.

Attempts by the State to enlarge its authority and invade the individual conscience, however high-minded, always fail and frequently do positive harm. The Volstead Act in the U.S.A. affords the best recent illustration of this principle. It should accordingly be stated clearly that penal sanctions are not justified for the purpose of attempting to restrain sins against sexual morality committed in private by responsible adults. They are, as later appears, at present employed for this purpose in this country and should be discontinued because:

- (a) they are ineffectual;
- (b) they are inequitable in this incidence;
- (c) they involve severities disproportionate to the offense committed;
- (d) they undoubtedly give scope for blackmail and other forms of corruption.

The position advanced by this Report gives a rationale for allowing private, adult, consensual homosexual acts to be lawful to those who regard those acts as morally odious, and therein lies its special significance and value. Now the one with moral objections can be approached, and often persuaded, to favor law reform on the fundamental basis of the need to separate theological morality from state power; the cause of the homosexual thus becomes identified with, and understandable to, all those groups whose history contains instances of persecution resulting from the joinder of morality and criminal law.

The second new philosophical position is that sexual acts should not be condemned morally simply because of their nature, but rather that sexual acts, like any acts, are moral or not depending upon the intentions behind them and the effects of them. In an address before the Missionary Society of the Berkeley Divinity School, on November 23, 1964, Dr. Alfred A. Gross, Executive Director of the George W. Henry Foundation, and long-time advocate of homosexual law reform, expounded this view as he has continued to do since.

And in the January, 1967, issue of The Living Church, a weekly magazine of the Episcopal Church, The Reverend R. W. Cromey, Vicar of St. Aidan's Church in San Francisco, calling for homosexual law reform as recommended by the Wolfenden Committee, stated:

I believe that the sex act is morally neutral. There is no sex act which in itself is sinful... I also believe that two people of the same sex can express love and deepen that love by sexual intercourse.

Acceptance of this view would necessarily lead to the law reform sought by the homosexual in light of the absence of any valid utilitarian reasons for the present restrictive laws.

The progress made by the homosexual toward equality has been assisted by a rash of plays (The Toilet A Taste of Honey, The Sign in Sidney Brustein's Window), movies (The Victim, Darling, The Leather Boys), non-fiction books (The Homosexual Revolution, In Defense of Homosexuality, The Homosexual in America), and fiction by such established authors as Jean Genet, Gore Vidal and James Baldwin. In the law of obscene communication, the United States Supreme Court has facilitated the creation and distribution of literature dealing with homosexuality, and especially matter designed especially for homosexuals, by ruling that homosexual materials, including male nudes, are not ipso facto obscene. As the result of Mishkin v. New York, decided by the Supreme Court on March 21, 1966, material is obscene if the dominant theme of it taken as a whole appeals to the prurient interest in sex, not of the average man, but rather of the members of any special group—such as homosexuals—for which such material was designed and to which it was primarily disseminated.

The attitudes thus expressed should be contrasted, to be appreciated, with a 1922 Ohio case in which the judge referred to males who commit homosexual acts as "human degenerates" and "sexual perverts," or the 1938 Maine case in which the Maine Supreme Court had this to say:

The statute (sodomy) gives no definition of the crime but with due regard to the sentiments of decent humanity treats it as one not fit to be named, leaving the record undefiled by the details of different acts which may constitute the perversion.

Contrast it also with the older attitudes manifested in the sodomy statutes of the various states. In fourteen states the forbidden acts, which include acts between males and females as well as between persons of similar sex, are described as "abominable" or as both "abominable" and "detestable." (What does "detestable" add that "abominable" omits?) In seven states the acts are called "infamous." In ten states the phrases "crime against nature" or "against the order of nature" are used adjectivally; in three states "unnatural," "abnormal," or "perverted" are used. The depth and degree of antipathy which once characterized the public view of homosexual acts can be best appreciated when one recalls that no other crimes, including premeditated murder and rape, are so described.

It would be facile and utterly misleading to imply that the American homosexual is on the threshold of victory in his battle for equality. It is still painfully true that every state but Illinois condemns the private, adult, consensual acts of homosexuals as criminal, that in seven states life imprisonment is a possible sentence for such acts, and that in thirty-five other states the maximum penalty is at least ten years. When Sir Cyril Osborne, Conservative Member of Parliament, said during debate, "I am rather tired of democracy being made safe for the pimps, the prostitutes, the spivs, the pansies, and now, the queers," he may have spoken for a distinct minority in England (a recent Gallup Poll in England showed 60 per cent of those polled favored homosexual law reform), but it is probable that he reflected the opinions of a larger percentage of Americans, though many would not be quite so intense about it.

John Gerassi tells us that only a decade ago a great number of Boiseans thought that homosexuals were communists. But the trend is clear. The opposition to homosexual law reform is progressively diminishing. The large amount of extortion and blackmail which has victimized the homosexual has reached public consciousness and created sympathy, and forced upon the public the realization that these anti-homosexuality laws, even when not strictly enforced, set the stage by their very existence for this extortion and blackmail. People are becoming aware that England is on the verge of making adult, private, consensual homosexual acts lawful, and wondering whether our oldest teacher has yet another lesson for us to learn.

There is a new sense of perspective alive in the land, born at Hiroshima, which has equipped men to appreciate the dimensions of real danger, and has made them less able to view alleged sexual dangers such as homosexuality quite as seriously as once was possible. There is a sense of reappraisal, an unwillingness in an age of incredible change to presume the rightness of doctrine simply because doctrine is and was. Fittingly, sexual mores are getting perhaps the most serious reappraisal, partially because of the pill and intrauterine device, but more, I think, because the sexual dogmas have had the greatest rigidity and least realism. Homosexuality therefore is hencefitting, as part of the general field of sexuality, from this rising examination of the old rules governing intercourse out of marriage, abortion, censorship, and divorce.

There is also not a new, but an increased sense of the dignity of man and of man's right to dignity. The goals of the Negro are now national goals to an extent never before even approximated, not because he is Negro but because he is human. The homosexual is being gradually recognized as one seeking similar goals and deserving them.

Where a sexual act is done publicly, it is a nuisance and an invasion of the public's right to public propriety. It deserves punishment. Where a sexual act is committed with a minor, it is an invasion of the minor's right to privacy until he reaches the age of consent. It deserves punishment. Where a sexual act is done through force, duress, or fraud, or under any circumstances where consent is absent, it is an assault and deserves punishment. But where the act is private, between two consenting adults, where there is no victim, where nothing occurs but the physical expression of affection, it should not be punished.

Equality for the homosexual is an ethical imperative and the American people are beginning to realize this. ▲